ANNO 1599.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE MY SINGVLAR GOOD LORD, THE LORD

Charles Hovvard, Erle of Notingham,

Baron of Effingham, Knight of the noble Order of the Garter, Lord high Admirall of England, Ireland, and Wales, &c. one of her Maieſties moſt honourable priuie Councell.

Right Honourable and my very good Lord, after I had long ſince publiſhed in Print many Nauigations and Diſcoueries of Strangers in diuers languages, as well here at London, as in the citie of Paris, during my fiue yeeres abode in France, with the woorthie Knight Sir Edward Stafford your brother in lawe, her Maieſties moſt prudent and carefull Ambaſſador ligier with the French King: and had waded on ſtill farther and farther in the ſweet ſtudie of the hiſtorie of Coſmographie, I began at length to conceiue, that with diligent obſeruation, ſome thing might be gathered which might commend our nation for their high courage and ſingular actiuitie in the Search and Diſcouerie of the moſt vnknowen quarters of the world. Howbeit, ſeeing no man to ſtep forth to vndertake the recording of ſo many memorable actions, but euery man to folow his priuate affaires: the ardent loue of my countrey deuoured all difficulties, and as it were with a ſharpe goad prouoked me and thruſt me forward into this moſt troubleſome and painfull action. And after great charges and infinite cares, after many watchings, toiles, and trauels, and wearying out of my weake body; at length I haue collected three ſeuerall Volumes of the Engliſh Nauigations, Traffiques, and Diſcoueries, to ſtrange, remote, and farre diſtant countreys. Which worke of mine I haue not included within the compaſſe of things onely done in theſe latter dayes, as though litle or nothing woorthie of memorie had bene performed in former ages; but mounting aloft by the ſpace of many hundred yeeres, haue brought to light many very rare and worthy monuments, which long haue lien miſerably ſcattered in muſtie corners, & retchleſly hidden in miſtie darkeneſſe, and were very like for the greateſt part to haue bene buried in perpetuall obliuion. The firſt Volume of this worke I haue thus for the preſent brought to light, reſeruing the other two vntill the next Spring, when by Gods grace they ſhall come to the Preſſe. In the meane ſeaſon bethinking my ſelfe of ſome munificent and bountifull Patrone, I called to mind your honorable Lordſhip, who both in regard of my particular obligation, and alſo in reſpect of the ſubiect and matter, might iuſtly chalenge the Patronage thereof. For firſt I remembred how much I was bound, and how deeply indebted for my yongeſt brother Edmund Hackluyt, to whom for the ſpace of foure whole yeeres your Lordſhip committed the gouernment and inſtruction of that honorable yong noble man, your ſonne & heire apparant, the lord William liam Howard, of whoſe high ſpirit and wonderful towardlineſſe full many a time hath he boaſted vnto me. Secondly, the bounden duetie which I owe to your moſt deare ſiſter the lady Sheffield, my ſingular good lady & honorable miſtreſſe, admoniſhed me to be mindfull of the renoumed familie of the Howards. Thirdly, when I found in the firſt Patent graunted by Queene Marie to the Moſcouie companie, that my lord your father being then lord high Admirall of England, was one of the firſt fauourers and furtherers, with his purſe and countenance, of the ſtrange and wonderfull Diſcouerie of Ruſſia, the chiefe contents of this preſent Volume, then I remẽbred the ſage ſaying of ſweet Iſocrates, That ſonnes ought not onely to be inheriters of their fathers ſubſtance, but alſo of their commendable vertues and honours. But what ſpeake I of your anceſtors honors (which to ſay the trueth, are very great, and ſuch as our Chronicles haue notably blazoned) when as your owne Heroicall actions from time to time haue ſhewed themſelues ſo admirable, as no antiquitie hath affoorded greater, and the future times will not in haſte (I thinke) performe the like. To come to ſome particulars, when the Emperors ſiſter, the ſpouſe of Spaine, with a Fleete of an 130. ſailes, ſtoutly and proudly paſſed the narow Seas, your Lordſhip accompanied with ten ſhips onely of her Maieſties Nauie Roiall, enuironed their Fleet in moſt ſtrange and warrelike ſort, enforced them to ſtoope gallant, and to vaile their bonets for the Queene of England, and made them perfectly to vnderſtand that olde ſpeach of the prince of Poets;

Non illi imperium pelagi ſæuumq; tridentem, ſed tibi ſorte datum.

Yet after they had acknowledged their dutie, your lordſhip on her Maieſties behalfe conducted her ſafely through our Engliſh chanell, and performed all good offices of honor and humanitie to that forren Princeſſe. At that time all England beholding your moſt honorable cariage of your ſelfe in that ſo weightie ſeruice, began to caſt an extraordinarie eie vpon your lordſhip, and deeply to conceiue that ſingular hope which ſince by your moſt worthie & wonderfull ſeruice, your L. hath more then fully ſatiſfied. I meane (among others) that glorious, triumphant, and thriſe-happy victory atchieued againſt that huge and haultie Spaniſh Armada (which is notably deſcribed in the ende of this volume) wherein being chiefe and ſole Commander vnder her ſacred and roiall Maieſtie, your noble gouernment and worthy behauior, your high wiſedom, diſcretion and happineſſe, accompanied with the heauenly bleſſing of the Almightie, are ſhewed moſt euidently to haue bene ſuch, as all poſteritie and ſucceeding ages ſhall neuer ceaſe to ſing and reſound your infinite prayſe and eternall commendations. As for the late renoumed expedition and honorable voyage vnto Cadiz, the vanquiſhing of part of the king of Spaines Armada, the deſtruction of the rich Weſt Indian Fleete, the chaſing of ſo many braue and gallant Gallies, the miraculous winning, ſacking, and burning of that almoſt impregnable citie of Cadiz, the ſurpriſing of the towne of Faraon vpon the coaſt of Portugal, and other rare appendances of that enterpriſe, becauſe they be hereafter ſo iudicially ſet downe, by a very graue and learned Gentleman, which was an eye witneſſe in all that action, I referre your good L. to his faithfull report, wherein I truſt (as much as in him lay) he hath wittingly depriued no man of his right. Vpon theſe and other the like conſiderations, I thought it fit and very conuenient to commend with all humilitie and reuerence this firſt part of our Engliſh Voiages & Diſcoueries vnto your Honors fauourable cenſure and patronage.

And here by the way moſt humbly crauing pardon, and alwayes ſubmitting my poore opinion to your Lordſhips moſt deep and percing inſight, eſpecially in this matter, as being the father and principall fauourer of the Engliſh Nauigation, I truſt it ſhall not be impertinent in paſſing by, to point at the meanes of breeding vp of skilfull Sea-men and Mariners in this Realme. Sithence your Lordſhip is not ignorant, that ſhips are to litle purpoſe without skilfull Sea-men; and ſince Sea-men are not bred vp to perfection of skill in much leſſe time (as it is ſaid) then in the time of two prentiſhips; and ſince no kinde of men of any profeſſion in the common wealth paſſe their yeres in ſo great and continuall hazard of life; and ſince of ſo many, ſo few grow to gray heires: how needfull it is, that by way of Lectures and ſuch like inſtructions, theſe ought to haue a better education, then hitherto they haue had; all wiſe men may eaſily iudge. When I call to minde, how many noble ſhips haue bene loſt, how many worthy perſons haue bene drenched in the ſea, and how greatly this Realme hath bene impoueriſhed by loſſe of great Ordinance and other rich commodities through the ignorance of our Sea-men, I haue greatly wiſhed there were a Lecture of Nauigation read in this Citie, for the baniſhing of our former groſſe ignorance in Marine cauſes, and for the increaſe and generall multiplying of the ſea-knowledge in this age, wherein God hath raiſed ſo generall a deſire in the youth of this Realme to diſcouer all parts of the face of the earth, to this Realme in former ages not knowen. And, that it may appeare that this is no vaine fancie nor deuiſe of mine, it may pleaſe your Lordſhip to vnderſtand, that the late Emperour Charles the fift, conſidering the rawneſſe of his Sea-men, and the manifolde ſhipwracks which they ſuſteyned in paſſing and repaſſing betweene Spaine and the Weſt Indies, with an high reach and great foreſight, eſtabliſhed not onely a Pilote Maior, for the examination of ſuch as ſought to take charge of ſhips in that voyage, but alſo founded a notable Lecture of the Art of Nauigation, which is read to this day in the Contractation houſe at Siuil. The readers of which Lecture haue not only carefully taught and inſtructed the Spaniſh Mariners by word of mouth, but alſo haue publiſhed ſundry exact and worthy treatiſes concerning Marine cauſes, for the direction and incouragement of poſteritie. The learned works of three of which readers, namely of Alonſo de Chauez, of Hieronymo de Chauez, and of Roderigo Zamorano came long ago very happily to my hands, together with the ſtraight and ſeuere examining of all ſuch Maſters as deſire to take charge for the Weſt Indies. Which when I firſt read and duely conſidered, it ſeemed to mee ſo excellent and ſo exact a courſe, as I greatly wiſhed, that I might be ſo happy as to ſee the like order eſtabliſhed here with vs. This matter, as it ſeemeth, tooke no light impreſſion in the royall breſt of that moſt renowmed and victorious prince King Henry the eight of famous memory; who for the increaſe of knowledge in his Sea-men, with princely liberalitie erected three ſeuerall Guilds or brotherhoods, the one at Deptford here vpon the Thames, the other at Kingſton vpon Hull, and the third at Newcaſtle vpon Tine: which laſt was eſtabliſhed in the 28. yeere of his reigne. The chiefe motiues which induced his princely wiſedome hereunto, himſelfe expreſſeth in maner following. Vt magiſtri, marinarij, gubernatores, & alij officiarij nauium, iuuentutem ſuam in exercitatione gubernationis nauium tranſigentes, mutilati, aut aliquo alio caſu in paupertatem collapſi, aliquod releuamen ad eorum ſuſtentationem habeant, quo non ſolùm illi reficiantur, verùmetiam alij iuuenes moueantur & inſtigentur ad eandem artem exercendam, ratione cuius, doctiores & aptiores fiant nauibus & alijs vaſis noſtris & aliorum quorumcúnque in Mare gubernandis & manutenendis, tam pacis, quàm belli tempore, cum opus poſtulet, &c. To deſcend a litle lower, king Edward the ſixt that prince of peereleſſe hope, with the aduiſe of his ſage and prudent Counſaile, before he entred into the Northeaſterne diſcouery, aduanced the worthy and excellent Sebaſtian Cabota to be grand Pilot of England, allowing him a moſt bountifull penſion of 166.li.vj.s.viij.d. by the yeere during his life, as appeareth in his Letters Patents which are to be ſeene in the third part of my worke. And if God had granted him longer life, I doubt not but as he delt moſt royally in eſtabliſhing that office of Pilote Maior (which not long after to the great hinderance of this Common wealth was miſerably turned to other priuate vſes) ſo his princely Maieſtie would haue ſhewed himſelfe no nigard in erecting, in imitation of Spaine, the like profitable Lecture of the Art of Nauigation. And ſurely when I conſidered of late the memorable bountie of ſir Thomas Greſham, who being but a Merchant hath founded ſo many chargeable Lectures, and ſome of them alſo which are Mathematicall, tending to the aduancement of Marine cauſes; I nothing doubted of your Lordſhips forwardnes in ſetling and eſtabliſhing of this Lecture; but rather when your Lordſhip ſhall ſee the noble and rare effects thereof, you will be heartily ſory that all this while it hath not bene erected. As therefore our skill in Nauigation hath hitherto bene very much bettered and increaſed vnder the Admiraltie of your Lordſhip; ſo if this one thing be added thereunto, together with ſeuere and ſtraight diſcipline, I doubt not but with Gods good bleſſing it will ſhortly grow to the hieſt pitch and top of all perfection: which whenſoeuer it ſhall come to paſſe, I aſſure my ſelfe it will turne to the infinite wealth and honour of our Countrey, to the proſperous and ſpeedy diſcouery of many rich lands and territories of heathens and gentiles as yet vnknowen, to the honeſt employment of many thouſands of our idle people, to the great comfort and reioycing of our friends, to the terror, daunting and confuſion of our foes. To ende this matter, let mee now I beſeech you ſpeake vnto your Lordſhip, as in times paſt the elder Scipio ſpake to Cornelius Scipio Africanus: Quo ſis, Africane, alacrior ad tutandam Rempublicam, ſic habeto: Omnibus, qui patriam conſeruauerint, adiuuerint, auxerint, certum eſſe in cœlo, ac definitum locum, vbi beati æuo ſempiterno fruantur. It remaineth therefore, that as your Lordſhip from time to time vnder her moſt gracious and excellent Maieſtie, haue ſhewed your ſelfe a valiant protectour, a carefull conſeruer, and an happy enlarger of the honour and reputation of your Countrey; ſo at length you may enioy thoſe celeſtial bleſſings, which are prepared to ſuch as tread your ſteps, and ſeeke to aſpire to ſuch diuine and heroical vertues. And euen here I ſurceaſe, wiſhing all temporal and ſpirituall bleſſings of the life preſent and that which is to come to be powred out in moſt ample meaſure, not onely vpon your honourable Lordſhip, the noble and vertuous Lady your bedfellow, and thoſe two rare iewels, your generous off-ſprings, but alſo vpon all the reſt whereſoeuer of that your noble and renowmed family. From London the 7. day of this preſent October 1598.

Your honours moſt humble alwayes to be commanded:

Richard Hakluyt Preacher.

¶ A preface to the Reader as touching the principall Voyages and diſcourſes in this firſt part.

HAuing for the benefit and honour of my Countrey zealouſly beſtowed ſo many yeres, ſo much traueile and coſt, to bring Antiquities ſmothered and buried in darke ſilence, to light, and to preſerue certaine memorable exploits of late yeeres by our Engliſh nation atchieued, from the greedy and deuouring iawes of obliuion: to gather likewiſe, and as it were to incorporate into one body the torne and ſcattered limmes of our ancient and late Nauigations by Sea, our voyages by land, and traffiques of merchandiſe by both: and hauing (ſo much as in me lieth) reſtored ech particular member, being before diſplaced, to their true ioynts and ligaments; I meane, by the helpe of Geographie and Chronologie (which I may call the Sunne and the Moone, the right eye and the left of all hiſtory) referred ech particular relation to the due time and place: I do this ſecond time (friendly Reader, if not to ſatisfie, yet at leaſt for the preſent to allay and hold in ſuſpenſe thine expectation) preſume to offer vnto thy view this firſt part of my threefold diſcourſe. For the bringing of which into this homely and rough-hewen ſhape, which here thou ſeeſt; what reſtleſſe nights, what painefull dayes, what heat, what cold I haue indured; how many long & chargeable iourneys I haue traueiled; how many famous libraries I haue ſearched into; what varietie of ancient and moderne writers I haue peruſed; what a number of old records, patents, priuileges, letters, &c. I haue redeemed from obſcuritie and periſhing; into how manifold acquaintance I haue entred; what expenſes I haue not ſpared; and yet what faire opportunities of priuate gaine, preferment, and eaſe I haue neglected; albeit thy ſelfe canſt hardly imagine, yet I by daily experience do finde & feele, and ſome of my entier friends can ſufficiently teſtifie. Howbeit (as I told thee at the firſt) the honour and benefit of this Common weale wherein I liue and breathe, hath made all difficulties ſeeme eaſie, all paines and induſtrie pleaſant, and all expenſes of light value and moment vnto me.

For (to conteine my ſelfe onely within the bounds of this preſent diſcourſe, and in the midſt thereof to begin) wil it not in all poſteritie be as great a renowme vnto our Engliſh nation, to haue bene the firſt diſcouerers of a Sea beyond the North cape (neuer certainly knowen before) and of a conuenient paſſage into the huge Empire of Ruſſia by the bay of S. Nicolas and the riuer of Duina; as for the Portugales to haue found a Sea beyond the Cape of Buona Eſperanza, and ſo conſequently a paſſage by Sea into the Eaſt Indies; or for the Italians and Spaniards to haue diſcouered vnknowen landes ſo many hundred leagues Weſtward and Southweſtward of the ſtreits of Gibraltar, & of the pillers of Hercules? Be it granted that the renowmed Portugale Vaſquez de Gama trauerſed the maine Ocean Southward of Africke: Did not Richard Chanceler and his mates performe the like Northward of Europe? Suppoſe that Columbus that noble and high-ſpirited Genuois eſcried vnknowen landes to the Weſtward of Europe and Africke: Did not the valiant Engliſh knight ſir Hugh Willoughby; did not the famous Pilots Stephen Burrough, Arthur Pet, and Charles Iackman accoaſt Noua Zembla, Colgoieue, and Vaigatz to the North of Europe and Aſia? Howbeit you will ſay perhaps, not with the like golden ſucceſſe, not with ſuch deductions of Colonies, nor attaining of conqueſts. True it is, that our ſucceſſe hath not bene correſpondent vnto theirs: yet in this our attempt the vncertaintie of finding was farre greater, and the difficultie and danger of ſearching was no whit leſſe. For hath not Herodotus (a man for his time, moſt skilfull and iudicial in Coſmographie, who writ aboue 2000. yeeres ago) in his 4. booke called Melpomene, pomene, ſignified vnto the Portugales in plaine termes; that Africa, except the ſmall Iſthmus between the Arabian gulfe and the Mediterran ſea, was on all ſides enuironed with the Ocean? And for the further confirmation thereof, doth he not make mention of one Neco an Ægyptian King, who (for trials ſake) ſent a Fleet of Phœnicians downe the Red ſea; who ſetting forth in Autumne and ſailing Southward, till they had the Sunne at noonetide vpon their ſterbourd (that is to ſay, hauing croſſed the Æquinoctial and the Southerne tropique) after a long Nauigation, directed their courſe to the North, and in the ſpace of 3. yeeres enuironed all Africk, paſſing home through the Gaditan ſtreites, and arriuing in Ægypt? And doth not ‖Plinie tel them, that noble Hanno, in the flouriſhing time and eſtate of Carthage, ſailed from Gades in Spaine to the coaſt of Arabia fœlix, and put downe his whole iournall in writing? Doth he not make mention, that in the time of Auguſtus Cęſar, the wracke of certaine Spaniſh ſhips was found floating in the Arabian gulfe? And, not to be ouer-tedious in alleaging of teſtimonies, doth not Strabo in the 2. booke of his Geography, together with Cornelius Nepos and Plinie in the place beforenamed, agree all in one, that one Eudoxus fleeing from king Lathyrus, and valing downe the Arabian bay, ſailed along, doubled the Southern point of Africk, and at length arriued at Gades? And what ſhould I ſpeake of the Spaniards? Was not diuine ‖Plato (who liued ſo many ages ago, and plainely deſcribed their Weſt Indies vnder the name of Atlantis) was not he (I ſay) in ſtead of a Coſmographer vnto them? Were not thoſe Carthaginians mentioned by Ariſtotle lib. ‖ de admirabil. auſcult. their forerunners? And had they not Columbus to ſtirre them vp, and pricke them forward vnto their Weſterne diſcoueries; yea, to be their chiefe loads-man and Pilot? Sithens therefore theſe two worthy Nations had thoſe bright lampes of learning (I meane the moſt ancient and beſt Philoſophers, Hiſtoriographers and Geographers) to ſhewe them light; and the load-ſtarre of experience (to wit thoſe great exploits and voyages layed vp in ſtore and recorded) whereby to ſhape their courſe: what great attempt might they not preſume to vndertake? But alas our Engliſh nation, at the firſt ſetting foorth for their Northeaſterne diſcouery, were either altogether deſtitute of ſuch cleare lights and inducements, or if they had any inkling at all, it was as miſty as they found the Northren ſeas, and ſo obſcure and ambiguous, that it was meet rather to deterre them, then to giue them encouragement.

‖Lib 2. nat. hiſt. cap. 67.

‖In Timæo.

But beſides the foreſaid vncertaintie, into what dangers and difficulties they plunged themſelues, Animus meminiſſe horret, I tremble to recount. For firſt they were to expoſe themſelues vnto the rigour of the ſterne and vncouth Northren ſeas, and to make triall of the ſwelling waues and boiſtrous winds which there commonly do ſurge and blow: then were they to ſaile by the ragged and perilous coaſt of Norway, to frequent the vnhaunted ſhoares of Finmark, to double the dreadfull and miſty North cape, to beare with Willoughbies land, to run along within kenning of the Countreys of Lapland and Corelia, and as it were to open and vnlocke the ſeuen-fold mouth of Duina. Moreouer, in their Northeaſterly Nauigations, vpon the ſeas and by the coaſts of Condora, Colgoieue, Petzora, Ioughoria, Samoedia, Noua Zembla, &c. and their paſſing and returne through the ſtreits of Vaigatz, vnto what drifts of ſnow and mountaines of yce euen in Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt, vnto what hideous ouerfals, vncertaine currents, darke miſtes and fogs, and diuers other fearefull inconueniences they were ſubiect and in danger of, I wiſh you rather to learne out of the voyages of ſir Hugh Willoughbie, Stephen Burrough, Arthur Pet and the reſt, then to expect in this place an endleſſe catalogue thereof. And here by the way I cannot but highly commend the great induſtry and magnanimity of the Hollanders, who within theſe few yeeres haue diſcouered to 78. yea (as themſelues affirme) to 81. degrees of Northerly latitude: yet with thus prouiſo, that our Engliſh nation led them the dance, brake the yce before them, and gaue them good leaue to light their candle at our torch. But nowe it is high time for vs to weigh our ancre, to hoiſe vp our ſailes, to get cleare of theſe boiſtrous, froſty, and miſty ſeas, and with all ſpeede to direct our courſe for the milde, lightſome, temperate, and warme Atlantick Ocean, ouer which the Spaniards and Portugales haue made ſo many pleaſant proſperous and golden voyages. And albeit I cannot deny, that both of them in their Eaſt and Weſt Indian Nauigations haue indured many tempeſts, dangers and ſhipwracks: yet this dare I boldly affirme; firſt that a great number of them haue ſatisfied their fame-thirſty and gold-thirſty mindes with that reputation and wealth, which made all perils and miſaduentures ſeeme tolerable vnto them; and ſecondly, that their firſt attempts (which in this compariſon I doe onely ſtand vpon) were no whit more difficult and dangerous, then ours to the Northeaſt. For admit that the way was much longer, yet was it neuer barred with yce, miſt, or darknes, but was at all ſeaſons of the yeere open and Nauigable; yea and that for the moſt part with fortunate and fit gales of winde. Moreouer they had no forren prince to intercept or moleſt them, but their owne Townes, Iſlands, and maine lands to ſuccour them. The Spaniards had the Canary Iſles: and ſo had the Portugales the Iſles of the Açores, of Porto ſanto, of Madera, of Cape verd, the caſtle of Mina, the fruitfull and profitable Iſle of S. Thomas, being all of them conueniently ſituated, and well fraught with commodities. And had they not continuall and yerely trade in ſome one part or other of Africa, for getting of ſlaues, for ſugar, for Elephants teeth, graines, ſiluer, gold, and other precious wares, which ſerued as allurements to draw them on by little and litle, and as proppes to ſtay them from giuing ouer their attempts? But nowe let vs leaue them and returne home vnto our ſelues.

In this firſt Volume (friendly Reader) beſides our Northeaſterne Diſcoueries by ſea, and the memorable voyage of M. Chriſtopher Hodſon, and M. William Burrough, Anno 1570. to the Narue, wherein with merchants ſhips onely, they tooke fiue ſtrong and warrelike ſhips of the Freebooters, which lay within the ſound of Denmark of purpoſe to intercept our Engliſh Fleete: beſides all theſe (I ſay) thou maieſt find here recorded, to the laſting honor of our nation, all their long and dangerous voyages for the aduauncing of traffique by riuer and by land to all parts of the huge and wide Empire of Ruſſia: as namely Richard Chanceler his firſt fortunate arriuall at Newnox, his paſſing vp the riuer of Dwina to the citie of Vologda for the ſpace of 1100. verſts, and from thence to Yaruſlaue, Roſtoue, Peraſlaue, and ſo to the famous citie of Moſco, being 1500. verſts trauell in all. Moreouer, here thou haſt his voiage penned by himſelfe (which I hold to be very authentical, & for the which I do acknowledge my ſelfe beholding vnto the excellent Librarie of the right honorable my lord Lumley) wherein he deſcribeth in part the ſtate of Ruſſia, the maners of the people and their religion, the magnificence of the Court, the maieſtie, power, and riches of the Emperour, and the gracious entertainment of himſelfe. But if he being the firſt man, and not hauing ſo perfect intelligence as they that came after him, doeth not fullie ſatiſfie your expectation in deſcribing the foreſayd countrey and people; I then referre you to Clement Adams his relation next following, to M. Ienkinſons diſcourſe as touching that argument, to the ſmooth verſes of M. George Turberuile, and to a learned and excellent diſcourſe ſet downe, pag. 475. of this volume, and the pages following. Vnto all which (if you pleaſe) you may adde Richard Iohnſons ſtrange report of the Samoeds, pag. 283. But to returne to our voyages performed within the bounds of Ruſſia, I ſuppoſe (among the reſt) that difficult iourney of Southam and Sparke, from Colmogro and S. Nicholas Baie, vp the great riuer of Onega, and ſo by other riuers and lakes to the citie of Nouogrod velica vpon the Weſt frontier of Ruſſia, to be right woorthy of obſeruation; as likewiſe that of Thomas Alcock from Moſco to Smolensko, and thence to Tirwill in Polonia, pag. 304. & that alſo of M. Hierome Horſey from Moſco to Vobsko, and ſo through Lieſland to Riga, thence by the chiefe townes of Pruſſia and Pomerland to Roſtok, and ſo to Hamburg, Breme, Emden, &c. Neither hath our nation bene contented onely throughly to ſearch into all parts of the Inland, and to view the Northren, Southerne, and Weſterne frontiers, but alſo by the riuers of Moſcua, Occa and Volga, to viſite Cazan and Aſtracan, the fartheſt Eaſterne and Southeaſterne bounds of that huge Empire. And yet not containing themſelues within all that maine circumference, they haue adventured their perſons, ſhippes, and goods, homewards and outwards, fourteene times ouer the vnknowen and dangerous Caſpian ſea; that valiant, wiſe, and perſonable gentleman M. Anthonie Ienkinſon being their firſt ring-leader: who in Anno 1558. ſailing from Aſtracan towards the Eaſt ſhore of the Caſpian ſea, and there arriuing at the port of Manguſla, trauelled thence by Vrgence and Shelisur, and by the riuers of Oxus and Ardok, 40. dayes iourney ouer deſert and waſt countreys, to Boghar a principall citie of Bactria, being there & by the way friendly entertained, diſmiſſed, and ſafely conducted by certaine Tartarian kings and Murſes. Then haue you a ſecond Nauigation of his performance to the South ſhore of the foreſayd Caſpian ſea, together with his landing at Derbent, his arriuall at Shabran, his proceeding vnto Shamaky, the great curteſie vouchſafed on him by Obdolowcan king of Hircan, his iourney after of 30. dayes Southward, by Yauate, Ardouil, and other townes and cities to Casben, being as then the ſeate imperiall of Shaugh Thamas the great Sophy of Perſia, with diuers other notable accidents in his going foorth, in his abode there, and in his returne home. Immediately after you haue ſet downe in fiue ſeuerall voiages the ſucceſſe of M. Ienkinſons laudable and well-begun enterpriſe, vnder the foreſayd Shaugh Thamas, vnder Shally Murzey the new king of Hircan, and laſtly our traffique with Oſman Baſha the great Turkes lieutenant at Derbent. Moreouer, as in M. Ienkinſons trauel to Boghar the Tartars, with their territories, habitations, maner of liuing, apparell, food, armour, &c. are moſt liuely repreſented vnto you: ſo likewiſe in the ſixe Perſian Iournals you may here and there obſerue the ſtate of that countrey, of the great Shaugh and of his ſubiects, together with their religion, lawes, cuſtomes, & maner of gouernment, their coines, weights and meaſures, the diſtances of places, the temperature of the climate and region, and the natural commodities and diſcommodities of the ſame.

Furthermore in this firſt Volume, all the Ambaſſages and Negotiations from her Maieſtie to the Ruſſian Emperor, or from him vnto her Maieſtie, ſeemed by good right to challenge their due places of Record. As namely, firſt that of M. Randolph, 1568. then the emploiment of M. Ienkinſon 1571. thirdly, Sir Ierome Bowes his honorable commiſſion and ambaſſage 1582. and laſt of all the Ambaſſage of M. Doct. Fletcher 1588. Neither do we forget the Emperours firſt Ambaſſador Oſep Napea, his arriuall in Scotland, his moſt honourable entertainment and abode in England, and his diſmiſſion into Ruſſeland. In the ſecond place we doe make mention of Stephen Tuerdico, and Pheodata Pogorella; thirdly, of Andrea Sauin; and laſtly, of Pheodor Andrewich Phiſemski. And to be briefe, I haue not omitted the Commiſſions, Letters, Priuileges, Inſtructions, Obſeruations, or any other Particulars which might ſerue both in this age, and with all poſteritie, either for preſidents in ſuch like princely and weightie actions to bee imitated, or as woorthy monuments in no wiſe to bee buried in ſilence. Finally, that nothing ſhould be wanting which might adde any grace or ſhew of perfection vnto this diſcourſe of Ruſſia; I haue prefixed before the beginning thereof, the petigree and genealogie of the Ruſſian Emperors and Dukes, gathered out of their owne Chronicles by a Polonian, containing in briefe many notable antiquities and much knowledge of thoſe partes: as likewiſe about the concluſion, I haue ſignified in the branch of a letter, the laſt Emperour Pheodor Iuanowich his death, and the inauguration of Boris Pheodorowich vnto the Empire.

But that no man ſhould imagine that our forren trades of merchandiſe haue bene compriſed within ſome few yeeres, or at leaſt wiſe haue not bene of any long continuance; let vs now withdraw our ſelues from our affaires in Ruſſia, and aſcending ſomewhat higher, let vs take a ſleight ſuruey of our traffiques and negotiations in former ages. Firſt therefore the Reader may haue recourſe vnto the 124 page of this Volume, & there with great delight and admiration, conſider out of the iudicial Hiſtoriographer Cornelius Tacitus, that the Citie of London fifteene hundred yeeres agoe in the time of Nero the Emperour, was moſt famous for multitude of merchants and concourſe of people. In the pages folowing he may learne out of Venerable Beda, that almoſt 900. yeeres paſt, in the time of the Saxons, the ſaid citie of London was multorum emporium populorum, a Mart-towne for many nations. There he may behold, out of William of Malmesburie, a league concluded betweene the moſt renowmed and victorious Germane Emperour Carolus Magnus, and the Saxon king Offa, together with the ſayd Charles his patronage and protection granted vnto all Engliſh merchants which in thoſe dayes frequented his dominions. There may hee plainly ſee in an auncient teſtimonie tranſlated out of the Saxon tongue, how our merchants were often woont for traffiques ſake, ſo many hundred yeeres ſince, to croſſe the wide Seas, and how their induſtry in ſo doing was recompenſed. Yea, there mayeſt thou obſerue (friendly Reader) what priuileges the Daniſh king Canutus obtained at Rome of Pope Iohn, of Conradus the Emperour, and of king Rudolphus for our Engliſh merchants Aduenturers of thoſe times. Then if you ſhall thinke good to deſcend vnto the times and ages ſucceeding the conqueſt, there may you partly ſee what our ſtate of merchandiſe was in the time of king Stephen and of his predeceſſor, and how the Citie of Briſtol (which may ſeeme ſomewhat ſtrange) was then greatly reſorted vnto with ſhips from Norway and from Ireland. There may you ſee the friendly league betweene king Henry the ſecond, and the famous Germane Emperour Friderick Barbaroſſa, and the gracious authorizing of both their merchāts to traffique in either of their dominions. And what need I to put you in mind of king Iohn his fauourable ſafe-conduct, whereby all forren merchants were to haue the ſame priuileges here in England, which our Engliſh merchants enioied abroad in their ſeuerall countreys. Or what ſhould I ſignifie vnto you the entercourſe of league and of other curteſies betweene king Henry the third, and Haquinus king of Norway; and likewiſe of the free trade of merchandiſe between their ſubiects: or tell you what fauours the citizens of Colen, of Lubek, and of all the Hanſe-townes obtained of king Edward the firſt; or to what high endes and purpoſes the generall, large, and ſtately Charter concerning all outlandiſh merchants whatſoeuer was by the ſame prince moſt graciouſly publiſhed? You are of your owne induſtry ſufficiently able to conceiue of the letters & negotiatiōs which paſſed between K. Edward the 2. & Haquinus the Noruagian king, of our Engliſh merchants and their goods detained vpon arreſt at Bergen in Norway; and alſo of the firſt ordination of a Staple, or of one onely ſetled Mart-towne for the vttering of Engliſh woolls & woollen fells, inſtituted by the ſayd K. Edward laſt before named. All which (Reader) being throughly conſidered, I referre you then to the Ambaſſages, Letters, Traffiques, and prohibition of Traffiques, concluding and repealing of leagues, damages, repriſals, arreſts, complaints, ſupplications, compoſitions and reſtitutions which happened in the time of king Richard the 2. and king Henry the 4. between the ſaid kings and their ſubiects on the one partie; and Conradus de Zolner, Conradus de Iungingen, and Vlricus de Iungingen, three of the great maſters of Pruſſia, and their ſubiects, with the common ſocietie of the Hanſ-townes on the other partie. In all which diſcourſe you may note very many memorable things; as namely firſt the wiſe, diſcreet, and cautelous dealing of the Ambaſſadors and Commiſſioners of both parts, then the wealth of the foreſaid nations, and their manifold and moſt vſuall kinds of wares vttered in thoſe dayes, as likewiſe the qualitie, burthen, and ſtrength of their ſhipping, the number of their Mariners, the maner of their combates at ſea, the number and names of the Engliſh townes which traded that way, with the particular places as well vpon the coaſt of Notway, as euery where within the ſound of Denmark which they frequented; together with the inueterate malice and craftie crueltie of the Hanſe. And becauſe the name, office, and dignitie of the maſters generall, or great Maſters of Pruſſia would otherwiſe haue bene vtterly darke and vnknowen to the greater part of Readers, I haue ſet downe immediatly before the firſt Pruſſian ambaſſage, pagina 144 a briefe and orderly Catalogue of them all, contayning the firſt originall and inſtitution of themſelues and of their whole knightly order and brotherhood, with the increaſe of reuenues and wealth which befell them afterward in Italy and Germany and the great conqueſts which they atchieued vpon the infidels of Pruſſia, Samogitia, Curland, Liefland, Lituania, &c. alſo their decay and finall ouerthrow, partly by the reuolt of diuers Townes and Caſtles vnder their iuriſdiction, and partly by the meanes of their next mightie neighbour the King of Poland.

After all theſe, out of 2 branches of 2 ancient ſtatutes, is partly ſhewed our trade and the ſucceſſe thereof with diuers forren Nations in the time of K. Henry the ſixt.

Then followeth the true proceſſe of Engliſh policie, I meane that excellent and pithy treatiſe de politia conſeruatiua maris: which I cannot to any thing more fitly compare, then to the Emperour of Ruſſia his palace called the golden Caſtle, and deſcribed by Richard Chanceller pag. 238. of this volume: whereof albeit the outward apparance was but homely and no whit correſpondent to the name, yet was it within ſo beautified and adorned with the Emperour his maieſticall preſence, with the honourable and great aſſembly of his rich-attired Peers and Senatours, with an inualuable and huge maſſe of gold and ſiluer plate, & with other princely magnificence, that well might the eyes of the beholders be dazeled, and their cogitations aſtoniſhed thereat. For indeed the exteriour habit of this our Engliſh politician, to wit, the harſh and vnaffected ſtile of his ſubſtantiall verſes and the olde dialect of his wordes is ſuch, as the firſt may ſeeme to haue bene whiſtled of Pans oaten pipe, and the ſecond to haue proceeded from the mother of Euander: but take you off his vtmoſt weed, and beholde the comelineſſe, beautie, and riches which lie hid within his inward ſenſe and ſentence; and you ſhall finde (I wiſſe) ſo much true and ſound policy, ſo much delightfull and pertinent hiſtory, ſo many liuely deſcriptions of the ſhipping and wares in his time of all the nations almoſt in Chriſtendome, and ſuch a ſubtile diſcouery of outlandiſh merchants fraud, and of the ſophiſtication of their wares; that needes you muſt acknowledge, that more matter and ſubſtance could in no wiſe be compriſed in ſo little a roome. And notwithſtanding (as I ſaid) his ſtile be vnpoliſhed, and his phraſes ſomewhat out of vſe; yet, ſo neere as the written copies would giue me leaue, I haue moſt religiouſly without alteration obſerued the ſame: thinking it farre more conuenient that himſelfe ſhould ſpeake, then that I ſhould bee his ſpokeſman; and that the Readers ſhould enioy his true verſes, then mine or any other mans fained proſe.

Next after the concluſion of the laſt mentioned diſcourſe, the Reader may in ſome ſort take a view of our ſtate of merchandiſe vnder K. Edward the fourth, as likewiſe of the eſtabliſhing of an Engliſh company in the Netherlands, and of all the diſcreet prouiſoes, iuſt ordinations, & gratious priuileges conteined in the large Charter which was granted for the ſame purpoſe.

Now beſides our voyages and trades of late yeeres to the North and Northeaſt regions of the world, and our ancient traffique alſo to thoſe parts; I haue not bene vnmindefull (ſo farre as the hiſtories of England and of other Countreys would giue me direction) to place in the fore-front of this booke thoſe forren conqueſts, exploits, and trauels of our Engliſh nation, which haue bene atchieued of old. Where in the firſt place (as I am credibly informed out of Galfridus Monumetenſis, and out of M. Lambert his ἀρχαιονομία) I haue publiſhed vnto the world the noble actes of Arthur and Malgo two Britiſh Kings. Then followeth in the Saxons time K. Edwin his conqueſt of Man and Angleſey, and the expedition of Bertus into Ireland. Next ſucceedeth Octher making relation of his doings, and deſcribing the North Countreys, vnto his ſoueraigne Lord K. Ecfrid. After whom Wolſtans Nauigation within the Sound of Denmark is mentioned, the voyage of the yong Princes Edmund and Edward into Sweden and Hungarie is recorded, as likewiſe the mariage of Harald his daughter vnto the Ruſsian duke Ieruſlaus. Neither is that Engliſhman forgotten, who was forced to traueile with the cruel Tartars into their Countrey, and from thence to beare them company into Hungary and Poland. And becauſe thoſe Northeaſterne Regions beyond Volga, by reaſon of the huge deſerts, the colde climate, and the barbarous inciuilitie of the people there inhabiting, were neuer yet throughly traueiled by any of our Nation, nor ſufficiently knowen vnto vs; I haue here annexed vnto the ſaid Engliſhmans traueile, the rare & memorable iournals of 2. Friers, who were ſome of the firſt Chriſtians that trauailed fartheſt that way, and brought home moſt particular intelligence & knowledge of all things which they had ſeene. Theſe Friers were ſent as Ambaſſadours vnto the ſauage Tartars (who had as then waſted and ouerrunne a great part of Aſia, and had pierced farre into Europe with fire and ſword) to mitigate their fury, and to offer the glad tidings of the Goſpel vnto them. The former, namely Iohannes de Plano Carpini (whoſe iourney, becauſe he road ſixe moneths poſte directly beyond Boriſthenes, did, I thinke, both for length and difficultie farre ſurpaſſe that of Alexander the great, vnto the riuer of Indus) was in the yeere 1246 ſent with the authoritie and commiſſion of a Legate from Pope Innocentius the fourth: who paſſed through more garriſons of the Tartars, and wandered ouer more vaſt, barren, and cold deſerts, then (I ſuppoſe) an army of an hundred thouſand good ſouldiers could haue done. The other, to wit, William de Rubricis, was 1253 by the way of Conſtantinople, of the Euxin ſea, and of Taurica Cherſoneſus imployed in an ambaſſage from Lewis the French King (waging warre as then againſt the Saracens in the Holy land) vnto one Sartach a great duke of the Tartars, which Sartach ſent him forthwith vnto his father Baatu, and from Baatu he was conducted ouer many large territories vnto the Court of Mangu-Can their Emperour. Both of them haue ſo well played their parts, in declaring what befell them before they came at the Tartars, what a terrible and vnmanerly welcomming they had at their firſt arriuall, what cold intertainment they felt in traueiling towards the great Can, and what ſlender cheere they found at his Court; that they ſeeme no leſſe worthy of praiſe then of pitie. But in deſcribing of the Tartars Countrey, and of the Regions adiacent, in ſetting downe the baſe and ſillie beginnings of that huge and ouerſpreading Empire, in regiſtring their manifolde warres and bloody conqueſts, in making relation of their hords and moueable Townes, as likewiſe of their food, apparell and armour, and in ſetting downe their vnmercifull lawes, their fond ſuperſtitions, their beſtiall liues, their vicious maners, their ſlauiſh ſubiection to their owne ſuperiours, and their diſdainfull and brutiſh inhumanitie vnto ſtrangers, they deſerue moſt exceeding and high commendation. Howbeit if any man ſhall obiect that they haue certaine incredible relations; I anſwere, firſt, that many true things may to the ignorant ſeeme incredible. But ſuppoſe there be ſome particulars which hardly will be credited, yet thus much I will boldly ſay for the Friers, that thoſe particulars are but few, and that they doe not auouch them vnder their owne names, but from the report of others. Yet further imagine that they did auouch them, were they not to be pardoned as well as Herodotus, Strabo, Plutarch, Plinie, Solinus, yea & a great many of our new principall writers, whoſe names you may ſee about the end of this Preface; euery one of which hath reported more ſtrange things then the Friers betweene them both. Nay, there is not any hiſtory in the world (the moſt Holy writ excepted) whereof we are preciſely bound to beleeue ech word and ſyllable. Moreouer ſithens theſe two Iournals are ſo rare, that Mercator and Ortelius (as their letters vnto me do teſtifie) were many yeeres very inquiſitiue, and could not for all that attaine vnto them; and ſithens they haue bene of ſo great accompt with thoſe two famous Coſmographers, that according to ſome fragments of them they haue deſcribed in their Mappes a great part of thoſe Northeaſtern Regions; ſith alſo that theſe two relations containe in ſome reſpect more exact hiſtory of thoſe vnknowen parts, then all the ancient and newe writers that euer I could ſet mine eyes on: I thought it good, if the tranſlation ſhould chance to ſwerue in ought from the originals (both for the preſeruation of the originals themſelues, and the ſatisfying of the Reader) to put them downe word for word in that homely ſtile wherein they were firſt penned. And for theſe two rare iewels, as likewiſe for many other extraordinary courteſies, I muſt here acknowledge my ſelfe moſt deepely bounden vnto the right reuerend, graue, and learned Prelate, my very good lord the Biſhop of Chicheſter, and L. high Almner vnto her Maieſtie, by whoſe friendſhip and meanes I had free acceſſe vnto the right honor. my L. Lumley his ſtately library, and was permitted to copy out of ancient manuſcripts, theſe two iournals and ſome others alſo.

After theſe Friers (though not in the next place) foloweth a teſtimonie of Gerardus Mercator, and another of M. Dee, concerning one Nicholas de Linna an Engliſh Franciſcan Frier.

Then ſucceedeth the long iourney of Henry Earle of Derbie, and afterward king of England into Pruſſia & Lithuania, with a briefe remembrance of his valiant exploits againſt the Infidels there; as namely, that with the helpe of certaine his aſſociates, he vanquiſhed the king of Letto his armie, put the ſayd king to flight, tooke and ſlew diuers of his captains, aduanced his Engliſh colours vpon the wall of Vilna, & made the citie it ſelfe to yeeld. Then mention is made alſo of Tho. of Woodſtock his trauel into Pruis, and of his returne home. And laſtly, our old Engliſh father Ennius, I meane, the learned, wittie, and profound Geffrey Chaucer, vnder the perſon of his knight, doeth full iudicially and like a cunning Coſmographer, make report of the long voyages and worthy exploits of our Engliſh Nobles, Knights, & Gentlemen, to the Northren, and to other partes of the world in his dayes.

Neither haue we comprehended in this Volume, onely our Trades and Voiages both new and old; but alſo haue ſcattered here and there (as the circumſtance of times would giue vs leaue) certaine fragments concerning the beginnings, antiquities, and growth of the claſſical and warrelike ſhipping of this Iſland: as namely, firſt of the great nauie of that victorious Saxon prince king Edgar, mentioned by Florentius Wigornienſis, Roger Houeden, Rainulph of Cheſter, Matthew of Weſtminſter, Flores hiſtoriarum, & in the libel of Engliſh policie, pag. 202. and 203. of this preſent volume. Of which Authors ſome affirme the ſayd Fleet to haue conſiſted of 4800. others of 4000. ſome others of 3600. ſhips: howbeit (if I may preſume to gloze vpon the text) I verily thinke that they were not comparable, either for burthen, ſtrength, building, or nimble ſtirrage vnto the ſhips of later times, and ſpecially of this age. But howſoeuer it be, they all agree in this, that by meanes of the ſayd huge Fleet he was a moſt puiſſant prince; yea, and ſome of them affirme together with William of Malmesbury, that he was not onely ſoueraigne lord of all the Britiſh ſeas, and of the whole Iſle of Britaine it ſelfe, but alſo that he brought vnder his yoke of ſubiection, moſt of the Iſles and ſome of the maine lands adiacent. And for that moſt of our Nauigators at this time bee (for want of trade and practiſe that way) either vtterly ignorant, or but meanely ſkilfull, in the true ſtate of the Seas, Shoulds, and Iſlands, lying between the North part of Ireland and of Scotland; I haue for their better encouragement (if any weightie action ſhall hereafter chance to drawe them into thoſe quarters) tranſlated into Engliſh a briefe treatiſe called, A Chronicle of the Kings of Man. Wherein they may behold as well the tragical and doleful hiſtorie of thoſe parts, for the ſpace almoſt of 300. yeeres, as alſo the moſt ordinarie and accuſtomed nauigations, through thoſe very ſeas, and amidſt thoſe Northweſterne Iſles called the Hebrides, ſo many hundred yeeres agoe. For they ſhall there read, that euen then (when men were but rude in ſea-cauſes in regard of the great knowledge which we now haue) firſt Godredus Crouan with a whole Fleet of ſhips, throughly haunted ſome places in that ſea: ſecondly, that one Ingemundus ſetting ſaile out of Norway, arriued vpon the Iſle of Lewis: then, that Magnus the king of Norway came into the ſame ſeas with 160. ſailes, and hauing ſubdued the Orkney Iſles in his way, paſſed on in like conquering maner, directing his courſe (as it ſhould ſeeme) euen through the very midſt, and on all ſides of the Hebrides, who ſailing thence to Man, conquered it alſo, proceeding afterward as farre as Anglesey; and laſtly croſsing ouer from the Iſle of Man to the Eaſt part of Ireland. Yea, there they ſhall read of Godredus the ſonne of Olauus his voiage to the king of Norway, of his expedition with 80 ſhips againſt Sumerledus, of Sumerled his expedition with 53. ſhips againſt him; of Godred his flight and ſecond iourney into Norway; of Sumerled his ſecond arriual with 160. ſhippes at Rhinfrin vpon the coaſt of Man, and of many other ſuch combates, aſſaults, & voyages which were performed onely vpon thoſe ſeas & Iſlands. And for the bringing of this woorthy monument to light, we doe owe great thanks vnto the iudiciall and famous Antiquarie M. Camden. But ſithens we are entred into a diſcourſe of the ancient warrelike ſhipping of this land, the Reader ſhall giue me leaue to borrow one principall note out of this litle hiſtorie, before I quite take my leaue thereof: and that is in few words, that K. Iohn paſſed into Ireland with a Fleet of 500. ſailes; ſo great were our ſea-forces euen in his time. Neither did our ſhipping for the warres firſt begin to flouriſh with king Iohn, but long before his dayes in the reign of K. Edward the Confeſſor, of William the Conqueror, of William Rufus and the reſt, there were diuers men of warre which did valiant ſeruice at ſea, and for their paines were roially rewarded. All this and more then this you may ſee recorded, pag. 17. out of the learned Gentleman M. Lambert his Perambulation of Kent; namely, the antiquitie of the Kentiſh Cinque ports, which of the ſea-townes they were, how they were infranchiſed, what gracious priuileges and high prerogatiues were by diuers kings vouchſafed vpon them, and what ſeruices they were tied vnto in regard thereof; to wit, how many ſhips, how many ſouldiers, mariners, Garſons, and for how many dayes each of them, and all of them were to furniſh for the kings vſe; and laſtly, what great exploits they performed vnder the conduct of Hubert of Burrough, as likewiſe againſt the Welſhmen, vpon 200. French ſhips, and vnder the commaund of captaine Henry Pay. Then haue you, pag. 117. the franke and bountifull Charter granted by king Edward the firſt, vpon the foreſayd Cinque portes: & next thereunto a Roll of the mightie fleet of ſeuen hundred ſhips which K. Edward the third had with him vnto the ſiege of Caleis: out of which Roll (before I proceed any further) let me giue you a double obſeruation. Firſt, that theſe ſhips, according to the number of the mariners which were in all 14151. perſons, ſeeme to haue bene of great burthen; and ſecondly, that Yarmouth an hauen towne in Northfolke (which I much wonder at) ſet foorth almoſt twiſe as many ſhips and mariners, as either the king did at his owne coſts and charges, or as any one citie or towne in England beſides. Howbeit Tho. Walſingham maketh plaine and euident mention of a farre greater Fleete of the ſame king; namely, of 1100. ſhippes lying before Sandwich, being all of them ſufficiently well furniſhed. Moreouer, the Reader may behold, pag. 186. a notable teſtimonie of the mightie ſhips of that valiant prince king Henry the 5. who (when after his great victory at Agincourt the Frenchmen to recouer Harflew had hired certaine Spaniſh and Italian ſhips and forces, & had vnited their owne ſtrength vnto them) ſent his brother Iohn duke of Bedford to encounter them, who bidding them battell, got the victory, taking ſome of their ſhips, and ſinking others, and putting the reſidue to diſhonorable flight. Likewiſe comming the next yeere with ſtronger powers, and being then alſo ouercome, they were glad to conclude a perpetuall league with K. Henry; & propter eorum naues (ſaieth mine Author) that is, for the reſiſtance of their ſhips, the ſayd king cauſed ſuch huge ſhips to be built, quales non erant in mundo, as the like were not to be found in the whole world beſides.

But to leaue our ancient ſhipping, and deſcend vnto later times; I thinke that neuer was any nation bleſſed of IEHOVAH, with a more glorious and wonderfull victory vpon the Seas, then our vanquiſhing of the dreadfull Spaniſh Armada, 1588. But why ſhould I preſume to call it our vanquiſhing; when as the greateſt part of them eſcaped vs, and were onely by Gods out-ſtretched arme ouerwhelmed in the Seas, daſhed in pieces againſt the Rockes, and made fearefull ſpectacles and examples of his iudgements vnto all Chriſtendome. An excellent diſcourſe whereof, as likewiſe of the honourable expedition vnder two of the moſt noble and valiant peeres of this Realme, I meane, the renoumed Erle of Eſſex, and the right honorable the lord Charles Howard, lord high Admirall of England, made 1596. vnto the ſtrong citie of Cadiz, I haue ſet downe as a double epiphonema to conclude this my firſt volume withall. Both of which, albeit they ought of right to haue bene placed among the Southerne voyages of our nation: yet partly to ſatiſfie the importunitie of ſome of my ſpecial friends, and partly, not longer to depriue the diligent Reader of two ſuch woorthy and long-expected diſcourſes; I haue made bold to ſtraine a litle curteſie with that methode which I firſt propounded vnto my ſelfe.

And here had I almoſt forgotten to put the Reader in mind of that learned and Philoſophical treatiſe of the true ſtate of Iſeland, and ſo conſequently of the Northren Seas & regions lying that way: wherein a great number of none of the meaneſt Hiſtoriographers and Coſmographers of later times, as namely, Munſter, Gemma Friſius, Zieglerus, Krantzius, Saxo Grammaticus, Olaus Magnus, Peucerus and others, are by euident arguments conuinced of manifold errors: that is to ſay, as touching the true ſituation and Northerly latitude of that Iſland, and of the diſtance thereof from other places; touching the length of dayes in Sommer and of nights in Winter, of the temperature of the land and ſea, of the time and maner of the congealing, continuance, and thawing of the Ice in thoſe Seas, of the firſt Diſcouerie and inhabiting of that Iſland, of the firſt planting of Chriſtianitie there, as likewiſe of the continuall flaming of mountains, ſtrange qualities of fountains, of hel-mouth, and of purgatorie which thoſe authors haue fondly written and imagined to be there. All which treatiſe ought to bee the more acceptable; firſt in that it hath brought ſound trueth with it; and ſecondly, in that it commeth from that farre Northren climate which moſt men would ſuppoſe could not affoord any one ſo learned a Patrone for it ſelfe.

And thus (friendly Reader) thou ſeeſt the briefe ſumme and ſcope of all my labours for the common-wealths ſake, and thy ſake, beſtowed vpon this firſt Volume: which if thou ſhalt as thankefully accept, as I haue willingly and freely imparted with thee, I ſhall bee the better encouraged ſpeedily to acquaint thee with thoſe rare, delightfull and profitable hiſtories, which I purpoſe (God willing) to publiſh concerning the Southerne and Weſterne partes of the World.

Not knowing any other place ſo conuenient, I am here to aduertiſe the friendly Reader of certaine faultes eſcaped in the printing of this booke, and to requeſt him that in the Page 54. and in the laſt line ſaue two, hee would in ſtead of Kine, read Swine, and he ſhall thereby auoid a great contradiction: likewiſe pag. 187. that hee would vnto the ende of the ſecond verſe of the Prologue to the Engliſh Policy, make ſupply of the word Reſt, which is there wanting: alſo pag. 221. lin. 29. for woorthineſſe read woorthies, &c. Other faults (if there bee any) are (I doubt not) eaſily corrigible.

In nauales RICHARDI HAKLVYTI Commentarios.

Anglia magnarum fœcunda puerpera rerum, ſiue ſolum ſpectes nobile, ſiue ſalum;
Quæ quantum ſumptis ſe nobilitauerit armis, ſiue domi geſſit prælia, ſiue foris;
Multorum celebrant matura volumina: tanta
Inſula materiem paruula laudis alit.
At ſe in quot, qualéſque, & quando effuderit oras, qua fidit ignotum peruia claſſis iter,
Solius Hakluyti decus eſt, prædiuite penna oſtendiſſe ſuis ciuibus auſa mari.
Quæcunque idcirco celeri gens Anglica naui,
Oceani triſtes ſpernere docta minas,
A prima generiſque, & gentis origine geſſit, qua via per fluctus vlla patere poteſt,
Siue decus, laudémque ſecuta, vt & hoſtibus alas demeret, atque ſuis læta pararet opes:
Hoc opus Hakluyti; cui debet patria multum, cui multum, patriæ quiſquis amicus erit.
Qua re námque magis ſe noſtra Britannia iactat, quàm quòd ſit præter cætera claſſe potens?
Quam priùs obſeſſam tenebris ſic liberat, vt nunc quiſque ſciat, quàm ſit nobile claſſis opus.
Quam ſi Dædalicè vtemur, ſurgemus in altum, ſin autem Icariè, quod voret, æquor habet.

Inſula noſtra celeres carinas,
Quæ per immenſi loca peruolarunt

Anglia quæ penitùs toto diſcluditur orbe,
Angulus orbis erat, paruus & orbis erat.
Nunc cùm ſepoſitos alios detexerit orbes,
Maximus orbis honos, Orbis & orbis erit.
At quid Haklute tibi monſtranti hæc debeat orbis?
Laus tua, crede mihi, non erit orbe minor.

THE FIRST VOLVME OF THE principall Nauigations, Voyages, Traffiques, and Diſcoueries of the Engliſh nation, made to the North and Northeaſt quarters of the World, with the directions, letters, priuiledges, diſcourſes, and obſeruations incident to the ſame.

Certeine teſtimonies concerning K. Arthur and his conqueſts of the North regions, taken out of the hiſtorie of the Kings of Britaine, written by Galfridus Monumetenſis, and newly printed at Heidelberge, Anno 1587.

Lib. 9. cap. 10.

ANno Chriſti, 517. Arthurus, ſecundo regni ſui anno, ſubiugatis totius Hyberniæ partibus, claſſem ſuam direxit in Iſlandiam, eamque debellato populo ſubiugauit. Exin diuulgato per cæteras inſulas rumore, quod ei nulla Prouincia reſiſtere poterat, Doldauius rex Gotlandiæ, & Gunfacius rex Orcadum vltro venerunt, promiſſoque vectigali ſubiectionem fecerunt. Emenſa deinde hyeme, reuerſus eſt in Britanniam, ſtatúmque regni in firmam pacem renouans, moram duodecim annis ibidem fecit.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the yere of Chriſt, 517. king Arthur in the ſecond yeere of his reigne, hauing ſubdued all parts of Ireland, ſailed with his fleet into Iſland, and brought it and the people thereof vnder his ſubiection. The rumour afterwards being ſpread thorowout all the other Iſlands, that no countrey was able to withſtand him, Doldauius the king of Gotland, and Gunfacius the king of Orkney, came voluntarily vnto him, and yeelded him their obedience, promiſing to pay him tribute. The Winter being ſpent, he returned into Britaine, and eſtabliſhing his kingdome in perfect peace, he continued there for the ſpace of twelue yeres.

Lib. 9 cap. 12.

MIſſis deinde in diuerſa regna Legatis, inuitantur tam ex Gallijs, quàm ex collateralibus Inſulis Oceani, qui ad curiam venire deberent, &c. Et paulò poſt: Ex collateralibus autem Inſulis, Guillaumurius rex Hyberniæ, Maluaſius rex Iſlandiæ, Doldauius rex Gotlandiæ, Gunnaſius rex Orchadum, Lot rex Noruegiæ, Aſchilius rex Danorum.

The ſame in Engliſh.

AFter that king Arthur ſending his meſſengers into diuers kingdomes, he ſummoned ſuch as were to come to his Court, aſwell out of France, as out of the adiacent Iſlands of the ſea, &c. and a little after: From thoſe adiacent Iſlands came Guillaumurius king of Ireland, Maluaſius king of Iſland, Doldauius king of Gotland, Gunnaſius king of Orkney, Lot the king of Norway, and Aſchilius the king of Denmarke.

Lib. 9 cap. 19.

AT reges cæterarum Inſularum, quoniam non duxerant in morem equites habere, pedites quot quiſque debebat, promittunt, ita vt ex ſex Inſulis, videlicet, Hyberniæ, Iſlandiæ, Gotlandiæ, Orcadum, Noruegiæ, atque Daciæ, ſexies viginti millia eſſent annumerata.

The ſame in Engliſh.

But the kings of the other Iſlands, becauſe it was not their cuſtome to breed vp horſes, promiſed the king as many footmen, as euery man was bound to ſend: ſo that out of the ſix Iſlands, namely, of Ireland, Iſland, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke, the king had ſixe ſcore thouſand ſouldiers ſent him.

A teſtimonie of the right and appendances of the crowne of the kingdome of Britaine, taken out of M. Lambard his Ἀρχαιονομία, fol. 137. pag. 2.

ARthurus qui fuit quondam inclytiſſimus Rex Britonum, vir magnus fuit & animoſus, & miles illuſtris. Paruum fuit ei regnum iſtud, non fuit animus eius contentus regno Britanniæ. Subiugauit igitur ſibi ſtrenuè Scantiam totam, quæ modo Norweia vocatur, & omnes inſulas vltra Scantiam, ſcz. Iſlandiam, & Grenlandiam, quæ ſunt de appendicijs Norweiæ, & Suethordiam, & Hyberniam, & Gutlandiam, & Daciam, Semelandiam, Winlandiam, Curlandiam, Roe, Femelandiam, Wirelandiam, Flandriam, Cherelam, Lappam, & omnes alias terras & inſulas Orientalis Oceani vſque Ruſſiam (in Lappa ſcilicet poſuit Orientalem metam regni Britanniæ) & multas inſulas vltra Scantiam, vſque dum ſub Septentrione, quæ ſunt de appendicibus Scantiæ, quæ modo Norweia vocatur. Fuerunt autem ibi Chriſtiani occultè. Arthurus autem Chriſtianus optimus fuit, & fecit eos baptizari, & vnum Deum per totam Norweiam venerari, & vnam fidem Chriſti ſemper inuiolatam cuſtodire, & ſuſcipere. Ceperunt vniuerſi proceres Norweiæ vxores ſuas de nobili gente Britonum tempore illo, vnde Norwegienſes dicunt ſe exijſſe de gente & ſanguine regni huius. Impetrauit enim temporibus illis Arthurus rex à domino Papa, & à Curia Romana, quod confirmata ſit Norweia, in perpetuum coronæ Britanniæ in augmentum regni huius, vocauitque illam dictus Arthurus Cameram Britanniæ. Hac verò de cauſa dicunt Norwegienſes, ſe debere in regno iſto cohabitare & dicunt ſe eſſe de corpore regni huius, ſcilicet de corona Britanniæ. Maluerunt enim manere in regno iſto, quàm in terra eorum propria. Terra enim eorum arida eſt, & montuoſa, & ſterilis, & non ſunt ibi ſegetes niſi per loca. Iſta verò opulenta eſt, & fertilis, & creſcunt hic ſegetes, & cætera vniuerſa. Qua ex cauſa ſæpius per vices geſta ſunt bella atrociſſima inter Anglos & Norwegienſes, & interfecti ſunt innumerabiles. Occupauerunt verò Norwegienſes terras multas & inſulas regni huius, quas adhuc detinent occupatas, nec potuerunt vnquam poſtea penitus euelli. Tandem modò confœderati ſunt nobis fide, & ſacramento, & per vxores ſuas, quas poſtea ceperunt de ſanguine noſtro, & per affinitates, & coniugia. Ita demum conſtituit, & eis conceſſit bonus rex Edouardus propinquus noſter (qui fuit optimus filius pacis) per commune conſilium totius regni. Qua de cauſa poſſent, & debent prædicti de cætero nobiſcum cohabitare, & remanere in regno, ſicut coniurati fratres noſtri.

The ſame in Engliſh.

ARthur which was ſometimes the moſt renowmed king of the Britains, was a mightie, and valiant man, and a famous warriour. This kingdome was too litle for him, & his minde was not contented with it. He therefore valiantly ſubdued all Scantia, which is now called Norway, and all the Iſlands beyond Norway, to wit, Iſland and Greenland, which are apperteining vnto Norway, Sweueland, Ireland, Gotland, Denmarke, Semeland, Windland, Curland, Roe, Femeland, Wireland, Flanders, Cherilland, Lapland, and all the other lands & Iſlands of the Eaſt ſea, euen vnto Ruſſia (in which Lapland he placed the Eaſterly bounds of his Brittiſh Empire) and many other Iſlands beyond Norway, euen vnder the North pole, which are appendances of Scantia, now called Norway. Theſe people were wild and ſauage, and had not in them the loue of God nor of their neighbours, becauſe all euill commeth from the North, yet there were among them certeine Chriſtians liuing in ſecret. But king Arthur was an exceeding good Chriſtian, and cauſed them to be baptized, and thorowout all Norway to worſhip one God, and to receiue and keepe inuiolably for euer, faith in Chriſt onely. At that time all the noble men of Norway tooke wiues of the noble nation of the Britaines, whereupon the Norſes ſay, that they are deſcended of the race and blood of this kingdome. The aforeſaid king Arthur obteined alſo in thoſe dayes of the Pope & court of Rome, that Norway ſhould be for euer annexed to the crowne of Britaine for the inlargement of this kingdome, and he called it the chamber of Britaine. For this cauſe the Norſes ſay, that they ought to dwell with vs in this kingdome, to wit, that they belong to the crowne of Britaine: for they had rather dwell here then in their owne natiue countrey, which is drie and full of mountaines, and barren, and no graine growing there, but in certeine places. But this countrey of Britaine is fruitfull, wherein corne and all other good things do grow and increaſe: for which cauſe many cruell battels haue bene oftentimes fought betwixt the Engliſhmen and the people of Norway, and infinite numbers of people haue bene ſlaine, & the Norſes haue poſſeſſed many lands and Iſlands of this Empire, which vnto this day they doe poſſeſſe, neither could they euer afterwards be fully expelled. But now at length they are incorporated with vs by the receiuing of our religion and ſacraments, and by taking wiues of our nation, and by affinitie, and mariages. For ſo the good king Edward (who was a notable mainteiner of peace) ordeined and granted vnto them by the generall conſent of the whole kingdome, ſo that the people may, and ought from hencefoorth dwell and remaine in this kingdome with vs as our louing & ſworne brethren.

A teſtimonie out of the foreſayd Galfridus Monumetenſis, concerning the conqueſts of Malgo, king of England. Lib. 11. cap. 7.

Vortiporio ſucceſſit Malgo, omnium fere Britanniæ pulcherrimus, multorum tyrannorum depulſor, robuſtus armis, largior cæteris, & vltra modum probitate præclarus. Hic etiam totam Inſulam obtinuit, & ſex conprouinciales Oceani Inſulas: Hyberniam videlicet, atque Iſlandiam, Gotlandiam, Orcades, Noruegiam, Daciam, adiecit dirisſimis prælijs poteſtati ſuæ.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Malgo ſucceeded Vortiporius which was the goodlieſt man in perſon of all Britaine, a prince that expulſed many tyrants. He was ſtrong and valiant in warre, taller then moſt men that then liued, and exceeding famous for his vertues. This king alſo obteined the gouernment of the whole Iſland of Britaine, and by moſt ſharpe battailes he recouered to his Empire the ſixe Iſlands of the Ocean ſea, which before had bene made tributaries by king Arthur, namely Ireland, Iſland, Gotland, Orkney, Norway, and Denmarke.

The conqueſt of the Iſles of Angleſey and Man by Edwin the Saxon king of Northumberland written in the ſecond Booke and fift Chapter of Beda his Eccleſiaſticall hiſtorie of the Engliſh nation.

Eduinus Nordanhumbrorum gentis, id eſt, eius quæ ad borealem Humbri fluminis plagam inhabitat, maiore potentia cunctis qui Britanniam incolunt, Anglorum pariter & Britonum populis præfuit, præter Cantuarios tantùm, necnon & Menauias Britonum inſulas, quæ inter Hiberniam & Britanniam ſitæ ſunt, Anglorum ſubiecit poteſtati.

The ſame in Engliſh.

Edwin king of the people of Northumberland, that is to ſay, of them which inhabit to the North of the riuer Humber, being of greater authoritie then any other potentate in the whole Iſle of Britaine, bare rule aſwell ouer the Engliſh as the Brittiſh nation, except onely the people of Kent: who alſo brought in ſubiection vnder the Engliſh, the Iſles of Man and Angleſey, and the other Northweſterne Iſles of the Britons, which are ſituate betweene Britaine and Ireland.

Another teſtimonie alledged by Beda to the ſame purpoſe. Lib. 2. cap. 9.

Anno ab incarnatione Domini ſexcenteſimo viceſimo quarto, gens Nordanhumbrorum, hoc eſt, ea natio Anglorum quæ ad aquilonarem Humbri fluminis plagam habitat, cum rege ſuo Eduino, verbum fidei (prædicante Paulino, cuius ſupra meminimus) ſuſcepit: cui videlicet regi in auſpicium ſuſcipiendæ fidei, & regni cœleſtis poteſtas, & terreni creuerat imperij: ita vt (quod nemo Anglorum ante eum fecit) omnes Britanniæ fines, qua vel ipſorum vel Britonum Prouinciæ habitabantur, ſub ditione acceperit. Quin & Meneuias inſulas (ſicut & ſupra docuimus) imperio ſubiugauit Anglorum. Quarum prior quæ ad auſtrum eſt, & ſitu amplior, & frugum prouentu atque vbertate fœlicior, nongentarum ſexaginta familiarum menſuram, iuxta æſtimationem Anglorum, ſecunda trecentarum & vltrà ſpatium tenet.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the yeere from the incarnation of our Lord, ſixe hundreth twentie and foure, the people of Northumberland, to wit, thoſe Engliſh people which inhabit on the North ſide of the riuer of Humber, together with their king Edwin, at the Chriſtian preaching and perſwaſion of Paulinus aboue mentioned, embraced the Goſpel. Vnder which king, after he had once accepted of the Chriſtian faith, the power both of the heauenly & of his earthly kingdome was inlarged; inſomuch, that he (which no Engliſh king had done before him) brought vnder his ſubiection all the prouinces of Britaine, which were inhabited either by the Engliſh men themſelues, or by the Britons. Moreouer, he ſubdued vnto the crowne of England (as we haue aboue ſignified) the Hebrides, commonly called the Weſterne Iſlands. The principall whereof being more commodiouſly and pleaſantly ſeated towards the South, and more abounding with corne then the reſt, conteineth according to the eſtimation of the Engliſh, roome enough for 960. families, and the ſecond for 300. and aboue.

The voyage of Bertus, generall of an armie ſent into Ireland by Ecfridus king of Northumberland, in the yere of our Lord 684, out of the 4. Booke and 26. Chapter of Beda his Eccleſiaſticall Hyſtorie.

ANno Dominicæ incarnationis ſexcenteſimo octogeſimo quarto, Ecfridus rex Nordanhumbrorum, miſſo Hiberniam cum excercitu duce Berto, vaſtauit miſerè gentem innoxiam, & nationi Anglorum ſemper amiciſſimam, ita vt nec eccleſijs quidem aut monaſterijs manus parceret hoſtilis. At inſulani & quantum valuere armis arma repellebant, & inuocantes diuinæ auxilium pietatis cœlitus ſe vindicari continuis diù imprecationibus poſtulabant. Et quamuis maledici regnum Dei poſſidere non poſſint, creditum tamen eſt, quòd hi qui merito impietatis ſuæ maledicebantur, ocyùs Domino vindice, pœnas ſui reatus luerent.

The ſame in Engliſh.

IN the yeere of our Lord 684, Ecfrid the king of Northumberland ſent captaine Bert into Ireland with an armie, which Bert miſerably waſted that innocent nation being alwayes moſt friendly vnto the people of England, inſomuch that the fury of the enemy ſpared neither churches nor monaſteries. Howbeit the Iſlanders to their power repelled armes with armes, and crauing Gods aid from heauen with continuall imprecations and curſes, they pleaded for reuenge. And albeit curſed ſpeakers can by no meanes inherit the kingdome of God, it was thought notwithſtanding, that they which were accurſed for their impiety did not long eſcape the vengeance of God imminent for their offences.

The voyage of Octher made to the Northeaſt parts beyond Norway, reported by himſelfe vnto Alfred the famous king of England, about the yere 890.

Finnes liue by hunting & fiſhing.

OCther ſaid, that the countrey wherein he dwelt was called Helgoland. Octher tolde his lord king Alfred that he dwelt furtheſt North of any other Norman. He ſayd that he dwelt towards the North part of the land toward the Weſt coaſt: and affirmed that the land, notwithſtanding it ſtretcheth maruellous farre towards the North, yet it is all deſert and not inhabited, vnleſſe it be very fewe places, here and there, where certeine Finnes dwell vpon the coaſt, who liue by hunting all the Winter, and by fiſhing in Summer. He ſaid that vpon a certeine time he fell into a fantaſie and deſire to prooue and know how farre that land ſtretched Northward, and whether there were any habitation of men North beyond the deſert. Whereupon he tooke his voyage directly North along the coaſt, hauing vpon his ſteereboord alwayes the deſert land, and vpon the leereboord the maine Ocean: and continued his courſe for the ſpace of 3. dayes. In which ſpace he was come as far towards the North, as commonly the whale hunters vſe to trauell. Whence he proceeded in his courſe ſtill towards the North ſo farre as he was able to ſaile in other 3. dayes. At the end whereof he perceiued that the coaſt turned towards the Eaſt, or els the ſea opened with a maine gulfe into the land, he knew not how farre. Well he wiſt and remembred, that he was faine to ſtay till he had a Weſterne winde, and ſomewhat Northerly: and thence he ſailed plaine Eaſt along the coaſt ſtill ſo far as he was able in the ſpace of 4. dayes. At the end of which time he was compelled againe to ſtay till he had a full Northerly winde, forſomuch as the coaſt bowed thence directly towards the South, or at leaſt wiſe the ſea opened into the land he could not tell how farre: ſo that he ſailed thence along the coaſt continually full South, ſo farre as he could trauile in 5. dayes; and at the fifth dayes end he diſcouered a mightie riuer which opened very farre into the land. At the entrie of which riuer he ſtayed his courſe, and in concluſion turned backe againe, for he durſt not enter thereinto for feare of the inhabitants of the land: perceiuing that on the other ſide of the riuer the countrey was thorowly inhabited: which was the firſt peopled land that he had found ſince his departure from his owne dwelling: whereas continually thorowout all his voyage, he had euermore on his ſteereboord, a wilderneſſe and deſert countrey, except that in ſome places, he ſaw a few fiſhers, fowlers, and hunters, which were all Fynnes: and all the way vpon his leereboord was the maine ocean. The Biarmes had inhabited and tilled their countrey indifferent well, notwithſtanding he was afrayed to go vpon ſhore. But the countrey of the Terfynnes lay all waſte, and not inhabited, except it were, as we haue ſayd, whereas dwelled certeine hunters, fowlers, and fiſhers. The Biarmes tolde him a number of ſtories both of their owne countrey, and of the countreyes adioyning. Howbeit, he knew not, nor could affirme any thing for certeine trueth: forſomuch as he was not vpon land, nor ſaw any himſelfe. This onely he iudged, that the Fynnes and Biarmes ſpeake but one language. The principall purpoſe of his trauelle this way, was to encreaſe the knowledge and diſcouerie of theſe coaſts and countreyes, for the more commoditie of fiſhing of ‖ horſewhales, which haue in their teeth bones of great price and excellencie: whereof he brought ſome at his returne vnto the king. Their ſkinnes are alſo very good to make cables for ſhippes, and ſo vſed. This kinde of whale is much leſſe in quantitie then other kindes, hauing not in length aboue ſeuen elles. And as for the common kind of whales, the place of moſt and beſt hunting of them is in his owne countrey: whereof ſome be 48. elles of length, and ſome 50. of which ſort he affirmed that he himſelfe was one of the ſixe, which in the ſpace of 3. dayes killed threeſcore. He was a man of exceeding wealth in ſuch riches, wherein the wealth of that countrey doth conſiſt. At the ſame time that he came to the king, he had of his owne breed 600. tame Deere, of that kinde which they call Rane Deere: of the which number 6. were ſtall Rane Deere, a beaſt of great value, and marueilouſly eſteemed among the Fynnes, for that with them they catch the wilde Rane Deere. He was among the chiefe men of his countrey one: and yet he had but 20. kine, and 20. ſwine, and that little which he tilled, he tilled it all with horſes. Their principall wealth conſiſteth in the tribute which the Fynnes pay them, which is all in ſkinnes of wilde beaſts, feathers of birds, whale bones, and cables, and tacklings for ſhippes made of Whales or Seales ſkinnes. Euery man payeth according to his abilitie. The richeſt pay ordinarily 15. caſes of Marterns, 5. Rane Deere ſkinnes, and one Beare, ten buſhels of feathers, a coat of a Beares ſkinne, two cables threeſcore elles long a piece, the one made of Whales ſkin, the other of Seales.

He ſayd, that the countrey of Norway was very long and ſmall. So much of it as either beareth any good paſture, or may be tilled, lieth vpon the Sea coaſt, which notwithſtanding in ſome places is very rockie and ſtonie: and all Eaſtward, all along againſt the inhabited land, lie wilde and huge hilles and mountaines, which are in ſome places inhabited by the Fynnes. The inhabited land is broadeſt toward the South, & the further it ſtretcheth towards the North, it groweth euermore ſmaller and ſmaller. Towards the South it is peraduenture threeſcore miles in breadth or broader in ſome places: about the middeſt, 30. miles or aboue, and towards the North where it is ſmalleſt, he affirmeth that it proueth not three miles from the Sea to the mountaines. The mountaines be in breadth of ſuch quantitie, as a man is able to trauelle ouer in a fortnight, and in ſome places no more then may be trauelled in ſixe dayes. Right ouer againſt this land, in the other ſide of the mountaines, ſomewhat towards the South, lieth Swethland, and againſt the ſame towards the North, lieth Queeneland. The Queenes ſometimes paſſing the mountaines, inuade and ſpoile the Normans: and on the contrary part, the Normans likewiſe ſometimes ſpoile their countrey. Among the mountaines be many and great lakes in ſundry places of freſh water, into the which the Queenes vſe to carie their boats vpon their backs ouer land, and thereby inuade and ſpoile the countrey of the Normans. Theſe boats of theirs be very little and very light.

WOlſtan ſayd, that he departed from Hetha, and arriued at Truſco, in the ſpace of 7. dayes, and 7. nights: during which time, his ſhippe kept her courſe continually vnder ſaile. All this voyage Wenedland was ſtill vpon his ſteerboord, and on his leerboord was Langland, Layland, Falſter, and Sconie: all which countreyes are ſubiect to Denmarke. Vpon his leerboord alſo, was Bargenland, which hath a priuate king, vnto whom it is ſubiect. Hauing left Bargenland, he paſſed by Blekingie, Meere, Eland and Gotland, hauing them on his leerboord: all which countreys are ſubiect to Sweden: and Wenedland was all the way vpon his ſteerboord, vntill he came to Wixel mouth. Wixel is a very great riuer which runneth along betwixt Witland and Wenedland. Witland is apperteining to the Eaſterlings: and the riuer of Wixel runneth out of || Wenedland into Eaſtmeere, which Eaſtmeere is at the leaſt 15. miles in breadth. There runneth alſo another riuer called Ilſing from the Eaſt, and falleth into Eaſtmeere, out of another lake vpon the banke, whereupon is ſituated Fruſo. So that Ilſing comming out of || Eaſtland, and Wixel out of Wenedland, fall both together into Eaſtmeere, and there Wixel depriueth Ilſing of his name, and runneth thence Weſt & North into the ſea; whereof the place is called Wixelmouth.

The deſcription of Eaſtland.

Eaſtland is a very large land, and there be many cities and townes within it, and in euery one of them is a king: whereby there is continually among them great ſtrife and contention. There is great plentie of hony and fiſh.

Mares milke a chiefe drinke.

The wealthieſt men drinke commonly Mares milke, and the poore people and ſlaues meade. There is no ale brewed among the Eaſterlings, but of mead there is plentie.

The nauigation of King Edgar, taken out of Florentius Wigornienſis, Houeden, and M. Dee his diſcourſe of the Brittiſh Monarchie, pag. 54, 55, &c.

I Haue often times (ſayd he) and many wayes looked into the ſtate of earthly kingdomes, generally the whole world ouer (as farre as it may be yet knowen to Chriſtian men commonly) being a ſtudie of no great difficultie, but rather a purpoſe ſomewhat anſwerable to a perfect Coſmographer, to finde himſelfe Coſmopolites, a citizen and member of the whole and onely one myſticall citie vniuerſall, and ſo conſequently to meditate of the Coſmopoliticall gouernment thereof, vnder the King almightie, paſſing on very ſwiftly toward the moſt dreadfull and moſt comfortable terme prefixed.

And I finde (ſayd he) that if this Brittiſh Monarchie would heretofore haue followed the aduantages which they haue had onward, they might very well, yer this, haue ſurpaſſed by iuſtice, and godly ſorte, any particular Monarchie els, that euer was on earth ſince mans creation: and that to all ſuch purpoſes as to God are moſt acceptable, and to all perfect common wealths, moſt honorable, profitable, and comfortable.

But yet (ſayd he) there is a little locke of Lady Occaſion flickering in the aire, by our hands to catch hold on, whereby we may yet once more (before all be vtterly paſt, and for euer) diſcreetly and valiantly recouer and enioy, if not all our ancient & due appurtenances to this Imperiall Brittiſh monarchie, yet at the leaſt ſome ſuch notable portion thereof, as (al circumſtances duely and iuſtly appertaining to peace & amitie with forrein princes being offred & vſed) this may become the moſt peaceable, moſt rich, moſt puiſſant, & moſt floriſhing monarchie of al els (this day) in chriſtendome. Peaceable, I ſay, euen with the moſt part of the ſelfe ſame reſpects that good king Edgar had (being but a Saxon) and by ſundry ſuch meanes, as he chiefly in this Empire did put in proofe and vſe triumphantly, whereupon his ſurname was Pacificus, moſt aptly and iuſtly. This peaceable king Edgar had in his minde about ſix hundred yeeres paſt, the repreſentation of a great part of the ſelfe ſame Idæa, which from aboue onely, & by no mans deuiſe hath ſtreamed downe into my imagination, being as it becommeth a ſubiect carefull for the godly proſperitie of this Brytiſh Empire vnder our moſt peaceable Queene Elizabeth.

For, Ædgarus pacificus, Regni ſui proſpiciens vtilitati, pariter & quieti, quatuor millia octingentas ſibi robuſtas cōgregauit naues è quibus mille ducentas, in plaga Angliæ Orientali, mille ducentas in Occidentali, mille ducentas in Auſtrali, mille ducentas in Septentrionali pelago cōſtituit, vt ad defenſionem regni ſui, contra exteras nationes, bellorũ diſcrimina ſuſtinerent.

Flores Hiſtoriarum.

O wiſedome imperiall, moſt diligently to be imitated, videlicet, proſpicere, to foreſee. O charitable kingly parent, that was touched with ardent zeale, for procuring the publike profite of his kingdome, yea and alſo the peaceable enioying therof. O, of an incredible maſſe of treaſure, a kingly portion, yet, in his coffers remayning: if then he had, (or late before) any warres, ſeeing no notable taxe, or contribution publike is hiſtorically mentioned to haue bene for the charges leuied: if in peace he himſelfe flouriſhed ſo wealthily: O maruellous politicall, & princely prudencie, in time of peace to foreſee, and preuent, (and that moſt puiſſantly, and inuincibly) all poſſible malice, fraude, force, and miſchiefe forrain. O moſt diſcreet liberalitie to ſuch excellent vſes, powring out his treaſure ſo abundantly. O faithfull Engliſh people (then,) and worthy ſubiects, of ſuch an Imperiall and godly Gouernour. O your true, and willing hearts, and bleſſed ready hands (then,) ſo to impart ſuch abundance of victuals for thoſe huge Nauies maintenance: ſo (I ſay) as neither dearth of famine, ſeemed (fondly) to be feared of you, for any intolerable want likely to enſue thereby, nor prices of victuals complained of to be vnreaſonable enhaunſed by you, finding for their great ſales ſo good, and rare opportunitie.

This peaceable king Edgar, was one of the perfect Imperiall Monarches of this Brytiſh Empire, and therefore thus his fame remaineth (for euer) recorded.

> Anglici orbis Baſileus, flos, & Decus Ædgarus, non minùs memorabilis Anglis, quàm Cyrus Perſis, Romulus Romanis, Alexander Macedonibus, Arſaces Parthis, Carolus Francis, Anno vitæ 37. Regni ſui cum fratre, & poſt 23. Idibus Iulij obijt, & apud Glaſcon ſepelitur.

Charta Regia, Henrici ſecundi.

O Glaſtonbury, Glaſtonbury, the treaſurie of the carcaſes of ſo famous, and ſo many perſons (Quæ olim mater ſanctorum dicta es, & ab alijs, tumulus ſanctorum, quam ab ipſis diſcipulis Domini, ædificatam fuiſſe venerabilis habet Antiquorum authoritas) how lamentable is thy caſe nowe? howe hath hypocriſie and pride wrought thy deſolation? though I omit here the names of very many other, both excellent holy men, and mightie princes, whoſe carcaſes are committed to thy cuſtody, yet that Apoſtolike Ioſeph, that triumphant Brytiſh Arthur, and nowe this peaceable and prouident Saxon king Edgar, doe force me with a certaine ſorrowfull reuerence, here to celebrate thy memorie.

This peaceable king Edgar (as by ancient Recordes may appeare) his Sommer progreſſes, and yerely chiefe paſtimes were, the ſailing round about this whole Ile of Albion, garded with his grand nauie of 4000. ſaile at the leaſt, parted into 4. equall parts of petie Nauies, eche one being of 1000. ſhips, for ſo it is anciently recorded.

> Idem quoque Ædgarus, 4000. naues congregauit, ex quibus omni anno, poſt feſtum Paſchale, 1000. naues ad quamlibet Angliæ partem ſtatuit, ſic, æſtate Inſulam circumnauigauit: hyeme verò, iudicia in Prouincia exercuit: & hæc omnia ad ſui exercitium, & ad hoſtium fecit terrorem.

Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis.

COuld, and would that peaceable & wiſe king Edgar, before need, as being in peace and quiet with all nations about him, and notwithſtanding miſtruſting his poſſible enemies, make his paſtimes ſo roially, politically, and triumphantly, with ſo many thouſand ſhips, and at the leaſt with ten times ſo many men as ſhips, and that yerely: and ſhall we being not aſſured of ſuch neighbors friendſhip, as may become to vs as cruel and tyrannicall enemies as neuer king Edgar needed to dread the like, and they as many and mightie princes, as neuer king Edgar doubted the like, ſhall we (ſaid he) not iudge it ſome part of wiſdome, to imitate carefully in ſome litle proportion (though not with ſo many thouſands) the proſperous paſtimes of peaceable king Edgar, that Saxonicall Alexander? yea, proſperous paſtimes theſe may bee iuſtly counted, by which he alſo made euident to the whole world, that as he wiſely knew the ancient bounds and limites of this Brytiſh Empire, ſo that he could and would royally, iuſtly, and triumphantly enioy the ſame, ſpite of the deuil, and maugre the force of any forreine potentate. And al that, ſo highly and faithfully to the glory of God finally intended and brought to paſſe, as the wiſeſt and godlieſt Prelates and counſellors of thoſe dayes (ſo counted of and recorded) could beſt aduiſe and direct him, or perchance, but ſincerely commend and dutifully incourage him in, he being of himſelfe ſo bent, as purpoſing firſt inuincibly to fortifie the chiefe and vttermoſt walles of his Iſlandiſh Monarchie, againſt all forreine encombrance poſſible. And in that fortification furthering and aſſuring to truſt beſt his owne ouerſight and iudgement, in yeerely viewing the ſame in euery quarter thereof, and that as it were for his paſtime Imperiall, alſo in Summer time, to the ende that afterward in all ſecuritie, hee might in Winter time (vacare) be at conuenient leiſure on land, chiefly to ſet foorth Gods due honour, and ſecondly to vnderſtand, and diligently to liſten to the cauſes and complaints of his commons. For as Matthæus Weſtmonaſterienſis of him to his Imperiall commendation hath left vs a remembrance.

> Habebat autem præterea conſuetudinem, per omnes Regni prouincias tranſire, vt intelligeret quomodo legum iura, & ſuorum ſtatuta decretorum, à principibus obſeruarentur, & ne pauperes à potentibus præiudicium paſſi, opprimerentur, diligenter inueſtigare ſolebat: in vno fortitudini, in altero Iuſtitiæ ſtudens, & Reipub. regníque vtilitati conſulens in vtroque. Hinc hoſtibus circunquáque timor, & amor omnium erga eum excreuerat ſubditorum.

Thus we ſee how in opportunitie, this peaceable Edgar procured to this Empire ſuch proſperous ſecuritie, that his true and faithfull ſubiects, all maner of wayes (that is at home and alſo at ſea, both outward and inward) might peaceably, ſafely and ſecurely employ their wits and trauels for the marueilous enriching of this kingdome, and pleaſuring very many other, carying foorth the naturall commodities of this land, abounding here aboue our neceſſary vſes (and due ſtore reſerued) and likewiſe againe furniſhing the ſame with all neceſſary and not ſuperfluous forreine commodities, ſet from farre or forrein countreys. This was in deed (as before is recorded) a kingly prouidence, Reipub. Regníq; vtilitati conſulens, &c. beſides with great vtilitie and profite publique foreſeene, and by his meanes enioyed, he himſelfe vſed moſt gladly the aduantage of that ſecuritie, in miniſtring of iuſtice, or cauſing the ſame to be executed all his kingdome ouer, not ſquemiſhly, frowningly or ſkornefully ſhunning the ragged and tattered ſleeue of any ſuppliant, holding vp to him a ſimple ſoiled bill of complaint or petition, and that homely contriued, or afrayde at, and timerouſly haſting from the ſickly pale face or feeble limmed ſuter, extreemely conſtrained ſo to ſpeake for himſelfe, nor partially ſmoothering his owne conſcience, to fauour or mainteine the foule fault and treſpaſſe vnlawfull of any his ſubiects, how mightie or neceſſary ſoeuer, they (els) were, but diligently made ſearch, leaſt Pauperes à potentibus præiudicium paſſi, opprimerentur.

Thus did publique ſecuritie frō forrein foe abroad, and true loue of his owne ſubiects, garding him at home, and the heauenly ſpirit directing all his good purpoſes, cauſe iuſtice and equitie in all quarters of this Albion to flouriſh. For which his peaceable and proſperous benefits at the eternall kings his hand obteined, hee became not inſolent or declined to tyrannicall regiment (as ſome princes in other countreis haue made their liues Comicotragical) but with all his foreſaide inuincible Sea force, aboundant wealth, triumphant peace, with ſecuritie and Iuſtice ouer all his Monarchie preuailing, his heart was continually, and moſt zealouſly bent to ſet foorth the glory, laude and honour of the Almightie Creator, the heauenly and euerlaſting king, by ſuch principall and princely meanes, as (then) were deemed to God moſt acceptable, as many monuments yet to our dayes remaining, do of him vndoubtedly teſtifie: As this, for one.

OMnipotentis Dei, &c. Ipſius nutu & gratia ſuffultus, Ego Ædgarus Baſileus dilectæ Inſulę Albionis, ſubditis nobis ſceptris Scotorum, Cumbrorum, ac Brytonum, & omnium circumcirca Regionum, quieta pace perfruens, ſtudioſus ſollicitè de laudibus creatoris omnium occupor addendis: Ne nunc inertia, noſtríſq; diebus (plus ęquo) ſeruitus eius tepeſcere videatur, &c. 18. mei terreni Imperij anno, &c. Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ, 973.

Ego Ædgarus totius Albionis Baſileus hoc priuilegium (tanta roboratum authoritate) crucis Thaumate confirmaui.

So that by all theſe rehearſed Records, it is moſt euident that the peaceable king Edgar, was one of thoſe Monarchs, in whoſe handes (if life had ſuffiſed) the incredible value and priuiledge granted by God and nature vnto this Brittiſh monarchie, might haue bene peaceably purchaſed in ſuch ſort, as the very bleſſing and fauour of the diuine Trinitie hath laid meanes for our induſtrie to attaine to, and enioye the ſame by.

And though ſundry other valiant princes and kings of this land I could recite, which in times paſt haue either by intent gone about, or by wiſe and valiant exploit, haue meetely well proſpered towards this Iſlandiſh appropriate ſuppremacie attaining, yet neuer any other reaſonable meanes was vſed, or by humane wit, or induſtrie can be contriued, to al purpoſes ſufficient, but only by our ſea forces preuailing, and ſo by our inuincible enioying al within the ſea limites of our Brittiſh royaltie contained.

To which incredible political myſterie attaining, no eaſier, readier, or perfecter plat and introduction, is (as yet) come to my imagination, then is the preſent and continuall ſeruice of threeſcore good and tall warlike ſhips, with twentie ſmaller barkes, and thoſe 80. ſhips (great and ſmal) with 6660. apt men furniſhed, and all ſingularly well appointed for ſeruice both on ſea and land, faithfully and diligently to be done in ſuch circumſpect and diſcreet order, as partly I haue in other places declared, and further (vpon good occaſion offered) may declare.

This grand nauie of peaceable king Edgar, of ſo many thouſand ſhips, and they furniſhed with an hundred thouſand men at the leaſt, with all the finall intents of thoſe ſea forces, ſo inuincible, continually mainteined, the order of the execution of their ſeruice, the godly and Imperial ſucceſſe thereof, are in a maner kingly leſſons and prophetical incouragements to vs left, euen now to bee as prouident for publique ſecuritie as he was, to be as ſkilful of our ſea right and royal limites, and wiſely to finde our ſelues as able to recouer and enioy the ſame as he was, who could not chuſe, but with the paſſing and yeerely ſayling about this Brittiſh Albion, with all the leſſer Iſles next adiacent round about it, he could not chuſe I ſay, but by ſuch ful and peaceable poſſeſſion, find himſelfe (according to right, and his hearts deſire) the true and ſoueraigne Monarch of all the Brittiſh Ocean, enuironing any way his empire of Albion and Ireland, with the leſſer Iſlands next adiacent: with memorial whereof, as with one very precious iewel Imperial, hee adorned the title and crowne of his regalitie, as with the teſtimonie annexed of the ſtates and nobles of his Empire, to commit to perpetuall memorie, the ſtile of his chiefe worldly dignitie, in this very tenor of words before alſo remembred.

Note the auncient Maieſties royaltie ouer the Brittiſh Ocean ſea, round about the Brittiſh Empire.

Ego Ædgarus Anglorum Baſileus, omniúmque Regum, Inſularum, Oceaníque Britanniam circumiacentis, cunctarúmq; nationum, quæ infra eam includuntur, Imperator, & Dominus.

The voyage of Edmund and Edward the ſonnes of King Edmund Ironſide into Hungarie, Anno D. 1017. Recorded by Florentius Wigornienſis pag. 391.

The

The ſame in Engliſh.

EDric counſelled king Kanutus to murther the yong princes Edward and Edmund the ſonnes of King Edmund. But becauſe it ſeemed a thing very diſhonourable vnto him to haue them put to death in England, hee ſent them, after a ſhort ſpace, vnto the king of Sweden to be ſlaine. Who, albeit there was a league betweene them, would in no caſe condeſcend vnto Canutus his bloody requeſt, but ſent them vnto Salomon the king of Hungarie to be nouriſhed and preſerued aliue. The one whereof namely Edmund in proceſſe of time there deceaſed. But Edward receiued to wife Agatha daughter vnto the Germane Emperour Henry, of whom he begot Margaret the Queene of the Scots, and Chriſtina a Nunne, and Clito Edgar.

A Chronicle of the Kings of Man, taken out of M. Camdens Chorographie.

IN the yeere of our Lord 1066, Edward King of England, of famous memory deceaſed, whom Harald ſonne of Godwin ſucceeded in his kingdome; againſt which Harald the king of Norwaie called Harald Harfager fought a battel at Stainford bridge, where the Engliſh winning the fielde put all the Noruegians to flight: out of which flight one Godredus ſirnamed Crouan (the ſonne of Harald the blacke, who had before time fled out of Iſland) repaired vnto Godred ſonne of Syrric, who then reigned in Man, and was right friendly and honourably entertained by him.

Fingal.

In the very ſame yeere William the Conquerour ſubdued England, and Godred the ſonne of Syrric, king of Man, deceaſed, after whom ſucceeded his ſonne Fingal.

In the yeere 1066, Godredus Crouan gathered a fleete of ſhips, and ſailed vnto Man, and giuing battell vnto the people of the countrey, was vanquiſhed and put to flight. The ſecond time alſo hauing gathered his armie and ſhips together, hee came vnto Man, fought with the inhabitants, loſt the victorie, and was chaced away. Yea, the third time he aſſembled a great multitude, and comming by night vnto the port which is called Ramſa, hid 300. of his men in a wood ſtanding vpon the ſide of the hill called Scacafel. The Sunne was no ſooner vp, but the Mannians arranged themſelues and with great furie ſet vpon Godred. And in the midſt of the ſkirmiſh, the foreſaid 300. men riſing out of their ambuſh, and comming vpon the backes of the Mannians, moleſted them ſo ſore, that they were enforced to flie. But when they ſaw ẏ they were ouercome and had no place of refuge to retire vnto (for the tide of the ſea had filled the chanel of the riuer of Ramſa) and ſeeing the enemie ſo fiercely purſuing them on the other ſide, they which remained, with lamentable outcries beſeeched Godred to ſpare their liues. Then hee being mooued with compaſſion, and pitying their extreme calamitie, becauſe hee had bene of late ſuſtained and nouriſhed among them, ſounded a retreat and forbad his ſouldiers to make any longer purſuit. The day following Godred put his ſouldiers to their choice, whether they would diuide Man among themſelues and inhabite it, or whether they would take the wealth of the countrey, and ſo returne vnto their owne home. Howbeit, it pleaſed them better to waſte the whole Iſland and to enrich themſelues with the commodities thereof, and ſo to returne from whence they came. Nowe Godred himſelfe with a fewe Iſlanders which had remained with him, tooke poſſeſſion of the South part of the Iſland, and vnto the remnant of the Mannians he granted the North part thereof, vpon condition, that none of them ſhould at any time afterward dare once to chalenge any parcell of the ſaid ground by title of inheritance. Whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that vnto this day the whole Iſland is the kings owne Fee-ſimple, and that all the reuenues thereof pertaine vnto him. Alſo Godredus ſubdued Dublin vnto himſelfe & a great part of Laineſtir. And he ſo tamed the Scots, that none of them durſt build a ſhip or a boate, with aboue three yron nailes in it. Hee reigned 16. yeeres and died in the Iſland called Yle. He left behinde him three ſonnes, Lagman, Harald, and Olauus. Lagman being the eldeſt chalenged the kingdome and reigned ſeuen yeeres. Howbeit Harald his brother rebelled againſt him a long time, but being at length taken by Lagman, hee was gelt and had his eyes put out. Afterward Lagman repenting him that he had put out the eyes of his brother, did of his owne accord relinquiſh his kingdome, and taking vpon him the badge of the croſſe, he went on pilgrimage to Ieruſalem, in which iourney alſo he died.

Boats hauing not paſt three yron nailes in them.

In the yeere 1075. all the principall men of the Iſlands hauing intelligence of the death of Lagman, ſent meſſengers vnto Murecardus O-Brien King of Irland, requeſting him that hee would ſend ſome wel-diſpoſed perſon of his owne kinred and blood royall, vntill Olauus ſonne of Godred were come to full age. The king moſt willingly condeſcended vnto their requeſt, and ſent vnto them one Dopnald the ſonne of Tade; charging and commanding him that with all meekeneſſe and modeſtie, hee ſhould gouerne that kingdome, which of right belonged not vnto him. Howbeit he, after he had once attained vnto the kingdome, neglecting the commandement of his lord, vſurped the gouernment with great tyrannie, committing many heinous crimes, and ſo he reigned very diſorderly for the ſpace of three yeeres. Then all the princes of the Iſlands making a generall conſpiracie, banded themſelues againſt him, and expelled him out of their dominions. And he flying into Ireland returned no more vnto them.

In the yeere 1077. one Ingemundus was ſent from the king of Norway, to take poſſeſſion of the kingdome of the Iſlands. And being come vnto the Iſland of Leodus, hee ſent meſſengers vnto all the princes of the Iſlands to come vnto him, commanding them to aſſemble themſelues, and to appoint him to be their King. In the meane ſeaſon he and his companions ſpent their time in robbing and rioting, rauiſhed women and virgines, and addicted themſelues to filthy pleaſures and to the luſtes of the fleſh. And when theſe things were reported vnto the princes of the Iſlands, who had aſſembled themſelues to chuſe him king, being mightely incenſed thereat, they made haſte towards him, and comming vpon him in the night, they burnt the houſe wherein hee was, and ſlue both him and the reſt of his company, partly with ſword, and partly with fire. Lewis.

In the yeere 1098, the abbey of S. Maries at Ciſtertium was founded. In the ſame yeere alſo Antiochia was taken by the Chriſtians, and a Comet appeared.

Moreouer, the ſame yeere there was a battel fought betweene the inhabitants of Man, at Santwat, and they of the North obtained the victory. In which battell were ſlaine Earle Othor and Mac-Maras, chieftaines of both parts.

The ſame yeere Magnus king of Norway, ſonne of Olauus, ſonne of Harald Harfagre, being deſirous to view the corps of S. Olauus king and Martyr, gaue commandement that his monument ſhould be opened. But the Biſhop and the Clergie withſtanding this his attempt, the king went very boldly and by his kingly authoritie, cauſed the coffin to be opened. And when hee had ſeene with his eyes, and handled with his hands the incorrupt body of the foreſaid King and Martyr, a ſudden feare came vpon him, and he departed with great haſte. The night following Olauus king and Martyr appeared vnto him in a viſion, ſaying: Chuſe (I ſay) vnto your ſelfe one of theſe two, either within 30. dayes to loſe your life with your kingdome, or elſe to depart from Norway and neuer to ſee it againe. The King ſo ſoone as he was awaked out of ſleepe, called his Princes and Senatours, and expounded the foreſaide viſion vnto them. And they alſo being aſtoniſhed thereat gaue him this counſell, that with all ſpeed he ſhould depart out of Norway. Then he without any further delay cauſed a Nauie of 160. ſhips to be prouided, and ſo ſailed vnto the Iſlands of Orkney, which hee preſently ſubdued, and paſſing along through all the Iſlands and conquering them, at length he came vnto the Iſle of Man, where he was no ſooner arriued, but hee went vnto the Iſle of S. Patric to ſee the place of battell, where the inhabitants of Man had of late fought, becauſe many of the dead bodies were as yet vnburied. And ſeeing that it was a moſt beautifull Iſland, it pleaſed him exceeding well, and therefore hee made choice to inhabite therein his owne ſelfe, and built forts there which are at this day called by his owne name. He had the people of Galway in ſuch awe, that he conſtrained them to cut downe their owne timber, and to bring it vnto his ſhore for the building of his fortes. Hee ſailed on further vnto the Iſle of Angleſey neere vnto Wales, and finding two Earles therein (either of them being called by the name of Hugo) he ſlue the one, and the other hee put to flight, and ſo ſubdued the Iſland. But the Welſhmen preſented many gifts vnto him, and ſo bidding them farewell he returned vnto Man. Vnto Murecard king of Irland he ſent his ſhooes, commanding him that he ſhould cary them on his ſhoulders, vpon the birth-day of our Lord through the midſt of his Palace, in the ſight of his Embaſſadours, that thereby it might appeare vnto them, that he was ſubiect vnto king Magnus. Which when the Iriſhmen heard, they tooke it grieuouſly and diſdeined much thereat. But the King being better aduiſed, I had rather (ſaid he) not only beare his ſhooes, but eate his ſhooes, then that king Magnus ſhould deſtroy any one prouince in Irland. Wherefore he fulfilled his commandement, and honourably entertained his Embaſſadours. Many gifts alſo he ſent vnto king Magnus by them, and concluded a league. But the meſſengers returning vnto their lord, told him of the ſituation of Irland, of the beautie thereof, of the fruitfulneſſe of the ſoile, and of the holeſomneſſe of the aire. Magnus hearing theſe things was fully reſolued to conquer all Irland vnto himſelfe. And for the ſame purpoſe he commanded that a Fleet ſhould be made ready. But he taking his voyage with ſixteene ſhips, & being deſirous to view the land, when he had vndiſcreetly departed from his Nauie, he was ſuddenly inuironed by the Iriſh, and was himſelfe ſlaine, together with all that were with him almoſt. Hee was interred neere vnto the Church of S. Patric in Armagh. Hee reigned ſixe yeeres. After his death the Princes of the Iſlands ſent for Olauus the ſonne of Godredus Crouan, who liued in the Court of Henry King of England ſon vnto William the Conquerour.

In the yeere 1102, Olauus ſonne of Godredus Crouan beganne his reigne and reigned fourtie yeeres: he was a peaceable man being in league with all the Kings of Scotland and Irland in his time. He tooke to wife Affrica the daughter of Ferguſius of Galway, of whom he begat Godredus. Of his concubines he begat Regnaldus, Lagmannus, and Haraldus, and many daughters, whereof one married vnto Sumerledus king of ‖ Herergaidel, which afterward occaſioned the ouerthrow of the whole kingdome of the Iſlands. He begat foure ſonnes by her, namely Dulgallus, Raignaldus, Engus, and Olauus.

‖ Argile.

In the yeere 1134. Olauus gaue vnto Yuo the Abbat of Furnes a portion of his owne ground in Man to build an Abbey in the place which is called Ruſſin. Alſo hee inriched with reuenues and indued with priuiledges al places of religion within his Iſlands.

In the yere 1142. Godredus þ ſon of Olauus ſailed vnto the K. of Norway called Hinge, and doing his homage vnto him he remained with him, & was by him honorably entertained. The ſame yere the 3. ſonnes of Harald brother vnto Olauus, who were brought vp at the citie of Dublin, gathering together a great multitude of people, and all the fugitiues and vagabonds of the kingdome reſorted vnto Man, and demaunded of the ſaid king the one halfe of al the kingdome of the Iſlands. Which thing when the king heard, being deſirous to pacifie them, he anſwered that he would conſult about that matter. And a day and place being appointed, where the conſultation ſhould bee kept, in the meane time thoſe miſcreants cõſpired together, about the murthering of the King. And when the day appointed was come, both companies aſſembled themſelues vnto the hauen towne called Ramſa, and they ſate in order, the king with his nobilitie on the one ſide, and they with their confederates on the other ſide. Howbeit Regnaldus who had an intention to ſlay the king, ſtoode a-ſide in the midſt of the houſe talking with one of the Princes of the lande. And being called to come vnto the king he turned himſelfe about as if hee would haue ſaluted him, and lifting vp his glittering axe, he chopt the kings head quite off at a blow. 1143. Nowe hauing committed this outragious villanie, within a ſhort ſpace they diuided the Iſland betweene themſelues, and gathering an armie together ſailed vnto Galway, intending to ſubdue that alſo; howbeit the people of Galway aſſembled themſelues, and with great furie encountred with them. Then they immediately turning their backs with great confuſion fled vnto Man. And as touching all the Galwedians which inhabited in the ſaid Iſland, ſome of them they ſlue, and the reſidue they baniſhed.

In the yeere 1143. Godredus ſonne of Olauus returning out of Norway was created king of Man; who in reuenge of his fathers death, put out the eyes of two of Haralds ſonnes and ſlue the third.

In the yeere 1144. Godredus began his reigne, and hee reigned thirtie yeeres. In the third yeere of his reigne the citizens of Dublin ſent for him and created him king of Dublin, againſt whom Murecardus king of Irland made warre, and encamping himſelfe at the citie called Coridelis, he ſent his brother Oſibel with 3000. horſemen vnto Dublin, who was ſlaine by Godred and the Dubliners, the reſt of his company being put to flight. Theſe things being thus finiſhed, Godredus returned vnto Man, and began to exerciſe tyrannie, diſinheriting certaine of his nobles, of whom one called Thorfinus the ſonne of Oter, being mightier then the reſt, went vnto Sumerledus, and named Dubgal the ſonne of Sumerledus, king of the Iſlands, and ſubdued many of the ſaid Iſlands on his behalfe. Whereof when Godred had intelligence by one Paulus, prouiding a Nauie, hee went to meete Sumerledus comming againſt him with 80. ſhips: and in the yeere 1156. 1156. vpon the night of the feaſt of Epiphanie, there was a Sea-battell fought, and many being ſlaine on both parts, the day folowing they were pacified, and diuided the kingdome of the Iſlands among themſelues, and it continued two kingdomes from that day vnto this preſent time. And this was the cauſe of the ruine of the monarchie of the Iſlands, from which time the ſonnes of Sumerled inioyed the one halfe thereof.

In the yeere 1158. Sumerled came vnto Man with 53. ſhips, putting Godred to flight and waſting the Iſland: and Godred ſailed vnto Norway to ſeeke for aide againſt Sumerled. In the yere 1164. Sumerled gathered a fleete of 160. ſhips together; and arriued at Rhinfrin, intending to ſubdue all Scotland vnto himſelfe: howbeit, by Gods iuſt iudgement being ouercome by a few, together with his ſonne, and an innumerable multitude of people, he was ſlaine. The very ſame yere there was a battel fought at Ramſa, betweene Reginald the brother of Godred, and the inhabitants of Man, but by the ſtratageme of a certaine Earle the Mannians were put to flight. Then began Reginald to vſurpe the kingly authoritie. Howbeit his brother Godred within foure dayes after, comming out of Norway with a great power of armed men, apprehended his brother Reginald, gelt him, and put out his eyes. The ſame yeere deceaſed Malcolme the king of Scots, and his brother William ſucceeded in the kingdome.

In the yeere 1166. two Comets appeared in the moneth of Auguſt, before the riſing of the Sunne, one to the South and another to the North.

In the yeere 1171. Richard earle of Penbroke ſailed into Ireland, and ſubdued Dublin with a great part of Ireland.

In the yere 1176. Iohn Curcy conquered Vlſter vnto himſelfe. And at the ſame time alſo Viuianus legate frō the ſea of Rome came into Man, & cauſed king Godred to bee lawfully married vnto his wife Phingola, daughter of Maclotlen ſon of Murkartac king of Irlād, mother of Olauus, who was then 3. yeeres old. Siluanus the abbat married them, vnto whom the very ſame day, king Godred gaue a portion of ground in Mireſcoge, where he built a Monaſterie: howbeit, in proceſſe of time, the ſaid land with the monkes, was granted vnto the abbey of Ruſſin.

In the yere 1172. Reginaldus the ſon of Eacmarcat (a man deſcended of the blood royal) comming into Man with a great multitude of people, in the abſence of the king, at the firſt conflict hee put to flight certaine watchmen which kept the ſhoare, & ſlue about 30. perſons. Whereupon the very ſame day the Mannians arranging themſelues put him, & almoſt al his folowers to the ſword.

In the yere 1183. O. Fogolt was vicount of Man.

In the yere 1185. the Sunne was ecclipſed vpon the feaſt of S. Philip and Iacob.

In the yere 1187. deceaſed Godred king of the Ilands, vpō the 4. of the Ides of Nouember, and the next ſommer his body was tranſlated vnto the iland of Hy. He left 3. ſonnes behinde him, Reginaldus, Olauus, and Yuarus. In his life time he appointed his ſonne Olauus to be his heire apparant, becauſe he onely was borne legitimate. But the Mannians, when Olauus was ſcarce ten yeeres olde, ſent vnto the ilands for Reginald and created him king.

In the yeere 1187. began Reginald the ſonne of Godred to reigne ouer the ilandes: and Murchardus a man of great power throughout all the kingdome of the ilands was put to death.

In the yere 1192. there was a battel fought betweene Reginald and Engus the two ſonnes of Sumerled: but Engus obtained the victory. The ſame yere was the abbey of Ruſſin remoued vnto Duſglas, howbeit within foure yeeres after the monkes returned vnto Ruſſin.

In the yere 1203. Michael biſhop of the ilands deceaſed at Fontanas, and Nicholas ſucceeded in his roome.

In the yere 1204. Hugo de Lacy inuaded Vlſter with an armie and encountred with Iohn de Curcy, tooke him priſoner & ſubdued Vlſter vnto himſelfe. Afterward he permitted the ſaid Iohn to goe at libertie, who comming vnto king Reginald was honourably entertained by him, becauſe he was his ſonne in lawe, for Iohn de Curcy had taken to wife Affrica the daughter of Godredus, which founded the abbey of S. Mary de iugo domini, and was there buried.

In the yeere 1205. Iohn de Curcy & Reginald king of the ilands inuading Vlſter with a hundreth ſhips at the port which is called Stranfeord did negligently beſiege the caſtle of Rath: but Walter de Lacy cōming vpō them with his armie, put them to flight, & from that time Curcy neuer recouered his land. In the yere 1210. Engus the ſon of Sumerled & his 3. ſonnes were ſlaine.

At the ſame time Iohn king of England conducted a fleet of 500. ſhips into Ireland, and ſubdued it vnto himſelfe: and ſending a certaine earle named Fulco, vnto the iſle of Man, his ſouldiers almoſt vtterly waſted it in the ſpace of 15. dayes, and hauing taken pledges they returned home into their owne countrey. King Reginald and his nobles were at this time abſent from Man.

King Iohn paſſed into Ireland with 500. ſailes.

In the yere 1217. deceaſed Nicolas biſhop of the ilands, and was buried in Vlſter, in the houſe of Benchor, whom Reginald ſucceeded.

I thinke it not amiſſe to report ſomewhat more concerning the two foreſaid brethren Reginaldus and Olauus.

REginald gaue vnto his brother Olauus, the iland called Lodhus or Lewes, which is ſaide to be larger then the reſt of the ilands, but almoſt deſtitute of inhabitants, becauſe it is ſo full of mountaines & quarries, being almoſt no where fit for tillage. Howbeit the inhabitants thereof do liue for the moſt part vpon hunting and fiſhing. Olauus therefore went to take poſſeſſion of this Iland, and dwelt therein leading a poore life: and when he ſaw that it would by no meanes ſuffice for the ſuſtentation of himſelfe & his ſouldiers, hee went boldly vnto his brother Reginald, who at then remained in the ilandes, & ſpake on this wiſe vnto him. My brother (ſaid he) and my lord and king, you know that the kingdom of the ilands pertained vnto me by right of inheritance, howbeit becauſe the Lord hath choſen you to beare the ſcepter, I doe not enuie that honour vnto you, neither doth it any whit grieue mee that you are exalted vnto this royall dignitie. Nowe therefore I beſeech you to prouide mee ſome portion of land in the ilands, whereby I may honeſtly liue.

For the Iſland of Lewis which you gaue me is not ſufficient for my maintenance. Which his brother Reginald hearing ſaid that he would conſult about the premiſſes. And on the morow, when Olauus was ſent for to parle, Reginald cõmanded him to be attached, and to be caried vnto William king of Scotland, and with him to remaine priſoner: and Olauus remained in priſon almoſt for the ſpace of 7. yeres. But at the 7. yeres end William king of Scots deceaſed, and Alexander his ſonne reigned in his ſtead. The foreſaid William, before his death, commanded that all priſoners ſhould be ſet at libertie. Olauus therefore being at libertie came vnto Man, and immediatly with a great company of nobles tooke his iourney vnto S. Iames: and his brother Reginald cauſed the ſaid Olauus to take vnto wife, the daughter of a certaine noble man of Kentyre, couſine german vnto his owne wife, & by name being called Lauon, and he granted vnto him the poſſeſſion of Lewis. After a few dayes Reginald the biſhop of the Iſlands hauing gathered a Synod, ſeparated Olauus and Godred his ſonne, and Lauon his wife, namely becauſe ſhee was couſin german vnto his former wife. Afterward Olauus maried Scriſtina daughter vnto Ferkarus earle of Roſſe.

Hereupon the wife of Reginald Queene of the Iſlands being incenſed, ſent letters vnto the Iſland of Sky in K. Reginald his name to her ſonne Godred willing him to take Olauus. Which cõmandement Godred putting in practiſe, & entring the iſle of Lewis for yͤ ſame purpoſe, Olauus fled in a litle ſkiffe vnto his father in law the earle of Roſſe, & in the meane time Godred waſted the iſle of Lewis. At the very ſame time Pol the ſon of Boke vicount of Sky, being a man of power in al the Iſlands, becauſe he would not conſent vnto Godred, fled, & dwelt together with Olauus in the dominions of the earle of Roſſe, & making a league with Olauus, they went both in a ſhip vnto Sky. To be ſhort, ſending certaine ſpies, they were informed that Godred remained ſecure with a ſmal company in a certaine Iſle called yͤ iſle of S. Columba. And vniting vnto themſelues their friends and acquaintance, & others that would goe voluntarily with them, in the dead of the night, hauing lanched 5. ſhips from the next ſea-ſhore, which was diſtant about the ſpace of 2. furlongs from the foreſaid Iſland, they enuironed the ſaid Iſland on all ſides. Now Godred and his company riſing early in the morning, and ſeeing themſelues beſet with their enemies on all ſides, they were vtterly aſtonied. Howbeit arming themſelues they began ſtoutly to make reſiſtance, but altogether in vaine. For about 9. of the clocke in the morning, Olauus and the foreſaid vicount Pol, with al their ſouldiers, entred the Iſland, and hauing ſlaine all whom they found without the precincts of the Church, they apprehended Godred, gelding him, and putting out his eyes. Vnto which action Olauus gaue not his cõſent, neither could he withſtand it, by reaſon of the forenamed vicount the ſon of Boke. This was done in the yere of Chriſt 1223. The next ſommer folowing Olauus hauing receiued pledges from all the chiefe men of the Iſlands, with a fleet of 32. ſhips ſailed vnto Man, and arriued at Rognolfwaht. At the ſame time Reginald and Olauus diuided the kingdome of the Iſlands betweene themſelues, Man being granted vnto Reginald, & beſides his portion the name of a king alſo. Olauus hauing receiued certaine victuals of the people of Man, returned, together with his company, vnto his owne portion of Iſlands. The yeere folowing Reginald taking vnto him Alanus lord of Galway, together with his ſubiects of Man, ſailed vnto the Iſlands, that hee might take away that portion of ground from his brother Olauus, which he had granted vnto him, and ſubdue it vnto himſelfe. Howbeit, by reaſon that the people of Man had no liſt to fight againſt Olauus or the Iſlanders, becauſe they bare good will towards them, Reginald and Alanus lord of Galway being defeated of their purpoſe, returned home vnto their owne. Within a ſhort ſpace after Reginald, vnder pretenſe of going vnto the Court of his lord the king of England, receiued an 100. markes of the people of Man, and tooke his iourney vnto Alanus lord of Galway. Which the people of Man hearing tooke great indignation thereat, inſomuch that they ſent for Olauus, and appointed him to be their king.

The Iſle of Man aduanced to a kingdome.

In the yeere 1226. Olauus recouered his inheritance, that is to ſay the kingdome of Man and of the Iſlands, which Reginald his brother had gouerned for the ſpace of 38. yeeres, and he reigned two yeeres in ſafetie.

In the yeere 1228. Olauus with all his nobles of Man, and the ſtronger part of his people, ſailed vnto the Iſlands. A ſhort ſpace after Alanus lord of Galway, Thomas earle of Athol, & king Reginald came vnto Man with a mightie army, and waſted all the South part of Man, ſpoiled the Churches, and ſlue all the men whom they could take, inſomuch, that the South part of the ſaide Iſland was brought almoſt into deſolation. And then Alanus returned with his army into his owne land, leauing behind him bailiffes and ſubſtitutes in Man, which ſhould gather vp and render vnto him the tribute of the countrey. Howbeit king Olauus came ſuddenly vpon them, chaced them away and recouered his kingdome. And the Mannians which of late were diſperſed and ſcattered abroad, began to vnite themſelues, and to inhabite without feare. The ſame yeere, in the time of Winter, vpon the ſudden, and in the very dead of the night came king Reginald out of Galway with fiue ſhips, and burnt all the ſhips of his brother Olauus, and of the nobles of Man, at the Iſle of S. Patric, & concluding a peace with his brother, remained at the port of Ragnolwath 40. dayes: in the meane while hee allured vnto himſelfe all the Iſlanders vpon the South part of Man, who ſware, that they would aduenture their liues, vntill hee had gotten the one halfe of his kingdome: contrarywiſe Olauus ioyned vnto himſelfe them of the North part, & vpon the 14. of February in the place called Tingualla, a field was fought betweene the two brothers, wherein Olauus got the victory, and Reginald the king was by certaine ſouldiers ſlaine without the knowledge of his brother. Alſo certaine pirates comming to the ſouth part of Man, waſted & ſpoiled it. The monkes of Ruſſin conueyed the body of K. Reginald, vnto the abbey of S. Mary of Fournes, & there he was interred in the place, which his owne ſelfe had choſen for the purpoſe. After theſe things Olauus trauelled vnto the king of Norway, but before he was arriued there, Haco king of Norway appointed a certaine noble man named Husbac the ſon of Owmund, to be king of the Iſlands of the Hebrides & called his name Haco. Then came the ſaid Haco with Olauus & Godred Don the ſon of Reginald, and a multitude of Noruegians, vnto the iſlands: and while they were giuing an aſſault vnto a caſtle in the iſland of Both, Haco being hit with a ſtone died, and was buried in Iona.

In the yere 1230. came Olauus, with Godredus Don, & certeine Noruegians vnto Man, and they parted the kingdome among themſelues, Olauus ſtil reteining Man. Godred as he was going vnto the iſlands, was ſlaine in the iſle of Lewis, & Olauus inioyed the kingdome of the iſlands alſo.

In the yere 1237. vpon the 12. of the Kalends of Iune, Olauus ſonne of Godred king of Man deceaſed in the iſle of S. Patric, and was interred in the abbey of Ruſſin. He reigned 11. yeres, two while his brother was aliue, and nine after his death.

Haraldus his ſonne being of the age of 14. yeres, ſucceeded, and he reigned 12. yeeres. The firſt yere of his reigne taking his iourney vnto the iſlands, he appointed one Loglen his kinſman to be his deputie in Man. The Autumne folowing Haraldus ſent the three ſonnes of Nel, namely Dufgaldus, Torquellus, & Molmore, and his friend Ioſeph vnto Man, that they might enter into cõſultation together. Wherfore the 25. day they aſſembled themſelues at Tingualla: and malice growing betweene the ſonnes of Nel, and Loglen, they fel to blowes and ſkirmiſhed ſore on both parts, Molmore, Dufgald, and the foreſaid Ioſeph being all ſlaine in the fray. The Spring folowing, king Harald came into the iſle of Man, and Loglen fleeing into Wales, was himſelfe, together with Godred the ſonne of Olauus his pupil, and 40. others, drowned by ſhipwracke.

In the yere 1238. Goſpatricius and Gilleſcriſt ſonne of Mac-Kerthac came from the king of Norway vnto Man, expelling Harald out of the ſaid iſland, and taking tribute on the behalfe of the Noruegian king, becauſe the ſaid Harald refuſed to come vnto his Court.

In the yere 1240. Goſpatricius deceaſed and was buried in the abbey of Ruſſin.

In the yere 1239. Haraldus went vnto the king of Norway, who within two yeres confirmed vnto him, his heires and ſucceſſors, vnder ſeale, all the iſlands which his predeceſſors enioyed.

In the yeere 1242. Haraldus returned out of Norway vnto Man, and being honourably receiued by the inhabitants, he liued in peace with the kings of England and Scotland.

In the yeere 1247. Haraldus (like as his father alſo before him) was knighted by the king of England, and ſo being rewarded with many gifts, he returned home. The ſame yere he was ſent for by the king of Norway, and he maried his daughter. And in the yere 1249. as he was returning home with his wife, with Laurence the elect of Man, and with many other nobles, neere vnto the confines of Radland, he was drowned in a tempeſt.

In the yere 1249. Reginald the ſonne of Olauus, and brother vnto Harald began to reigne the day next before the Nones of May: and vpon the 30. day of the ſame moneth he was ſlaine by Yuarus a ſouldier, and other of his complices, in the South part of a certaine medow, neere vnto the Church of the holy Trinitie, and he was buried at the Church of S. Marie at Ruſſin.

The ſame yere Alexander king of Scots prouided a great nauie of ſhips, that he might conquere the iſlands vnto himſelfe: howbeit falling into an ague at the iſle of Kerwary, he deceaſed.

Then Haraldus the ſonne of Godred Don vſurped the name of a king ouer the iſlands, hee baniſhed alſo all the princes of Harald the ſonne of Olauus, and ordeined his fugitiues to bee princes and nobles in their ſtead.

In the yere 1250. Haraldus the ſon of Godred Don being ſummoned by letters went vnto the king of Norway, who deteined him in priſon becauſe he had vniuſtly poſſeſſed the kingdome. The ſame yeere Magnus the ſonne of Olauus, and Iohn the ſonne of Dugalt arriued at Roghalwaht, which Iohn named himſelfe king; but the Manniãs taking it grieuouſly, that Magnus was not nominated, draue them from their ſhoare, and many of the company periſhed by ſhipwracke.

In the yeere 1252. came Magnus the ſonne of Olauus vnto Man, and was ordeined king. The yere folowing he tooke his iourney vnto the king of Norway, & there he remained one whole yere.

In the yeere 1254. Haco king of Norway ordeined Magnus the ſonne of Olauus king of the Iſlands, confirming them to him and to his heires, and by name vnto Harald his brother.

In the yere 1256. Magnus tooke his iourney into England, and was by the king of England created knight.

In ẏ yere 1257. the Church of S. Maries of Ruſſin was dedicated by Richard biſhop of Soder.

In the yeere 1260. Haco king of Norway came into the parts of Scotland, and without atchieuing ought, turning his courſe towards the Orcades he there deceaſed at Kirwas, and was buried at Bergen.

In the yeere 1265. Magnus the ſonne of Olauus king of Man and of the Iſlands died at the caſtle of Ruſſin, and was buried at the Church of S. Mary at Ruſſin.

In the yere 1266. the kingdome of the Iſlands was tranſlated vnto Alexander king of Scots.

That which followeth was written in a new character or letter, and of a diuers kinde from the former.

IN the yeere 1270. vpon the ſeuenth day of October the Fleete of Alexander king of Scots arriued at Roghalwath, and the next day before the Sunne riſing there was a battell fought betweene the Mannians and the Scots, in the which conflict there were ſlaine 535. Mannians: whereupon a certaine verſifier writeth to this effect:

Fiue hundreth fourtie men are ſlaine:
against ill haps,
Yee Mannians arme your ſelues, for feare of afterclaps.

In the yeere 1313. Robert king of Scots beſieged the caſtle of Ruſſin, which Dingawy Dowil held againſt him, howbeit at the laſt the king tooke the caſtle.

In the yeere 1316. vpon the feaſt of Aſcenſion, Richard le Mandeuile and his brethren, with diuers great perſonages of Irland arriued at Ramaldwath, demaunding to haue victuals and money miniſtred vnto them, becauſe they had bene ſpoyled by their enemies, which made continuall warre vpon them. But when the whole company of the Mannians anſwered that they would giue nothing, they proceeded againſt them in warlike maner with two bands, till they were come vnder the ſide of the hill called Warthfel, in the fielde where Iohn Mandeuile remained, and there hauing fought a battell, the Iriſh ouercame the people of Man, and ſpoiled the Iſland and the Abbey of Ruſſin alſo: and when they had reueled a whole moneth in the Iſland, lading their ſhips they returned home.

The mariage of the daughter of Harald, ſlaine by William the Conquerour, vnto Ieruſlaus duke of Ruſſia, taken out of the 9. Booke of the Daniſh hiſtorie written by Saxo Grammaticus. An. D. 1067.

1067. HAraldo cæſo, filij eius duo confeſtim in Daniam cum ſorore migrarunt. Quos Sweno, paterni illorum meriti oblitus conſanguineæ pietatis more accepit, puellamque Ruthenorum regi Waldemaro, (qui & ipſe Iariſlaus a ſuis eſt appellatus) nuptum dedit. Eidem poſtmodum noſtri temporis dux, vt ſanguinis, ita & nominis hæres, ex filia nepos obuenit. Itaque hinc Britannicus, indè Eous ſanguis in ſalutarem noſtri principis ortum confluens communem ſtirpem duarum gentium ornamentum effecit.

The ſame in Engliſh.

HArald being ſlaine his two ſonnes with their ſiſter ſped themſelues immediatly into Denmarke. Whom Sweno forgetting their fathers deſerts receiued in moſt kinde and friendly maner, and beſtowed the yong damoſell in mariage vpon Waldemarus king of Ruſſia who was alſo called by his ſubiects Iariſlaus. Afterward the ſaid Waldemarus had by his daughter a nephew being duke at this preſent, who ſucceeded his predeceſſour both in lineal deſcent and in name alſo. Wherefore the Engliſh blood on the one ſide and the Ruſſian on the other ſide concurring to the ioyfull birth of our prince, cauſed that mutual kinred to be an ornament vnto both nations.

The ſtate of the ſhipping of the Cinque ports from Edward the Confeſſour and William the Conquerour, and ſo downe to Edward the firſt, faithfully gathered by the learned Gentleman M. William Lambert in his Perambulation of Kent, out of the moſt ancient Records of England.

The antiquitie of the Ports.

I Finde in the booke of the generall ſurvey of the Realme, which William the Conquerour cauſed to bee made in the fourth yeere of his reigne, and to be called Domeſday, becauſe (as Matthew Pariſe ſaith) it ſpared no man but iudged all men indifferently, as the Lord in that great day wil do, that Douer, Sandwich, and Rumney, were in the time of K. Edward the Confeſſour, diſcharged almoſt of all maner of impoſitions and burdens (which other townes did beare) in conſideration of ſuch ſeruice to bee done by them vpon the Sea, as in their ſpecial titles ſhall hereafter appeare.

Whereupon, although I might ground reaſonable coniecture, that the immunitie of the hauen Townes (which we nowe call by a certaine number, the Cinque Ports) might take their beginning from the ſame Edward: yet for as much as I read in the Chartre of K. Edward the firſt after the conqueſt (which is reported in our booke of Entries) A recitall of the graunts of ſundry kings to the Fiue Ports, the ſame reaching no higher then to William the Conquerour, I will leaue my coniecture, and leane to his Chartre: contenting my ſelfe to yeelde to the Conquerour, the thankes of other mens benefits, ſeeing thoſe which were benefited, were wiſely contented (as the caſe then ſtood) to like better of his confirmation (or ſecond gift) then of K. Edwards firſt graunt, and endowment.

And to the ende that I may proceed in ſome maner of array, I will firſt ſhewe, which Townes were at the beginning taken for the Fiue Ports, and what others be now reputed in the ſame number: ſecondly, what ſeruice they ought, and did in times paſſed: and laſtly, what priuiledges they haue therefore, and by what perſons they haue bene gouerned.

Which be the Fiue Ports.

If I ſhould iudge by the common, and rude verſe,

Douer, Sandwicus, Ry, Rum, Frigmare ventus,

I muſt ſay, that Douer, Sandwich, Rie, Rumney, and Winchelſey, (for that is, Frigmare ventus) be the Fiue Ports: Againe, if I ſhould be ruled by the Rolle which reciteth the Ports that ſend Barons to the Parliament, I muſt then adde to theſe, Haſtings and Hyde, for they alſo haue their Barons as well as the other: and ſo ſhould I not onely, not ſhew which were the firſt Fiue, but alſo (by addition of two others) increaſe both the number, and doubtfulneſſe. Leauing the verſe therefore, for ignorance of the authour and ſuſpition of his authoritie, and forſaking the Rolle (as not aſſured of the antiquitie) I will flee to Henry Bracton, a man both ancient, learned, and credible, which liued vnder K. Henry the thirde, and wrote (aboue three hundreth yeeres ſince) learnedly of the lawes of this Realme. 1250.

Citizens were called Barons in old time.

He (I ſay) in the third booke of his worke, and treatiſe of the Crowne, taking in hand to ſhewe the articles inquirable before the Iuſtice in Eire, (or Itinerent, as we called them, becauſe they vſed to ride from place to place throughout the Realme, for adminiſtration of iuſtice) ſetteth forth a ſpecial fourme of writs, to be directed ſeuerally to the Bailifes of Haſtings, Hithe, Rumney, Douer, and Sandwich, commanding them, that they ſhould cauſe twentie & foure of their Barons (for ſo their Burgeſſes, or towneſmen, and the citizens of London likewiſe, were wont to be termed) to appeare before the Kings Iuſtices at Shipwey in Kent (as they accuſtomed to do) there to enquire of ſuch points, as ſhould be giuen in charge. Which done, hee addeth moreouer, that forſomuch as there was oftentimes cōtention betweene them of the Fiue Ports, & the inhabitants of Yarmouth in Norfolke and Donwich in Suffolke, there ſhould be ſeuerall writs directed to them alſo, returnable before the ſame Iuſtices at the ſame day and place, reciting, that where the King had by his former writs ſommoned the Pleas of the Fiue Ports to bee holden at Shipwey, if any of the ſame townes had cauſe to complaine of any (being within the liberties of the ſaid Ports) he ſhould be at Shipwey to propound againſt him, and there to receiue according to law and Iuſtice.

Contention betweene Yarmouth, and the Fiue Ports.

Antiquitie of Yarmouth fiſhing.

Thus much I recite out of Bracton, partly to ſhew that Shipwey was before K. Edward the firſts time, the place of aſſembly for the Plees of the Fiue Ports: partly to notifie the difference, and controuerſie that long time ſince was betweene theſe Ports, and thoſe other townes: But purpoſely, and chiefly, to proue, that Haſtings, and Hithe, Douer, Rumney, and Sandwich, were in Bractons time accompted the Fiue principall hauens or Ports, which were endowed with priuiledge, and had the ſame ratified by the great Chartre of England.

Neither yet will I deny, but that ſoone after, Winchelſey and Rie might be added to the num- 1268.

ber. For I find in an old recorde, that king Henry the third tooke into his owne hands (for the better defence of the Realme) the townes of Winchelſey, and Rie, which belonged before to the Monaſterie of Feſcampe in Normandie, and gaue therefore in exchange, the Manor of Chiltham in Glouceſterſhire, & diuers other lands in Lincolneſhire. This he did, partly to conceale from the Priors Aliens the intelligence of the ſecret affaires of his Realme, and partly becauſe of a great diſobedience & exceſſe, that was committed by the inhabitants of Wincelſey, againſt Prince Edward his eldeſt ſonne. And therefore, although I can eaſily be led to thinke, that he ſubmitted them for their correction to the order, and gouernance of the Fiue ports, yet I ſtand doubtfull whether hee made them partners of their priuiledges, or no, for that had bene a preferment, and no puniſhment vnto them: but I ſuſpect rather, that his ſonne king Edward the firſt, (by whoſe encouragement and aide, olde Winchelſey was afterward abandoned, and the newe towne builded) was the firſt that apparelled them with that preeminence.

Winchelſey firſt builded. 1277.

By this therefore let it appeare, that Haſtings, Douer, Hithe, Rumney, and Sandwich, were the firſt Ports of priuiledge: which (becauſe they were 5. in number) both at the firſt gaue, and yet continue, to all the reſidue, the name of Cinque Ports, although not onely Winchelſey and Rie, be (ſince that time) incorporated with them as principals, but diuers other places alſo (for the eaſe of their charge) be crept in, as partes, lims, and members of the ſame.

Now therefore, ſomewhat ſhalbe ſaid, as touching the ſeruices that theſe Ports of duetie owe, and in deed haue done, to the Princes: whereof the one (I meane with what number of veſſels, in what maner of furniture, and for how long ſeaſon, they ought to wait on the king at the Sea, vpon their owne charges) ſhall partly appeare by that which we ſhall preſently ſay, and partly by that which ſhall followe in Sandwich, and Rumney: The other ſhall bee made manifeſt by examples, drawne out of good hiſtories: and they both ſhall be teſtified by the words of king Edward the firſt in his owne Chartre.

The booke of Domeſday before remembred, chargeth Douer with twentie veſſels at the ſea, whereof eche to be furniſhed with one and twentie men for fifteene dayes together: and ſaith further, that Rumney and Sandwich anſwered the like ſeruice. But now whether this (like) ought to be vnderſtoode of the like altogether, both in reſpect of the number and ſeruice, or of the (like) in reſpect of ſeruice, according to the proportion of their abilitie onely, I may not here by take vpon me to determine. For on the one ſide, if Rumney, Sandwich, and the reſidue, ſhould likewiſe finde twentie veſſels a piece, then (as you ſhall anone ſee) the fiue Ports were ſubiect to a greater charge at that time, then King Edward the firſt layd vpon them: And on the other ſide, if they were onely chargeable after their proportion, then know I not how farre to burthen them, ſeeing the Record of Domeſday it ſelfe, bindeth them to no certeintie. And therefore leauing this as I find it, I muſt elſewhere make inquiſition for more lightſome proofe. And firſt I will haue recourſe to king Edward the firſt his Chartre in which I read, that At ech time that the King paſſeth ouer the ſea, the Ports ought to rigge vp fiftie and ſeuen ſhips, (whereof euery one to haue twentie armed ſouldiers) and to mainteine them at their owne coſtes, by the ſpace of fifteene dayes together.

1278. And thus it ſtoode with the Ports for their generall charge, in the firſt yeere of his reigne, for then was this Chartre ſealed. But as touching the particular burthen of ech one, I haue ſeene two diuers teſtimonies, of which the firſt is a note in French (bearing the countenance of a Record) and is intituled, to haue bene renued in the two and twentie yeere of the Reigne of the ſame king, by Stephan Pencheſter, then Conſtable of Douer Caſtle, in which the particular charge is ſet downe in this maner.

The Port of Haſtings ought to finde three ſhips.
The lowie of Peuenſey, one
Buluerhithe and Petit Iahn, one.
Bekesborne in Kent, ſeuen.
Grenche at Gillingham in Kent, two men and armour, with the ſhips of Haſtings.
The towne of Rie, fiue.
To it was Tenterdene annexed, in the time of King Henrie the firſt.
The towne of Winchelſey, tenne.
The Port of Rumney, foure.
Lydde, ſeuen.
The Port of Hythe, fiue.
The Port of Douer, nineteene.
The towne of Folkeſtone, ſeuen.
The towne of Feuerſham, ſeuen.
The Port of Sandwich, with Stonor, Fordwich, Dale, &c. fiue.

Theſe ſhips they ought to finde vpon fortie dayes ſummons, armed and arrayed at their owne charge, and in ech of them twentie men, beſides the Maſter of the Mariners: all which they ſhall likewiſe mainteine fiue dayes together at their owne coſts, giuing to the Maiſter ſixe pence by the day, to the Conſtable ſixe pence, and to ech other Mariner three pence. And after thoſe fiue dayes ended, the King ſhall defray the charges.

The other is a Latine Cuſtumall of the towne of Hyde, the which although it pretend not ſo great antiquity as the firſt, yet ſeemeth it to me to import as much or more likelihood and credit: It ſtandeth thus.

Theſe be the Fiue Ports of our ſoueraigne Lord the King hauing liberties, which other Ports haue not: Haſting, Romenal, Heth, Douer, Sandwich, the chiefe Townes.

The ſeruices due by the ſame.

Haſting ſhall finde 21. ſhips, in euery ſhip 21. men, and a Garcion, or Boy, which is called a Gromet. To it perteine (as the members of one towne) the Seaſhore in Seford, Peuenſhey, Hodeney, Winchelſey, Rie, Ihame, Bekeſbourne, Grenge, Northie, Bulwerheth.

Romenal 5. ſhips, in euery ſhip 21. men, and a Garcion: To it perteine, as members thereof, Promhell, Lede, Eaſtweſtone, Dengemareys, olde Rumney.

Hethe 5. ſhips, as Romenal before. To it perteineth the Weſthethe.

Douer 21. ſhips, as Haſting before. To it perteine, Folkſtane, Feuerſham, and S. Margarets, not concerning the land, but for the goods and cattels.

Sandwich 5. ſhips, as Romenal, and Hethe. To it perteine Fordwich, Reculuer, Serre, and Dele, not for the ſoile, but for the goods.

Summe of ſhips 57.
Summe of the men 1187. and 57. Garcions.

This ſeruice, the Barons of the Fiue Ports doe acknowledge to owe to the King, vpon ſummons yeerely (if it happen) by the ſpace of 15. dayes together, at their owne coſts and charges, accounting that for the firſt day of the 15. in which they ſhall ſpread their ſailes to goe towards thoſe parts that the King intendeth: and to ſerue ſo long after 15. dayes, as the King will, at his owne pay and wages.

Thus much out of theſe ancient notes, whereby your ſelfe may eaſily diſcerne the difference: but whether the one or the other, or (by reaſon of ſome latter diſpenſation) neither of theſe, haue place at this day, I muſt referre it to them that be priuie, and of counſell with the Ports: and ſo leauing this alſo vndecided, holde on the way, wherein I am entred.

This duetie of attendance therefore (being deuiſed for the honourable tranſportation, and ſafe conduct of the Kings owne perſon or his armie ouer the narrow Seas) the Ports haue not onely moſt diligently euer ſince that time performed, but furthermore alſo valiantly behaued themſelues againſt the enemie from time to time, in ſundrie exploits by water, as occaſion hath bene profered, or the neceſſitie of the Realme required.

The good ſeruice of the fiue Ports.

And amongſt other feats not vnworthy perpetuall remembrance, after ſuch time as Lewes (the eldeſt ſonne of the French King) had entred the Realme to aide Stephan Langton the Archbiſhop, and the Nobilitie, in the life of King Iohn, and had ſent into France for new ſupply of ſouldiers after his death, Hubert of Borough (then captaine of Douer) following the opinion of Themiſtocles in the expoſition of the oracle of the wodden walles, by the aide of the Port townes, armed fortie tall ſhips, and meeting with eightie ſaile of French men vpon the high ſeas, gaue them a moſt couragious encounter, in which he tooke ſome, ſunke others, and diſcomfited the reſt.

1278.

King Henrie the third alſo, after that he came to riper age, had great benefit by the ſeruice of the Cinque Ports: And king Edward the firſt in his Charter, maketh their continuall faithfull ſeruice (and eſpecially their good endeuour, then lately ſhewed againſt the Welſhmen) the principall cauſe, and motiue of that his liberall grant.

1293.

Furthermore, about the midſt of the reigne of the ſame king, an hundreth ſaile of the Nauie of the Ports fought at the Sea with a fleet of 200. French men, all which (notwithſtanding the great oddes of the number) they tooke, and ſlew, and ſunke ſo many of the Mariners, that France was thereby (for a long ſeaſon after) in maner deſtitute, both of Seamen, and ſhipping.

1406.

Finally, and to conclude this part, in the dayes of king Henrie the fourth, the nauie of the Fiue Ports, vnder the conduct of one Henrie Paye, ſurpriſed one hundreth and twentie French ſhips, all laden with Salt, Iron, Oile, and no worſe merchandize.

The priuiledges of the fiue Ports.

The priuiledges of theſe Ports, being firſt granted by Edward the Confeſſour, and William the Conquerour, and then confirmed and increaſed by William Rufus, Henrie the ſecond, Richard the firſt, Henrie the third, and king Edward the firſt, be very great, conſidering either the honour and eaſe, or the freedome and exemption, that the inhabitants haue by reaſon of the ſame.

Part of an Epiſtle written by one Yuo of Narbona vnto the Archbiſhop of Burdeaux, conteining the confeſſion of an Engliſhman as touching the barbarous demeanour of the Tartars, which had liued long among them, and was drawen along perforce with them in their expedition againſt Hungarie: Recorded by Mathew Paris in the yere of our Lord 1243.

The Lord therefore being prouoked to indignation, by reaſon of this and other ſinnes committed among vs Chriſtians, is become, as it were, a deſtroying enemie, and a dreadfull auenger. This I may iuſtly affirme to be true, becauſe an huge nation, and a barbarous and inhumane people, whoſe law is lawleſſe, whoſe wrath is furious, euen the rod of Gods anger, ouerrunneth, and vtterly waſteth infinite countreyes, cruelly aboliſhing all things where they come, with fire and ſword. And this preſent Summer, the foreſayd nation, being called Tartars, departing out of Hungarie, which they had ſurpriſed by treaſon, layd ſiege vnto the very ſame ‖ towne, wherein I my ſelfe abode, with many thouſands of ſouldiers: neither were there in the ſayd towne on our part aboue 50. men of warre, whom, together with 20. croſbowes, the captaine had left in garriſon. All theſe, out of certeine high places, beholding the enemies vaſte armie, and abhorring the beaſtly crueltie of Antichriſt his complices, ſignified foorthwith vnto their gouernour, the hideous lamentations of his Chriſtian ſubiects, who ſuddenly being ſurpriſed in all the prouince adioyning, without any difference or reſpect of condition, fortune, sexe, or age, were by manifolde cruelties, all of them deſtroyed: with whoſe carkeiſes, the Tartarian chieftains, and their brutiſh and ſauage followers, glutting themſelues, as with delicious cates, left nothing for vultures but the bare bones. And a ſtrange thing it is to conſider, that the greedie and rauenous vultures diſdeined to praye vpon any of the reliques, which remained. Olde, and deformed women they gaue, as it were, for dayly ſuſtenance, vnto their Canibals: the beautifull deuoured they not, but ſmothered them lamenting and ſcritching, with forced and vnnaturall rauiſhments. Like barbarous miſcreants, they quelled virgins vnto death, and cutting off their tender paps to preſent for deinties vnto their magiſtrates, they engorged themſelues with their bodies.

‖ Neuſtat.

Howbeit, their ſpials in the meane time diſcrying from the top of an high mountaine the Duke of Auſtria, the King of Bohemia, the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Duke of Carinthia, and (as ſome report) the Earle of Baden, with a mightie power, and in battell aray, approching towards them, that accurſed crew immediatly vaniſhed, and all thoſe Tartarian vagabonds retired themſelues into the diſtreſſed and vanquiſhed land of Hungarie; who as they came ſuddenly, ſo they departed alſo on the ſudden: which their celeritie cauſed all men to ſtand in horrour and aſtoniſhment of them. But of the ſayd fugitiues, the prince of Dalmatia tooke eight: one of which number the Duke of Auſtria knew to be an Engliſh man, who was perpetually baniſhed out of the Realme of England, in regard of certaine notorious crimes by him committed. This fellow, on the behalfe of the moſt tyrannicall king of the Tartars, had bene twiſe, as a meſſenger and interpreter, with the king of Hungarie, menacing and plainely foretelling thoſe miſchiefes which afterward happened, vnleſſe he would ſubmit himſelfe and his kingdome vnto the Tartars yoke. Well, being allured by our Princes to confeſſe the trueth, he made ſuch oathes and proteſtations, as (I thinke) the deuill himſelfe would haue beene truſted for. Firſt therefore he reported of himſelfe, that preſently after the time of his baniſhment, namely about the 30. yere of his age, hauing loſt all that he had in the citie of Acon at dice, euen in the midſt of Winter, being compelled by ignominious hunger, wearing nothing about him but a ſhirt of ſacke, a paire of ſhooes, and a haire cappe onely, being ſhauen like a foole, and vttering an vncoth noiſe as if he had bene dumbe, he tooke his iourney, and ſo traueiling many countreyes, and finding in diuers places friendly enterteinment, he prolonged his life in this maner for a ſeaſon, albeit euery day by raſhneſſe of ſpeech, and inconſtancie of heart, he endangered himſelſe to the deuill. At length, by reaſon of extreame trauaile, and continuall change of aire and of meats in Caldea, he fell into a grieuous ſickeneſſe, inſomuch that he was wearie of his life. Not being able therefore to go forward or backeward, and ſtaying there a while to refreſh himſelfe, he began (being ſomewhat learned) to commend to writing thoſe wordes which hee heard ſpoken, and within a ſhort ſpace, ſo aptly to pronounce, and to vtter them himſelfe, that he was reputed for a natiue member of that countrey: and by the ſame dexteritie he attained to manie languages. This man the Tartars hauing intelligence of by their ſpies, drew him perforce into their ſocietie: and being admoniſhed by an oracle or viſion, to challenge dominion ouer the whole earth, they allured him by many rewards to their faithfull ſeruice, by reaſon that they wanted Interpreters. But concerning their maners and ſuperſtitions, of the diſpoſition and ſtature of their bodies, of their countrey and maner of fighting &c, he proteſted the particulars following to be true; namely, that they were aboue all men, couetous, haſty, deceitfull, and mercileſſe: notwithſtanding, by reaſon of the rigour and extremitie of puniſhments to be inflicted vpon them by their ſuperiours, they are reſtreined from brawlings, and from mutuall ſtriſe and contention, The ancient founders and fathers of their tribes, they call by the name of gods, and at certaine ſet times they doe celebrate ſolemne feaſts vnto them, many of them being particular, & but foure onely generall. They thinke that all things are created for themſelues alone. They eſteeme it none offence to exerciſe cruelty againſt rebels, They be hardie and ſtrong in the breaſt, leane and pale-faced, rough and huf-ſhouldred, hauing flatte and ſhort noſes, long and ſharpe chinnes, their vpper iawes are low and declining, their teeth long and thinne, their eye-browes extending from their fore-heads downe to their noſes, their eies inconſtant and blacke, their countenances writhen and terrible, their extreame ioynts ſtrong with bones and ſinewes, hauing thicke and great thighes, and ſhort legs, and yet being equall vnto vs in ſtature: for that length which is wanting in their legs, is ſupplied in the vpper parts of their bodies. Their countrey in olde time was a land vtterly deſert and waſte, ſituated far beyond Chaldea, from whence they haue expelled Lions, Beares, & ſuch like vntamed beaſts, with their bowes, and other engines. Of the hides of beaſts being tanned, they vſe to ſhape for themſelues light, but yet impenetrable armour. They ride faſt bound vnto their horſes, which are not very great in ſtature, but exceedingly ſtrong, and mainteined with little prouender. They vſe to fight conſtantly and valiantly with iauelins, maces, battle-axes, and ſwords. But ſpecially they are excellent archers, and cunning warriers with their bowes. Their backs are ſlightly armed, that they may not flee. They withdraw not themſelues from the combate, till they ſee the chiefe Standerd of their Generall giue backe. Vanquiſhed, they aske no fauour, and vanquiſhing, they ſhew no compaſſion. They all perſiſt in their purpoſe of ſubduing the whole world vnder their owne ſubiection, as if they were but one man, and yet they are moe then millions in number. They haue 60000. Courriers, who being ſent before vpon light horſes to prepare a place for the armie to incampe in, will in the ſpace of one night gallop three dayes iourney. And ſuddenly diffuſing themſelues ouer an whole prouince, and ſurpriſing all the people thereof vnarmed, vnprouided, diſperſed, they make ſuch horrible ſlaughters, that the king or prince of the land inuaded, cannot finde people ſufficient to wage battell againſt them, and to withſtand them. They delude all people and princes of regions in time of peace, pretending that for a cauſe, which indeed is no cauſe. Sometimes they ſay, that they will make a voyage to Colen, to fetch home the three wiſe kings into their owne countrey; ſometimes to puniſh the auarice and pride of the Romans, who oppreſſed them in times paſt; ſometimes to conquere barbarous and Northren nations; ſometimes to moderate the furie of the Germans with their owne meeke mildneſſe; ſometimes to learne warlike feats and ſtratagems of the French; ſometimes for the finding out of fertile ground to ſuffice their huge multitudes; ſometimes againe in deriſion they ſay, that they intend to goe on pilgrimage to S. Iames of Galicia. In regard of which ſleights and colluſions certaine vndiſcreet gouernors concluding a league with them, haue granted them free paſſage thorow their territories, which leagues notwithſtanding being violated, were an occaſion of ruine and deſtruction vnto the foreſayd gouernours &c.

Libellus hiſtoricus Ioannis de Plano Carpini, qui miſſus eſt Legatus ad Tartaros anno Domini 1246, ab Innocentio quarto Pontifice maximo.

Incipit Prologus in librum Tartarorum.

OMnibus Chriſti fidelibus ad quos præſens ſcriptum peruenerit, frater Ioannes de Plano Carpini ordinis fratrum minorum, Apoſtolicæ ſedis Legatus, nuncius ad Tartaros & nationes alias Orientis, Dei gratiam in præſenti, & gloriam in futuro, & de inimicis ſuis gloriam triumphalem. Cum ex mandato ſedis Apoſtolicę iremus ad Tartaros & nationes alias Orientis, & ſciremus Domini Papæ & venerabilium Cardinalium voluntatem, elegimus prius ad Tartaros proficiſci. Timebamus enim ne per eos in proximo eccleſiæ Dei periculum immineret. Et quamuis a Tartaris & alijs nationibus timeremus occidi, vel perpetuo captiuari, vel fame, ſiti, algore, æſtu, contumelia, & laboribus nimijs, & quaſi vltra vires affligi (quæ omnia multo pluſquam prius credidimus, excepta morte vel captiuitate perpetua nobis multipliciter euenerunt) non tamen pepercimus nobis ipſis, vt voluntatem Dei ſecundum Domini papæ mandatum adimplere poſſemus, & vt proficeremus in aliquo Chriſtianis, vt ſaltem ſcita veraciter voluntate & intentione ipſorum, poſſemus illam patefacere Chriſtianis, ne forte ſubito irruentes inuenirent eos imparatos, ſicut peccatis hominum exigentibus alia vice contigit: & fecerunt magnam ſtragem in populo Chriſtiano. Vnde quæcunque pro veſtra vtilitate vobis ſcribimus ad cautelam, tanto ſecurius credere debetis, quanto nos cuncta vel ipſi vidimus oculis noſtris, qui per annum & quatuor menſes & amplius ambulauimus per ipſos & cum ipſis, ac fuimus inter eos, vel audiuimus a Chriſtianis qui ſunt inter eos captiui, & vt credimus fide dignis. Mandatum etiam a ſupremo pontifice habebamus, vt cuncta perſcrutaremur & videremus omnia diligenter. Quod tam nos quàm frater Benedictus eiuſdem ordinis qui noſtræ tribulationis fuit ſocius & interpres fecimus ſtudioſe.

De terra Tartarorum, ſitu, qualitate & diſpoſitione aeris in eadem. Cap. 1.

Volentes igitur facta ſcribere Tartarorum, vt lectores facilius valeant inuenire, hoc modo per capitula deſcribemus. Primo quidem dicemus de terra. Secundo de hominibus. Tertio de ritu. Quarto de moribus. Quinto de ipſorum imperio. Sexto de bellis. Septimo de terris quas eorum dominio ſubiugauerunt. Octauo quomodo Bello occurratur eiſdem. De terra poſſumus hoc modo tractare. In principio quidem dicemus de ſitu ipſius: ſecundo de qualitate: tertio de diſpoſitione aeris in eadem. Terra vero prædicta eſt in ea poſita parte Orientis in qua oriens ſicut credimus coniungitur Aquiloni. Ab Oriente autem eſt terra poſita Kyraiorum & etiam ‖ Solangorũ: a meridie ſunt terræ Saracenorum: inter Occidentem & Meridiem Huyrorum. Ab Occidente prouincia Naymanorum; ab Aquilone mari oceano circundatur. Hæc vero in parte aliqua eſt nimium montuoſa, & in aliqua eſt campeſtris, ſed fere tota admixta glarea, raro argilloſa, plurimum eſt arenoſa. In aliqua parte terræ ſunt aliquæ modicæ ſyluæ: alia vero eſt ſine lignis omnino. Cibaria autem ſua decoquunt & ſedent tam imperator quàm principes & alij ad ignem factum de boum ſtercoribus & equorum. Terra autem prædicta non eſt in parte centeſima fructuoſa: nec etiam poteſt fructum portare niſi aquis fluuialibus irrigetur. Sed aquæ & riui ibidem ſunt pauci: flumina vero rariſſima vnde ibidem villæ ſunt paucæ; nec aliquæ ciuitates excepta vna, quæ eſſe dicitur ſatis bona; nos autem non vidimus illam, ſed fuimus prope ad dimidium diem, cum apud Syram ordam eſſemus, quæ curia eſt maior imperatoris eorum. Et licet aliàs infructuoſa ſit, quamuis non multum, tamen competenter eſt alendis pecoribus apta. Aer in ipſa eſt mirabiliter inordinatus. In media etiam ęſtate quando in alijs partibus ſolet calor maximus abundare; ibi ſunt tonitrua magna & fulgura, ex quibus homines quàm plurimi occiduntur. Cadunt etiam ibi eodem tempore maximæ niues. Ibi ſunt etiam frigidiſſimorum ventorum tam maximæ tempeſtates, quod cum labore vix poſſunt homines aliquando equitare. Vnde cum eſſemus apud ordam (ſic enim ſtationes imperatoris apud eos & principum appellantur) iacebamus in terra præ magnitudine venti proſtrati, & propter pulueris multitudinem videre minime poteramus. In ea etiam in hyeme nuſquam pluit, ſed in ęſtate: & tam modicum, quod vix poteſt aliquando puluerem & radices graminum madidare. Grando etiam ibi ſæpe maxima cadit. Vnde eo tempore quando fuit electus, & in ſede regni poni debuit imperator, nobis in curia exiſtentibus, tanta cecidit grando, quod ex ſubita reſolutione, ſicut plenius intelleximus, pluſquam centum & quadraginta homines in eadem curia fuerunt ſubmerſi. Res autem & habitacula plura deducta fuerunt. Ibi eſt etiam in ęſtate ſubito magnus calor, & repente maximum frigus. In hyeme vero in aliqua parte cadunt maximæ niues, in alia autem paruæ. Et vt breuiter de terra concludam, magna eſt, ſed aliter, ſicut vidimus oculis noſtris, (quia per ipſam circuendam quinque menſibus & dimidium ambulauimus) multo vilior eſt, quàm dicere valeamus.

Dicto de terra, de hominibus eſt dicendum. Primò quidem formas deſcribemus perſonarum. Secundò de ipſorum coniugio ſupponemus. Tertio de veſtibus. Quarto de habitaculis. Quinto de rebus eorum. Forma perſonarum ab hominibus alijs eſt remota. Inter oculos enim & genas pluſquam alij homines ſunt lati. Genæ etiam ſatis prominent a maxillis. Graciles ſunt generaliter in cingulo exceptis quibuſdam paucis. Pene omnes ſunt mediocris ſtaturæ. Barba fere omnibus minime creſcit. Aliqui tamen in inferiori labio & in barba modicos habent crines, quos minime tondent. Super verticem capitis in modum clericorum habent coronas, & ab aure vna vſque ad aliam, ad latitudinem trium digitorum ſimiliter omes radunt. Quæ raſuræ coronæ prædictæ iunguntur. Super frontem etiam ad latitudinem duorum digitorum ſimiliter omnes radunt. Illos autem capillos qui ſunt inter coronam & prætaxatam raſuram creſcere vſque ad ſupercilia ſinunt. Et ex vtraque parte frontis tondendo pluſquam in medio crines faciunt longos: reliquos vero crines permittunt creſcere vt mulieres. De quibus faciunt duas cordas, & ligant vnamquamque poſt aurem. Pedes etiam modicos habent. Vxores vero habet vnuſquiſque quot poteſt tenere. Aliquis centum, aliquis quinquaginta, aliquis decem, aliquis plures vel pauciores: & omnibus parentibus generaliter iunguntur, excepta matre, filia, vel ſorore ex eadem matre, ſororibus etiam ex patre: tamen & vxores patris poſt mortem ducere poſſunt. Vxorem etiam fratris alter frater iunior poſt mortem vel alius de parentela iunior ducere tenetur. Reliquas mulieres omnes ſine vlla differentia ducunt in vxores, & emunt eas valde pretioſè a parentibus ſuis. Poſt mortem maritorum de facili ad ſecunda coniugia non migrant, niſi quis velit ſuam nouercam ducere in vxorem. Veſtes autem tam virorum quàm mulierum ſunt vno modo formatæ. Pallijs, cappis vel capputijs vel pellibus non vtuntur. Tunicas vero portant de Bukeramo, purpura, vel Baldaquino in hunc modum formatas. A ſupremo vſque deorſum ſunt ſciſſæ, quia ante pectus duplicantur. A latere vero ſiniſtro vna, & in dextris tribus ligaturis nectuntur, & in latere & in ſiniſtro vſque ad brachiale ſunt ſciſſæ. Pellicia cuiuſcunque ſunt generis in eundem modum formantur: ſuperius tamen pellicium exterius habet pilum, ſed a poſterioribus eſt apertum. Habet autem caudulam vnam vſque ad genua retro. Mulieres vero quæ ſunt maritatæ habent tunicam valde amplam & vſq; ad terram ante ſciſſam. Super caput vero habent vnum quid rotundum de viminibus vel de cortice factum, quod in longũ protenditur ad vnam vlnam, & in ſummitate deſinit in quadrum: & ab imo vſque ad ſummum in amplitudine ſemper creſcit, & in ſummitate habet virgulam vnam longam & gracilem de auro vel de argento ſeu de ligno, vel etiam pennam: & eſt aſſutum ſuper vnum pileolum, quod protenditur vſque ad humeros. Inſtrumentum prędictum eſt tectum de buccaramo, ſiue purpura vel baldaquino: ſine quo inſtrumento coram hominibus nunquam vadunt, & per hoc ab alijs mulieribus cognoſcuntur. Virgines autem & iuuenes mulieres cum magna difficultate a viris ſuis poſſunt diſcerni: quum per omnia veſtiuntur ut viri. Pileola habent alia quàm aliæ nationes, quorum formam intelligibiliter deſcribere non valemus. Stationes rotundas habent in modum tentorij præparatas, de virgis & baculis ſubtiliter factas. Supra vero in medio rotundam habent feneſtrã vnde lumen ingreditur, & vt poſſit fumus exire: quia ſemper in medio ignem faciunt. Parietes autem & tecta filtro ſunt cooperta. Oſtia etiam de filtro ſunt facta. Quædam ſtationes ſunt magnæ, quædam paruæ, ſecundum dignitatem & hominum paruitatem. Quædam ſoluuntur ſubito & reparantur, & ſuper ſomarios deferuntur. Quædam diſſolui non poſſunt, ſed in curribus deferuntur. Minoribus autem in curru ad deferendum vnus bos; maioribus tres vel quatuor, vel etiam plures, vel quod eſt magis, ſufficiunt ad portandum. Quocunque vadunt ſiue ad bellum, ſiue aliàs, ſemper illas deferunt ſecum. In animalibus ſunt diuites valde: in camelis, bobus, ouibus, capris, & equis. Iumentorum tantam habent multitudinem, quantam non credimus habere totum mundum. Porcos & alias beſtias minime habent.

DIcto de hominibus, dicendum eſt de ritu: de quo tractabimus in hunc modum. Primo de cultu: ſecundo de hijs quæ credunt eſſe peccata: tertio de diuinationibus, & purgationibus peccatorum: quarto de ritu funeris. Vnum Deum credunt, quem credunt eſſe factorem omnium viſibilium & inuiſibilium. Et credunt eum tam bonorum in hoc mundo quàm pœnarum eſſe factorem: non tamen orationibus vel laudibus, aut ritu aliquo ipſum colunt. Nihilominus habent idola quædam de filtro ad imaginem hominis facta; & illa ponunt ex vtraque parte oſtij ſtationis, & ſubtus illa ponunt quiddam de filtro in modum vberis factum, & illa credunt eſſe pecorum cuſtodes, & eis beneficium lactis & pullorum præſtare. Alia vero faciunt de pannis ſericis, & illa multum honorant. Quidam ponunt illa in pulchro curru tecto ante oſtium ſtationis: & quicunq; aliquid de illo curru furatur, ſine vlla miſeratione occiditur.

Duces,

pudicitia earum inter eas aliquid auditur. Verba tamen quædam ex eis in ioco ſatis habent turpia & impudica. Seditiones verò inter eas rarò vel nunquam audiuntur. Et quamuis multum inebrientur, in ebrietate ſua tamen verbis vel facto nunquam contendunt.

Inſolentia aduerſus exteros.

Nunc de malis moribus eorum eſt ſupponendum. Superbiſſimi alijs hominibus ſunt, & deſpiciunt omnes: ideò quaſi pro nihilo reputant, ſiue nobiles ſint, ſiue ignobiles. Vidimus enim in curia Imperatoris nobilem virum Ieroſlaum, magnum Ducem Ruſſiæ, filium etiam Regis & Reginæ Georgiæ, & Soldanos multos, duces etiam Soldanorum nullum honorem debitum recipere inter eos. Sed Tartari qui erant eis aſſignati, quantumcunq; erant viles, antecedebant eos, & ſemper primum locum & ſummum tenebant: immò ſæpè oportebat eos poſt eorum poſteriora ſedere.

Iracundia. Mendacitas.

Iracundi multum & indignantis naturæ ſunt: & etiam alijs hominibus plus ſunt mendaces, & ferè nulla veritas inuenitur in eis. In principio quidem ſunt blandi, ſed in fine pungunt vt ſcorpio.

Fraudulentia, Sordes.

Subdoli ſunt & fraudulenti, & ſi poſſunt aſtutia circumueniunt omnes. Homines ſunt immundi, ſumendo cibum & potum, & alijs factis ſuis. Qui cum volunt aliquid mali facere alijs hominibus, miro modo occultant, vt præuidere non poſſint, vel contra eorum aſtutias remedium inuenire.

Temulentia.

Ebrietas honorabilis eſt apud eos: & quum multum quis bibit, ibidem reijcit, nec propter hoc dimittit quin iterum bibat.

Extortio, Crudelitas.

Valdè ſunt cupidi & auari, exactores maximi ad petendum: tenaciſſimi retentores, & parciſſimi donatores. Aliorum hominum occiſio pro nihilo eſt apud illos. Et, vt breuiter dicam, omnes mali mores eorum propter prolixitatē in ſcripto redigi non poſſunt.

Cibi.

Cibi eorum ſunt omnia quæ mandi poſſunt. Comedunt canes, lupos, vulpes, & equos; & in neceſſitate carnes humanas. Vnde quando pugnauerunt contra quandam ciuitatem Kytaorum, vbi morabatur imperator ipſorum; eam obſederunt tam diu, quod defecerunt ipſis Tartaris omninò expenſæ. Et quia non habebant quòd manducarent omninò, tunc accipiebatur de decem hominibus vnus ad manducandum. Abluuiones etiam quæ egrediuntur de iumentis cum pullis manducant. Imò vidimus etiam eos pediculos manducare: vidimus etiam eos comedere mures. Menſalibus & manutergijs non vtuntur: panē non habent, nec olera, nec legumina, nec aliquid aliud niſi carnes: & tam paucas habent, quòd aliæ nationes vix inde viuere poſſent. Cum pinguedine carnium multum polluunt manus: quando verò comederunt, tunc manus ad ocreas ſuas, vel ad gramina, vel ad aliquid talium tergunt. Solent etiā honeſtiores habere aliquos panniculos paruos, cum quibus vltimo tergunt manus, quando carnes manducarunt. Cibum vnus eorum incidit, & alius accipit cum puncto cultelli morſellos, & vnicuiq; præbet, quibuſdā plus, quibuſdam minus, ſecundum quod plus vel minus volunt eos honorare. Scutellas non lauant, & ſi aliquando cum brodio lauant carnium, iterum cum carnibus in olla reponunt. Ollas etiā vel caldaria, vel alia vaſa ad hoc deputata ſi abluunt, ſimili modo lauant. Apud eos eſt magnum peccatum, ſi de cibo vel potu perire permittatur aliquid. Vnde oſſa, niſi priùs extrahatur medulla, dari canibus non permittunt. Veſtes etiam non lauant, nec lauari permittunt, & maximè quo tonitrua ab illa hora incipiunt donec deſinant. Lac iumentinum bibunt in maxima quantitate ſi habent: bibunt etiam ouinum, caprinum, vaccinum, & camelorum. Vinum, ceruiſiam, & medonem non habent, niſi ab alijs nationibus mittatur, vel donetur eiſdem. In hyeme, niſi diuites ſint, lac iumentinum non habent. Milliū cum aqua decoquunt, quod tā tenue faciunt, quòd non comedere ſed bibere poſſunt. Et vnuſquiſq; ex eis bibit cyphum vnum vel duos in mane, & nil plus in die māducant. In ſero vnicuiq; parum de carnibus datur, & brodium de carnibus bibunt. In æſtate autem, quia tunc habent ſatis de lacte iumentino carnes rarò māducant, niſi fortè donentur eis, aut venatione aliquam beſtiam ceperint, ſiue auem.

Pœna adulterij.

Legem etiam ſiue conſuetudinē habent occidendi virum & mulierem quos in adulterio inuenerint manifeſtè. Similiter & virginem ſi fornicata fuerit, mulierē occidunt & virum.

Furti, Arcani euulgati.

Si aliquis inuenitur in præda vel in furto manifeſto in terra poteſtatis eorū ſine vlla miſeratione occiditur. Item ſi aliquis eorum denudat cōſilium, maximè quando volunt ire ad bellum, centū plagæ dantur ſuper poſteriora, quanto maiores dare cum baculo magno vnus ruſticus poteſt. Item quando aliqui de minoribus offendunt in aliquo à ſuis maioribus non parcitur eis, ſed verberibus grauiter affliguntur. Item inter filium concubinæ & vxoris nulla eſt differentia, ſed dat pater vnicuiq; eorum quod vult, etſi eſt de genere ducum, ita eſt dux filius concubinæ, ſicut filius legitimus.

Πολυγαμία.

Et cum vnus Tartarus habet multas vxores, vnaquæq; per ſe ſuam ſtationem, & familiam habet: & cum vna comedit, & bibit, & dormit vna die, & altera die cum alia. Vna tamen ex ipſis maior eſt inter alias, & frequentius cum illa quam cum alijs commoratur. Et cum tam multæ ſint inter ſe tamen de facili non contendunt. Viri nihil operantur omninò exceptis ſagittis: & etiam de gregibus aliquantulam habent curam, ſed venantur, & exercent ſe ad ſagittandum: Omnes enim à paruo vſque ad magnum ſagittarij ſunt & boni. Et ſtatim pueri eorum, cum ſunt duorum annorum vel trium, incipiunt equitare. Equos eorum regunt & currunt in eis: & dantur eis arcus ſecundùm ſuam ætatem, & inſtruunt ad ſagittandum. Agiles enim ſunt & audaces valdè. Virgines & mulieres equitant, & agiliter in equis currunt vt viri. Vidimus enim eas arcus & pharetras portare. Et tam viri quàm mulieres diu in equitando poſſunt durare. Breuiſſimas habent ſtrepas: equos valdè cuſtodiunt: imo rerum omnium ſunt magni conſeruatores. Mulieres eorum omnia operantur. Pellicia, veſtes, calceos, ocreas, & omnia opera quæ de corio fiunt. Currus etiam ducunt & reparant, camelos onerant, & velociſſimæ ſunt & ſtrenuæ in omnibus operibus ſuis: fœmoralibus omnes vtuntur: aliquæ, ſicut viri, ſagittant.

DIcto de eorum conſuetudinibus, dicendum eſt de eorum imperio. Et primò de ipſius principio. Secundò de principibus eius. Tertio de dominio Imperatoris & principum. Terra quædam eſt in partibus Orientis, de qua dictum eſt ſuprà, quæ Mongol nominatur. Hæc terra quondam quatuor populos habuit. Et vnus Yeka-Mongol, id eſt, magni Mongali vocabatur. Secundus Sumongol, id eſt Aquatici Mongali. Ipſi autem ſeipſos Tartaros appellabant, à quodam fluuio, qui currit per terram eorum, qui Tartar nominatur. Alius appellatur Merkat, quartus Metrit. Hij populi omnes vnam formam perſonarum, & vnam linguam habebant: quamuis inter ſe per principes & prouincias eſſent diuiſi. In terra Yeka-Mongol fuit qui vocabatur Cyngis. Iſte incepit eſſe robuſtus venator coram Domino. Didicit enim homines furari, rapere, prædari. Ibat autem ad alias terras, & quoſcunque potuit capere, & ſibi aſſociare non demittebat: homines verò ſuæ gentis ad ſe inclinabat, qui tanquam ducem ipſum ſequebantur ad omnia malefacta. Hic autem incepit pugnare cum Sumongal, ſiue Tartaris, poſtquam homines aggregauerat ſibi, & interfecit ducem eorum, & multo bello omnes Tartaros ſibi ſubiugauit & in ſuam ſeruitutem redegit. Poſt hæc cum omnibus his pugnauit, cum Merkat, qui erant poſiti iuxta terram Tartarorum, quos etiam bello ſibi ſubiecit: Inde procedens pugnauit contra Metritas, & etiam illos deuicit. Audientes itaque Naymani, quod Cyngis erat taliter eleuatus, indignati fuerunt. Ipſi enim habuerunt Imperatorem, qui fuerat ſtrenuus valdè, cui dabant tributum omnes nationes prædictæ. Qui debitum vniuerſæ carnis exſoluens, filij eius ſucceſſerunt loco eius: ſed iuuenes erant & ſtulti, & populum neſciebant tenere: ſed inuicem diuiſi erant & ſciſſi: vnde medio tempore Cyngis erat taliter exaltatus, nihilominus inſultum faciebant in terras ſuperius annotatas, viros & mulieres, & pueros occidebant, & capiebant prædam eorum. Cyngis hoc audiens, omnes ſibi ſubiectos homines aggregauit. Naymani & Kara Kitai, id eſt, nigri Kitai, ex aduerſo in quandam vallem ſtrictam inter montes duos, per quam nos euntes ad imperatorem eorum tranſiuimus, ſimiliter conueniunt: & commiſſum eſt prælium, in quo Naymani & Kara Kitai a Mongallis ſunt deuicti, & maior pars eorum occiſa: & alij qui euadere non potuerunt in ſeruitutem redacti ſunt. In terra autem prædictorum Kara Kytaorum Occaday can filius Cyngis can, poſtquam poſitus fuit imperator, quandam ciuitatem ædificauit, quam ‖ Omyl appellauit. Propè quam ad meridiem eſt quoddam deſertum magnum, in quo ſylueſtres homines pro certo habitare dicuntur, qui nullo modo loquuntur, nec in cruribus habent iuncturas: & ſi quando cadunt, per ſe ſurgere ſine adiutorio aliorum minimè poſſunt, aliquantam tamen habent diſcretionem. Mongali autem in terram eorum reuertentes ſe contra Kytaos in prælium præparauerunt, qui caſtra mouentes terram eorum intrauerunt. Imperator autem Kytaorum hoc audiens venit contra eos cum exercitu ſuo; & commiſſum eſt prælium durum; in quo prælio Mongalli fuerunt deuicti: & omnes nobiles Mongallorum qui erant in prædicto exercitu fuerunt occiſi vſque ad ſeptem. Cyngis verò & alij qui remanſerunt in terram ſuam fugerunt. Et quum aliquantulum quieuiſſet Cyngis, præparauit ſe rurſus ad prælium & contra terram Huyrorum proceſſit ad bellum. Iſti homines Chriſtiani de ſecta Neſtorianorum erant, quos etiam bello deuicit, & eorum literas acceperunt. Nam prius ſcripturam aliquam non habebant. Nunc autem eandem literam Mongallorum appellant. Inde proceſſit contra terram Saruiuorum, & contra terram Karauitarum, & contra terram Voyrat, & contra terram Comania, quas terras omnes deuicit. Inde eſt in terram ſuam reuerſus. Et cum aliquantulum quieuiſſet, conuocatis omnibus gentibus ſupradictis, contra Kytaos ad bellum proceſſit, & cum diu contra eos pugnaſſet magnam partem terræ Kytaorum vicerunt: Imperatorem autem eorum concluſerunt in ſua ciuitate maiori: quam cum tam diu obſiderunt, quod exercitui defecerunt expenſæ, & cum non haberent quod manducarent, præcepit illis Cyngis can, quod de decem hominibus vnum darent ad manducandum. Illi autem de ciuitate pugnabant viriliter contra illos ſagittis & machinis: Et cum deficerent lapides, pro lapidibus proiecerunt argentum, & maximè liqueſactum. Ciuitas enim hæc multis diuitijs erat plena. Et cum diu pugnaſſent, & eam bello vincere minimè poſſent, fecerunt vnam magnam viam ſub terra ab exercitu vſque ad mediam ciuitatem, & aperientes ſubitò terram, eis neſcientibus proſilierunt in medio ciuitatis, & pugnabant cum hominibus ciuitatis, & illi qui erant extra ſimili modo pugnabant, & concidentes portas intrauerunt ciuitatem: & occidentes Imperatorem & homines plures, ciuitatem poſſidebant: & aurum & argentum, & omnes diuitias abſtulerunt. Et cum terræ prędictæ Kytaorum ſuos homines præfeciſſent, in terram propriam ſunt reuerſi. Et tunc Imperatore Kytaorum deuicto factus eſt Imperator. Quandam autem partem terræ Kytaorum, quæ poſita eſt in mari, vſque in hodiernum diem nullatenus deuicerunt. Kytai autem, de quibus ſuperiùs diximus, homines ſunt Pagani, qui habent literam ſpecialem: & habent nouum & vetus Teſtamentum; & habent vitas patrum, & Eremitas & domos quaſi Eccleſias factas, in quibus orant temporibus ſuis: Et dicunt ſe quoſdam ſanctos habere. Vnum Deum colunt: Dominum noſtrum Ieſum Chriſtum honorant, & credunt vitam æternam, ſed minimè baptizantur. Scripturam noſtram honorant & reuerentur: Chriſtianos diligunt, & Eccleſias faciunt plures. Homines benigni & humani ſatis videntur: barbam non habent, & in diſpoſitione faciei ſatis concordant cum Mongalis, non tamen ſunt in facie ita lati. Linguam propriam habent: meliores artifices non inueniuntur in toto mundo in omnibus operibus, in quibus ſolent homines exercitari. Terra eorum eſt opulenta valdè in frumento, vino, auro, argento, & ſerico, & omnibus rebus in quibus ſolet ſuſtentari humana natura. Et cum aliquantulum quieuiſſent, ſuos exercitus diuiſerunt. Vnum de filijs Toſſuch nomine, quem etiam Can appellabant, id eſt Imperatorem, miſit cum exercitu contra Comanos, quos multo bello deuicit: & poſtquam vicerat eos in terram ſuam reuertebatur. Alium etiam filium miſit cum exercitu contra Indos; qui minorem Indiam deuicerunt. Hij autem nigri ſunt Saraceni, qui Æthiopes nuncupantur. Hic autem exercitus contra Chriſtianos, qui ſint in India maiori in pugnam proceſſit. Quod audiens rex terræ illius, qui vulgò Præsbyter Iohannes appellatur, venit contra eos exercitu congregato. Et faciens imagines cupreas hominum in ſella poſuit ſuper equos, ponens ignem interius, & poſuit hominem cum folle poſt imaginem cupream ſuper equum: & cum multis imaginibus, & equis taliter præparatis venerunt contra prædictos ad pugnandum. Et cum ad locum prælij perueniſſent, iſtos equos vnum iuxta vnum præmiſerunt. Viri autem, qui erant retro, poſuerunt neſcio quid ſuper ignem qui erat in prædicta imagine, & cum follibus fortiter ſufflauerunt. Vnde factum eſt, quod de fumo illo aer eſt denigratus. Et tunc ſuper Tartaros iecerunt ſagittas, ex quibus multi interfecti & vulnerati fuerunt. Et ſic cum confuſione eos de finibus ſuis eiecerunt: Et nunquam audiuimus, quod vltra ad eos redierunt. Cum autem per deſerta redirent, in quandam terram venerunt in qua quædam monſtra fœmineas imagines habentia reperierunt. Et cum interrogaſſent eas per multos interpretes vbi eſſent viri terræ illius, reſponderunt quod in illa terra quęcunque fœminæ naſcebantur, habebant formam humanam: Maſculi verò formam caninam. Et dum moram protraherent in terra prædicta, Canes in alia parte conuenerunt in vnum: Et dum eſſet hyems aſperrima, ſe omnes proiecerunt in aquam: & poſt hæc incontinenti in puluerem mouebantur, & ita puluis admixtus aquæ ſuper eos congelauit: & dum ſæpè hoc feciſſent, glacies denſa facta eſt ſuper eos: Vnde cum magno impetu cum Tartaris conuenerunt ad pugnam. At illi quum ſagittas ſuper eos iactabant, ac ſi ſuper lapides ſagitaſſent, retro ſagittæ redibant: Alia etiam arma eorum in nullo eos lædere potuerunt. Canes verò inſultum facientes in eos morſibus vulnerauerunt, multos etiam occiderunt, & ita eiecerunt eos de finibus ſuis. Et dum reuerteretur exercitus ille, venit ad terram Burutabeth, quos bello vicerunt: qui ſunt Pagani. Qui conſuetudinem mirabilem imo potius miſerabilem habent. Quia cum aliquis patrum ſuorum humanæ naturæ debitum exſoluit, omnem congregant parentelam, & comedunt eum. Iſti pilos in barba non habent: immo quoddam ferrum in manibus portant, cum quo barbam ſemper depilant, ſi fortè aliquis crinis creſcit in ipſa: & multum etiam deformes ſunt. Inde exercitus ille reuertebatur in terram ſuam. Cyngis can etiam eo tempore quo diuiſit exercitus illos, miſit in expeditione contra Orientem per terram Kergis, quos bello non vicit: & vſque ad Caſpios montes peruenit, montes autem illi ſunt de lapide adamantino. Vnde eorum ſagittas & arma ferrea ad ſe traxerunt. Homines inter Caſpios montes concluſos viderunt, qui iam montem fregerunt: ſed nubes quædam erat poſita ante ipſos, ad quam accedere non poterant vllo modo, quia ſtatim moriebantur, cum perueniebant ad illam. Sed antequam peruenirent ad prædictum montem pluſquam per menſem vaſtam ſolitudinem tranſierunt. Inde procedentes adhuc contra Orientem pluſquam per menſem per magnum deſertum iuerunt. Et peruenerunt ad quandam terram, vbi viderunt vias tritas, ſed nullum hominem poterant inuenire. Sed tantum quæſiuerunt per terram, quod inuenerunt hominem cum vxore ſua; quos ante Cyngis can adduxerunt. Et cum interrogaſſet, vbi eſſent homines terræ illius, reſponderunt quod in terra ſub montibus habitarent. At Cyngis can retenta vxore miſit virum illum cum nuncijs ſuis mandans hominibus illis vt venirent ad mandatum ipſius. Illi verò euntes ad eos, narrauerunt omnia quæ Cyngis can mandauerat. Qui reſponderunt quod tali die venirent ad mandatum ſuum faciendum. Medio vero tempore congregauerunt ſe per vias occultas ſub terra, & venerunt contra iſtos ad pugnandum: & irruentes ſubitò ſuper eos plurimos occiderunt. At illi, Cyngis can videlicet & ſui fugam ineuntes, terram exierunt prædictam, Illos tamen homines, virum ſcilicet & mulierem ſecum duxerunt, qui vſque ad mortem in terra Tartarorum fuerunt. Interrogati verò quare ſub terra habitarent, dixerunt quod vno tempore anni quum ſol oritur, tantus ſonitus eſt, quod homines nulla ratione poſſunt ſuſtinere, Immo etiam tunc percutiebant in organis & tympanis, & alijs inſtrumentis, vt illum ſonitum non audirent. Et dum Cyngis de terra illa reuerteretur, defecerunt ei victualia, & habebant maximam famem. Et tunc recentia interiora vnius beſtiæ eos contigit inuenire: quæ accipientes, depoſitis tamen ſtercoribus decoxerunt; & coram Cyngis can portantes cum ſuis illa comedit. Et ex hoc ſtatutum fuit ab eo, vt nec ſanguis, nec interiora, nec aliquid de beſtia quod manducari poteſt, exceptis ſtercoribus, proijciatur. Et deinde in terram propriam eſt reuerſus: & ibidem leges & ſtatuta multiplicia fecit, quæ Tartari non violabiliter obſeruant. Ex quibus tantum duo dicemus, Vnum eſt, quod quicunque in ſuperbia erectus, propria authoritate ſine electione principum eſſe voluerit imperator, ſine vlla miſeratione debet occidi. Vnde ante electionem ipſius Cuynch propter hoc vnus de principibus, nepos ipſius Cyngis can fuit occiſus, Volebat enim ſine electione regnare. Aliud ſtatutum eſt, quod ſibi debent ſubiugare omnem terram: nec cum aliqua gente debent pacem habere, niſi prius eis ſubdatur, quo vſque veniat tempus occiſionis eorum. Debent enim occidi, vt prophetatum eſt eis: Et illi qui euadere poterunt, vt dicunt, debent illam legem tenere quam tenent alij, qui eos bello deuincunt, Statuit etiam quod per millenarios, & centenarios & Decanos debeat eorum exercitus ordinari. Poſt hoc ab ictu tonitrui eſt occiſus, peractis ſuis ordinationibus & ſtatutis. Hic autem habuit quatuor filios: Vnus vocabatur Occoday, ſecundus Toſſuch can, tertius Thaaday: & nomen quarti ignoramus. Iſti quatuor filij cum alijs maioribus qui tunc erant, primum filium videlicet Occoday elegerunt imperatorem, filij autem iſtius Occoday Cuyne, qui nunc eſt imperator, Cocthen & Cyrenen. Et ſi plures habuerit filios ignoramus, Filij autem Toſſuch can Bati: iſte eſt ditior & potentior poſt imperatorem: Ordu, iſte eſt ſenior omnium ducum: Syban, Bora, Bercuthanth: aliorum filiorum Toſſuch can nomina ignoramus. Filij Thaaday ſunt Burin & Chadan, nomina aliorum filiorum neſcimus. Alterius autem filij Cyngis can, cuius nomen neſcimus, filiorum nomina ſunt hæc. Vnus vocatur Mengu, cuius mater eſt Seroctan, Iſta domina inter omnes Tartaros, excepta matre imperatoris, eſt magis nominata: & potentior eſt omnibus excepto Bati. Alius vocatur Becas. Alios filios habuit plures, ſed eorum nomina ignoramus, Hæc ſunt ducum nomina, Ordu: iſte fuis in Polonia & in Hungaria: Bati, Cathan, Syban, Bureth. Omnes iſti fuerunt in Hungaria, Cyrpodan, iſte eſt adhuc vltra mare contra Soldanum Damaſci. Iſti remanſerunt in terra: Mangu, Cuthen, Syrennen, Hybilay, Seremum, Synocur, Thuatamur, Cyragay, Sybedey, ſenex quidam miles inter eos, Bora, Berca, Mauci, Choranca: ſed iſte inter alios eſt minimus. Alij verò duces ſunt plures, ſed eorum nomina ignoramus,

Duces.

Imperator autē Tartarorum habet mirabile dominium ſuper omnes. Nullus audet in aliqua parte morari, niſi ipſe aſſignet ei. Ipſe autem aſſignat vbi maneant duces; millenarij centenarijs, Centenarij decanis. Inſuper quicquid pręcipitur in quocunq; tempore, quocunq; loco, ſiue ad bellum, ſiue ad mortem, ſiue ad vitam, ſine vlla contradictione obediunt. Etiam ſi petit filiam virginem vel ſororem, ſine contradictione dant ei. Aut ſingulis annis, aut intermiſſis aliquibus annis virgines colligit ex omnibus finibus Tartarorum. Si ipſe vult ſibi retinere aliquas retinet: alias dat ſuis hominibus, ſicut videtur ei expedire. Nuncios quoſcunq;, quotcunq; & vbicunq; tranſmittit, oportet quod dent ei ſine mora equos ſubdititios & expenſas. Vndecunq; venerint ei tributa vel nuncij, oportet quod equi, currus, & expenſę ſimiliter dentur eis. Nuncij qui veniunt aliunde in magna miſeria ſunt in victu pariter & veſtitu: quia expenſę viles ſunt & paucæ: & maximè cum veniunt ad principes, & ibi debent morā contrahere. Tunc ita parum datur decem hominibus, quod inde vix poſſint viuere duo. Nec etiam in curijs principum, nec in via datur eis comedere, niſi ſemel in die, & ſatis parum. Inſuper ſi aliquæ iniuriæ ſibi fiunt, conqueri de facili minimè poſſunt. Vnde eos oportet illa patienter portare, Inſuper multa tā à principibus, quam ab alijs nationibus & minoribus ab eis exiguntur: & ſi non daretur, vili pendunt eos, immò quaſi pro nihilo habent eos. Et ſi à magnis viris mittuntur, nolunt ab eis modicum munus habere: ſed dicunt: A magno homine veniſtis, & cur modicum datis? & accipere dedignantur. Imperatoris Tartarorum ſeruile in omnes imperium.

Inhumanitas erga Legatos.

ſciendum, quod ita omnia ſunt in manu Imperatoris prædicti, quod nemo audet dicere, hoc eſt meum vel illius; ſed omnia ſunt Imperatoris, res, iumenta, & homines. Et ſuper hoc etiam nuper emanauit Imperatoris ſtatutum. Idem dominium per omnia habent duces ſuper homines ſuos. Diuiſi enim ſunt homines Tartari, videlicet etiam alij inter duces. Nuncij etiam ducum, quocunque eos tranſmittunt, & homines tam Imperatoris quàm alij omnes equos ſubditios & expenſas, & qui equos cuſtodiant, & etiam nuncijs ſeruiant ſine contradictione dare tenentur. Imperatori autem iumenta vt habeat ex eis lac ad annum vel ad duos, vel ad tres, ſicut placuerit ei, tam duces quàm alij pro redditu dare tenentur. Et homines ducum idem facere tenentur dominis ſuis. Inter eos enim nullus eſt liber. Et vt breuiter dicam, Quicquid Imperator & Duces volunt, & quantũ volunt de rebus ſuis accipiunt. De perſonis etiam eorum diſponunt per omnia, ſicut volunt. Mortuo Imperatore, ſicut ſuperius dictum eſt, conuenerunt Duces & elegerunt Occoday filium Cyngis can prædicti Imperatorem. Qui habito conſilio principum diuiſit exercitus. Bati, qui in ſecundo gradu attinebat ei, miſit contra Altiſoldanum, & contra terram Biſerminorum. Hij erant Saraceni, & Comanicum loquebantur. Et cum intraſſet terram illorum pugnauit contra eos, & bello eos ſibi ſubiecit. Quædam autem ciuitas quæ ‖ Barthra dicitur, diu reſtitit ei, fecerant enim foueas multas in circuitu ciuitatis & operuerant illas; & quando illi veniebant cadebant in foueas. Vnde non potuerunt capere ciuitatem, donec illas foueas repleſſent. Homines autem de quadam ciuitate quæ vocatur ‖ Iakint hæc audientes exierunt obuiam eis, ſe ſponte in manus eorum tradentes: vnde ciuitas eorum non erat deſtructa, ſed plures eorum occiderunt, & alios tranſtulerunt. Et accepto ſpolio ciuitatis, ipſam alijs hominibus repleuerunt. Et venerunt contra ciuitatem quæ vocatur Orna. Iſta ciuitas erat nimium populoſa: Chriſtiani ibi erant plures; Gazari videlicet, Rutheni, & Alani, & alij: nec non & Saraceni. Saracenorum enim erat dominium ciuitatis. Hæc autem ciuitas erat diuitijs multum plena. Eſt enim poſita ſuper fluuium qui vocatur Don, qui intrat in mare. Vnde eſt quaſi portus: & forum maximum habebant de illa ciuitate alij Saraceni. Et cum non poſſent aliter deuincere, præciderunt fluuium, qui currebat per ciuitatem, & illam cum rebus omnibus ſubmerſerunt. Quo facto: poſtea intrauerunt terram Tortorum, qui ſimiliter ſunt Pagani: quam deuincentes, iuerunt contra Ruſſiam, & fecerunt magnam ſtragem in terra Ruſſiæ, ciuitates & caſtra deſtruxerunt, & homines occiderunt: etiam Kiouiam quæ erat Metropolis Ruſſiæ obſederunt: & cum diu obſediſſent, illam ceperunt, & occiderunt homines ciuitatis. Inde procedentes pugnando deſtruxerunt totam Ruſſiam. De Ruſſia autem & Comania proceſſerunt duces prædicti, & pugnauerunt contra Hungaros & Polonos. Ex quibus Tartaris in Polonia & in Hungaria plures interfecti fuerunt. Et ſi non fugiſſent, ſed viriliter reſtitiſſent Hungari exiuiſſent Tartari de finibus ſuis: quia tunc habuerunt timorem, quod omnes fugere attentabant. Sed Bati vaginato gladio in faciem eis reſtitit, dicens: Nolite fugere: quia ſi fugitis nullus euadet: Et ſi debemus mori, moriamur omnes: quia futurum eſt, vt Cyngis can prædixit, quod interfici debeamus: Et ſi nunc eſt tempus, ſuſtineamus. Et ſic animati ſunt & remanſerunt, & Hungariam deſtruxerunt. Inde reuertentes iuerunt in terram Morduanorum, qui ſunt Pagani, & bello deuicerunt. Inde procedentes contra Bileros, id eſt, Bulgariam magnam, & ipſam deſtruxerunt omnino. Inde procedentes ad Aquilonem adhuc contra Baſcart, id eſt, Hungariam magnam, & eos etiam deuicerunt. Inde egredientes iuerunt ad Aquilonem, & venerunt ad Paroſſitas qui habent paruos ſtomachos & os paruulum, nec manducant, ſed decoquunt carnes: quibus decoctis ponunt ſe inter fumum & ollam, & recipiunt fumum, & de hoc ſolo reficiuntur: Sed etiamſi aliquid manducant, hoc valdè modicum eſt. Inde procedentes venerunt ad Samogedos. Hij autem homines tantùm de venationibus viuunt: tabernacula & veſtes habent tantummodo de beſtiarum pellibus. Inde vltra procedentes venerunt ad quandam terram ſuper Oceanum, vbi inuenerunt quædam monſtra quæ per omnia formam humanam habebant, ſed pedes deſinebant in pedes bouinos, & faciem per omnia habebant vt canis: duo verba loquebantur more humano & tertio latrabant vt canis: & ſic per interualla temporum latratum interponebant: tum ad naturam ſuam redibant: & ſic intelligi poterat quod dicebant: Inde redierunt in Comaniam, & vſq; nunc quidam ex eis morantur ibidem. Cyrpodan vero eodem tempore miſit Occoday can cum exercitu ad meridiem contra Kergis, quos etiam bello deuicit. Hij autem homines ſunt pagani, qui pilos in barba non habent. Quorum conſuetudo eſt talis. Cum pater moritur alicuius, præ dolore quaſi vnam corrigiam in ſignum lamenti ab aure vſq; ad aurem de facie ſua leuant. Quibus deuictis, ad meridiem iuit contra Armenos. Sed cum per deſerta tranſiret, etiam quædam monſtra effigiem humanam habentia inuenerunt: ſed non niſi vnum brachium cum manu in medio pectoris, & vnum pedem habebant: & duo ſagittarunt

Currebant enim ſaltando ſuper illum vnum pedem, & cum eſſent feſſi taliter eundo, ibant ſuper manum & pedem, remouendo ſe quaſi rota; & ſic cum eſſent feſſi iterum currebant ſecundum modum priorem: aliquos tamen occidebant ex eis. Inde procedentes venerunt in Armeniam, quam bello vicerunt, & partem Georgiæ: & alia pars venit ad mandatum eorum; & quadraginta millia yperperorum ſingulis annis dederunt, & adhuc faciunt idem. DIcto de imperio, dicendum eſt hoc modo de bello. Primo de ordinatione acierum. Secundo de armis. Tertio de aſtutijs in congreſſione, quarto de crudelitate quam faciunt in captiuos. Quinto de oppugnatione caſtrorum & ciuitatum. Sexto de perfidia quam exercent cum hijs qui ſe reddunt eiſdem. De ordinatione acierum dicemus hoc modo. Cyngis can ordinauit, vt decem hominibus præponeretur vnus: & ille ſecundum nos appellatur Decanus. Decem autem Decanis pręponeretur vnus, qui centenarius nuncupatur: Decem vero Centenarijs præponeretur vnus qui millenarius nuncupatur: decem millenarijs præponeretur vnus, & ille numerus vocatur tenebre apud eos. Cuncto vero expercitui præponuntur duo duces vel tres, ita tamen quod habeant reſpectum ad vnum. Cum autem omnes ſunt in bello ſi de decem hominibus fugit vnus vel duo, vel tres, vel etiam plures, omnes occiduntur. Et vt breuiter dicam, niſi communiter cedant, omnes qui fugiunt occiduntur. Item ſi vnus vel duo aut plures audacter ad pugnam accedunt, & decem alij non ſequuntur, etiam occiduntur. Item ſi vnus de decem vel plures capiuntur, & alij ſocij ſui non liberant eos, etiam occiduntur. Duo arcus vel tres, vel vnum bonum ad minus, & tres pharetras magnas plenas de ſagittis & vnam ſecurim, & funes ad machinas trahendas habere debet vnuſquiſque. Diuites autem habent gladios acutos in fine, ex vna tantum parte incidentes, & aliquantulum curuos: & habent equum armatum, crura etiam tecta. Galeas & loricas quidam habent de corio in hunc modum formatas. Habent quaſdam corrigias de boue ad latitudinem vnius manus, & bituminant tres vel quatuor ſimul, & ligant illas corrigiolis vel cordis. In corrigia ſuperiori ponunt cordulas in fine; in inferiori ponunt in medio, & ſic faciunt vſque ad finem. Vnde quum ſe inclinant in inferiores, corrigiæ ſuperiores aſcendunt & ſic duplicantur ſuper corpus, vel triplicantur. De coopertura equi faciunt quinque partes: ex vna parte faciunt vnam, ex alia parte faciunt aliam, quam partem ducunt à cauda vſq; ad caput: quæ ligantur ad ſellam, & poſt ſellam in dorſo & etiam in collo, ſuper renes etiam partē aliam ponunt, vbi duæ partium ligaturæ iunguntur: in qua pecia faciunt vnum foramen, per quod caudas exponunt: & ante pectus ponunt etiam vnam: quæ omnes protenduntur vſque ad crurium iuncturas. Et ante frontem laminam ferream ponunt, quæ ex vtraque parte colli partibus prædictis ligatur. Lorica vero etiam quatuor partes habet, vna pars protenditur à fœmore vſque ad collum; ſed eſt facta ſecundum diſpoſitionem humani corporis: quia ante pectus eſt ſtricta: in rotundum obuoluitur circa corpus à brachijs inferius: Super humeros autem retro ad renes habent aliam peciam, quæ protenditur a collo vſque ad aliam peciam, quæ reuoluitur circa corpus: Super humeros autem iſtæ duæ peciæ anterior videlicet & poſterior, ad duas laminas ferreas quæ ſunt in vtroque humero fibulis connectuntur. Et in vtroque brachio vnam habent peciam, quæ ab humero protenduntur vſque ad manus, quæ etiam inferius ſunt apeę. Et in vtroque crure vnam habent peciam: quæ peciæ omnes fibulis coniunguntur. Galea autem ſuperius eſt ferrea. Sed illud quod protegit in circuitu collum & gulam de corio fit. Et omnes iſtæ peciæ de corio ſunt formatæ ſecundum modum ſuperius annotatum. Quidam autem omnia quæ ſuperius diximus habent de ferro in hunc modum formata. Vnam laminam tenuem ad latitudinem vnius digiti faciunt, & ad longitudinem palmæ vnius. Et in hunc modum faciunt laminas multas: & in vnaquaque lamina octo foramina paruula faciunt, & interius tres corrigias ſtrictas & fortes ponunt, & laminas vnam ſuper aliam ponūt, quaſi aſcendendo per gradus: & ligant laminas prędictas ad corrigias tenuibus corrigiolis, quas mittunt tunt per foramina ſuperius annotata: Et in ſuperiori parte conſuunt corrigiolam vnam, vt laminæ prædictæ bene & firmiter cohæreant ſibi. Et faciunt ex laminis quaſi corrigiam vnam, & poſtea ligant per pecias per omnia, ſicut ſuperius dictum eſt. Et iſta faciunt tam ad equorum quam ad hominum armaturas. Et faciunt illa ita lucere, quod poteſt homo in eis faciem ſuam videre. Aliqui eorũ lanceas habent: & in fine ferri lanceę vnum habent vncũ, cum quo trahunt hominem de ſella ſi poſſunt. Longitudo ſagittarum eſt duorum pedum & vnius palmæ, & duorum digitorum. Et quia diuerſi ſunt pedes, menſurã pedum geometricã ponimus. Duodecem grana hordei pollicis tranſuerſio eſt. Sexdecem pollices tranſuerſi faciunt vnum geometricum pedem. Ferramenta ſagittarum ſunt acutiſſima, & ex vtraq; parte incidentia quaſi gladius biceps, & ſemper portant limas iuxta phatetram ad acuendum ſagittas, Ferramenta prædicta caudam habent acutam ad longitudinem vnius digiti, quam imponunt in lignum, Scutum habent de vimінibus vel de virgulis factum. Sagittas habent alias ad ſagittandum aues beſtias & homines inermes ad trium digitorum latitudinem. Sagittas alias habent diuerſimodas ad aues & beſtias ſagittandas. Quum ad bellum procedere volunt præcurſores præmittunt, qui nihil ſecum portant præter filtra ſua, equos & arma. Iſti nihil rapiunt, domos non comburunt, beſtias non occidunt: Sed tamen homines vulnerant & mortificant, & ſi non poſſunt aliud, mittunt in fugam; multo libentius tamen occidunt, quam fugant, poſt iſtos ſequitur exercitus, qui cuncta quę inuenit accipit, & homines etiam, ſi inueniri poſſunt, accipiunt & occidunt. Quum autem ad flumina perueniunt, hoc modo tranſeunt illa etiamſi ſunt magna. Maiores vnum rotundum & leue corium habent, in quo in ſummitate per circuitum crebras faciunt anſas, in quibus funem imponunt, & ſtringunt ita quod in circuitu faciunt quendam ventrem, quem replent veſtibus, & alijs rebus, & fortiſſime comprimunt ad inuicem: poſt hoc in medio ponunt ſellas & alias res duriores: homines autem in medio ſedent: & ligant ad caudam equi nauem hanc taliter præparatam, & vnum hominum qui equum regat faciunt pariter cum equo ante natare: vel habent aliquando duos remos, & cum illis remigant vltra aquam, & ſic tranſeunt fluuium, Equos vero pellunt in aqua, & vnus homo iuxta vnum equum, quẽ regit, natat: & alij equi illum ſequuntur. Et ſic tranſeunt aquas & flumina magna. Alij vero pauperiores vnam burſam de corio bene conſutam vnuſquiſq; tenetur habere: in qua burſa vel in quo ſacco veſtes & omnes res ſuas imponunt; & in ſummitate ſaccũ fortiſſime ligant, & ſuſpendunt ad caudam equi, & tranſeunt, vt ſupradictum eſt, Sciendum eſt, quod cum vident hoſtes tunc vadunt ad eos, & vnuſquiſq; iacit tres ſagittas vel quatuor contra aduerſarios: Et ſi vident quod eos ſuperare non poſſunt, retro gradiuntur ad ſuos: Et hoc faciunt in fraudem, vt aduerſarij eos ſequantur ad loca vbi inſidias parauerunt: Et ſi inimici eorum ſequuntur ad prædictas inſidias, circundant eos & ſic vulnerant & occidunt. Item ſi vident quod magnus exercitus eſt contra eos, aliquando diuertunt ab eo per vnam dietam vel duas, & aliã partem terræ inuadunt & ſpoliant: & interficiunt homines, & terrã deſtruunt & deuaſtant. Et ſi vident quod hoc etiã facere non poſſunt, cedunt retro ad decem vel duodecem dietas: aliquando etiã morantur in loco tuto, quouſq; aduerſariorũ exercitus ſeparetur, & tunc furtim veniunt, & depopulantur totã terram. In bellis etiam aſtutiſſimi ſunt: quia iam per quadraginta annos & amplius cum alijs gentibus dimicarunt. Cum autem volunt ad pugnam accedere, omnes acies ordinant ſicut deberẽt pugnare. Duces ſiue principes exercitus bellũ non intrant, ſed ſtant à longe cõtra inimicorũ exercitum, & iuxta ſe habent pueros in equis & mulieres & equos. Et faciunt aliquando imagines hominum, & ponunt ſuper equos. Hoc ideo faciunt, vt multitudo magna bellantium eſſe credantur. Contra faciem equorum vnam aciem captiuorum & aliarum gentium quæ ſunt inter eos tranſmittunt: & forſitan aliqui Tartari vadunt cum eis, Alias acies fortiorum hominum longe mittunt à dextris & à ſiniſtris, vt non videantur ab aduerſarij ſuis: & ſic circundant aduerſarios & colligunt in medium, & pugnare incipiunt ex omni parte. Et cum ſunt aliquando pauci, putantur ab aduerſarijs qui circundati ſunt, eſſe multi. Et maxime cum videant illos, qui ſunt cum duce vel principe exercitus pueros & mulieres & equos, & homines fictos, vt dictum eſt ſupra: quos credunt eſſe pugnatores: & per hoc terrentur & confunduntur. Et ſi forte aduerſarij bene pugnant, faciunt eis viam vt fugiant: & ſtatim cum fugere incipiunt, ab inuicem ſeparati inſequuntur eos, & plures tunc occidunt fuga, quàm mortificare poſſent in bello, Sciendum tamen eſt, quod ſi aliud poſſunt, non libẽter cõgrediuntur, ſed homines & equos ſagittis vulnerant & occidunt. Munitiones in hunc modum expugnant. Si eſt talis munitio ipſam circundant, immo aliquando ita ſepiunt, vt nullus ingredi vel exire poſſit, Expugnant fortiſſime machinis & ſagittis: & nec die nec nocte ceſſant a prælio, vt illi qui ſunt in munitionibus non quieſcant, Ipſi Tartari quieſcunt: quia acies diuidunt & vna ſuccedit alteri in pugnã vt non nimiũ fatigentur. Et ſi eam taliter habere non poſſunt græcũ proijciunt ignem. Imo ſolent aliquando accipere aruinã hominum quos occidunt, & liquefactum proijciunt ſuper domos: Et vbicunque venit ignis ſuper pinguedinem illam, quaſi inextinguibiliter ardet. Et ſi ita non præualent, & ſi ciuitas illa vel caſtrum habeat flumen, obſtruunt illud, vel faciunt alium alueum & ſubmergunt illam munitionem ſi poſſunt. Si autem non poſſunt ſuffodiunt illam, & ſub terra armati in ipſam ingrediuntur. Et cum iam intrauerunt, vna pars ignem imponit vt comburatur: & alia pars cum illius munitionis hominibus pugnat. Si autem nec ſic illam vincere poſſunt, caſtrum vel munitionem ſuam faciunt contra illam, vt ab Inimicorum iaculis non grauentur, & contra illam multo tempore iacent: niſi forte exterius adiutorium exercitus qui pugnat cum eis adhibeat, & vi remoueant ipſos. Sed cum iacent ante munitionem blande eis loquuntur, & multa promittunt, ad hoc vt ſe in eorum manus tradant: Et ſi illi ſe eis tradiderint, dicunt: Exite, vt ſecundum morem noſtrum vos muneremus. Et cum illi ad eos exeunt, quærunt qui ſunt artifices inter eos, & illos reſeruant: alios autem, exceptis illis quos volunt habere pro ſeruis cum ſecuri occidunt. Et ſi aliquibus alijs parcunt, vt dictum eſt, nobilibus & honeſtis nunquam parcunt. Et ſi fortè aliquo caſu contingente reſeruant aliquos nobiles; nec prece nec precio vltra de captiuitate poſſunt exire. In bellis autem quoſcunque capiunt occidunt, niſi forte velint aliquos reſeruare vt habeant eos pro ſeruis, Occidendos autem diuidunt per centenarios, vt cum bipenni interficiantur ab eis. Ipſi vero poſt hoc diuidunt captiuos, & vnicuique ſeruo ad interficiendum dant decem aut plures vel pauciores, ſecundum quòd maioribus placet.

De terris quas eorum dominio ſubiugarunt. Cap. 7.

SCripto quomodo pugnant, dicendum eſt de terris, quas eorum dominio ſubiugarunt. De quo iſto modo ſcribemus. Primo dicemus quomodo faciunt cum hominibus pacem. Secundo de terrarum nominibus quas ſibi ſubdiderunt. Tertio de tyrannide quam exercent in eis. Quarto de terris quæ viriliter reſtiterunt. Sciendum eſt quod cum nullis hominibus faciunt pacem, niſi ſubdentur eis: quia, vt dictum eſt ſupra, Cyngis can habent mandatum, vt cunctas ſi poſſunt ſibi ſubijciant nationes. Et hæc ſunt illa quæ petunt ab eis, vt vadant cum eis in exercitu contra omnem hominem quando placet, & vt dent decimam de omnibus tam de hominibus, quàm de rebus, Computant enim decem, & vnum accipiunt. De puellis faciunt illud idem, quos in terram eorum deducunt & tenent eos pro ſeruis: reliquos numerant & ordinant ſecundum morem. Sed quando plene habent dominium ſuper eos, ſi aliquid promiſerunt eis nihil obſeruant: ſed quaſcunque poſſunt congrue occaſiones inueniunt contra eos. Nam cum eſſemus in Ruſſia, miſſus fuit Saracenorum ex parte Cuyrhcan vt dicebatur & Bati: & præfectus ille a quolibet homine qui habebat tres pueros vnum accipiebat: & quicunque viri non habebant vxores, illos deducebant, & faciebant de mulieribus etiam illud idem quę viros legitimos non habebant. Pauperes etiam qui mendicando ſuum victum quærebant ſimiliter deportabunt. Reliquos autem ſecundum eorum conſuetudinem numerauit, præcipiens vt vnuſquiſq; tam paruus quam magnus, & infans vnius diei, ſiue pauper ſiue diues eſſet, tale tributũ præberet: vt ſcilicet daret vnũ pellem albi vrſi, & vnum nigrum caſtorẽ, & vnum Zabulum, & vnam nigram pellem cuiuſdam animalis quod in terra latibulum habet, cuius nomen neſcio in latinum transferre, ſed Teutonice dicitur illit: Poloni autem & Rutheni appellant illam Dochon: & vnam nigram pellem vulpinam. Et quicunque iſta non dat, inter Tartaros debet duci, & in eorum redigi ſeruitutem. Mittunt etiam pro principibus terrarum, vt ad eos veniant ſine mora: & cum venerint, debitum honorem nullum recipiunt, ſed habentur vt aliæ viles perſonæ: & oportet vt eis munera magna præſentent, tam ducibus quàm vxoribus eorum, & officialibus, millenarijs & centenarijs. Imo omnes generaliter, & ipſi etiam ſerui ab eis cum magna importunitate munera quærunt: Et non ſolum ab ipſis, ſed etiam à nuncijs eorum cum mittuntur. Aliquibus etiam inueniunt occaſiones vt eos occidant. Sicut de Michaele & alijs actum eſt. Aliquos vero alliciunt, quos permittunt redire. Aliquos etiam potionibus perimunt vel veneno. Eorum enim intentio eſt, vt ipſi ſoli dominẽtur in terra. Idcirco quærunt occaſiones contra nobiles, vt eos occidant. Ab illis vero quos redire permittunt petunt eorum filios aut fratres, quos vlterius nunquam dimittunt. Sicut factum eſt de filio Ieroſlai, & de quodam duce Alanorum, & alijs plurimis. Et ſi moritur pater vel frater ſiue heres, filium vel fratrem nunquam dimittunt: immo illius principatum totaliter accipiunt ſibi. Sicut de quodam Solangorum vidimus eſſe factum. Baſchathos ſuos ponunt in terris eorum quos redire permittunt, quibus oportet vt ad nutum tam duces quàm alij debeant obedire. Et ſi homines alicuius ciuitatis vel terræ non faciunt quod volunt, iſti Baſchathi imponunt eis, quod ſunt Tartaris infideles: & ſic ciuitatem illam vel terram deſtruunt, & homines qui ſunt in ea occidunt, per manum validam Tartarorum, qui ex mandato principis illius cui obedit terra illa veniunt eis neſcientibus, & ſubito irruunt ſuper eos; ſicut nuper contigit cum in terra

Baſcha, vox Tartarica, quæ vertitur Turci.

Tartarorum eſſemus de quadam ciuitate. Quod ipſummet de Ruthenis fecerunt in terra Comanorum. Et non ſolum princeps Tartarorum qui terram vſurpauit, ſed præfectus ipſius, & quicunque Tartarus per ciuitatem illam ſiue terram tranſit quaſi dominatur eidem, & maxime qui maior eſt apud eos. Inſuper aurum & argentū, & alia quæ volunt & quando libet ad imperatorē vadant Tartarorum ad placitandum. Sicut nuper contigit de duobus filijs regis Georgiæ. Vnus enim erat legitimus, & alter de adulterio natus, qui vocabatur Dauid: legitimus autem Melic vocabatur. Filio adulteræ terræ partem relinquebat pater. Alius vero, qui iunior erat, veniebat cum matre ad Tartarorum imperatorem, pro eo quod Dauid prædictus ad ipſum iter arripuerat veniendi. Mater alterius ſcilicet Melic regina Georgiæ, per quam maritus tenebat regnum, quia per fœminas illud regnum tenebatur, mortua fuit in via. Illi autem cum venerunt dederunt maxima munera: & maxime legitimus filius, qui repetebat terram quam reliquerat pater filio ſuo Dauid, cum non deberet habere, quia adulteræ filius erat. Ille vero reſpondit: Licet ſim filius concubinæ, peto tamen vt fiat mihi iuſtitia ſecundum legem Tartarorum, qui nullam differentiam faciunt inter filios legitimæ & ancillæ: vnde fuit data ſententia contra filium legitimum, vt ille Dauidi qui maior erat ſubeſſet, & terram haberet quiete & pacifice, quam dederat ei pater: & ſic donaria quæ dederat, & cauſam quam contra fratrem ſuum Dauid habuerat, amiſit. Ab illis etiam nationibus quæ longe ſunt ab eis, & coniunctæ ſunt alijs nationibus quàs aliquo modo timent, quæ non ſunt eis ſubiectæ, tributū accipiunt & quaſi miſericorditer agunt cum eis, vt non adducant exercitum ſuper eos, vel etiam vt alij non terreantur, ſe tradere eis. Sicut factum eſt de Obeſis ſiue Georgianis, a quibus quinquaginta vel quadraginta millia, vt dictum eſt, yperperorum ſiue Byſantiorū accipiunt pro tributo: aliâs ad hoc in pace eſſe permittunt. Tamen, ſecundum quod intelleximus ab eis, rebellare proponunt.

Terrarum nomina quas vicerunt ſunt hæc. Kytai, Naymani, Solangi, Kara Kytai, ſiue nigri Kytai, Comania, Tumat, Voyrat, Caraniti, Huyur, Soboal, Merkiti, Meniti, Baryhryur, Goſmit, Saraceni, Biſermini, Turcomani, Byleri, magna Bulgaria, Baſchare, magna Hungaria, Kergis, Colona, Thorati, Buritabeth, Paroſſiti, Saſſi, Iacobiti, Alani, ſiue Aſſi, Obeſi ſiue Georgiani, Neſtoriani, Armeni, Cangiti, Comani Brutachi, qui ſunt Iudæi, Mordui, Torci, Gazari, Samogedi, Perſes, Thoas, India minor ſiue Æthiopia, Yrchaſi, Rutheni, Baldach, Sarthi: Aliæ terræ ſunt plures, ſed earum nomina ignoramus. Vidimus etiam viros & mulieres fere de omnibus terris ſupra nominatis. Hæc autem ſunt nomina Terrarum quæ eis viriliter reſtiterunt, nec ſunt adhuc ſubditæ eis, India magna, Mangia; Quædam pars Alanorum: Quædam pars Kytaorum, Sayi. Quandam enim ciuitatem Sayorum prædictorum obſederunt & debellare tentauerunt. At ipſi fecerunt machinas contra machinas eorum, & Tartarorum machinas omnes fregerunt, nec ciuitati appropinquare poterant ad pugnam contra machinas & baliſtas. Tandem vnā viam ſub terra fecerunt, & proſiluerūt in ciuitatē, & alij tentabant incendere ciuitatē, alij pugnabant. Homines autem ciuitatis vnam partem populi ad extinguendū ignem poſuerunt, & alia pars fortiter pugnabat cum hijs qui intrauerunt ciuitatem, & multos occiderunt ex eis, & alios vulnerauerunt, cōpellentes eos ad ſuos redire. At ipſi videntes quod nihil poſſent facere, & multi homines morerentur, receſſerunt ab eis. In terra Saracenorū & aliorū vbi ſunt quaſi inter eos domini, accipiūt omnes artifices meliores, & in omnibus operibus ſuis ponunt. Alij autē artifices dant eis de opere ſuo tributum. Segetes omnes condunt in horreis dominorum: & vnicuique vnum pondus ſatis modicum dant in die: nihil aliud niſi ter in ſeptimana modicum quid de carnibus eis prebent. Et illi hoc tantum artificibus faciunt qui in ciuitatibus commorantur. Item quando dominis placet iuuenes omnes accipiunt, & poſt ſe cum omnibus famulis ſuis ire cogunt: qui de cætero certo ſunt numero Tartarorū; immo potius de numero captiuorū: quia etſi inter ipſos ſunt numerati, non tamen habentur in reuerentia ſicut Tartari; ſed habentur pro ſeruis, & ad omnia pericula vt alij captiui mittuntur. Ipſi enim in bello ſunt primi: Etiam ſi debet palus vel aqua periculoſa tranſiri, eos oportet primo vadum tentare. Ipſos eſt etiam neceſſe operari omnia quæ ſunt facienda. Ipſi etiam ſi in aliquo offendunt, vel ſi non obediunt ad nutum, vt aſini verberantur. Et vt breuiter dicam, modicum quid manducant, & etiam modicum bibunt, & peſſime induuntur; niſi forte aliquid poſſunt lucrari, niſi ſunt aurifabri & alij artifices boni. Sed aliqui tam malos dominos habent, quod nihil eis dimittunt, nec habent tempus præ multitudine operum dominorum, vt ſibi aliquid operentur, niſi furentur ſibi tempus, quando forſitan debent quieſcere vel dormire. Et hoc ſi vxores vel propriam ſtationem permittuntur habere. Alij autem qui tenentur in domo pro ſeruis omni miſeria ſunt repleti. Vidi enim eos ire in bracis ſæpiſſime, & toto corpore nudos in maximo ſolis ardore. Et in hyeme patiuntur maximum frigus. Vidimus etiam aliquos pedicas & digitos manuum de magno frigore perdidiſſe. Audiuimus etiam alios eſſe mortuos, vel etiam de magno algore quaſi in omnibus membris inutiles eſſe factos.

Quomodo

Quomodo bello occurratur Tartaris. Cap. 8.

Dicto de terris, quæ obediunt eis, ſupponendum eſt quomodo bello occurratur eiſdem. Quod videtur nobis hoc modo dicẽdum. Primo ſcribendum eſt quid intendunt. Secundo de armis & ordinatione acierũ. Tertio quomodo occurratur aſtutijs eorum in congreſſione. Quarto de munitione caſtrorum & ciuitatũ. Quinto quid faciendum ſit de captiuis eorum. Intentio Tartarorum eſt ſubijcere ſibi totum mundum ſi poſſunt. Et de hoc Cyngiſchan habent mandatum, ſicut ſuperius dictum eſt. Idcirco eorum imperator ſic in literis ſuis ſcribit. Dei fortitudo, Omnium Imperator. Et in ſuperſcriptione ſigilli ſui hoc habet.

Dominus in cœlo, & Cuyuch Chan ſuper terram. Dei fortitudo, omnium hominum imperatoris ſigillum. Et ideo cum nullis hominibns faciunt pacem, vt dictum eſt, niſi forte ſe in eorum manibus tradunt. Et quia excepta Chriſtianitate nulla eſt terra in orbe quam timent, idcirco ſe ad pugnam præpararunt contra nos. Vnde nouerint vniuerſi quod nobis exiſtentibus in terra eorum in ſolenni curia, quæ iam ex pluribus annis indicta erat, fuimus, vbi elegerunt Cuynch imperatorem in præſentia noſtra, qui in lingua eorum dicitur Chan. Qui Cuynch Chan prædictus erexit cum omnibus principibus vexillum contra eccleſiam dei & Romanum imperium, & contra omnia regna Chriſtianorum & populos occidentis, niſi forſan facerent ea, quæ mandat Domino Papæ, & potentibus ac omnibus Chriſtianorũ populis Occidentis: quod nulla ratione faciendum eſt: tum propter nimiam ſeruitutem & intolerabilem, quæ eſt hactenus inaudita, quam vidimus oculis noſtris, in quam redigunt omnes gentes ſibi ſubiectas: tum propterea quod nulla in eis eſt fides: nec poteſt aliqua gens confidere in verbis eorum: quia quicquid promittunt non obſeruant, quando vident ſibi tempora fauere: & ſubdoli ſunt in omnibus factis & promiſſis eorũ. Intendunt etiam delere omnes principes, omnes nobiles, omnes milites de terra, vt ſuperius dictum eſt: ſed hoc faciunt ſubdole & artificioſe in ſubditos ſuos: Tum etiam quia indignum eſt quod Chriſtiani ſubdantur eiſdem, propter abominationes eorum, & quia in nihilum redigitur cultus dei, & animæ pereunt, & corpora vltra quã credi poſſit multitudine affliguntur. In primo quidem ſunt blandi, ſed poſtea vt ſcorpio cruciant & affligunt. Tum quia pauciores ſunt numero, & corpore debiliores quã populi Chriſtiani. In prædicta autem curia ſunt bellatores & principes & exercitus aſſignati. De decẽ hominibus mittuntur tres cum familijs eorũ, de omni terra poteſtatis eorũ. Vnus exercitus debet intrare per Hungariam: ſecundus per Poloniam. Veniunt autem pugnaturi continue octodecem annis. Tẽpus eſt etiam eis aſſignatum, In Martio An. Dom. 1247. ſi de terra ſua mouebunt. Venient autem in tribus vel in quatuor ‖ annis vſq; ad Comaniã. De Comania autẽ inſultum facient in terras ſuperius annotatas. Hæc omnia firma ſunt & vera, niſi Dominus aliquod impedimentũ pro ſua gratia faciat eis. Sicut fecit quando venerunt in Hungariã & Poloniã. Debebãt enim procedere tunc pro certo triginta annis. Sed interfectus fuit tunc imperator eorũ veneno: & propter hoc quieuerunt à pręlijs vſq; nunc. Sed modo, quia poſitus eſt imperator de nouo, iterum ſe de nouo ad pugnam incipiunt præparare. Adhoc ſciendum eſt, quod imperator dixit ore ſuo, quod vellet mittere exercitum in Liuoniam & Pruſſiam. Et quoniam omnem terram volunt delere vel in ſeruitutem redigere, quæ ſeruitus eſt intolerabilis noſtræ genti, vt ſuperius dictum eſt: Occurrendum eſt igitur eis in bello. Sed ſi vna prouincia non vult alteri opem ferre, terra illa delebitur contra quam pugnant, & cum illis hominibus quos capiunt pugnabunt contra aliam terram; & in acie erunt primi. Si male pugnant occidentur ab eis: Si autem bene, ipſos cum promiſſis adulationibus tenent: & etiam vt ab ipſis non fugiant promittunt eis quod facient eos dominos magnos: & poſt hoc quando ſecuri eſſe poſſunt de ipſis, vt non redeant, faciunt eos infœliciſſimos ſeruos. Ac de mulieribus quas volunt in concubinas tenere pro ſeruitijs faciunt illud idem. Et ita cum hominibus deuictæ prouinciæ deſtruunt aliam terram. Nec eſt aliqua prouincia quæ per ſe poſſit reſiſtere eis: quia de omni terra poteſtatis eorum, vt dictum eſt, homines congregant ad bellum. Vnde ſi Chriſtiani ſeipſos & ſuã terram, & Chriſtianitatem volunt ſeruare, oportet quod in vnum conueniant reges, principes & barones, & terrarum rectores, & mittant de cõmuni conſilio homines contra eos ad pugnã, antequam ipſi incipiant in terras diffundi. Quoniam poſtquam incipiunt ſpargi per terras, vndiq; homines quærunt, & nullus congrue auxilium alteri poteſt præbere: quoniam ipſi cateruatim vndiq; quærunt homines & occidunt. Et ſi claudunt ſe in caſtris, ponunt tria millia vel quatuor millia hominum contra caſtrum vel ciuitatem, qui obſideant eam; & ipſi nihilominus diffunduntur per terras homines occidentes. Quicunq; autem volunt pugnare cum eis, hæc arma debent habere. Arcus bonos & fortes, & baliſtas, quas multũ timent, & ſagittas ſufficientes: & bonum dolabrũ de bono ferro, & ſcutũ cũ longo manubrio. Ferramenta ſagittarũ de arcu vel de baliſta debent, vt Tartari, quando ſunt calida, temperari in aqua cum ſale mixta, vt fortia ſint ad penetrandum arma eorum. Gladios & etiam lanceas cum vnco, qui valeant ad trahendum eos de ſellis; quia de eis facillime cadunt: ac cultellos ac loricas duplicatas; quia illos eorum ſagittæ non penetrant: & galeā & arma alia ad protegendum corpus & equum ab armis & ſagittis eorum. Et ſi aliqui non ſunt ita bene armati, vt dixi; debent [illegible]e poſt alios vt faciunt Tartari: & trahere contra eos de armis & ſagittis. Nec debent parcere pecuniæ, quoniam comparent arma, vt poſſint animas & corpora, libertatem & res alias conſeruare. Acies debent ordinari, vt ipſi, per millenarios, centenarios, & decanos & duces exercitus: qui duces nequaquam debent prælium intrare, ſicut nec duces eorum, ſed debent exercitus videre & ordinare: legemquè debent ponere vt ſimul incedant ad bellum, ſiue aliâs, ſicut ſunt ordinati. Et quicunque relinquit alium ſiue ad bellum procedentem, ſiue pugnantem, vel quicunque fugerit, niſi omnes cōmuniter cedant, grauiſſime puniatur: quia tunc pars bellantium ſequitur fugientes & ſagittis eorum occidunt, & pars cum hijs qui remanēt pugnant, & ſic confundūtur & occiduntur remanentes & fugientes. Similiter quicunq; conuerſus fuerit ad prædam tollendam, antequam omnino ſit exercitus contrariorū deuictus, maxima pœna mulctetur. Talis enim apud Tartaros ſine vlla miſeratione occiditur. Locus ad præliandum eſt eligendus, ſi fieri poteſt vt campus ſit planus, & poſſint vndique videre: & ſi poſſunt habeant ſyluam magnam a tergo vel a latere. ita tamē quod non poſſunt intrare inter ipſos & ſyluam: nec debent ſimul omnes conuenire in vnum, ſed facere acies multas, & diuerſas ab inuicem, nec tamen multum diſtantes. Et contra illos qui poſt veniunt debent vnam aciem mittere qui eis occurrat. Et ſi Tartari ſimulant fugam, non multum vadant poſt eos, niſi forte quantum poſſunt videre, ne forte ipſos ad paratas inſidias trahant, ſicut facere ſolent: Et alia ſit parata ad iuuandum aciem illam, ſi fuerit opportunum. Inſuper habeant ſpeculatores ex omni parte, vt videant quando veniant aliæ acies Tartarorum retro, à dextris & à ſiniſtris: & ſemper debent mittere aciem contra aciem quæ eis occurrat. Ipſi enim ſemper nituntur concludere aduerſarios eorum in medio, vnde magnam cautelā debent habere ne hoc facere poſſint, quia ſic exercitus facillime debellatur. Omnes acies hoc debent cauere, ne diu currant poſt eos, propter inſidias quas ſolent præparare: plus enim fraudulentia quàm fortitudine pugnant. Duces exercitus ſemper debent eſſe parati ad mittendum adiutorium, ſi neceſſe eſt, illis qui ſunt in pugna, & propter hoc etiam debent vitare nimium curſum poſt eos: ne forte fatigentur equi eorum; quoniam noſtri multitudinem equorum non habent. Sed Tartari illum quem equitant vna die, illum non aſcendunt in tribus vel in quatuor diebus poſt hoc. Vnde non curant ſi fatigentur equi eorū propter multitudinem quam habent. Et ſi Tartari cedunt, non tamen noſtri debent recedere, vel ab inuicem ſeparari: quia ſimulando hoc faciunt, vt exercitus diuidatur, & poſt hoc terram libere ingrediantur, & eam deſtruant. Debent etiam cauere vt non faciant nimias expenſas, vt ſolent; ne propter penuriam redire compellantur, & dent Tartaris viam, vt ipſos & alios occidant, & deſtruant omnem terram; & propter eorum ſuperfluitatem nomen Domini blaſphemetur. Et hoc debent facere diligenter: vt ſi contingat aliquos pugnatores recedere, quod alij loco eorum ſuccedant. Duces etiam noſtri debent die noctéque facere exercitum cuſtodiri, ne repente & ſubito irruant ſuper ipſos: quia Tartari vt dæmones, multas excogitant iniquitates & artes nocendi: Immo tam de die quam de nocte ſemper debent eſſe parati: ſed nec ſpoliati debent iacere nec delicioſe ad menſam ſedere, ne imparati inueniantur, quia Tartari ſemper vigilant, vt poſſint nocere. Homines vero terræ qui Tartaros expectant, vel ſuper ſe timent venire, occultas foueas debent habere, in quibus ſagittas, & alia debent reponere, propter duo: vt videlicet Tartari non poſſint ea habere; & ſi propitius fuerit eis Deus, valeant ea poſtea inuenire; Eis fugientibus de terra, debent fœnum & ſtramina comburere, vt equi Tartarorum ad comedendum minus inueniant. Ciuitates autem & caſtra ſi volunt munire, videant prius qualia ſint in ſitu. Situs enim talis debet eſſe in caſtris, quod machinis & ſagittis expugnari nō poſſit; & aquā habeant ſufficientem & lignū, & ſi fieri poteſt, quod introitus & exitus eis tolli non poſſit: & quod habeant homines ſufficientes qui poſſint viciſſim pugnare. Et debent vigilare diligenter ne aliqua aſtutia poſſint caſtrum furari. Expenſas ad multos annos debent habere ſufficientes: cuſtodiant tamen diligenter illas, & in menſura manducent, quia neſciunt quanto tempore eos in caſtris oportet eſſe incluſos. Quum enim incipiunt, tunc multis annis obſident vnum caſtrum. Sic fit hodierna die in terra Alanorum de quodam monte, quem, vt credo, iam obſederunt per duodecem annos; qui viriliter reſtiterunt, & multos Tartaros & nobiles occiderunt. Alia autem caſtra & ciuitates, quæ talem ſitum non habent debent fortiter vallari foueis profundis munitis, & muris bene præparatis; & arcus & ſagittas ſufficientes: & lapides ac fundas debent habere. Et debent diligenter cauere, quod non permittant Tartaros ponere machinas ſuas; & ſuis machinis debent eos repellere. Et ſi forte aliquo ingenio vel arte erigunt

Temperamentum ferri.

Speculatores.

Obſidio 12. annorum.

Tartari machinas ſuas, debent eas deſtruere machinis ſuis ſi poſſunt. Baliſtis etiam, fundis & machinis debent reſiſtere ne ciuitati appropinquent. Aliàs etiam debent eſſe parati, vt ſuperius dictum eſt. De caſtris & ciuitatibus, quæ ſunt in fluminibus poſitæ, diligenter debent videre ne poſſint ſubmergi. Sed ad hoc ſciendũ eſt, quod Tartari plus diligunt, quod homines claudant ſe in ciuitatibus, quàm quod pugnent cũ eis in campo. Dicunt enim eos eſſe ſuos porcellos in hara concluſos. Vnde ponunt eis cuſtodes, vt ſupradictũ eſt. Si autẽ aliqui Tartari de equis ſuis in bello proijciuntur, ſtatim ſunt capiendi: quia cum ſunt in terra fortiter ſagittant, & equos & homines vulnerant & occidunt. Et ſi ſeruantur tales, poteſt eſſe, quod habeatur pro eis pax perpetua, aut pecunia magna redimantur: quoniã ſe adinuicem ſatis diligunt. Sed quomodo Tartari cognoſcantur, ſuperius dictum eſt vbi forma eorum fuit expreſſa. Tamen quando capiuntur, ſi debent ſeruari, ne fugiant diligens eſt cuſtodia adhibenda. Sunt etiã aliæ multę gentes cũ eis, quæ per formã ſuperius annotatã poſſunt ab ipſis cognoſci. Eſt etiam hoc ſciendum, quod multi in exercitu eorum ſunt, qui ſi viderent tempus, & haberẽt fiduciam, quod noſtri non occiderent eos, ex omni parte exercitus, ſicut ipſimet nobis dixerunt, pugnarent cũ eis, & plura mala facerent ipſis, quàm alij, qui ſunt eorum aduerſarij manifeſti.

The long and wonderful voyage of Frier Iohn de Plano Carpini, ſent ambaſſadour by Pope Innocentius the iiii. An. ESt in partibus Orientis terra, quæ Mongal ſiue Tartaria dicitur, in ea ſcilicet parte ſita, in qua Oriens Aquiloni coniungi creditur. Ab Oriente quidem habet terram Kythaorum & etiam Solangorum, à meridie verò terrã Sarracenorum. excepta vna, quæ Cracurim appellatur, & ſatis bona eſſe dicitur. Nos quidem illam non vidimus, ſed ad dimidiam dietam prope fuimus, cùm apud Syram ordam, quæ curia maior Imperatoris eorum eſt, eſſemus. Licet autem aliâs infructifera ſit illa terra, tamen alendis pecoribus eſt apta. In aliqua eius parte ſunt aliquę ſyluæ modicæ, alia verò ſine lignis eſt omninò. Itaque tam Imperator quàm Principes, & omnes alij ſedent, & cibaria ſua decoquunt ad focum, de boum & equorum ſtercoribus factum. Ipſe quoq; aër inordinatus eſt ibidem mirabiliter. In media ſiquidem æſtate ibi tonitrua magna & fulgura fiunt, ex quibus plurimi occiduntur homines, & eodem quoq; tempore cadunt ibidem maximę niues. Sunt & ibi ventorum frigidiſſimorum tam maximę tempeſtates, quòd aliquando vix poſſunt equitare homines. Vnde cùm ante ordam eſſemus (ſic enim apud eos ſtationes Imperatoris & Principum appellantur) præ venti magnitudine in terra proſtrati iacebamus, & videre propter pulueris magnitudinē minimè poteramus. Nunquam ibi pluit in hyeme, ſed frequenter in æſtate, & tam modicum, vt vix poſſet aliquando puluerem & radicem graminum madefacere. Ibi quoq; maxima grando cadit ſæpè. MOngalorum autem ſiue Tartarorum forma ab omnibus alijs hominibus eſt remota. Inter oculos enim, & inter genas, lati ſunt plus cæteris, genæ quoq; ſatis prominent à maxillis. Naſum habent planum & modicum, oculos etiam paruos, & palpebras vſq; ad ſupercilia eleuatas, ac ſuper verticem in modum Clericorum coronas. Ex vtraq; parte frontis tondendo, pluſquam in medio crines longos faciunt, reliquos autem ſicut mulieres creſcere permittunt. De quibus duas cordas faciunt, & vnamquamq; poſt aurem ligant. Pedes quoq; modicos habent. Veſtes tam virorum quàm mulierum vno modo formatæ ſunt. Pallijs vel cappis vel caputijs non vtuntur. Tunicas verò miro modo formatas portant de buccaramo, vel purpurato, vel baldaquino. Pellicium habet pilos exterius, ſed apertum eſt à poſterioribus. Habet tamen caudulam vnam vſq; ad genua retrò. Veſtes ſuas non lauant, nec lauari permittunt, & maximè à tempore, quo tonitrua incipiunt, vſquequo deſinat illud tempus. Stationes habent rotundas in modum tentorij de virgulis & baculis ſubtilibus præparatas. Supra verò in medio rotundam habent feneſtram, vnde ingrediatur lumen, & fumus exire poſſit: quia ſemper in medio faciunt ignem: parietes autem & tecta filtro ſunt operta. Oſtia quoq; de filtro ſunt facta. Harum quędam ſubitò ſoluuntur, & reparantur, & ſuper ſummarios deferuntur: quædam verò diſſolui non poſſunt ſed in curribus portantur. Et quocunq; ſiue ad bellum ſiue aliâs vadunt, ſemper illas ſecum deferunt. In animalibus valde diuites ſunt, vt in Camelis & bobus, capris & ouibus. Iumenta & equos habent in tanta multitudine, quantam non credimus totum mundi reſiduum habere. Porcos autē & alias beſtias non habent. Imperator ac Duces atq; alij magnates in auro & argento ac ſerico & gemmis abundant. Cibi eorū ſunt omnia, quæ mandi poſſunt. Vidimus eos etiā manducare pediculos. Lac bibūt animaliū, & in maxima quantitate, ſi habent, iumentinū. Porrò in hyeme, quia niſi diuites ſint, lac iumentinū non habent, millium cum aqua decoquunt, quod tam tenue faciunt, vt illud bibere valeant. Vnde quilibet eorū ſcyphum bibit vnū vel duos in mane, & quandoq; nihil amplius manducant in die. In ſero autem vnicuiq; datur de carnibus modicū, & bibunt ex eis brodium. Porrò in æſtate quando ſatis habent de lacte iumentino, carnes comedunt rarò, niſi fortè donētur eiſdē, aut venatione beſtiā aliquam ceperint vel auem.

HAbent autem mores quoſdam quidem commendabiles, & quoſdam deteſtabiles. Magis quippe ſunt obedientes Dominis ſuis, quàm aliqui qui in mundo ſint homines, ſiue religioſi ſiue ſeculares. Nam eos maximè reuerentur, nec illis de facili mentiuntur verbis factiſue: rarò vel nunquam ad inuicem contendunt, belláq; vel rixæ, vulnera vel homicidia nunquam inter eos contingunt. Prędones etiam ac fures rerum magnarū ibi nequaquā inueniuntur, ideoq; ſtationes & currus eorū, vbi theſauros habent, ſeris aut vectibus non firmantur. Si aliqua beſtia perdita fuerit, quicunq; inuenit eam vel dimittit, vel ad illos, qui ad hoc poſiti ſunt, eam ducit. Apud quos ille, cuius eſt beſtia, illam requirit, & abſq; vlla difficultate recipit. Vnus alium ſatis honorat, & familiaritatē ac cibaria, quamuis apud eos ſint pauca, liberaliter ſatis communicat. Satis etiā ſunt ſufferentes, nec cùm ieiunauerint vno die, vel duobus, omninò ſine cibo, videntur impatientes, ſed cantant & ludunt, ac ſi bene comederent. In equitando multum ſuſtinent frigus, calorem quoq; nimium patiuntur. Inter eos quaſi nulla placita ſunt, & quamuis multum inebrientur, tamen in ebrietate ſua nunquam contendunt. Nullus alium ſpernit, ſed iuuat & promouet, quantum congruè poteſt. Caſtæ ſunt eorum mulieres, nec aliquid inter eos auditur de ipſarum impudicitia. Quædam tamen ex ijs verba turpia ſatis habent & impudica. Porrò erga cæteros homines ijdem Tartari ſuperbiſſimi ſunt, omneſq; nobiles & ignobiles quaſi pro nihilo reputantes deſpiciunt. Vndę vidimus in curia Imperatoris magnum Ruſſię ducem, & filium regis Georgianorum, ac Soldanos multos & magnos nullum honorem debitum recipere apud eos. Quinetiam Tartari eiſdem aſſignati, quantumcunq; viles eſſent illos antecedebant, ſemperq; primum locum & ſummum tenebant, imò etiam ſæpè oportebat illos poſt eorũ poſteriora ſedere. Præterea iracundi ſunt, & indignantis naturæ multum erga cæteros homines, & vltra modum erga eoſdem mendaces. In principio quidẽ blandi ſunt, ſed poſtmodum vt Scorpiones pungunt. Subdoli enim & fraudulenti ſunt, & omnes homines ſi poſſunt aſtutia circumueniunt. Quicquid mali volunt eis facere, miro modo occultant, vt ſibi non poſſint prouidere, vel contra eorum aſtutias remedium inuenire. Immundi quoq; ſunt in cibo & potu ſumendis, & in cæteris factis ſuis. Ebrietas apud illos eſt honorabilis: cumq; multum aliquis biberit, ibidemq; reijcit, non ideo ceſſat, quin iterum bibat. Ad petendum maximi ſunt exactores, tenaciſſimi retentores, parciſſimi donatores. Aliorum hominum occiſio apud illos eſt pro nihilo.

De legibus & conſuetudinibus eorum. Cap. 6.

HOc autem habent in lege ſiue conſuetudine, vt occidant viros & mulieres, ſi quando inueniantur in adulterio manifeſtè. Similiter etiam virginem, ſi fornicata fuerit cum aliquo, occidunt eam cum eo. Præterea ſi aliquis in præda vel furto manifeſto inuenitur, ſine vlla miſeratione occiditur. Item ſi quis denudauit conſilia, maximè quando volunt ad bellum procedere, dantur ei ſuper poſteriora centum plagæ, quanto maiores vnus ruſticus cum magno baculo poteſt dare. Similiter cùm aliqui de minoribus offendunt in aliquo, non eis à maioribus ſuis parcitur, ſed verberibus grauiter affliguntur. Matrimonio autem generaliter coniunguntur omnibus, etiã propinquis carne, excepta matre & filia & ſorore ex eadem matre. Nam ſororem tantùm ex patre, & vxorem quoq; patris, poſt eius mortem ſolent ducere. Vxorẽ etiam fratris alius frater iunior, poſt eius mortem, vel alius de parentela, tenetur ducere. Vnde dum adhuc eſſemus in terra, Dux quidam Ruſſiæ, Andreas nomine, apud Baty, quòd equos Tartarorum de terra educeret, & alijs venderet, accuſatus eſt: quod licet non eſſet probatum, occiſus eſt. Hoc audiens iunior frater, & vxor occiſi, pariter venerunt ad præfatum Ducem, ſupplicare volentes, ne terra auferretur eiſdem. At ille paruo præcepit, vt fratris defuncti duceret vxorem, mulieri quoq; vt illum in virum duceret, ſecundum Tartarorum conſuetudinẽ. Quæ reſpondit, ſe potius occidi velle, quàm ſic contra legem facere. At ille nihilominus eam illi tradidit quamuis ambo renuerent, quantum poſſent. Itaq; ducentes eos in lectum, clamantem puerum & plorantẽ ſuper illam poſuerunt, ipſoſq; commiſceri pariter coëgerunt. Deniq; poſt mortem maritorum, vxores Tartarorum non de facili ſolent ad ſecunda coniugia tranſire, niſi fortè quis velit ſororiam aut nouercam ſuam ducere. Nulla verò differentia eſt apud eos inter filiũ vxoris & concubinæ, ſed dat pater quod vult vnicuiq;. Itaq; ſi ſunt etiam ex Ducum genere, ita fit Dux filius concubinæ, ſicut filius vxoris legitimæ. Vnde cùm rex Georgiæ duos filios nuper, vnum ſcilicet nomine Melich legitimum, alterum verò Dauid ex adulterio natum haberet, morienſq; terræ partem adulteræ filio reliquiſſet, Melich, cui etiam ex parte matris regnum obuenerat, quia per fœminas tenebatur, perrexit ad Imperatorem Tartarorum, eo quòd & Dauid iter arripuerat ad illum. Ambobus igitur ad curiam venientibus, datiſq; maximis muneribus, petebat adulteræ filius, vt fieret ei iuſtitia ſecundum morem Tartarorum. Dataq; eſt ſententia contra Melich, vt Dauid, qui maior erat natu, ſubeſſet, ac terrã à patre ſibi conceſſam quietè ac pacificè poſſideret. Cumq; Tartarorum vnus habet vxorum multitudinem, vnaquæq; per ſe ſuam habet familiam & ſtationem. Et vna die Tartarus comedit & bibit & dormit cum vna, altera die cum alia. iuxta ignem incidere. Credunt enim, quòd ſic auferri debeat caput igni. Aliud eſt appodiare ſe ad flagellum, quo percutitur equus: ipſi enim non vtuntur calcaribus. Item flagello ſagittas tangere, iuuenes aues capere vel occidere, cum freno equum percutere, os cum oſſe alio frangere. Itemq; lac, vel aliquem potum aut cibum ſuper terram effundere, in ſtatione mingere. Quod ſi voluntariè facit, occiditur, ſi autem aliter, oportet quòd pecuniam multã incantatori ſoluat, à quo purificetur. Qui etiam faciat, vt ſtatio cum omnibus, quæ in ipſa ſunt, inter duos ignes tranſeat. Antequam ſic purificetur, nullus audet intrare, nec aliquid de illa exportare. Præterea ſi alicui morſellus imponitur, quem deglutire non poſſit, & illum de ore ſuo eijcit, foramen ſub ſtatione fit, per quod extrahitur, ac ſine vlla miſeratione occiditur. Iterum ſi quis calcat ſuper limen ſtationis Ducis alicuius, interficitur. Multa etiam habent his ſimilia, quæ reputant peccata. At homines occidere, aliorum terras inuadere, ac res illorum diripere, & contra Dei præcepta vel prohibitiones facere, nullum apud eos eſt peccatum. De vita æterna & damnatione perpetua nihil ſciunt. Credunt tamen, quòd poſt mortem in alio ſeculo viuant, gregéſque multiplicent, comedant & bibant, & cætera faciant, quæ hîc à viuentibus fiunt. Cæterum ſi aliquis à fulgure occiditur, oportet prædicto modo per ignes tranſire omnes illos, qui in illis ſtationibus morantur. Statio ſiquidem ac lectus & currus, filtra & veſtes, & quicquid talium habent, à nullo tanguntur, ſed ab hominibus tanquam immunda reſpuuntur. Et vt breuiter dicam, omnia purificari credunt per ignem. Homines ſylueſtres.

TErra quidem illa Orientalis, de qua dictum eſt ſuprà, quæ Mongal nominatur, quatuor quondam habuiſſe populos memoratur. Vnus eorum Yeka Mongal, id eſt, magni Mongali vocabantur. Secundus Sumongal, id eſt, aquatici Mongali, qui ſeipſos appellabant Tartaros, à quodam fluuio per eorum terram currente, qui Tartar nominatur. Tertius appellabatur Merkat. Quartus verò Metrit. Omnes vnam perſonarum formam & vnam linguam habebant hi populi, quamuis inter ſe per Principes ac prouincias eſſent diuiſi. In terra Yeka Mongal quidam fuit, qui vocabatur Chingis. Iſte cœpit robuſtus venator eſſe: didicit enim homines furari, & prædam capere. Ad alias terras ibat, & quoſcunque poterat, captiuabat, ſibiq; aſſociabat. Homines quoque ſuæ gentis inclinauit ad ſe, qui tanquam Ducem ſequebantur ipſum ad malè agendum. Cœpit autem pugnare cum Sumongal, ſiue cum Tartaris, & Ducem eorum interfecit, multoq; bello ſibi Tartaros omnes ſubiecit, & in ſeruitutem redegit. Poſt hęc cum iſtis omnibus contra Merkatas, iuxta terram poſitos Tartarorum pugnauit, quos etiam bello ſibi ſubiecit. Inde procedens contra Metritas pugnã exercuit, & illos etiam obtinuit. Audientes Naymani, quòd Chingis taliter eleuatus eſſet, indignati ſunt. Ipſi enim habuerant Imperatorem ſtrenuum valdè, cui dabant tributum cunctę nationes prædictæ. Qui cùm eſſet mortuus, filij eius ſucceſſerunt loco ipſius. Sed quia iuuenes ac ſtulti erant, populum tenere neſciebant, ſed ad inuicem diuiſi ac ſciſſi erant. Vnde Chingi prædicto modo iam exaltato, nihilominus in terras prædictas faciebant inſultum, & habitatores occidebant, ac diripiebant prædam eorum. Quod audiens Chingis, omnes ſibi ſubiectos congregauit. Naymani & Karakytay ex aduerſo ſimiliter in quandam vallem ſtrictam conuenerunt, & commiſſum eſt prælium, in quo Naymani & Karakytay à Mongalis deuicti ſunt. Qui etiam pro maiori parte occiſi fuerunt, & alij, qui euadere non potuerunt, in ſeruitutem redacti ſunt. In terra prædictorũ Karakytaorum Occoday Cham, filius Chingiſcham, poſtquã imperator fuit poſitus, quandã ciuitatem ædificauit, quã Chanyl appellauit. Prope quam ad Meridiem eſt quoddã deſertum magnũ, in quo pro certo ſylueſtres homines habitare dicuntur, qui nullatenus loquuntur, nec iuncturas in cruribus habent, & ſi quando cadunt, per ſe ſurgere non valent. Sed tamen diſcretionem tantam habent, quòd filtra de lana Camelorum, quibus veſtiuntur, faciunt & contra ventum ponunt. Et ſi quando Tartari pergentes ad eos vulnerant eos ſagittis, gramina in vulneribus ponunt, & fortiter ante ipſos fugiunt.

De mutua victoria ipſorum & Kythaorum. Cap.9.

MOngali autem in terram ſuam reuertentes, ſe contra * Kythaos ad prælium parauerunt, & caſtra mouentes, eorum terram intrauerunt. Quod audiens eorum Imperator, venit cum exercitu ſuo contra illos, & commiſſum eſt prȩlium durũ, in quo Mongali ſunt deuicti, omneſq; nobiles eorum, qui erant in exercitu, præter ſeptem occiſi ſunt. Vnde cùm illis volentibus aliquam impugnare regionẽ, minatur aliquis ſtragem, adhuc reſpondent: Olim etiam occiſi non niſi ſeptem remanſimus, & tamen modò creuimus in multitudinem magnam, ideoq; non terremur de talibus. Chingis autem & alij, qui remanſerunt, in terram ſuam fugerunt. Cumq; quieuiſſet aliquantulum, præparauit ſe rurſus ad prælium, & proceſſit contra terram Huyrorum. Iſti ſunt homines Chriſtiani de ſecta Neſtorianorum. Et hos etiam Mongali deuicerunt, eorumq; literam acceperunt; prius enim ſcripturam non habebant, nunc autem eandem Mongalorum literam appellant. Inde contra terram Saruyur, & contra terram Karanitarum, & contra terram Hudirat proceſſit, quos omnes bello deuicit. Inde in terram ſuam redijt, & aliquantulum quieuit. Deinde conuocatis omnibus hominibus ſuis, contra Kythaos pariter proceſſerunt, diuq; contra illos pugnantes, magnam partem terræ illorum vicerunt, eorumq; Imperatorem in ciuitatem ſuam maiorem concluſerunt. Quam & tam longo tempore obſederunt, quod exercitus expenſæ omninò defecerunt. Cumq; iam quod manducarent, penitus non haberent, pręcipit Chingiſcham ſuis, vt de decẽ hominibus vnũ ad manducandum darent. Illi verò de ciuitate machinis & ſagittis viriliter contra illos pugnabãt, & cùm deficerent lapides, argentũ & maximè liquefactum proijciebant. Ciuitas ſiquidẽ illa multis erat diuitijs plena. Cumq; diu Mongali pugnaſſent, & eam bello vincere non poſſent, vnam magnã ſub terra viam ab exercitu vſq; ad mediũ ciuitatis fecerunt, & proſilientes in mediũ eius, contra ciues pugnauerunt. Illi quoque, qui extra remanſerant, eodem modo contra illos pugnabant. Deniq; concidentes portas ciuitatis intrauerunt, & imperatorem cum pluribus occidentes vrbem poſſederunt, aurumq; & argentum, & omnes eius diuitias abſtulerunt. Et cùm illi terrę ſuos homines præfeciſſent, in terrã propriam reuerſi ſunt. Tunc primum Imperatore Kythaorum deuicto, factus eſt Chingiſcham imperator. Quandam tamen partẽ illius terræ, quia poſita erat in mari, nullatenus deuicerunt vſq; hodie. Sunt autem Kytai homines pagani, habentes literam ſpecialem, & etiam, vt dicitur, veteris & noui Teſtamenti ſcripturam. Habent etiam vitas patrũ & eremitas & domos, in quibus orant temporibus ſuis, ad modum Eccleſiarum factas. Quoſdam etiam ſanctos habere ſe dicunt, & vnum Deum colunt. Chriſtum IESVM Dominum venerantur, & credunt vitã æternam, ſed non baptizantur. Scripturam noſtram honorant ac reuerentur. Chriſtianos diligunt, & eleemoſynas plures faciunt, homines benigni ſatis & humani videntur. Barbam non habent, & in diſpoſitione faciei cum Mongalis in parte concordant. Meliores artifices in mundo non inueniuntur in omnibus operibus, in quibus homines exercentur. Terra eorum eſt opulenta nimis in frumento & vino, auro & ſerico ac rebus cæteris.

De monſtroſis mulieribus & canibus monſtroſa narratio.

CVm autem per deſerta redirent, in quandam terram venerunt, in qua, ſicut nobis apud Imperatoris curiam per clericos Ruthenos, & alios, qui diu fuerant inter ipſos, firmiter aſſerendo referebatur, mõſtra quædam, imaginem fœmineam habentia, repererunt. Quas cùm per multos interpretes interrogaſſent, vbi viri terræ illius eſſent, reſponderunt, quòd in illa terra quæcunq; fœminę naſcebãtur, habebant formã humanam, maſculi vero ſpeciẽ caninam. Dumq; moram in terra illa protraherent, Canes in alia fluuij parte conuenerunt. Et cùm eſſet hyems aſperrima omnes ſe in aquam proiecerunt, Poſt hæc incontinenti ſponte in puluerẽ voluebañtur, ſicq́; puluis admixtus aquę ſuper eos congelabatur, & vt ita pluries fecerunt, glacie ſuper eos depreſſata, cum impetu magno contra Tartaros ad pugnam conuenerunt. At verò cum illi ſagittas ſuper eos iaciebant, ac ſi ſuper lapides ſagittaſſent, retrò ſagittæ redibant. Alia quoq; arma eorũ in nullo eos lædere poterant. Ipſi verò Canes inſultum in Tartaros facientes, morſibus vulnerauerunt multos, & occiderunt, ſicq́; illos de ſuis finibus eiecerunt. Vnde adhuc inter illos eſt prouerbium de hoc facto, quod dicunt ad inuicem ridendo: Pater meus vel frater meus à Canibus fuit occiſus. Mulieres autem illorũ, quas ceperant, ad terrã ſuã duxerunt, & vſq; ad diẽ mortis eorũ ibidẽ fuerunt. Cùm autẽ exercitus ille Mongalorum rediret, venit ad terram Burithabeth, cuius habitatores pagani ſunt, & hos Tartari bello vicerunt. Hi conſuetudinem habent mirabilem, imò potius miſerabilem. Cùm enim alicuius pater humanæ naturæ ſoluit debitum, congregant omnẽ parentelam, & comedunt eum. Hi pilos in barba non habent, imò ferrum quoddam in manibus, ſicut vidimus, portant, cum quo ſemper barbam, ſi forte crinis aliquis in ea creſcit, depilant. Multum etiam deformes ſunt. Inde verò ille Tartarorum exercitus in terram ſuam eſt reuerſus.

De legatione Cyrpodan Ducis. Cap. 16.

EO tempore miſit Occoday Can Cyrpodan Ducem cum exercitu ad meridiem contra Kergis, qui & illos bello ſuperauit. Hi homines ſunt Pagani, qui pilos in barba non habent. Quorum conſuetudo talis eſt, vt cùm alicuius pater moritur, præ dolore quaſi vnam corrigiam in ſignum lamenti ab aure vſq; aurem de facie ſua leuet. His autem deuictis, Dux Cyrpodan contra Armenios iuit ad meridiem cum ſuis. Qui cùm tranſirent per deſerta quædam, monſtra inuenerunt, effigiem humanam habentia, quæ non niſi vnum brachium cum manu in medio pectoris, & vnum pedem habebant, & duo cum vno arcu ſagittabant, adeoq; fortiter currebant, quòd equi eos inueſtigare non poterant. Currebant autem ſuper vnum pedem illum ſaltando, & cùm eſſent fatigati, taliter eundo ibant ſuper manum & pedem, ſe tanquam in circulo reuoluendo. Cumq; ſic etiam feſſi eſſent, iterum ſecundùm priorem modum currebant. Hos Iſidorus Cyclopedes appellat. Et ex eis Tartari nonnullos occiderunt. Et ſicut nobis à Ruthenis Clericis in curia dicebatur, qui morantur cum Imperatore prædicto, plures ex eis nuncij venerunt in legatione ad curiam Imperatoris, ſuperiùs annotati, vt poſſent habere pacem cum illo. Inde procedentes venerunt in Armeniam, quam bello deuicerunt, & etiam Georgiæ partem. Alia verò pars venit ad mandatum eorum, & ſingulis annis dederunt, & adhuc dant ei pro tributo xx. millia Yperperarum. Hinc ad terram Soldani Deurum, potentis & magni, proceſſerunt, cum quo etiam pugnantes, ipſum deuicerunt. Denique proceſſerunt vlterius debellando ac vincendo vſque ad terram Soldani Halapiæ, & nunc etiam terram obtinent, alias quoque terras vltra illas proponentes impugnare: nec poſtea reuerſi ſunt in terram ſuam vſq; hodiè. Idemq; exercitus contra terram Caliphi Baldach perrexit, quam etiam ſibi ſubdidit, & vt CCCC. Byzantios, exceptis Baldekinis cæteriſq; muneribus, ei quotidiè pro tributo daret, obtinuit. Sed & quolibet anno mittunt nuncios ad Caliphum, vt ad eos veniat. Qui cum tributo munera magna traſmittens, vt eum ſupportent, rogat. Ipſe autem Imperator Tartarorum munera quidem accipit, & nihilominus vt veniat, pro eo mittit.

communiter cedant, omnes qui fugiunt, occiduntur. Et ſi vnus aut duo, vel plures ex decem audacter accedunt ad pugnam, alij verò ex illo Denario non ſequuntur, ſimiliter occiduntur. Sed etiam ſi vnus ex decem vel plures capiuntur, ſocij eorum ſi non eos liberant, ipſi etiam occiduntur. Porrò arma debent habere talia. Duos arcus vel vnum bonum ad minus. Treſq; pharetras ſagittis plenas, & vnam ſecurim & funes ad machinas trahendas. Diuites autem habent gladios in fine acutos, ex vna parte tantùm incidentes, & aliquantulum curuos. Habent & equos armatos, crura etiam tecta, galeas & loricas. Verùm loricas & equorum cooperturas quidam habent de corio, ſuper corpus artificioſè duplicato vel etiam triplicato. Galea verò ſuperius eſt de chalybe, vel de ferro: ſed illud, quod in circuitu protegit collum & gulam, eſt de corio. Quidam autem de ferro habent omnia ſupradicta, in hunc modum formata. Laminas multas tenues ad vnius digiti latitudinem & palmæ longitudinẽ faciunt, & in qualibet octo foramina paruula facientes, interius tres corrigias ſtrictas & fortes ponunt. Sicq; laminas, vnam alij quaſi per gradus aſcendendo, ſupponunt. Itaq; laminas ad corrigias, tenuibus corrigiolis per foramina prædicta immiſſis, ligant, & in ſuperiori parte corrigiolam vnam ex vtraque parte duplicatam cum alia corrigiola conſuunt, vt laminæ ſimul benè firmiterq; cohæreant. Hæc faciunt tam ad cooperturas equorum, quàm ad armaturas hominum. Adeoq; faciunt illa lucere, quod in eis poteſt homo faciem ſuam videre. Aliqui verò in collo ferri lanceæ vncum habent, cum quo de ſella, ſi poſſunt, hominem detrahant. Sagittarum eorum ferramenta ſunt acutiſſima, ex vtraque parte quaſi gladius biceps incidentia, ſemperq; iuxta pharetram portant limas ad acuendum ſagittas. Habent verò ſcuta de viminibus, aut de virgulis facta. Sed non credimus, quòd ea ſoleant portare, niſi ad caſtra & ad cuſtodiam Imperatoris ac principum, & hoc tantùm de nocte. In bellis aſtutiſſimi ſunt: quia per annos xlij. cum cæteris gentibus dimicârunt. Cùm autem ad flumina peruenerunt, maiores habent rotundum ac leue corium, in cuius ſummitate per circuitum anſas crebras facientes, funem imponunt ac ſtringunt, ita quod in circuitu quaſi ventrem efficiunt, quem veſtibus ac rebus cæteris replent, fortiſſimeq; ad inuicem comprimunt. In medio autem ponunt ſellas & alias res duriores: ibi quoque ſedent homines. Huiuſmodi nauim ad equi caudam ligant, & hominem, qui equum regat, pariter natare faciunt, vel habent aliquando duos remos, cum quibus remigant. Equo igitur in aquam impulſo, omnes alij equi ſequuntur illum, & ſic tranſeunt fluuium. NVllam æſtimo prouinciam eſſe, quæ per ſe poſſit eis reſiſtere: quia de omni terra poteſtatis ſuæ ſolent homines ad bellum congregare. Et ſiquidem vicina prouincia non vult eis opem ferre, quam impugnant, delentes illam, cum hominibus, quos ex illa capiunt, contra aliam pugnant. Et illos quidem in acie primos ponunt, & ſi malè pugnant, ipſos occidunt. Itaq; ſi Chriſtiani eis reſiſtere volunt, oportet quòd Principes ac rectores terrarum in vnum conueniant, ac de communi conſilio eis reſiſtant. Habeantq; pugnatores arcus fortes & baliſtas, quas multùm timent, ſagittaſq; ſufficientes, dolabrum quoq; de bono ferro, vel ſecurim cum manubrio longo. Ferramenta verò ſagittarum more Tartarorum, quando ſunt calida, temperare debent in aqua, cum ſale mixta, vt fortia ſint ad penetrandum illorum arma. Gladios etiam & lanceas cum vncis habeant, qui volunt, ad detrahendũ illos de ſella, de qua facillimè cadunt. Habeant & galeas & arma cætera, ad protegendum corpus & equum ab armis & ſagittis eorum, & ſi qui non ita ſunt armati, debent more illorum poſt alios ire, & contra ipſos arcubus vel baliſtis traijcere. Et ſicut dictum eſt ſuprà de Tartaris, debent acies ſuas ordinare, ac legem pugnantibus imponere. Quicunq; conuerſus fuerit ad prædam ante victoriam, maximam debet pœnam ſubire: talis enim apud illos occiditur abſq; miſeratione. Locus ad prælium, ſi fieri poteſt, eligendus eſt planus, vt vndiq; poſſint videre, nec omnes debent in vnum conuenire, ſed acies multas & diuiſas, nec tamen nimis diſtantes ab inuicem, facere. Contra illos, qui primò veniunt, debent vnam aciem mittere, & alia parata ſit ad iuuandum illam opportuno tempore. Habeant & ſpeculatores ex omni parte, qui videant, quando veniunt acies cęteræ. Nam ideò ſemper debent aciem contra aciem, vt ei occurrant, mittere, quoniam illi ſemper nituntur aduerſarios in medio concludere. Hoc autem acies caueant, ne ſi etiam illi fugere videantur, diu poſt illos currant, ne fortè, ſicut facere ſolent, ipſos ad paratas inſidias trahant: quia plus fraudulentia quàm fortitudine pugnant. Et iterum ne fatigentur equi eorum: quia noſtri multitudinem non habent equorum. Tartari verò quos equitant die vna, non aſcendunt tribus diebus, vel quatuor poſtea. Præterea ſi cedunt Tartari, non ideò debent noſtri recedere, vel ab in-Cæterùm Duces noſtri die noctúque facere debent exercitum cuſtodiri: nec iacere ſpoliati, ſed ſemper ad pugnam parati: quia Tartari quaſi Dæmones ſemper vigilant, excogitantes artem nocendi. De itinere Fratris Iohannis de Plano carpini vſque ad primam cuſtodiam Tartarorum. Cap. 19.

NOs igitur ex mandato ſedis Apoſtolicæ cùm iremus ad Orientis nationes, elegimus prius ad Tartaros proficiſci: quia timebamus, ne per illos in proximo Eccleſiæ Dei periculum immineret. Itaq; pergẽtes, ad regem Boëmorũ peruenimus: qui cùm eſſet nobis familiaris, conſuluit, vt per Poloniam & Ruſſiam iter ageremus, Habebat enim conſanguineos in Polonia, quorum auxilio Ruſſiam intrare poſſemus. Datiſq; literis & bono conductu, fecit & expenſas nobis dari per curias & ciuitates eius, quo vſque ad Ducem Sleſiæ Bolezlaum, nepotem eius, veniremus, qui etiam erat nobis familiaris & notus, Hinc & ipſe nobis ſimiliter fecit, donec veniremus ad Conradum, Ducem * Lautiſciæ, ad quem tunc, Dei gratia nobis fauente, venerat Dominus Waſilico, Dux Ruſſiæ, à quo etiam plenius de facto audiuimus Tartarorum: quia nuncios illuc miſerat, qui iam redierant ad ipſum, Audito autem, quòd oporteret nos illis munera dare, quaſdam pelles caſtorum & aliorum animalium fecimus emi, de hoc, quod datum nobis fuerat in eleemoſynam ad ſubſidiũ viæ. Quod agnoſcentes Dux Conradus & * Duciſſa Cracouiæ, & Epiſcopus & quidam milites, plures etiam nobis dederunt huiuſmodi pelles. Denique Dux Waſilico à Duce Cracouiæ, & Epiſcopo atque Baronibus pro nobis attentè rogatus, ſecum nos in terram ſuam duxit, & vt aliquantulum quieſceremus, aliquot diebus nos in expenſis ſuis detinuit, Et cùm rogatus à nobis, feciſſet Epiſcopos ſuos venire, legimus eis literas Domini Papæ, monentis eos, ad ſanctæ matris Eccleſię vnitatem redire. Ad idem quoque nos ipſi monuimus eos, & induximus, quantum potuimus, tam Ducem quàm Epiſcopos & alios. Sed quia Dux Daniel, frater Waſiliconis prædicti, præſens non erat, quoniam ad Baty profectus erat, non potuerunt eo tempore finaliter reſpondere. Poſt hæc Dux Waſilico tranſmiſit nos vſque in Kiouiam metropolin Ruſſiæ, cum ſeruiente vno. Ibamus tamen in periculo capitis ſemper propter Lituanos, qui ſæpè faciebant inſultum ſuper terram Ruſſiæ, & in illis maximè locis, per quos debebamus tranſire. At per prædictum ſeruientem eramus ſecuri à Ruthenis, quorum etiam maxima pars occiſa vel captiuata erat à Tartaris. Porrò in Danilone vſque ad mortem tunc infirmati fuimus. Nihilominus tamen in vehiculo per niuem & frigus magnum trahi nos fecimus, Cùm ergò Kiouiam peruenimus, habuimus de via noſtra conſilium cum millenario ac cæteris ibidem nobilibus, Qui reſponderunt nobis, quòd ſi duceremus equos illos, quos tunc habebamus, ad Tartaros, cùm eſſent magnæ niues, morerentur omnes: quia neſcirent herbam fodere ſub niue, ſicut equi faciunt Tartarorum, nec inueniri poſſet aliquod pro eis ad manducandum, cùm Tartari nec ſtramina nec fœnum habeant, nec pabulum. Itaque decreuimus eos illic dimittere cum duobus pueris, deputatis eorum cuſtodiæ. Ideóq; nos oportuit millenario dare munera, vt ipſum haberemus propitium, ad dandum nobis equos ſubducticios & conductum. Secundo igitur die poſt feſtum Purificationis cepto itinere, venimus ad villam Canouæ, quę ſub Tartaris erat immediatè. Cuius præfectus nobis dedit equos & conductum vſque ad aliam, in qua reperimus præfectum Micheam, omni malitia plenum. Qui tamen acceptis à nobis muneribus ſecundum velle ſuum, duxit nos vſq; ad primam cuſtodiam Tartarorum.

IN die porrò Sabbathi ſancti ad ſtationem fuimus vocati, & exiuit ad nos procurator Bathy prædictus, dicens ex parte ipſius, quòd ad Imperatorem Cuyne in terram ipſorum iremus, retentis quibuſdam ex noſtris ſub hac ſpecie, quòd vellent eos remittere ad Dominum Papam, quibus & literas dedimus de omnibus factis noſtris, quas deferrent eidem. Sed cùm rediiſſent vſq; ad Montij Ducem ſupradictum, ibi retenti fuerunt vſque ad reditum noſtrum. Nos autem in die Paſchę officio dicto, & facta comeſtione qualicunq; cum duobus Tartaris, qui nobis apud Correnſam fuerant aſſignati, cum multis lacrymis receſſimus, neſcientes vtrum ad mortem vel vitam pergeremus. Eramus tamen ita infirmi corpore, quòd vix poteramus equitare. In tota ſiquidem illa quadrageſima fuerat cibus noſter millium cum aqua & ſale tantùm, & in alijs ſimiliter diebus ieiuniorum. Nec habebamus aliquid ad bibendum pręter niuem in caldario liquefactam. Ibamus autem per Comaniam equitando fortiſſimè, quoniam habebamus equos recentes quinquies aut pluries in die, niſi quando per deſerta ibamus, & tunc equos meliores atque fortiores, qui poſſent continuum ſuſtinere laborem, accipiebamus. Et hoc ab ineunte quadrageſima vſque ad octo dies poſt Paſcha. Hæc terra Comania ab Aquilone immediatè poſt Ruſſiam habet Morduynos, Byleros, id eſt, magnam Bulgariam, Baſtarcos, id eſt, magnam Hungariam, poſt Baſtarcos, Paroſitas & Samogetas. Poſt Samogetas, illos, qui dicuntur habere faciem caninam in Oceani littoribus deſertis. Ab occidente autem Hungariam habet atque Ruſſiam. Et eſt Comania terra maxima & longa. Cuius populos, ſcilicet Comanos, Tartari occiderunt, quidam tamen à facie eorum fugerunt, & quidam in eorum ſeruitutem redacti ſunt. Plurimi autem ex eis, qui fugerunt, ad ipſos redierunt. Poſt hæc intrauimus terram Kangittarum, quæ magnam habet in plurimis locis penuriam aquarum, in qua etiam homines pauci morantur propter aquæ defectum. Vnde homines Ieroſlai, Ducis Ruſſiæ, cùm ad ipſum in terram Tartarorum perrexerunt, plures eorum in illo deſerto præ ſiti mortui ſunt. In hac etiam terra & in Comania multa inuenimus capita & oſſa mortuorum hominum, ſuper terram iacentia tanquam ſterquilinium. Per hanc itaq; terram iuimus ab octo diebus poſt Paſcha ferè vſque ad Aſcenſionem Dominicam. Huiuſq; habitatores Pagani erant, & tam ipſi quàm Comani non laborabant, ſed tantùm de animalibus viuebant, nec domos ædificabant, ſed in tabernaculis habitabant. Et ille, qui erat ibidem ex parte imperatoris, fecit maiores ciuitatis, & etiam duos filios eius, plaudere coram nobis. Hinc exeuntes, quoddam mare paruum inuenimus, in cuius littore quidam exiſtit mons paruus. In quo ſcilicet monte quoddam foramen eſſe dicitur, vnde in hyeme tam maximę tempeſtates ventorum exeunt, quòd homines inde vix & cum magno periculo tranſire poſſunt. In æſtate verò ſemper quidem ibi ventorum ſonitus auditur, ſed de foramine tenuiter egreditur. Per huius maris littora plurimis diebus perreximus, quod quidem licet non multum ſit magnum, plures inſulas habet, & illud in ſiniſtris dimiſimus. In terra verò illa habitat Ordu, quem omnium Ducum Tartarorum antiquiorem diximus, & eſt orda, ſiue curia patris ipſius, quam inhabitat, & regit vna de vxoribus eius. Conſuetudo enim eſt apud Tartaros, quòd principum & maiorum curiæ non delentur, ſed ſemper ordinantur aliquæ mulieres, quæ illas regant, eíſque donariorum partes, ſicut Dominis earum dari ſolebant, dantur. Sic tandem ad primam Imperatoris curiam venimus, in qua erat vna de vxoribus ipſius.

AT verò quia nondum Imperatorem videramus, noluerunt vocare nos, nec intromittere ad Ordam ipſius, ſed nobis in tentorio noſtro ſecundum morem Tartarorum valdè benè ſeruiri fecerunt, & vt quieſceremus, nos ibidem per vnam diem tenuerunt. Inde procedentes in vigilia ſanctorum Petri & Pauli, terram Naymanorum intrauimus, qui ſunt Pagani. In ipſa verò die Apoſtolorum ibidem cecidit magna nix, & habuimus magnum frigus. Hæc quidem terra montuoſa & frigida eſt ſupra modum, ibiq; de planicie reperitur modicum. Iſtæ quoque duæ nationes prædictæ non laborabant, ſed ſicut & Tartari in tentorijs habitabant, quas & ipſi deleuerant. per hanc etiam multis diebus perreximus. Deinde terram Mongalorum intrauimus, quos Tartaros appellamus, Per has itaque terras, vt credimus, tribus ſeptimanis equitando fortiter iuimus, & in die Beatæ Mariæ Magdalenæ ad Cuyne Imperatorem electum peruenimus. Ideò autem per omnem viam iſtam valdè feſtinauimus, quia præceptum erat Tartaris noſtris, vt citò nos deducerent ad curiam ſolennem, iam ex annis pluribus indictam, propter ipſius Imperatoris electionem. Idcircò de mane ſurgentes, ibamus vſque ad noctem ſine comeſtione, & ſæpius tam tardè veniebamus, quòd non comedebamus in ſero, ſed quod manducare debebamus in veſpere, dabatur nobis in mane. Mutatiſq; frequentius equis, nullatenus parcebatur eis, ſed equitabamus velociter ac ſine intermiſſione, quantum poterant equi trotare.

CVm autem peruenimus ad Cuyne, fecit nobis dari tentorium & expenſas, quales Tartaris dare ſolent, nobis tamen melius quàm alijs nuncijs faciebant. Ad ipſum autem vocati non fuimus, eo quòd nondum electus erat, nec adhuc de imperio ſe intromittebat. Interpretatio tamen literarum Domini Papæ, ac verba etiam à nobis dicta, à prædicto Baty erant ei mandata. Cùm ergo ſtetiſſemus ibi per quinque vel ſex dies, ad matrem ſuam nos tranſmiſit, vbi adunabatur curia ſolennis. Et cùm veniſſemus illuc, tam extenſum erat tentorium magnum, de alba purpura præparatum, eratq; tam grande noſtro iudicio, quòd pluſquam duo millia hominum poterant eſſe ſub illo. Et in circuitu factum erat ligneum tabulatum varijs imaginibus depictum, Illuc ergò perreximus cum Tartaris, nobis ad cuſtodiam aſſignatis, ibiq; conueнerant omnes duces, & vnuſquiſq; cum hominibus ſuis equitabat in circuitu per planiciem & colles. In prima die veſtiti ſunt omnes purpuris albis, in ſecunda verò rubeis. Et tunc venit Cuyne ad tentorium illud. Porrò tertia die fuerunt omnes in blaueis purpuris, & quarta in optimis Baldakinis. In illo autem tabulato iuxta tentorium erant duæ maiores portæ, per quarum vnam ſolus Imperator debebat intrare, & ad illam nulla erat cuſtodia, quamuis eſſet aperta, quia per illam nullus audebat ingredi vel exire: per aliam omnes, qui admittebantur, intrabant, & ad illam cuſtodes cum gladijs & arcubus & ſagittis erant. Itaq; ſi quis tentorio propinquabat vltra terminos, qui poſiti erant, ſi capiebatur, verberabatur, ſi fugiebat, ſagitta ſiue ferro ſagittabatur. Multiq; ibi erant, qui in frænis, pectoralibus, ſellis & huiuſmodi, iudicio noſtro, auri circiter viginti marcas habebant. Sic Duces infra tentorium colloquebantur, & de Imperatoris electione tractabant, vt à nobis creditur. Alius autem vniuerſus populus longè extra tabulatum collocabatur, & ita ferè vſque ad meridiem morabantur. Tunc incipiebant lac iumentinum bibere, & vſque ad veſperas tantum bibebant, quod erat viſu mirabile. Nos autem vocauerunt interius, & dederunt nobis cereuiſiam: quia iumentinū lac non bibebamus. Et hoc quidem nobis pro magno fecerunt honore: ſed tamen nos compellebant ad bibendum, quod nullatenus poteramus propter conſuetudinem ſuſtinere. Vnde oſtendimus eis, hoc eſſe nobis graue, ideoq; nos ceſſauerunt compellere. Foris autem erat Dux Ieroſlaus de Suſdal Ruſſiæ, pluresq; Duces Kythaorum & Solangorum. Duo quoq; filij regis Georgiæ, nuncius etiam Caliphi de Baldach, qui erat Soldanus, & plus quam decem alij Soldani Sarracenorum, vt credimus. Et ſicut nobis à procuratoribus dicebatur, erant ibi nunciorum plus quàm quatuor millia, inter illos, qui tributa portabant, & illos, qui deferebant munera, & Soldanos ac Duces alios, qui ad tradendum ſeipſos veniebant, & illos, pro quibus ipſi miſerant, illoſq;, qui terrarum præfecti erant. Hi omnes ſimul extra tabulatum ponebantur, eiſq; ſimul bibere præbebatur. Nobis autem & Duci Ierozlao ferè ſemper ab eis dabatur ſuperior locus, quando cum eis eramus exterius.

ET quidem, ſi benè meminimus, ibidem per ſeptimanas circiter quatuor fuimus. Credimuſq;, quòd ibi fuit electio celebrata, non tamen ibidem fuit publicata. Propter hoc autem id maximè credebatur, quia ſemper, quando Cuyne tentorio exibat, eidem cantabatur, & cum virgis ſpecioſis, in ſummitate lanam coccineam habentibus, inclinabatur, quod alteri Ducum nulli fiebat, quouſq; exterius morabatur. Hęc autem ſtatio ſiue Curia nominatur ab eis Syra orda. Hinc exeuntes, vnanimiter omnes equitauimus per tres aut quatuor leucas ad alium locum, vbi erat in quadā pulchra planicie iuxta riuum inter montes aliud tentorium, quod apud ipſos appellatur Orda aurea, præparatū. Ibi enim Cuyne debebat poni in ſede in die Aſſumptionis Dominæ noſtræ. Sed propter grandinem nimiam, quæ tunc, vt ſuprà dictum eſt, cecidit, res dilata fuit. Eratq; tentorium in columnis poſitum, quæ laminis aureis erant tectæ, & clauis aureis cum alijs lignis fixæ. Porrò de Baldakino erat tectum ſuperius, ſed alij erant panni exterius. Fuimus autem ibi vſq; ad feſtum Beati Bartholomæi, in quo maxima multitudo conuenit, & contra meridiem verſis vultibus ſtetit. Et quidam ad iactum lapidis longè à cæteris erant, ſemperq; orationes faciendo, ac genua flectendo, contra meridiem longius, & longius procedebant. Nos autem vtrum incantationes facerent, aut genua Deo vel alteri flecterent, neſcientes, nolebamus facere genu flexiones. Cumq; diu ita feciſſent, ad tentorium reuerſi ſunt, & Cuyne in ſede imperiali poſuerunt, Duceſq; coram eo genua flexerunt. Poſt hoc idem fecit vniuerſus populus, exceptis nobis, qui eis ſubditi non eramus.

Maieſtas.

HIc autem Imperator quando ſublimatus eſt in regnum, videbatur eſſe circiter xl. vel xlv. annorum. Mediocris erat ſtaturæ, prudens valde, nimis aſtutus multumq; ſerioſus, & grauis in moribus. Nec vnquam videbat eum homo de facili ridere, vel aliquam leuitatem facere, ſicut dicebant Chriſtiani, qui cum ipſo morabantur continuè. Dicebant etiam nobis aſſerendo firmiter Chriſtiani, qui erant de familia eius, quòd deberet fieri Chriſtianus. Cuius ſignum erat, quod ipſe Clericos Chriſtianos tenebat, & expenſas eis dabat. Habebat etiam ſemper capellam Chriſtianorum ante maius tentorium ſuum, vbi cantant Clerici publicè & apertè, ac pulſant ad horas, vt cęteri Chriſtiani ſecundùm mores Gręcorum, quantacunq; ſit ibi multitudo Tartarorum, vel etiam aliorum hominum. Hoc tamen non faciunt alij Duces ipſorum. Eſt autem mos Imperatoris ipſius, vt nunquam ore proprio loquatur cum extraneo, quantumcunq; tumcunq; magnus ſit, ſed audit & reſpondet per interpoſitam perſonam, & quandocunq; negotium proponunt, vel Imperatoris reſponſionem audiunt illi, qui ſub eo ſunt, quantumcunq; ſint magni, flexis genibus vſq; ad finem verborum perſiſtunt. Nec alicui de conſuetudine ſuper aliquo negotio loqui licitum eſt, poſtquam ab Imperatore definitum eſt. Habet autem Imperator prædictus procuratorem & protonotarios, atq; ſcriptores, omneſq; officiales in negotijs tam publicis quàm priuatis, exceptis Aduocatis. Nam ſine litium vel iudiciorum ſtrepitu ſecundum arbitrium Imperatoris omnia fiunt. Alij quoque Principes Tartarorum de his, quæ ad illos pertinent, idem faciunt. Hoc autem nouerint vniuerſi, quia nobis tunc exiſtentibus in ſolenni curia, iam ex pluribus annis indicta, idem Cuyne Imperator, de nouo electus, cum omnibus ſuis Principibus erexit vexillum contra Eccleſiam Dei, ac Romanum Imperium, & contra omnia regna Chriſtianorum & populos Occidentis, niſi fortaſſe, quod abſit, facerent ea, quæ mandabat Domino Papæ, atque potentibus, & omnibus Chriſtianorum populis, videlicet vt ipſi ſubdantur eis. Nam excepta Chriſtianitate, nulla eſt terra in orbe, quam timeant, & idcirco contra nos ad pugnam ſe præparant. Huius ſiquidem Imperatoris pater, ſcilicet Occoday, necatus fuerat veneno, & ob hoc à bellis quieuerant tempore pauco. Intentio autem eorum, vt dictum eſt ſuprà, eſt, ſibi totum ſubijcere mundum, ſicut à Chingiſcham habent mandatum. Vnde & ipſe Imperator in literis ſuis ita ſcribit: Dei fortitudo, omnium hominum Imperator. In ſuperſcriptione quoque ſigilli eius eſt hoc: Deus in cœlo, & Cuyne Cham ſuper terram, Dei fortitudo: omnium hominum Imperatoris ſigillum.

De admiſſione Fratrum & nunciorum ad Imperatorem. Cap. 29.

IN loco illo, vbi poſitus eſt Imperator in throno, vocati fuimus coram ipſo. Cumq; Chingay protonotarius eius nomina noſtra ſcripſiſſet, illorúq; à quibus miſſi eramus, & Ducis Solangorum & aliorum, clamauit alta voce, recitans illa coram Imperatore ac Ducum vniuerſitate. Quo facto, flexit vnuſquiſq; noſtrum quater genu ſiniſtrum, & monuerunt, ne tangeremus limen deorſum. Cumq; pro cultellis nos diligentiſſimè ſcrutati fuiſſent, & nullatenus inueniſſent, intrauimus oſtium ab Orientali parte: quia nullus ab Occidente, niſi ſolus imperator, audet intrare. Similiter & Dux ab illa parte ingreditur ſolus, ſi eſt tentorium eius. Minores autem non multum curant de talibus. Tunc ergò primum in eius præſentia ſuam intrauimus ſtationem, videlicet poſtquam factus eſt Imperator ibidem. Omnes quoque nuncij tunc ab eo recepti ſunt, ſed pauciſſimi tentorium eius intrauerunt. Ibi verò tanta donaria ab ipſis nuncijs fuerunt ei præſentata, quòd quaſi videbantur infinita, videlicet in ſamitis ac purpureis & baldakinis ac cingulis ſericis cum auro præparatis, pellibus etiam nobilibus, cæteriſq; muneribus. Quoddam etiam Solinum, ſiue tentoriolum, quod ſuper caput Imperatoris portatur, fuit eidem præſentatum, quod totum erat cum gemmis præparatum. Quidam verò præfectus vnius prouinciæ adduxit ei Camelos multos cum Baldakinis tectos. Similiter ſellæ poſitæ cum inſtrumentis quibuſdam erant, in quibus homines interius ſedere valebant. Equos etiam multos & mulos adducebant eidem phaleratos & armatos, quoſdam quidem de corio, & quoſdam de ferro. Nos etiam requiſiti fuimus, an ei munera dare vellemus: ſed iam facultas non erat, quoniam omnia ferè noſtra conſumpſeramus. Ibidem longè à ſtationibus ſuper montem erant poſiti currus pluſquam quingenti, qui omnes auro & argento ac ſericis veſtibus erant pleni. Cunctiq; inter imperatorem & Duces diuiſi fuerunt, ſinguliq; Duces inter homines ſuos partes ſuas, vt eis placuit, diuiſerunt.

Alij verò ſedebant poſt eos, & quolibet die veniebat dominarum maxima multitudo. Iſta verò tria tentoria, de quibus ſuprà diximus, erant valdè magna, aliaq; habebant vxores eius de filtro albo ſatis magna & pulchra. Ibidem Imperator diuiſus eſt à matre ſua, quæ iuit in vnam terræ partem, & Imperator in aliam ad iudicia facienda. Capta ſiquidem erat amica Imperatoris iſtius, quæ veneno interfecerat patrem eius, eo tempore, quo exercitus eorum in Hungaria fuit. Propter quod etiam exercitus eorum, qui erat in partibus illis, receſſit. De qua cum alijs pluribus factum fuit iudicium, & occiſi fuerunt. Eodem tempore mortuus fuit Ierozlaus, Dux magnus Soldal, quæ eſt quædam Ruſſiæ pars. Vocatus enim ad matrem Imperatoris quaſi pro honore, vt manducaret ac biberet de manu ipſius, in continenti ad hoſpitium eſt reuerſus, infirmatuſq; mortuus eſt poſt ſeptem dies, totúmque corpus eius miro modo glaucum effectum eſt, dicebaturq; ab omnibus, quod ibidem, vt terram eius liberè ac plenariè poſſiderent, fuiſſet impotionatus.

DEniq; Tartari noſtri nos ad Imperatorem duxerunt: qui cùm audiſſet per illos, nos ad eum veniſſe, iuſſit nos ad matrem redire. Volebat enim ſecundo die, ſicut ſuperiùs dictum eſt, contra totam Occidentis terram vexillum erigere, quod nos volebat ignorare. Itaque reuerſi ſtetimus paucis diebus, & iterum ad ipſum reuerſi ſumus. Cum quo benè per menſem fuimus in tanta fame ac ſiti, quòd vix viuere poteramus, Nam expenſæ, quæ nobis pro diebus quatuor dabantur, vix vni ſufficiebant. Nec inuenire poteramus aliquid ad emendum, quia forum erat nimis remotum. Sed Dominus nobis quendam Ruthenum, nomine Coſmam, aurifabrum præparauit, qui ſatis dilectus Imperatori, nos in aliquo ſuſtentauit. Et hic nobis oſtendit thronum Imperatoris, quem ipſe fecerat, antequam poneretur in ſede, & ſigillum eiuſdem, quod etiam fabricauerat ipſe. Poſt hoc Imperator pro nobis miſit, nobiſq; per Chingay protonotarium ſuum dici fecit, vt verba noſtra & negotia ſcriberemus, eiq; porrigeremus, Quod & fecimus, Poſt plures dies nos iterum vocari fecit, & vtrum eſſent apud Dominum Papam, qui Ruthenorum vel Sarracenorum, aut etiam Tartarorum literam intelligerent, interrogauit. Cui reſpondimus, quòd nullam iſtarum literarum habebamus. Sarraceni tamen erant in terra, ſed remoti erant à Domino Papa, Diximus tamen, quia nobis expedire videbatur, quòd in Tartarico ſcriberent, & nobis interpretarentur, nos autem in litera noſtra diligenter ſcriberemus, & tam literam quàm interpretationem ad Dominum Papam deferremus, Tunc à nobis receſſerunt, & ad Imperatorem iuerunt. Porrò à die Beati Martini fuimus vocati, Tunc Kadac, totius imperij procurator, & Chingay & Bala, pluresq; ſcriptores ad nos venerunt, nobiſq; literam de verbo ad verbum interpretati fuerunt. Et cùm in Latina litera ſcripſiſſemus, faciebant ſibi per ſingulas orationes interpretari, volentes ſcire, ſi nos in aliquo verbo erraremus, Cùm igitur ambæ literæ fuiſſent ſcriptæ, fecerunt nos ſemel ac ſecundo legere, ne fortè minus aliquid haberemus, Dixerunt enim nobis, videte, quòd omnia benè intelligatis, quia non expediret, quòd non omnia benè intelligeretis, Literas etiam in Sarracenico ſcripſerunt, vt aliquis in partibus noſtris inueniri poſſet, qui eas, ſi opus eſſet, legeret.

Qualiter licentiati fuerunt. Cap. 32.

Legati abhorrent à Tartarorum ad Chriſtianos legatione.

VT autem nobis Tartari noſtri dixerunt, propoſuit Imperator nuncios ſuos nobiſcum mittere. Volebat tamen, vt credimus, quod nos id ab eo peteremus. Sed cùm vnus de Tartaris noſtris, qui ſenior erat, nos ad hoc petendum hortaretur, nobis quidem, vt venirent, nequaquam bonum videbatur, Ideoq; reſpondimus ei, quòd non erat noſtrum petere, ſed ſi ſponte ipſe Imperator mitteret eos, libenter eos ſecurè conduceremus, Domino adiuuante, Nobis autem ob plures cauſas vt venirent, non videbatur expedire. Prima quidem fuit, quia timuimus, ne viſis diſſentionibus aut guerris, quæ fiunt inter nos, magis animarentur ad veniendum contra nos. Secunda fuit, timebamus eos exploratores terræ fieri. Tertia verò, quia timebamus eos interfici. Gentes enim noſtræ arrogantes ſunt & ſuperbæ. Vnde quando ſeruientes, qui ſtant nobiſcum, ex rogatu Cardinalis, legati ſcilicet Alemanniæ, in habitu Tartarico ibant ad ipſum, in via ferè lapidati ſunt à Teutonicis, & coacti ſunt deponere habitum illum. Conſuetudo autem eſt Tartarorum, vt cum illis, qui nuncios eorum occiderint, nunquam faciant pacem, niſi ſumant de ipſis vltionem, Quarta etiã cauſa fuit, quia timebamus ne nobis auferrentur vi.

Quinta verò cauſa erat, quia de aduentu eorum nulla foret vtilitas, cum nullum haberent aliud mandatum vel poteſtatem, niſi quód literas Imperatoris ad Dominum Papam & ad Principes deferrent, quas videlicet literas ipſi nos habebamus; & malum ex eorum aduentu poſſe contingere credebamus. Itaq; tertia die poſt hoc, ſcilicet in feſto beati Briccij nobis dederunt licentiam & literam, Imperatoris ſigillo munitam, mittentes nos ad ipſius Imperatoris matrem, quę vnicuiq; noſtrum dedit pelliceum vnum de pellibus vulpinis, quod habebat pilos de foris, & purpuram vnam. De quibus Tartari noſtri furati ſunt ex vnaquaq; vnum paſſum. De illa quoq;, quæ dabatur ſeruienti, meliorem medietatem ſunt furati. Quod nos quidem non ignorauimus, ſed inde verba mouere noluimus.

The voyage of Iohannes de Plano Carpini vnto the Northeaſt parts of the world, in the yeere of our Lord, 1246.

Of the firſt ſending of certaine Friers Prędicants and Minorites vnto the Tartars, taken out of the 32. Booke of Vincentius Beluacenſis his Speculum Hiſtoriale: beginning at the ſecond Chapter.

ABout this time alſo, Pope Innocentius the fourth ſent Frier Aſcelline being one of the order of the Prædicants, together with three other Friers (of the ſame authoritie whereunto they were called) conſorted with him out of diuers Couents of their order, with letters Apoſtolicall vnto the Tartars campe: wherein hee exhorted them to giue ouer their bloudie ſlaughter of mankinde, and to receiue the Chriſtian faith. And I, in verie deede, receiued the relations concerning the deedes of the Tartars onelie, (which, according to the congruence of times, I haue aboue inſerted into this my worke) from a Frier Minorite, called Simon de Sanct. Quintin, who lately returned from the ſame voyage. And at that verie time alſo, there was a certaine other Frier Minorite, namely Frier Iohn de Plano Carpini, ſent with certaine aſſociates vnto the Tartars, who likewiſe (as himſelfe witneſſeth) abode and conuerſed with them a yeere and three moneths at the leaſt. For both he & one Frier Benedict a Polonian being of the ſame order, and a partaker of all his miſerie and tribulation, receiued ſtraight commaundement from the Pope, that both of them ſhould diligently ſearche out all things that concerned the ſtate of the Tartars. And therefore this Frier Iohn hath written a litle Hiſtorie (which is come to our hands) of ſuch things, as with his owne eyes hee ſawe among the Tartars, or which he heard from diuers Christians worthy of credit, remaining there in captiuitie. Out of which hiſtorie I thought good by way of concluſion, to inſert ſomewhat for the ſupply of thoſe things which are wanting in the ſaid Frier Simon.

Of the ſituation and qualitie of the Tartars land, By Iohannes de Plano Carpini. Chap.3.

A deſcription of Tartaria.

The North Ocean.

Syra Orda.

The intemperature of the aire.

What Orda ſignifieth.

There is towards the Eaſt a land which is called Mongal or Tartaria, lying in that part of the worlde which is thought to be moſt North Eaſterly. On the Eaſt part it hath the countrey of Kythay and of the people called Solangi: on the South part the countrey of the Saracens: on the South eaſt the land of the Huini: and on the Weſt the prouince of Naimani: but on the North ſide it is inuironed with the Ocean Sea. In ſome part thereof it is full of mountaines, and in other places plaine and ſmoothe grounde, but euerie where ſandie and barren, neither is the hundreth part thereof fruitefull. For it cannot beare fruite vnleſſe it be moiſtened with riuer waters, which bee verie rare in that countrey. Whereupon they haue neither villages, nor cities among them, except one which is called Cracurim, and is ſaid to be a proper towne. We our ſelues ſawe not this towne, but were almoſt within halfe a dayes iourney thereof, when we remained at Syra Orda, which is the great court of their Emperour. And albeit the foreſaid lande is otherwiſe vnfruitfull, yet is it very commodious for the bringing vp of cattell. In certaine places thereof are ſome ſmall ſtore of trees growing, but otherwiſe it is altogether deſtitute of woods. Therefore the Emperour, and his noble men and all other warme themſelues, and dreſſe their meate with fires made of the doung of oxen, and horſes. The ayre alſo in that countrey is verie intemperate. For in the midſt of Sommer there be great thunders and lightnings, by the which many men are ſlaine, and at the ſame time there falleth great abundance of ſnowe. There bee alſo ſuch mightie tempeſtes of colde windes, that ſometimes men are not able to ſitte on horſebacke. Whereupon, being neere vnto the Orda (for by this name they call the habitations of their Emperours and noble men) in regarde of the great winde we were conſtrained to lye groueling on the earth, and could not ſee by reaſon of the duſt. There is neuer any raine in Winter, but onely in Sommer, albeit in ſo little quantitie, that ſometimes it ſcarcely ſufficeth to allay the duſt, or to moyſten the rootes of the graſſe. There is often times great ſtore of haile alſo. Inſomuch that when the Emperour elect was to be placed in his Emperiall throne (my ſelfe being then preſent) there fell ſuch abundance of haile, that, vpon the ſudden melting thereof, more then 160. perſons were drowned in the ſame place: there were manie tentes and other thinges alſo caried away. Likewiſe, in the Sommer ſeaſon there is on the ſudden extreame heate, and ſuddenly againe intollerable colde.

The ſhape of the Tartars.

Their habite.

Like vnto Frobiſhers men.

Their tabernacles.

Their cattell.

Their victuals.

The Mongals or Tartars, in outward ſhape, are vnlike to all other people. For they are broader betweene the eyes, and the balles of their cheekes, then men of other nations bee. They haue flat and ſmall noſes, litle eyes, and eye liddes ſtanding ſtreight vpright, they are ſhauen on the crownes like prieſts. They weare their haire ſomewhat longer about their eares, then vpon their foreheads: but behinde they let it growe long like womans haire, whereof they braide two lockes binding eche of them behind either eare. They haue ſhort feet alſo. The garments, as well of their men, as of their women are all of one faſhion. They vſe neither cloakes, hattes, nor cappes. But they weare Iackets framed after a ſtrange manner, of buckeram, ſkarlet, or Baldakines. Their ſhoubes or gownes are hayrie on the outſide, and open behinde, with tailes hanging downe to their hammes. They vſe not to waſhe their garments, neither will in any wiſe ſuffer them to bee waſhed, eſpecially in the time of thunder. Their habitations bee rounde and cunningly made with wickers and ſtaues in manner of a tent. But in the middeſt of the toppes thereof, they haue a window open to conuey the light in and the ſmoake out. For their fire is alwayes in the middeſt. Their walles bee couered with felt. Their doores are made of felte alſo. Some of theſe Tabernacles may quickely be taken aſunder, and ſet together againe, and are caried vpon beaſtes backes. Other ſome cannot be taken inſunder, but are ſtowed vpon carts. And whitherſoeuer they goe, be it either to warre, or to any other place, they tranſport their tabernacles with them. They are very rich in cattel, as in camels, oxen, ſheep, and goats. And I thinke they haue more horſes and mares then all the world beſides. But they haue no kine nor other beaſts. Their Emperors, Dukes, & other of their nobles doe abound with ſilk, gold, ſiluer, and precious ſtones. Their victuals are al things that may be eaten: for we ſaw ſome of them eat lice.

They drinke milke in great quantitie, but eſpecially mares milke, if they haue it: They ſeeth Mill alſo in water, making it ſo thinne, that they may drinke thereof. Euery one of them drinkes off a cup full or two in a morning, and ſometime they eate nought elſe all the day long. But in the euening each man hath a little fleſh giuen him to eate, and they drinke the broath thereof. Howbeit in ſummer time, when they haue mares milke enough, they ſeldome eate fleſh, vnles perhaps it be giuen them, or they take ſome beaſt or bird in hunting.

Of their manners both good and bad. Chap. 5.

Their manners are partly prayſe-worthie, and partly deteſtable: For they are more obedient vnto their lords and maſters, then any other either clergie or laie-people in the whole world. For they doe highly reuerence them, and will deceiue them, neither in wordes nor deedes. They ſeldome or neuer fall out among themſelues, and, as for fightings or brawlings, wounds or manſlaughters, they neuer happen among them. There are neither theeues nor robbers of great riches to be found, and therefore the tabernacles and cartes of them that haue any treaſures are not ſtrengthened with lockes or barres. If any beaſt goe aſtray, the finder thereof either lets it goe, or driueth it to them that are put in office for the ſame purpoſe, at whoſe handes the owner of the ſaid beaſt demaundeth it, and without any difficultie receiueth it againe. One of them honoureth another exceedingly, and beſtoweth banquets very familiarly and liberallie, notwithſtanding that good victuals are daintie and ſcarce among them. They are alſo very hardie, and when they haue faſted a day or two without any maner of ſuſtenance, they ſing and are merry as if they had eaten their bellies full. In riding, they endure much cold and and extreme heat. There be, in a maner, no contentions among them, and although they vſe commonly to be drunken, yet doe they not quarell in their drunkennes. Noe one of them deſpiſeth another but helpeth and furthereth him, as much as conueniently he can. Their women are chaſte, neither is there ſo much as a word vttered concerning their diſhoneſtie. Some of them will notwithſtanding ſpeake filthy and immodeſt words. But towards other people, the ſaid Tartars be moſt inſolent, and they ſcorne and ſet nought by all other noble and and ignoble perſons whatſoeuer. For we ſaw in the Emperours court the great duke of Ruſſia, the kings ſonne of Georgia, and many great Soldanes receiuing no due honour and eſtimation among them. So that euen the very Tartars aſſigned to giue attendance vnto them, were they neuer ſo baſe, would alwaies goe before them, and take the vpper hand of them, yea, and ſometimes would conſtraine them to ſit behinde their backes. Moreouer they are angrie and of a diſdainefull nature vnto other people, and beyond all meaſure deceitfull, and treacherous towards them. They ſpeake fayre in the beginning, but in concluſion, they ſting like ſcorpions. For craftie they are, and full of falſhood, circumuenting all men whom they are able, by their ſleights. Whatſoeuer miſchiefe they entend to practiſe againſt a man, they keepe it wonderfully ſecrete, ſo that he may by no meanes prouide for himſelfe, nor find a remedie againſt their conſpiracies. They are vnmanerly alſo and vncleanly in taking their meat and their drinke, and in other actions. Drunkennes is honourable among them, and when any of them hath taken more drinke then his ſtomacke can well beare, hee caſteth it vp and falles to drinking againe. They are moſt intollerable exacters, moſt couetous poſſeſſours, and moſt nigardly giuers. The ſlaughter of other people is accompted a matter of nothing with them.

Of their lawes and cuſtomes. Chap 6.

Moreouer, they haue this law or cuſtome, that whatſoeuer man or woman be manifeſtly taken in adulterie, they are puniſhed with death. A virgine likewiſe that hath committed fornication, they ſlay together with her mate. Whoſoeuer be taken in robberie or theft, is put to death without all pitie. Alſo, if any man diſcloſe their ſecrets, eſpecially in time of warre, he receiueth an hundreth blowes on the backe with a baſtinado, layd on by a tall fellow. In like ſort when any inferiours offend in ought, they finde no fauour at their ſuperiours handes, but are puniſhed with grieuous ſtripes. They are ioyned in matrimony to all in generall, yea, euen to their neare kinſfolkes except their mother, daughter and ſiſter by the mothers ſide. For they vſe to marrie their ſiſter by the fathers ſide onely, and alſo the wife of their father after his deceaſe. The yonger brother alſo, or ſome other of his kindred, is bound to marry the wife of his elder brother deceaſed. For, at the time of our abode in the countrey, a certaine duke of Ruſſia named Andreas, was accuſed before duke Baty for conueying the Tartars horſes out of the land, and for ſelling them to others: and although it could not be prooued, yet was he put to death. His yonger brother and the wife of the party deceaſed hearing this, came & made their ſupplication vnto the forenamed duke, that the dukedome of Ruſſia might not be taken from them. But he commanded the youth to marrie his deceaſed brothers wife, and the woman alſo to take him vnto her huſband, according to the cuſtome of the Tartars. She anſwered, that ſhe had rather die, then ſo haynouſly tranſgreſſe the law. Howbeit, hee deliuered her vnto him, although they both refuſed as much as they could. Wherefore carying them to bed, they conſtrained the youth, lamenting and weeping, to lie downe and commit inceſt with his brothers wife. To be ſhort, after the death of their huſbands, the Tartars wiues vſe very ſeldome to marrie the ſecond time, vnleſſe perhaps ſome man takes his brothers wife or his ſtepmother in mariage. They make no difference betweene the ſonne of their wife and of their concubine, but the father giues what he pleaſeth vnto each one: For of late the king of Georgia hauing two ſonnes, one lawfully begotten called Melich; but the other Dauid, borne in adulterie, at his death left part of his lande vnto his baſe ſonne. Hereupon Melich (vnto whome the kingdome fell by right of his mother, becauſe it was gouerned before time by women) went vnto the Emperour of the Tartars, Dauid alſo hauing taken his iourney vnto him. Nowe both of them comming to the court and proffering large giftes, the ſonne of the harlot made ſuite, that he might haue iuſtice, according to the cuſtome of the Tartars. Well, ſentence paſſed againſt Melich, that Dauid being his elder brother, ſhould haue ſuperioritie ouer him, and ſhould quietly and peaceably poſſeſſe the portion of land granted vnto him by his father. Whenſoeuer a Tartar hath many wiues, each one of them hath her family and dwelling place by her ſelfe. And ſometime the Tartar eateth, drinketh and lieth with one, and ſometime with another. One is accompted chiefe among the reſt, with whom hee is oftener conuerſant, then with the other. And notwithſtanding (as it hath bin ſaid) they are many, yet do they ſeldome fal out among themſelues.

Melich & Dauid two brothers.

Of their ſuperſtitious traditions. Chap. 7.

Ridiculous traditions.

BUt by reaſon of certain traditions, which either they or their predeceſſors haue deuiſed, they accompt ſome things indifferent to be faults. One is to thruſt a knife into the fire, or any way to touch the fire with a knife, or with their knife to take fleſh out of the cauldrō, or to hewe with an hatchet neare vnto the fire. For they think by that means to take away the head or force from the fire. Another is to leane vpon the whip, wherewith they beate their horſes: for they ride not with ſpurs. Alſo, to touch arrowes with a whip, to take or kill yong birds, to ſtrike an horſe with ẏ raine of their bridle, and to breake one bone againſt another. Alſo, to powre out milke, meate, or any kinde of drinke vpon the ground, or to make water within their tabernacle: which whoſoeuer doth willingly, he is ſlaine, but otherwiſe he muſt pay a great ſumme of money to the inchanter to be purified. Who likewiſe muſt cauſe the tabernacle with all things therein, to paſſe betweene two fiers. Before it be on this wiſe purified, no man dare once enter into it, nor conueigh any thing thereout. Beſides, if any man hath a morſell giuen him, which he is not able to ſwallow, and for that cauſe caſteth it out of his mouth, there is an hole made vnder his tabernacle, by which hee is drawen forth and ſlaine without all compaſſion. Likewiſe, whoſoeuer treads vpon the threſhold of any of their dukes tabernacles, he is put to death. Many other things there be, like vnto theſe, which they take for heinous offences. But to ſlay men, to inuade the dominions of other people, and to rifle their goods, to tranſgreſſe the commaundements and prohibitions of God, are with them no offences at all. They know nothing concerning eternall life, and euerlaſting damnation, and yet they thinke, that after death they ſhall liue in another world, that they ſhall multiply their cattell, that they ſhal eate and drinke and doe other things which liuing men performe here vpon earth. At a new moone, or a full moone, they begin all enterpriſes that they take in hand, and they call the moone the Great Emperour, and worſhip it vpon their knees. All men that abide in their tabernacles muſt be purified with fire: Which purification is on this wiſe, They kindle two fires, and pitch two Iauelines into the ground neere vnto the ſaid fires, binding a corde to the tops of the Iauelines. And about the corde they tye certaine iagges of buckram, vnder which corde, and betweene which fires, men, beaſtes, and tabernacles do paſſe. There ſtand two women alſo, one on the right ſide, and another on the left caſting water, and repeating certaine charmes. If any man be ſlaine by lightening, all that dwell in the ſame tabernacle with him muſt paſſe by fire in maner aforeſaid. For their tabernacles, beds, and cartes, their feltes and garments, and whatſoeuer ſuch things they haue, are touched by no man, yea, and are abandoned by all men as things vncleane. And to bee ſhort, they thinke that all things are to be purged by fire. Therefore, when any ambaſſadours, princes, or other perſonages whatſoeuer come vnto them, they and their giftes muſt paſſe betweene two fires to be purified, leſt perauenture they haue practiſed ſome witchcraft, or haue brought ſome poyſon or other miſchiefe with them.

Of

Of the beginning of their empire or gouernment. Chap. 7.

THe Eaſt countrie, whereof wee haue entreated, which is called Mongal, is reported to haue had of olde time foure ſortes of people. One of their companions was called Yeka Mongal, that is the great Mongals. The ſecond company was called Sumongal, that is, the Water-Mongals, who called themſelues Tartars of a certaine riuer running through their countrey named Tartar. The third was called Merkat, and the fourth Metrit. All theſe people had one and the ſame perſon, attire of body and language, albeit they were diuided by princes and prouinces. In the prouince of Yeka Mongal, there was a certaine man called Chingis. This man became a mighty hunter. For he learned to ſteale men, & to take them for a pray. He ranged into other countries taking as many captiues as he could, and ioining them vnto himſelfe. Alſo hee allured the men of his owne countrey vnto him, who followed him as their captaine and ringleader to doe miſchiefe. Then began he to make warre vpon the Sumongals or Tartars, and ſlewe their captaine, and after many conflicts, ſubdued them vnto himſelfe, and brought them all into bondage. Afterward he vſed their helpe to fight againſt the Merkats, dwelling by the Tartars, whom alſo hee vanquiſhed in battell. Proceeding from thence, he fought againſt the Metrites, and conquered them alſo. The Naimani hearing that Chingis was thus exalted, greatly diſdeined thereat. For they had a mighty & puiſſant Emperour, vnto whom all the foreſaid nations payed tribute. Whoſe ſonnes, when he was dead, ſucceeded him in his Empire. Howbeit, being young and fooliſh, they knew not howe to gouerne the people, but were diuided, and fell at variance among themſelues. Now Chingis being exalted, as is aforeſaid, they neuertheleſſe inuaded the forenamed countries, put the inhabitants to the ſword, and carried away their goods for a pray. Which Chingis hauing intelligence of, gathered all his ſubiects together. The Naimani alſo, and the people called Karakitay aſſembled and banded themſelues at a certaine ſtraight valley, where, after a battell foughten they were vanquiſhed by the Mongals. And being thus vanquiſhed, they were, the greater part of them, ſlaine; and others, which could not eſcape, were carried into captiuitie. In the land of the foreſayd Karakytayans, Occoday Cham, the ſonne of Chingis Cham, after he was created Emperour, built a certaine citie, which he called Chanyl. Neare vnto which citie, on the South ſide, there is an huge deſert, wherein wilde men are certainely reported to inhabite, which cannot ſpeake at all, and are deſtitute of ioynts in their legges, ſo that if they fall, they cannot riſe alone by themſelues. Howbeit, they are of diſcretion to make feltes of Camels haire, wherewith they clothe themſelues, and which they holde againſt the winde. And if at any time, the Tartars purſuing them, chance to wound them with their arrowes, they put herbes into their wounds, and flye ſtrongly before them.

Of the mutuall victories betweene them, and the people of Kythay. Chap. 9.

BUt the Mongals returning home into their owne countrey, prepared themſelues to battell againſt the * Kythayans: Which their Emperour hearing, ſet forward againſt them with his armie, and they fought a cruell battell, wherein the Mongals were ouercome, and all their nobles in the armie, except ſeuen, were ſlaine. And for this cauſe, when they, purpoſing to inuade anie region, are threatned by the inhabitants thereof to be ſlaine, they doe, to this day, anſwere: in old time alſo our whole number beſides being ſlaine, we remayned but ſeuen of vs aliue, and yet notwithſtanding we are now growen vnto a great multitude, thinke not therefore to daunt vs with ſuch brags. But Chingis and the reſidue that remained aliue, fled home into their countrey: And hauing breathed him a little, he prepared himſelfe to warre, and went forth againſt the people called Huyri: Theſe men were Chriſtians of the ſect of Neſtorius. And theſe alſo the Mongals ouercame, and receiued letters or learning from them: for before that time they had not the arte of writing, and nowe they call it the hand or letters of the Mongals. Immediately after, hee marched againſt the countrey of Saruyur, and of the Karanites, and againſt the land of Hudirat; all which he vanquiſhed. Then returned he home into his owne countrey, and breathed himſelfe. Afterward, aſſembling his warlike troupes, they marched with one accord againſt the Kythayans, and waging warre with them a long time, they conquered a great part of their land, and ſhut vp their Emperour into his greateſt citie: which citie they had ſo long time beſieged, that they began to want neceſſary prouiſion for their armie. And when they had no victuals to feede vpon, Chingis Cham commaunded his ſouldiers, that they ſhould eate euery tenth man of the companie.

But they of the citie fought manfully againſt them, with engines, dartes, and arrowes, and when ſtones wanted they threw ſiluer, and eſpecially melted ſiluer: for the ſame citie abounded with great riches. Alſo, when the Mongals had fought a long time and could not preuayle by warre, they made a great trench vnderneath the ground from the armie vnto the middeſt of the citie, and there iſſuing foorth they fought againſt the citizens, and the remnant alſo without the walles fought in like manner. At laſt, breaking open the gates of the citie, they entred, and putting the Emperour, with many other to the ſworde, they tooke poſſeſſion thereof and conueighed away the golde, ſiluer, and all the riches therein. And hauing appointed certaine deputies ouer the countrey, they returned home into their owne lande. This is the firſt time, when the Emperour of the Kythayans being vanquiſhed, Chingis Cham obtayned the Empire. But ſome parte of the countrey, becauſe it lyeth within the ſea, they could by no meanes conquere vnto this day. The men of Kytay are Pagans, hauing a ſpeciall kinde of writing by themſelues, and (as it is reported) the Scriptures of the olde and newe Teſtament. They haue alſo recorded in hyſtories the liues of their forefathers: and they haue Eremites, and certaine houſes made after the manner of our Churches, which in thoſe dayes they greatly reſorted vnto. They ſay that they haue diuers Saints alſo, and they worſhip one God. They adore and reuerence CHRIST IESVS our Lorde, and beleeue the article of eternall life, but are not baptized. They doe alſo honourably eſteeme and reuerence our Scriptures. They loue Chriſtians, and beſtowe much almes, and are a very courteous and gentle people. They haue no beardes, and they agree partly with the Mongals in the diſpoſition of their countenance. In all occupations which men practiſe, there are not better artificers in the whole worlde. Their countrey is exceeding rich, in corne, wine, golde, ſilke, and other commodities.

Thoſſut Can ſon of Chingis.

India minor ſubdued.

The ſtratagem of the king of India.

AND when the Mongals with their emperour Chingis Cham had a while reſted themſelues after the foreſayd victorie, they diuided their armies. For the Emperour ſent one of his ſonnes named Thoſſut (whom alſo they called Can, that is to ſay, Emperour) with an armie againſt the people of Comania, whom he vanquiſhed with much warre, and afterward returned into his owne countrey. But he ſent his other ſonne with an armie againſt the Indians, who alſo ſubdued India minor. Theſe Indians are the blacke Saracens, which are alſo called Æthiopians. But here the armie marched forward to fight againſt Chriſtians dwelling in India maior. Which the King of that countrey hearing (who is commonly called Presbiter Iohn) gathered his ſouldiers together, and came foorth againſt them. And making mens images of copper, he ſet each of them vpon a ſaddle on horſebacke, and put fire within them, and placed a man with a paire of bellowes on the horſe backe behinde euery image. And ſo with many horſes and images in ſuch ſorte furniſhed, they marched on to fight againſt the Mongals or Tartars. And comming neare vnto the place of the battell, they firſt of all ſent thoſe horſes in order one after another. But the men that ſate behind laide I wote not what vpon the fire within the images, and blew ſtrongly with their bellowes. Whereupon it came to paſſe, that the men and the horſes were burnt with wilde fire, and the ayre was darkened with ſmoake. Then the Indians caſt dartes vpon the Tartars, of whom many were wounded and ſlain. And ſo they expelled them out of their dominions with great confuſion, neither did we heare, that euer they returned thither againe.

How being repelled by monſtrous men ſhapen like dogs, they ouercame the people of Burithabeth. Chap.11.

A ſtrange report of certain mõſtrous women and dogs.

BUt returning through the deſerts, they came into a certaine countrey, wherein (as it was reported vnto vs in the Emperours court, by certaine clergie men of Ruſſia, and others, who were long time among them, and that by ſtrong and ſtedfaſt affirmation) they found certaine monſters reſembling women: who being aſked by many interpreters, where the men of that land were, they anſwered, that whatſoeuer women were borne there, were indued with the ſhape of mankinde, but the males were like vnto dogges. And delaying the time, in that countrey they met with the ſaid dogges on the other ſide of the riuer. And in the midſt of ſharpe winter, they caſt themſelues into the water: Afterward they wallowed in the duſt vpon the maine land, and ſo the duſt being mingled with water, was frozen to their backes, and hauing often times ſo done, the ice being ſtrongly frozen vpon them, with great fury they came to fight againſt the Tartars. And when the Tartars threwe their dartes, or ſhot their arrowes among them, they rebounded backe againe, as if they had lighted vpon ſtones. And the reſt of their weapons coulde by no meanes hurt them. Howbeit, the Dogges made an aſſault vpon the Tartars, and wounding ſome of them with their teeth, and ſlaying others, at length they draue them out of their countries. And thereupon they haue a Prouerbe of the ſame matter, as yet riſe among them, which they ſpeake in ieſting ſorte one to another; My father or my brother was ſlaine of Dogges. The women which they tooke, they brought into their owne countrey, who remayned there till their dying day. And in trauelling homewardes, the ſayd armie of the Mongals came vnto the lande of Burithabeth (the inhabitants whereof are Pagans) and conquered the people in battell. Theſe people haue a ſtrange or rather a miſerable kinde of cuſtome. For when anie mans father deceaſeth, he aſſembleth all his kindred, and they eate him. Theſe men haue no beards at all, for we ſaw them carie a certaine iron inſtrument in their handes, wherewith, if any haires growe vpon their chinne, they preſently plucke them out. They are alſo very deformed. From thence the Tartars armie returned to their owne home.

How they had the repulſe at the Caſpian mountaynes, and were driuen backe by men dwelling in caues. Chap. 12.

Another expedition of Chingis.

Moreouer Chingis Cham, at the ſame time when he ſent other armies againſt the Eaſt, hee himſelfe marched with a power into the lande of Kergis, which notwithſtanding, he conquered not in that expedition, and as it was reported vnto vs, he went on forward euen to the Caſpian mountaines. But the mountaines on that part where they encamped themſelues, were of adamant, and therefore they drew vnto them their arrowes, and weapons of iron. And certaine men contained within thoſe Caſpian mountaynes, hearing, as it was thought, the noyſe of the armie, made a breach through, ſo that when the Tartars returned vnto the ſame place tenne yeeres after, they found the mountaine broken. And attempting to goe vnto them, they could not: for there ſtood a cloud before them, beyond which they were not able to paſſe, being depriued of their ſight ſo ſoone as they approched thereunto. But they on the contrary ſide thinking that the Tartars durſt not come nigh them, gaue the aſſault, & when they came at the cloud, they could not proceed for the cauſe aforeſaid. Alſo the Tartars, before they came vnto the ſaid mountaines, paſſed for the ſpace of a moneth and more, through a vaſt wildernes, & departing thence towards the Eaſt, they were aboue a moneth trauelling through another huge deſert. At length, they came vnto a land wherin they ſaw beaten waies, but could not find any people. Howbeit, at the laſt, diligently ſeeking, they found a man & his wife, whom they preſented before Chingis Cham: and demanding of them where the people of that countrey were, they anſwered, that the people inhabited vnder the ground in mountains. Then Chingis Cham keeping ſtill the woman, ſent her huſband vnto thẽ, giuing thẽ charge to come at his command. And going vnto them, he declared all things that Chingis Cham had commanded them. But they anſwered, that they would vpon ſuch a day viſite him, to ſatiſfie his deſire. And in the meane ſeaſon, by blinde & hidden paſſages vnder the earth, aſſembling themſelues, they came againſt the Tartars in warlike manner, and ſuddenly iſſuing forth, they ſlewe a great number of them. This people were not able to endure the terrible noiſe, which in that place the Sunne made at his vpriſing: for at the time of the Sunne riſing, they were inforced to lay one eare vpon the ground, and to ſtoppe the other cloſe, leaſt they ſhould heare that dreadfull ſound. Neither could they ſo eſcape, for by this meanes many of them were deſtroyed. Chingis Cham therefore and his company, ſeeing that they preuailed not, but continually loſt ſome of their number, fled and departed out of that land. But the man and his wife aforeſaid they caried along with them, who all their life time continued in the Tartars countrey. Being demaunded why the men of their countrey doe inhabite vnder the ground, they ſayd, that at a certeine time of the yeare, when the ſunne riſeth, there is ſuch an huge noyſe, that the people cannot endure it. Moreouer, they vſe to play vpon cymbals, drums, and other muſicall inſtruments, to the ende they may not heare that ſounde.

Of the ſtatutes of Chingis Cham, of his death, of his ſonnes, and of his dukes. Chap. 13.

But as Chingis Cham returned out of that countrey, his people wanted victuals, & ſuffered extreme famin. Then by chance they found yͤ freſh intrails of a beaſt: which they tooke, & caſting away the dung therof, cauſed it to be ſodden, brought it before Chingis Cham, & did eat therof. And hereupon Chingis Cham enacted; that neither the blood, nor the intrails, nor any other part of a beaſt beaſt which might be eaten, ſhould be caſt away, ſaue onely the dunge. Wherefore he returned thence into his owne land, and there he ordayned lawes and ſtatutes, which the Tartars doe moſt ſtrictly and inuiolably obſerue, of the which we haue before ſpoken. He was afterward ſlaine by a thunderclap. He had foure ſonnes: the firſt was called Occoday, the ſecond Thoſſut Can, the third Thiaday: the name of the fourth is vnknowen. From theſe foure deſcended all the dukes of the Mongals. The firſt ſonne of Occoday is Cuyne, who is now Emperour: his brothers be Cocten and Chyrinen. The ſonnes of Thoſſut Can are Bathy, Ordu, Siba, and Bora. Bathy, next vnto the Emperour, is richer and mightier then all the reſt. But Ordu is the ſeignior of all the dukes. The ſonnes of Thiaday be Hurin and Cadan. The ſonnes of Chingis Cham his other ſonne, whoſe name is vnknowen, are Mengu, Bithat, and certaine others. The mother of Mengu was named Seroctan, and of all others moſt honoured among the Tartars, except the Emperors mother, and mightier then any ſubiect except Bathy. Theſe be the names of the dukes: Ordu, who was in Poland and in Hungarie: Bathy alſo & Hurin & Cadan, and Siban, and Ouygat, all which were in Hungarie. In like maner Cyrpodan, who is as yet beyond the ſea, making war againſt certaine Soldans of the Saracens, and other inhabitants of farre countries. Others remained in the land, as namely Mengu, Chyrinen, Hubilai, Sinocur, Cara, Gay, Sybedey, Bora, Berca, Correnſa. There be many other of their dukes, whoſe names are vnknowen vnto vs.

Of the authoritie of the Emperour, and of his dukes. Chap. 14.

The abſolute and lordly dominion of the Tartarian Emperour ouer his ſubiects.

MOreouer, the Emperour of the Tartars hath a wonderfull dominion ouer all his ſubiects. For no man dare abide in any place, vnles he hath aſſigned him to be there. Alſo he himſelfe appointeth to his dukes where they ſhould inhabite. Likewiſe the dukes aſſigne places vnto euery Millenarie, or conducter of a thouſand ſouldiers, the Millenaries vnto each captaine of an 100. the captaines vnto euery corporall of ten. Whatſoeuer is giuen them in charge, whenſoeuer, or whereſoeuer, be it to fight or to loſe their liues, or howſoeuer it be, they obey without any gainſaying. For if he demandeth any mans daughter, or ſiſter being a virgine, they preſently deliuer her vnto him without all contradiction: yea, often times he makes a collection of virgines throughout all the Tartars dominions, and thoſe whom he meanes to keepe, he retaineth vnto himſelfe, others he beſtoweth vpon his men. Alſo, whatſoeuer meſſenger he ſendeth, or whitherſoeuer, his ſubiects muſt without delay finde them horſes and other neceſſaries. In like ſorte, from what countrey ſoeuer tribute payers, or ambaſſadours come vnto him, they muſt haue horſes, carriages, and expenſes allowed them. Notwithſtanding ambaſſadours comming from other places do ſuffer great miſery, and are in much wante both of victuals, and of apparel: eſpecially when they come to any of the dukes, and there they are conſtrayned to make ſome lingering abode. Then ten men are allowed ſo little ſuſtenance, that ſcarcely two could liue thereof. Likewiſe, if any iniuries be offered them, they cannot without danger make complaint. Many gifts alſo are demaunded of them, both by dukes and others, which if they doe not beſtow, they are baſely eſteemed, and ſet at nought. And hereupon, wee were of neceſſitie enforced to beſtowe in giftes a great part of thoſe things which were giuen vs by well diſpoſed people, to defray our charges. To be ſhort, all things are ſo in the power and poſſeſſion of the Emperour, that no man dare ſay, This is mine, or, this is my neighbours; but all, both goods, cattell and men are his owne. Concerning this matter alſo he publiſhed a ſtatute of late. The very ſame authority and iuriſdiction, doe the dukes in like ſorte exerciſe vpon their ſubiects.

The citie of Barchin.

AFter the death of Chingis Cham aforeſayd, the dukes aſſembled themſelues and choſe Occoday his ſonne to be their Emperour. And he, entering into conſultation with his nobles, diuided his armies, and ſent duke Bathy his nephew againſt the countrie of Altiſoldan, and againſt the people called Biſermini, who were Saracens, but ſpake the language of Comania. The Tartars inuading their countrey, fought with them and ſubdued them in battel. But a certeine citie called Barchin reſiſted them a long time. For the citizens had caſt vp many ditches and trenches about their citie, in regard whereof the Tartars could not take it, till they had filled the ſaid ditches. But the citizens of Sarguit hearing this, came foorth to meete them, yeelding themſelues vnto them of their owne accord. Whereupon their citie was not deſtroyed, but they ſlue manie of them and others they carried away captiue, and taking ſpoyles, they filled the citie with other inhabitants, and ſo marched foorth againſt the citie of Orna. This towne was very populous and exceeding rich. For there were many Chriſtians therein, as namely Gaſarians, Ruſſians, and Alanians, with others, and Saracens alſo. The gouernment of the citie was in the Saracens hande. It ſtandeth vpon a mighty riuer, and is a kinde of porte towne, hauing a great marte exerciſed therein. And when the Tartars could not otherwiſe ouercome it, they turned the ſaid riuer, running through the citie, out of his chanell, and ſo drowned the citie with the inhabitantes and their goods. Which being done, they ſet forward againſt Ruſſia, and made foule hauocke there, deſtroying cities and caſtles and murthering the people. They layd ſiege a long while vnto Kiow the chiefe citie of Ruſſia, and at length they tooke it and ſlue the citizens. Whereupon, trauelling through that countrey, wee found an innumerable multitude of dead mens ſkulles and bones lying vpon the earth. For it was a very large and a populous citie, but it is nowe in a maner brought to nothing: for there doe ſcarce remaine 200. houſes, the inhabitants whereof are kept in extreame bondage. Moreouer, out of Ruſſia and Comania, they proceeded forward againſt the Hungarians, and the Polonians, and there manie of them were ſlaine, as is aforeſaid: and had the Hungarians manfully withſtood them, the Tartars had beene confounded and driuen backe. Returning from thence, they inuaded the countrey of the Morduans being pagans, and conquered them in battell. Then they marched againſt the people called Byleri, or Bulgaria magna, & vtterly waſted the countrey. From hence they proceeded towards the North againſt the people called Baſtarci or Hungaria magna, and conquered them alſo. And ſo going on further North, they came vnto the Paroſſitæ, who hauing little ſtomacks and ſmall mouthes, eate not any thing at all, but ſeething fleſh they ſtand or ſitte ouer the potte, and receiuing the ſteame or ſmoke thereof, are therewith onely nouriſhed, and if they eate anie thing it is very little. From hence they came to the Samogetæ, who liue onely vpon hunting, and vſe to dwell in tabernacles onely, and to weare garments made of beaſtes ſkinnes. From thence they proceeded vnto a countrey lying vpon the Ocean ſea, where they found certaine monſters, who in all things reſembled the ſhape of men, ſauing that their feete were like the feete of an oxe, and they had in deede mens heads but dogges faces. They ſpake, as it were, two words like men, but at the third they barked like dogges. From hence they retired into Comania, and there ſome of them remaine vnto this day.

Of the expedition of duke Cyrpodan. Chap. 16.

AT the ſame time Occoday Can ſent duke Cyrpodan with an armie againſt Kergis, who alſo ſubdued them in battell. Theſe men are Pagans, hauing no beardes at all. They haue a cuſtome when any of their fathers die, for griefe and in token of lamentation to drawe as it were, a leather thong ouerthwart their faces, from one eare to the other. This nation being conquered, duke Cyrpodan marched with his forces Southward againſt the Armenians. And trauailing through certain deſert places, they found monſters in the ſhape of men, which had each of them but one arme & one hand growing out of the midſt of their breaſt, and but one foote. Two of them vſed to ſhoote in one bowe, and they ran ſo ſwiftly, that horſes could not ouertake them. They ran alſo vpon that one foote by hopping and leaping, and being weary of ſuch walking, they went vpon their hand and their foote, turning themſelues round, as it were in a circle. And being wearie of ſo doing, they ran againe according to their wonted manner. Iſidore calleth them Cyclopedes. And as it was told vs in court, by the clergie men of Ruſſia, who remaine with the foreſayd Emperour, many ambaſſadours were ſent from them vnto the Emperours court, to obtaine peace. From thence they proceeded forth into Armenia, which they conquered in battell, and part alſo of Georgia. And the other part is vnder their iuriſdiction, paying as yet euery yeare vnto them for tribute, 20000. pieces of coyne called Yperpera. From thence they marched into the dominions of the puiſſant and mighty Soldan called Deurum, whom alſo they vanquiſhed in fight. And to be ſhort, they went on farther ſacking and conquering, euen vnto the Soldan of Aleppo his dominions, and now they haue ſubdued that land alſo, determining to inuade other countries beyond it: neither returned they afterward into their owne land vnto this day. Likewiſe the ſame armie marched forward againſt the Caliph of Baldach his countrey, which they ſubdued alſo, & exacted at his handes the daylie tribute of 400. Byzantines, beſides Baldakines and other giftes. Alſo euery yeare they ſend meſſengers vnto the Caliph mouing him to come vnto them. Who ſending backe great giftes together with his tribute beſeecheth thē to be fauourable vnto him. Howbeit the Tartarian Emperour receiueth al his giftes, & yet ſtill neuertheles ſends for him, to haue him come,

The military diſcipline of the Tartars.

Their weapōs

Their experience & cunning in warres.

Their maner of paſſing ouer riuers.

CHingis Cham diuided his Tartars by captaines of ten, captaines of an 100. and captaines of a 1000. And ouer ten Millenaries or captains of a 1000, he placed, as it were, one Colonel, and yet notwithſtanding ouer one whole armie he authoriſed two or three dukes, but yet ſo that all ſhould haue eſpeciall regard vnto one of the ſaid dukes. And when they ioine battel againſt any other nation, vnles they do all with one conſent giue backe, euery man that flies is put to death. And if one or two, or more of ten proceed manfully to the battel, but the reſidue of thoſe ten draw backe & follow not the company, they are in like maner ſlaine. Alſo, if one among ten or more bee taken, their fellowes, if they reſcue thē not, are puniſhed with death. Moreouer they are enioined to haue theſe weapons following. Two long bowes or one good one at the leaſt, three quiuers full of arrowes, & one axe, and ropes to draw engines withal. But the richer ſort haue ſingle edged ſwords, with ſharpe points, and ſomewhat crooked. They haue alſo armed horſes with their ſhoulders and breaſts defenced, they haue helmets and brigandines. Some of them haue iackes, and caparisons for their horſes made of leather artificially doubled or trebled vpon their bodies. The vpper part of their helmet is of iron or ſteele, but that part which compaſſeth about the necke and the throate is of leather. Howbeit ſome of them haue all their foreſaide furniture of iron framed in maner following. They beate out many thinne plates a finger broad, and a handful long, and making in euery one of them eight little holes, they put thereunto three ſtrong and ſtreight leather thongs. So they ioine the plates one to another, as it were, aſcending by degrees. Then they tie the plates vnto the ſaid thongs, with other ſmall and ſlender thongs, drawen through the holes aforeſayd, and in the vpper part, on each ſide therof, they faſten one ſmall doubled thong vnto another, that the plates may firmely be knit together. Theſe they make, as well for their horſes caparisons, as for the armour of their men: And they ſkowre them ſo bright that a man may behold his face in them. Some of them vpon the necke of their launce haue an hooke, wherewithall they attempt to pull men out of their ſaddles. The heads of their arrowes are exceedingly ſharpe cutting both wayes like a two edged ſworde, and they alwaies carie a file in their quiuers to whet their arrowheads. They haue targets made of wickers, or of ſmall roddes. Howbeit they doe not (as we ſuppoſe) accuſtome to carrie them, but onely about the tents, or in the Emperours or dukes guardes, & that only in the night ſeaſon. They are moſt politique in warres, hauing bene exerciſed therein with other nations for the ſpace of theſe 42. yeres. When they come at any riuers, the chiefe men of the company haue a round and light piece of leather, about the borders whereof making many loopes, they put a rope into them to drawe it together like a purſe, and ſo bring it into the rounde forme of a ball, which leather they fill with their garments and other neceſſaries, truſſing it vp moſt ſtrongly. But vpon the midſt of the vpper parte thereof, they lay their ſaddles and other hard things, there alſo doe the men themſelues ſit. This their boate they tye vnto an horſe tayle, cauſing a man to ſwimme before, & to guide ouer the horſe, or ſometime they haue two oares to row themſelues ouer. The firſt horſe therefore being driuen into the water, all the other horſes of the company followe him, and ſo they paſſe through the riuer. But the poorer ſort of common ſouldiers haue euery man his leather bag or ſachell well ſowen together, wherin he packs vp all his trinkets, and ſtrongly truſſing it vp hangs it at his horſes tayle, and ſo paſſeth ouer, in maner aforeſaid.

Howe they may be reſiſted. Chap. 18.

Counſel how to wage warre againſt the Tartars.

A notable temper of iron or ſteele.

I Deeme not any one kingdome or prouince able to reſiſt them: becauſe they vſe to take vp ſouldiers out of euery countrey of their dominions. And if ſo be the neighbour prouince which they inuade, wil not aide them, vtterly waſting it, with the inhabitants therof, whom they take from thence with them, they proceed on to fight againſt another countrey. And placing their captiues in the forefront of the battell, if they fight not couragiouſly, they put them to the ſworde. Wherefore, if Chriſtians would withſtande them, it is expedient, that the prouinces and gouernours of countreis ſhould agree in one, and ſo by common counſell, ſhould giue them reſiſtance. Their ſouldiers alſo muſt be furniſhed with ſtrong hand-bowes & croſ-bowes, which they greatly dread, & with ſufficiēt arrowes, with maces alſo of good iron, or an axe with a long handle or ſtaffe. When they make their arrow heads, they muſt (according to yͤ Tartars cuſtome) dip thē red-hot into water mingled with ſalte, that they may be ſtrong to pierce the enemies armour. They that wil may haue ſwords alſo & lances with hookes at the ends, to pull thē from their ſaddles, out of which they are eaſilie remoued. They muſt haue helmets likewiſe & other armour to defend thēſelues & their horſes frō the Tartars weapons & arrowes, & they that are vnarmed, muſt (according to yͤ Tartars cuſtome) march behinde their fellowes, and diſcharge at the enemie with long bowes and croſ-bowes. And (as it is aboue ſaid of the Tartars) they muſt orderly diſpoſe their bandes and troupes, and ordeine lawes for their ſouldiers. Whoſoeuer runneth to the pray or ſpoyle, before the victorie be atchieued, muſt vndergoe a moſt ſeuere puniſhment. For ſuch a fellow is put to death among the Tartars without all pitie or mercie. The place of battel muſt be choſen, if it be poſſible, in a plaine fielde, where they may ſee round about, neither muſt all be in one company, but in manie and ſeuerall bandes, not very farre diſtant one from another. They which giue the firſt encounter muſt ſende one band before, and muſt haue another in a readyneſſe to relieue and ſecond the former in time conuenient. They muſt haue ſpies alſo on euery ſide to giue them notice when the reſt of the enemies bandes approch. For therefore ought they alwayes to ſend forth band againſt band & troupe againſt troupe, becauſe the Tartar euer practiſeth to gette his enemie in the midſt and ſo to enuiron him. Let our bands take this caueat alſo, if the enemie retire, not to make any long purſuit after him, leſt perauenture (according to his cuſtome) he might draw them into ſome ſecret ambuſh: for the Tartar fights more by policie then by maine force. And againe, leſt our horſes bee tired: for we are not ſo well ſtored with horſes as they. Thoſe horſes which the Tartars vſe one day, they ride not vpon three or foure dayes after. Moreouer, if the Tartars draw homeward, our men muſt not therefore depart and caſſeir their bandes, or ſeparate themſelues aſunder: becauſe they doe this vpon policie, namely to haue our armie diuided, that they may more ſecurely inuade and waſte the countrey. And in very deede, our captaines ought both day and night to keepe their armie in a readines: and not to lie out of their armour, but at all aſſayes, to bee prouided for battell. For the Tartars like diuels are alwaies watching and deuiſing howe to practiſe miſchiefe. Furthermore, if in battell any of the Tartars be caſt off their horſe backes, they muſt preſently bee layd holde on and taken, for being on foote they ſhoote ſtrongly, wounding and killing both horſes and men.

Of the iourney of frier * Iohn vnto the firſt guard of the Tartars, Chap. 19.

*Iohannes de plano Carpini.

WE therefore by the commaundement of the ſea apoſtolique ſetting foorth towards the nations of the Eaſt, choſe firſt to trauel vnto the Tartars, becauſe we feared that there might be great danger imminent vpon the Church of God next vnto them, by their inuaſions. Proceeding on therefore, we came to the king of Bohemia, who being of our familiar acquaintance, aduiſed vs to take our iourney through Polonia and Ruſſia. For we had kinſfolkes in Polonia, by whoſe aſſiſtance, we might enter into Ruſſia. Hauing giuen vs his letters, hee cauſed our charges alſo to be defrayed, in all his chiefe houſes and cities, till we came vnto his nephew Boleſlaus duke of Sleſia, who alſo was familiar and well knowen vnto vs. The like fauour he ſhewed vs alſo, till wee came vnto Conradus duke of * Lautiſcia, vnto whome then (by Gods eſpeciall fauour towards vs) lord Waſilico duke of Ruſſia was come, from whoſe mouth we heard more at large cõcerning the deedes of the Tartars: for he had ſent ambaſſadours thither, who were returned backe vnto him. Wherefore, it being giuen vs to vnderſtand, that we muſt beſtow giftes vpon them, we cauſed certaine ſkinnes of beuers and other beaſtes to be bought with part of that money, which was giuen vpon almes to ſuccour vs by the way. Which thing duke Conradus and the *duches of Cracow, and a biſhop, and certaine ſouldiers being aduertiſed of, gaue vs likewiſe more of the ſame ſkins. And to be ſhort, duke Waſilico being earneſtly requeſted by the duke of Cracow, and by the biſhop and barons, on our behalfe, conducted vs with him, vnto his owne land, and there for certaine daies, enterteined vs at his owne charges, to the ende that we might refreſh our ſelues a while. And when, being requeſted by vs, he had cauſed his biſhops to reſort vnto him, we reade before them the Popes letters, admoniſhing them to returne vnto the vnitie of the Church. To the ſame purpoſe alſo, we our ſelues admoniſhed them, and to our abilitie, induced as well the duke as the biſhops and others thereunto. Howbeit becauſe duke Daniel the brother of Waſilico aforeſaid (hauing as then taken his iourney vnto Baty) was abſent, they could not at that time, make a finall anſwere. After theſe things duke Waſilico ſent vs forward with one of his ſeruants as farre as Kiow the chiefe citie of Ruſſia. Howbeit we went alwayes in danger of our liues by reaſon of the Lituanians, who did often inuade yͤ borders of Ruſſia, euen in thoſe verie places by which we were to paſſe. But in regard of the foreſayd ſeruant, wee were out of the Ruſſians daunger, the greateſt part of whome were either ſlaine, or caried into captiuitie by the Tartars. Moreouer, at Danilon wee were feeble euen vnto the death. (Notwithſtanding wee cauſed our ſelues to bee carried in a waggon through the ſnowe and extreme colde) And being come vnto Kiow, wee conſulted with the Millenary, & other noble men there concerning our iourney. They told vs, that if wee carried thoſe horſes, which wee then had, vnto the Tartars, great ſtore of ſnowe lying vpon the ground, they would all dye: be cauſe they knew not howe to digge vp the graſſe vnder the ſnow, as the Tartarian horſes doe, neither could there bee ought found for them to eate, the Tartars hauing neither hay nor ſtrawe, nor any other fodder. We determined therefore to leaue them behind at Kiow with two ſeruants appointed to keepe them. And wee were conſtrayned to beſtow gifts vpon the Millenary, that we might obtaine his fauour to allowe vs poſte horſes and a guide. Wherefore beginning our iourney the ſecond daye after the feaſt of the Purification, wee arriued at the towne of Canow, which was immediatly vnder the dominion of the Tartars. The gouernour whereof allowed vs horſes and a guide vnto another towne, wherein wee found one Michæas to be gouernour, a man full of all malice and deſpight. Who notwithſtanding, hauing receiued giftes at our handes, according to his maner conducted vs to the firſt guarde of the Tartars.

How he and his company were at the firſt receiued of the Tartars. *Chap.*20.

The contents of the legacie.

Wherefore, the firſt ſaturday next after Aſhwedneſday, hauing about the Sunnes going downe, taken vp our place of reſt, the armed Tartars came ruſhing vpon vs in vnciuil and horrible maner, being very inquiſitiue of vs what maner of perſons, or of what condition we were: & when we had anſwered them that we were the Popes Legates, receiuing ſome victuals at our handes, they immediatly departed. Moreouer in the morning riſing and proceeding on our iourney, the chiefe of them which were in the guard met with vs, demaunding why, or for what intent and purpoſe we came thither?: and what buſines we had with them? Unto whom we anſwered, We are the legates of our lord the Pope, who is the father & lord of the Chriſtians. He hath ſent vs as well vnto your Emperour, as to your princes, and all other Tartars for this purpoſe, becauſe it is his pleaſure, that all Chriſtians ſhould be in league with the Tartars, and ſhould haue peace with them. It is his deſire alſo that they ſhould become great or in fauour with God in heauen, therfore he admoniſheth them aſwel by vs, as by his own letters, to become Chriſtians, and to embrace the faith of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt, becauſe they could not otherwiſe be ſaued. Moreouer, he giues thē to vnderſtand, that he much marueileth at their mōſtrous ſlaughters & maſſacres of mankind, & eſpecially of Chriſtians, but moſt of al of Hungariās, Mountaineirs, & Polonians, being al his ſubiects, hauing not iniuried them in ought, nor attempted to doe them iniurie. And becauſe the Lord God is grieuouſly offended thereat, he aduiſeth them from henceforth to beware of ſuch dealing, & to repent them of that which they had done. He requeſteth alſo, that they would write an anſwere vnto him, what they purpoſe to doe hereafter, and what their intention is. All which things being heard and vnderſtood, the Tartars ſayd that they would appoint vs poſte horſes and a guide vnto Correnſa. And immediately demanding gifts at our hands, they obtained them. Then receiuing the ſame horſes, from which they diſmounted, together with a guide wee tooke our iourney vnto Correnſa. But they riding a ſwift pace, ſent a meſſenger before vnto the ſayd duke Correnſa, to ſignifie the meſſage, which we had deliuered vnto them. This duke is gouernour of all them, which lie in guard againſt the natiōs of the West, leaſt ſome enemy might on the ſudden and at vnawares breake in vpon them. And hee is ſaid to haue 60000. men vnder him.

The maner of ſaluting the Tartarian princes.

Being come therefore vnto his court, hee cauſed our tent to bee placed farre from him, and ſent his agents to demaund of vs with what we would incline vnto him, that is to ſay, what giftes we would offer, in doing our obeiſance vnto him. Unto whome wee anſwered, that our lord the Pope had not ſent any giftes at all, becauſe he was not certaine that wee ſhould euer bee able to come at them: for we paſſed through moſt dangerous places. Notwithſtanding, to our abilitie, we will honour him with ſome part of thoſe things, which haue bene, by the goodnes of God, & the fauour of the Pope, beſtowed vpō vs for our ſuſtenance. Hauing receiued our gifts, they conducted vs vnto the Orda or tent of the duke, & we were inſtructed to bow thriſe with our left knee before the doore of the tente, and in any caſe to beware, leſt wee ſet our foote vpon the threſhold of the ſayd doore. And that after we were entred, wee ſhould rehearſe before the duke and all his nobles, the ſame wordes, which wee had before ſayde, kneeling vpon our knees. Then preſented wee the letters of our lord the Pope: but our interpreter whome we had hired and brought with vs from Kiow was not ſufficiently able to interpret them, neither was there any other eſteemed to bee meete for the ſame purpoſe. Here certaine poſte horſes and three Tartars were appoynted for vs to conduct vs from hence with al ſpeede vnto duke Bathy. This Bathy is the mightieſt prince among them except the Emperour, & they are bound to obey him before all other princes. We began our iourney towards his court the firſt tueſday in Lent, and riding as faſt as our horſes could trot (for we had freſh horſes almoſt thriſe or foure times a day) we poſted from morning till night, yea very often in the night ſeaſon alſo, and yet could we not come at him before Maundie thurſday. All this iourney we went through the land of Comania, which is al plaine ground, and hath foure mighty riuers running through it: The firſt is called ‡Neper, on the ſide whereof towards Ruſſia, duke Correnſa & Montij marched vp and downe, which Montij on the other ſide vpon the plaines is greater then he. The ſecond is called ‡Don, vpon the banke whereof marcheth a certain prince hauing in mariage the ſiſter of Baty, his name is Tirbon. The third is called ‡Volga, which is an exceeding great riuer, vpon the bankes whereof duke Bathy marcheth. The fourth is called ‡Iaec, vpon which two Millenaries doe march, on each ſide of the riuer one. All theſe, in the winter time, deſcend down to the ſea, & in ſummer aſcend backe by the bankes of the ſaid riuers vp to the mountains. The ſea laſt named is the ‖Great ſea, out of which the arme of S. George proceedeth, which runneth by Conſtantinople. Theſe riuers do abound with plenty of fiſhes, but eſpecially Volga, & they exonerate thẽſelues into the Grecian ſea, which is called Mare maior. Ouer Neper we went many daies vpon the ice. Along the ſhore alſo of the Grecian ſea we went very dangerouſly vpon the ice in ſundry places, & that for many daies together. For about the ſhore the waters are frozen three leagues into the ſea. But before we came vnto Bathy, two of our Tartars rode afore, to giue him intelligence of all the ſayings which we had vttered in the preſence of Correnſa.

Moreouer, when we came vnto Bathy in the land of Comania, we were ſeated a good league diſtant from his tabernacles. And when we ſhould be conducted vnto his court, it was tolde vs that we muſt paſſe between two fires. But we would by no means be induced thereunto. Howbeit, they ſaid vnto vs: you may paſſe through without al danger: for we would haue you to doe it for none other cauſe, but only that if you intend any miſchiefe againſt our lord, or bring any poyſon with you, fire may take away all euill. Vnto whom we anſwered, that to the end we might cleare ourſelues from all ſuſpition of any ſuch matter, we were contented to paſſe through. When therefore we were come vnto the Orda, being demanded by his agent Eldegay with what preſent or gift we would do our obeiſance? Wee gaue the ſame anſwere which we did at the court of Correnſa. The gifts being giuen and receiued, the cauſes of our iourney alſo being heard, they brought vs into the tabernacle of the prince, firſt bowing our ſelues at the doore, & being admoniſhed, as before, not to tread vpon the threſhold. And being entred, we ſpake vnto him kneeling vpon our knees, & deliuered him our letters, and requeſted him to haue interpreters to tranſlate them. Who accordingly on good friday were ſent vnto vs, and we together with them, diligently tranſlated our ſayd letters into the Ruſſian, Tartarian, and Saracen languages. This interpretation was preſented vnto Bathy, which he read, & attentiuely noted. At length wee were conducted home againe vnto our owne lodging, howbeit no victuals were giuen vnto vs, except it were once a litle Millet in a diſh, the firſt night of our comming. This Bathy caries himſelfe very ſtately & magnificently, hauing porters and all officers after the maner of the Emperour, and ſittes in a lofty ſeate or throne together with one of his wiues. The reſt, namely, as well his brethren and ſonnes, as other great perſonages ſit underneath him in the midſt vpon a bench, and others ſit downe vpon the ground, behinde him, but the men on the right hand and the women on the left. He hath very faire and large tentes of linnen cloth alſo, which were once the kings of Hungaria. Neither dare any man come into his tent (beſides them of his owne family) vnles he be called, be he neuer ſo mighty and great, except perhaps it be knowen that it is his pleaſure. Wee alſo, for the ſame cauſe, ſate on the left hand; for ſo doe all ambaſſadors in going: but in returning from the Emperour, we were alwaies placed on the right hand. In the middeſt ſtands his table, neare vnto the doore of the tent, vpon the which there is drinke filled in golden and ſiluer veſſels. Neither doth Bathy at any time drinke, nor any other of the Tartarian princes, eſpecially being in a publique place, but they haue ſinging and minſtrilſie before them. And alwaies, when hee rides, there is a canopie or ſmall tent caried ouer his head vpon the point of a iaueline. And ſo doe all the great princes of the Tartars, & their wiues alſo. The ſayd Bathy is courteous enough vnto his owne men, and yet is hee had in great awe by them: he is moſt cruel in fight: he is exceedingly prudent and politique in warre, becauſe he hath now continued a long time in marciall affaires.

MOreouer, vpon Eaſter euen we were called vnto the tent, and there came forth to meete vs the foreſaid agent of Bathy, ſaying on his maſters behalfe, that we ſhould go into their land, vnto the Emperor Cuyne, deteining certaine of our company with this pretence, that they would ſend them backe vnto the Pope, to whom we gaue letters of al our affaires to deliuer vnto him. But being come as farre as duke Montij aforeſaid, there they were kept vntill our returne. Vpon Eaſter day, hauing ſaid our praiers, and taken a ſlender breakfaſt, in the company of two Tartars, which were aſſigned vnto vs by Corenſa we departed with many teares, not knowing whether we went to death or to life. And we were ſo feeble in bodie, that we were ſcarce able to ride. For all that Lent through, our meat was Millet onely with a little water and ſalte. And ſo likewiſe vpon other faſting dayes. Neither had we ought to drinke, but ſnowe melted in a ſkillet. And paſſing through Comania we rode moſt earneſtly, hauing change of horſes fiue times or oftener in a day, except when we went through deſerts, for then we were allowed better and ſtronger horſes, which could vndergoe the whole labour. And thus farre had we trauailed from the beginning of Lent vntill eight dayes after Eaſter. The land of Comania on the North ſide immediately after Ruſſia, hath the people called Morduyni Byleri, that is, Bulgaria magna, the Baſtarci, that is, Hungaria magna, next vnto the Baſtarci, the Paroſitæ and the Samogetæ. Next vnto the Samogetæ are thoſe people which are ſayd to haue dogges faces, inhabiting vpon the deſert ſhores of the Ocean. On the South ſide it hath the Alani, the Circaſſi, the Gazari, Greece and Conſtantinople; alſo the land of Iberia, the Cathes, the Brutaches who are ſaid to be Iewes ſhauing their heads all ouer, the landes alſo of Scythia, of Georgia, of Armenia; of Turkie. On the Weſt ſide it hath Hungaria, and Ruſſia. Alſo Comania is a moſt large and long countrey. The inhabitantes whereof called Comani the Tartars ſlewe, ſome notwithſtanding fled from them, and the reſt were ſubdued vnder their bondage. But moſt of them that fled are returned againe. Afterward wee entred the lande of the Kangittæ, which in many places hath great ſcarcetie of waters, wherin there are but fewe inhabitants by reaſon of the foreſayd defect of water. For this cauſe diuers of the ſeruants of Ieroſlaus duke of Ruſſia, as they were trauelling towards him into the land of Tartaria, died for thirſt, in that deſert. As before in Comania, ſo likewiſe in this countrey, wee found many ſkulles and bones of dead men lying vpon the earth like a dunghill. Through this countrey we were traueiling from the eight day after Eaſter vntill Aſcenſion day. The inhabitants therof were Pagans, and neither they nor the Comanians vſed to till the ground, but liued onely vpon cattell, neither built they any houſes but dwelled in tents. Theſe men alſo haue the Tartars rooted out, and doe poſſeſſe and inhabite their countrey, howbeit, thoſe that remained are reduced into their bondage.

MOreouer, out of the land of the Kangittæ, we entered into the countrey of ẏ Biſermini, who ſpeake the language of Comania, but obſerue the law of the Saracens. In this countrey we found innumerable cities with caſtles ruined, & many towns left deſolate. The lord of this country was called Soldan Alti, who with al his progenie, was deſtroyed by the Tartars. This country hath moſt huge mountains. On the South ſide it hath Ieruſalem and Baldach, and all the whole countrey of the Saracens. In the next territories adioyning doe inhabite two carnall brothers dukes of the Tartars, namely, Burin and Cadan, the ſonnes of Thyaday, who was the ſonne of Chingis Can. On the North ſide thereof it hath the land of the blacke Kythayans, and the Ocean. In the ſame countrie Syban the brother of Bathy remaineth. Through this countrie we were traueiling from the feaſt of Aſcenſion, vntil eight daies before the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt. And then we entred into the land of the blacke Kythayans, in which the Emperour built an houſe, where we were called in to drinke. Alſo the Emperours deputy in that place cauſed the chiefe men of the citie and his two ſonnes to daunce before vs. Departing from hence, wee founde a certaine ſmall ſea, vpon the ſhore whereof ſtands a little mountaine. In which mountaine is reported to be a hole, from whence, in winter time ſuch vehement tempeſts of winds doe iſſue, that trauellers can ſcarcely, and with great danger paſſe by the ſame way. In ſummer time, the noiſe in deede of the winde is heard there, but it proceedeth gently out of the hole. Along the ſhores of the foreſaid ſea we trauailed for the ſpace of many dayes, which although it bee not very great, yet hath it many iſlandes, and wee paſſed by leauing it on our left hande. In this lande dwelleth Ordu, whome wee ſayde to bee auncient vnto all the Tartarian dukes. And it is the Orda or court of his faher which hee inhabiteth, and one of his wiues beareth rule there.

For it is a cuſtome among the Tartars, that the Courts of Princes or of noble men are not diſſolued, but alwayes ſome women are appointed to keepe and gouerne them, vpon whom certain gifts are beſtowed, in like ſort as they are giuen vnto their Lords. And ſo at length we arriued at the firſt court of the Emperour, wherein one of his wiues dwelt.

The 22. of July.

BUt becauſe we had not as yet ſeene the Emperour, they would not inuite vs nor admit vs into his Orda, but cauſed good attendance and entertainement, after the Tartars faſhion, to be giuen vnto vs in our owne tent, and they cauſed vs to ſtay there, and to refreſh our ſelues with them one day. Departing thence vpon the euen of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, wee entered into the land of the Naymani, who are Pagans. But vpon the very feaſt day of the ſaide Apoſtles, there fel a mightie ſnowe in that place, and wee had extreame colde weather. This lande is full of mountaines, and colde beyonde meaſure, and there is little plaine ground to bee ſeene. Theſe two nations laſt mentioned vſed not to till their grounde, but, like vnto the Tartars, dwelt in tents, which the ſayde Tartars had deſtroyed. Through this countrey wee were trauailing manie dayes. Then entered wee into the lande of the Mongals, whome wee call Tartars. Through the Tartars lande wee continued our trauaile (as wee ſuppoſe) for the ſpace of ſome three weekes, riding alwayes haſtily and with ſpeede, and vpon the day of Marie Magdalene we arriued at the court of Cuyne the Emperour elect. But therefore did we make great haſte all this way, becauſe our Tartarian guides were ſtraightly commaunded to bring vs vnto the court Imperiall with all ſpeede, which court hath beene theſe many yeeres, ordained for the election of the Emperour. Wherefore riſing early, wee trauailed vntill night without eating of any thing, and oftentimes wee came ſo late vnto our lodging, that we had no time to eate the ſame night, but that which we ſhould haue eaten ouer night, was giuen vs in the morning. And often changing our horſes, wee ſpared no horſe-fleſhe, but rode ſwiftly and without intermiſſion, as faſt as our horſes could trot.

The curteſie of Cuyne towards Ambaſſadors.

The tent roial.

A generall aſſemblie.

BUt when wee were come vnto the court of Cuyne, hee cauſed (after the Tartars manner) a Tent and all expenſes neceſſarie to bee prouided for vs. And his people entreated vs with more regarde and courteſie, then they did anie other Ambaſſadours. Howbeit wee were not called before his preſence, becauſe hee was not as yet elected, nor admitted vnto his empire. Notwithſtanding, the interpretation of the Popes letters, and the meſſage which we deliuered, were ſent vnto him by the foreſaid Bathy. And hauing ſtayed there fiue or ſixe dayes, hee ſent vs vnto his mother, vnder whome there was mainteyned a verie ſolemne and royall court. And being come thither, we ſaw an huge tent of fine white cloth pitched, which was, to our iudgement, of ſo great quantitie, that more then two thouſand men might ſtand within it, and round about it there was a wall of planks ſet vp, painted with diuers images. Wee therefore with our Tartars aſſigned to attende vpon vs, tooke our iourney thither, and there were all the Dukes aſſembled, eche one of them riding vp and downe with his traine ouer the hilles and dales. The firſt day they were all clad in white, but the ſecond in ſkarlet robes. Then came Cuyne vnto the ſaide tent. Moreouer, the third day they were all in blew robes, and the fourth in moſt rich robes of Baldakin cloth. In the wall of boardes, about the tent aforeſaid, were two great gates, by one of the which gates, the Emperour only was to enter, and at that gate there was no gard of men appointed to ſtand, although it ſtood continually open, becauſe none durſt go in or come out the ſame way: all that were admitted, entred by another gate, at which there ſtood watchmen, with bowes, ſwords, & arrowes. And whoſoeuer approched vnto the tent beyond the bounds and limit aſſigned, being caught, was beaten, but if he fled, he was ſhot at with arrowes of iron. There were many that to our iudgement, had vpon their bridles, trappers, ſaddles, and ſuch like furniture, to the value of 20. markes in pure gold. The foreſaid Dukes (as we thinke) communed together within the tent, and conſulted about the election of their Emperor. But all the reſidue of the people were placed farre away without the walles of board, & in this maner they ſtaied almoſt til noone. Then began they to drink mares milk, & ſo continued drinking til euen tide, and that in ſo great quantity, as it was wonderfull. And they called vs in vnto them, and gaue vs of their ale, becauſe we could not drink their mares milke. And this they did vnto vs in token of great honor. But they compelled vs to drink ſo much, that in regard of our cuſtomary diet, wee coulde by no means endure it. Whereupon, giuing them to vnderſtand, that it was hurtful vnto vs, they ceaſſed to compel vs any more. Without the dore ſtoode Duke Ieroſlaus of Suſdal, in Ruſſia, and a great many Dukes of the Kythayans, and of the Solangi. The two ſonnes alſo of the king of Georgia, the ligier of the Caliph of Baldach, who was a Soldan, and (as we thinke) aboue ten Soldans of the Saracens beſide. And, as it was tolde vs by the agents, there were more then 4000. ambaſſadors, partly of ſuch as paide tributes, and ſuch as preſented gifts, and other Soldans, and Dukes, which came to yeeld themſelues, and ſuch as the Tartars had ſent for, and ſuch as were gouernours of lands. All theſe were placed without the liſts, and had drinke giuen vnto them. But almoſt continually they all of them gaue vs and Duke Ieroſlaus the vpper hand, when we were abroad in their companie.

Syra Orda.

The golden Orda.

The 15. of Auguſt.

Wollen cloth.

AND to our remembrance, we remained there, about the ſpace of foure weekes. The election was to our thinking there celebrated, but it was not publiſhed and proclaimed there. And it was greatly ſuſpected ſo to be, becauſe alwayes when Cuyne came forth out of the tent, he had a noyſe of muſicke, and was bowed vnto, or honoured with faire wands, hauing purple wooll vpon the tops of them, and that, ſo long as he remained abroad: which ſeruice was performed to none of the other Dukes. The foreſaid tent or court is called by them Syra Orda. Departing thence, wee all with one accord rode 3. or 4. leagues vnto another place, where, in a goodly plaine, by a riuers ſide, betweene certaine mountaines, there was another tent erected, which was called the golden Orda. For there was Cuyne to be placed in the throne Emperiall, vpon the day of the Aſſumption of our Ladie. But, for the abundance of haile which fell at the ſame time, as is aboue ſaid, the matter was deferred. There was alſo a tent erected vpon pillars, which were couered with plates of golde, and were ioyned vnto other timber with golden nailes. It was couered aboue with Baldakin cloth, but there was other cloth ſpread ouer that, next vnto the ayre. Wee abode there vnto the feaſt of Saint Bartholomew, what time there was aſſembled an huge multitude ſtanding with their faces towards the South. And a certaine number of them beeing a ſtones caſt diſtant from the reſidue, making continuall prayers, and kneeling vpon their knees, proceeded farther and farther towards the South. Howbeit wee, not knowing whether they vſed inchantmentes, or whether they bowed their knees to God or to ſome other, woulde not kneele vpon the grounde with them. And hauing done ſo a long time, they returned to the tent, and placed Cuyne in his throne imperiall, and his Dukes bowed their knees before him. Afterwarde the whole multitude kneeled downe in like maner, except our ſelues, for wee were none of his ſubiects.

Of his age and demeanour, and of his ſeale. Chap.28.

His inclination to Chriſtianitie.

His maieſtie.

Abſolute authoritie.

THis Emperour, when hee was exalted vnto his gouernment, ſeemed to bee about the age of fourty or fourty fiue yeeres. He was of a meane ſtature, very wiſe and politike, and paſſing ſerious and graue in all his demeanour. A rare thing it was, for a man to ſee him laugh or behaue himſelfe lightly, as thoſe Chriſtians report, which abode continually with him. Certaine Chriſtians of his familie earneſtly and ſtrongly affirmed vnto vs, that he himſelfe was about to become a Chriſtian. A token and argument whereof was, that hee reteined diuers Cleargie men of the Chriſtians. Hee had likewiſe at all times a Chappell of Chriſtians, neere vnto his great Tent, where the Clearkes (like vnto other Chriſtians, and according to the cuſtome of the Græcians) doe ſing publiquely and openly, and ring belles at certaine houres, bee there neuer ſo great a multitude of Tartars, or of other people in preſence. And yet none of their Dukes doe the like. It is the manner of the Emperour neuer to talke his owne ſelfe with a ſtranger, though he be neuer ſo great, but heareth and anſweareth by a ſpeaker. And when any of his ſubiects (howe great ſoeuer they bee) are in propounding anie matter of importaunce vnto him, or in hearing his anſweare, they continue kneeling vpon their knees vnto the ende of their conference. Neither is it lawfull for any man to ſpeake of any affaires, after they haue beene determined of by the Emperour. The ſayde Emperour, hath in his affaires both publike and priuate, an Agent, and Secretary of eſtate, with Scribes and all other Officials, except aduocates. For, without the noyſe of pleading, or ſentence giuing, all things are done according to the Emperours will and pleaſure. Other Tartarian princes do the like in thoſe things which belong vnto thē. But, be it known vnto al men, that whileſt we remained at the ſaid Emperors court, which hath bin ordained and kept for theſe many yeeres, the ſaide Cuyne being Emperor new elect, together with al his princes, erected a flag of defiance againſt the Church of God, & the Romane empire, and againſt al

Chriſtian kingdomes and nations of the Weſt, vnleſſe peraduenture (which God forbid) they will condeſcend vnto thoſe things, which he hath inioined vnto our lord the Pope, & to all potentates and people of the Chriſtiās, namely, that they wil become obedient vnto him. For, except Chriſtendom, there is no land vnder heauē, which they ſtand in feare of, and for that cauſe they prepare themſelues to battel againſt vs. This Emperors father, namely Occoday was poiſoned to death, which is the cauſe why they haue for a ſhort ſpace abſteined from warre. But their intent and purpoſe is (as I haue aboue ſaid) to ſubdue the whole world vnto themſelues, as they were commanded by Chingis Can. Hence it is that the Emperor in his letters writeth after this maner: The power of God, & Emperour of all men. Alſo, vpon his ſeale, there is this poſie ingrauen: God in heauen, and Cuyne Can vpon earth, the power of God: the ſeale of the Emperour of all men.

Warre intended againſt all Chriſtians.

Of the admiſſion of the Friers and Ambaſſadours vnto the Emperour. Chap. 29.

Cuyne heareth the Legates.

IN the ſame place where the Emperour was eſtabliſhed into his throne, we were ſummoned before him. And Chingay his chiefe ſecretary hauing written downe our names, and the names of them that ſent vs, with the name of the Duke of Solangi, & of others, cried out with a loude voice, rehearſing the ſaid names before the Emperour, and the aſſembly of his Dukes. Which beeing done, ech one of vs bowed his left knee foure times, & they gaue vs warning not to touch the threſhold. And after they had ſearched vs moſt diligently for kniues, and could not find any about vs, we entred in at the doore vpon the Eaſt ſide: becauſe no man dare preſume to enter at the Weſt doore, but the Emperour onely. In like maner, euery Tartarian Duke entreth on the Weſt ſide into his tent. Howbeit the inferiour ſort doe not greatly regard ſuch ceremonies. This therefore was the firſt time, when we entred into the Emperours tent in his preſence, after he was created Emperour. Likewiſe all other ambaſſadours were there receiued by him, but very fewe were admitted into his tent. And there were preſented vnto him ſuch abundance of gifts by the ſaide Ambaſſadours, that they ſeemed to be infinite, namely in Samites, robes of purple, and of Baldakin cloth, ſilke girdles wrought with golde, and coſtly ſkinnes, with other gifts alſo. Likewiſe there was a certaine Sun Canopie, or ſmall tent (which was to bee caried ouer the Emperours head) preſented vnto him, being ſet full of precious ſtones. And a gouernour of one Prouince brought vnto him a companie of camels couered with Baldakins. They had ſaddles alſo vpon their backs, with certaine other inſtruments, within the which were places for men to ſitte vpon. Alſo they brought many horſes & mules vnto him furniſhed wt trappers and capariſons, ſome being made of leather, and ſome of iron. And we were demanded whether we would beſtow any gifts vpō him or no? But wee were not of abilitie ſo to doe, hauing in a maner ſpent all our prouiſion. There were alſo vpon an hill ſtanding a good diſtance from the tents, more then 500. carts, which were all ful ſiluer and of gold, and ſilke garments. And they were all diuided betweene the Emperour and his Dukes, and euery Duke beſtowed vpon his owne followers what pleaſed him.

Gifts preſented vnto him.

Of the place where the Emperor and his mother tooke their leaues one of another, and of Ieroſlaus Duke of Ruſsia. Chap. 30.

DEparting thence, we came vnto another place, where a wonderfull braue tent, all of red purple, giuen by the Kythayans, was pitched. Wee were admitted into that alſo, and alwaies when we entred, there was giuen vnto vs ale and wine to drinke, & ſodden fleſh (when we would) to eate. There was alſo a loftie ſtage built of boords, where the Emperours throne was placed, being very curiouſly wrought out of iuorie, wherein alſo there was golde and precious ſtones, and (as we remember) there were certain degrees or ſtaires to aſcend vnto it. And it was round vpon the top. There were benches placed about the ſaide throne, whereon the ladies ſate towarde the left hand of the Emperour vpon ſtooles, (but none ſate aloft on the right hande) and the Dukes ſate vpon benches below, the ſaid throne being in the midſt. Certaine others ſate behinde the Dukes, and euery day there reſorted great companie of Ladies thither. The three tents whereof we ſpake before, were very large, but the Emperour his wiues had other great and faire tentes made of white felt. This was the place where the Emperour parted companie with his mother: for ſhe went into one part of the land, and the Emperour into another to execute iuſtice. For there was taken a certaine Concubine of this Emperour, which had poyſoned his father to death, at the ſame time when the Tartars armie was in Hungarie, which, for the ſame cauſe returned home. Moreouer, vpon the foreſaide Concubine, and many other of her confederats ſentence of iudgement was pronounced, and they were put to death. At the ſame time Ieroſlaus the great Duke of Soldal, which is a part of Ruſſia, deceaſed. For being (as it were for honours ſake) inuited to eate and drink with the Emperours mother, and immediatly after the banquet, returning vnto his lodging, he fel ſicke, and within ſeuen dayes, died. And after his death, his body was of a ſtrange blew colour, and it was commonly reported, that the ſaid Duke was poiſoned, to the ende that the Tartars might freely and totally poſſeſſe his Dukedome.

Coyne diſſembleth with the Legates.

TO be ſhort, the Tartars brought vs vnto their Emperor, who when he had heard of them, that we were come vnto him, cõmanded that we ſhould return, vnto his mother. For he was determined the next day, (as it is aboueſaid) to ſet vp a flag of defiãce againſt al yͤ countreis of the Weſt, which he would haue vs in no caſe to know. Wherefore returning, we ſtaied ſome few dayes with his mother, and ſo returned backe again vnto him. With whom we continued for the ſpace of one whole moneth in ſuch extreme hunger and thirſt, that we could ſcarce hold life and ſoule together. For the prouiſion allowed vs for foure dayes, was ſcantly ſufficient for one day. Neither could we buy vs any ſuſtenance, becauſe the market was too farre off. Howbeit the Lorde prouided for vs a Ruſſian goldſmith, named Coſmas, who being greatly in the Emperours fauour, procured vs ſome ſuſtenance. This man ſhewed vnto vs the throne of the Emperour, which hee had made, before it was ſet in the proper place, and his ſeale, which he alſo had framed. Afterward the Emperor ſent for vs, giuing vs to vnderſtand by Chingay his chief Secretary, that wee ſhould write downe our meſſages & affaires, and ſhould deliuer them vnto him. Which thing we performed accordingly. After many daies he called for vs againe, demanding whether there were any with our Lord the Pope, which vnderſtood the Ruſſian, the Sarracen, or the Tartarian language? To whom we anſwered, that we had none of thoſe letters or languages. Howbeit, that there were certaine Saracens in the land, but inhabiting a great diſtance from our Lord the Pope. And wee ſaide, that wee thought it moſt expedient, that when they had written their mindes in the Tartarian language, and had interpreted the meaning therof vnto vs, we ſhould diligently tranſlate it into our own tongue, and ſo deliuer both the letter and the tranſlation thereof vnto our Lord the Pope. Then departed they from vs, and went vnto the Emperour. And after the day of S. Martine, we were called for againe. Then Kadac principal agent for the whole empire, and Chingay, and Bala, with diuers other Scribes, came vnto vs, and interpreted the letter word for word. And hauing written it in Latine, they cauſed vs to interprete vnto them eche ſentence, to wit if we had erred in any word. And when both letters were written, they made vs to reade them ouer twiſe more, leaſt we ſhould haue miſtaken ought. For they ſaid vnto vs: Take heed that ye vnderſtand all things throughly, for if you ſhould not vnderſtand the whole matter aright, it might breed ſome inconuenience. They wrote the ſaid letters alſo in the Saracen tongue, that there might be ſome found in our dominions which could reade and interprete them, if need ſhould require.

How they were licenſed to depart. Chap. 32.

The Legates are loath to haue any Ambaſſadours ſent from the Tartars to the Chriſtians.

ANd (as our Tartars told vs) the Emperour was purpoſed to ſend his ambaſſadors with vs. Howbeit, he was deſirous (as we thought) that we our ſelues ſhould craue that fauour at his hands. And when one of our Tartars being an ancient man, exhorted vs to make the ſaid petition, we thought it not good for vs, that the Emperor ſhould ſend his ambaſſadours. Wherfore we gaue him anſwere, that it was not for vs to make any ſuch petition, but if it pleaſed the Emperour of his owne accord to ſend them, we would diligently (by Gods aſſiſtance) ſee them conducted in ſafetie. Howbeit, we thought it expedient for vs, that they ſhould not goe, and that for diuers cauſes. Firſt, becauſe we feared, leaſt they, ſeeing the diſſentions and warres which are among vs, ſhould be the more encouraged to make warre againſt vs. Secondly, we feared, that they would be inſteade of ſpies and intelligencers in our dominions. Thirdly, we miſdoubted that they would be ſlaine by the way. For our nations be arrogant and proud. For when as thoſe ſeruants (which at the requeſt of the Cardinall, attended vpon vs, namely the legates of Almaine) returned vnto him in the Tartars attire, they were almoſt ſtoned in the way, by the Dutch, and were compelled to put off thoſe garments. And it is the Tartars cuſtome, neuer to bee reconciled vnto ſuch as haue ſlaine their Ambaſſadours, till they haue reuenged themſelues. Fourthly, leaſt they ſhould bee taken from vs by mayne force. Fiftly, becauſe there could come no good by their ambaſſade, for they were to haue none other commiſſion, or authoritie, but onely to deliuer their Emperours letter vnto the Pope, and to the Princes of Chriſtendome, which very ſame letters wee our ſelues had, and we knew right well, that much harme might enſue thereof. Wherefore, the third day after this, namely, vpon the feaſt of Saint Brice, they gaue vs our paſſe-port and a Letter ſealed with the Emperours owne ſeale, ſending vs vnto the Emperours mother, who gaue vnto eche of vs a gowne made of Foxe-ſkinnes, with the furre on the outſide, and a piece of purple. And our Tartars ſtole a yarde out of euery one of them. And out of that which was giuen vnto our ſeruant, they ſtole the better halfe. Which falſe dealing of theirs, we knew well inough, but would make no wordes thereof.

Nouember 13.

They are rewarded with gifts.

How they returned homewards. Chap. 33.

Then taking our iourney to returne, we trauailed all Winter long, lying in the deſerts oftentimes vpon the ſnow, except with our feete wee made a piece of ground bare to lye vpon. For there were no trees, but the plaine champion field. And oftentimes in the morning, we found our ſelues all couered with ſnow driuen ouer vs by the winde. And ſo trauailing till the feaſt of our Lordes Aſcenſion, we arriued at the court of Bathy. Of whom when wee had enquired, what anſwere he would ſend vnto our Lord the Pope, he ſaid that he had nothing to giue vs in charge, but onely that we ſhould diligently deliuer that which the Emperour had written. And, hauing receiued letters for our ſafe conduct, the thirteenth day after Pentecoſt, being Saterday, wee were proceeded as farre as Montij, with whome our foreſaide aſſociates and ſeruants remained, which were withheld from vs, and we cauſed them to be deliuered vnto vs. From hence wee trauailed vnto Correnſa, to whom, requiring gifts the ſecond time at our handes, we gaue none, becauſe we had not wherewithall. And hee appointed vs two Comanians, which liued among the common people of the Tartars, to be our guides vnto the citie of Kiow in Ruſſia. Howbeit one of our Tartars parted not from vs, till we were paſt the vtmoſt gard of the Tartars. But the other guides, namely the Comanians, which were giuen vs by Correnſa, brought vs from the laſt garde vnto the citie of Kiow, in the ſpace of ſixe dayes. And there we arriued fifteene dayes before the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt. Moreouer, the Citizens of Kiow hauing intelligence of our approch, came foorth all of them to meete vs, with great ioy. For they reioyced ouer vs, as ouer men that had bene riſen from death to life. So likewiſe they did vnto vs throughout all Ruſſia, Polonia, and Bohemia. Daniel and his brother Waſilico made vs a royall feaſt, and interteined vs with them againſt our willes for the ſpace of eight dayes. In the meane time, they with their Biſhops, and other men of account, being in conſultation together about thoſe matters which we had propounded vnto them in our iourney towards the Tartars, anſwered vs with common conſent, ſaying: that they would holde the Pope for their ſpeciall Lord and Father, and the Church of Rome for their Lady & miſtreſſe, confirming likewiſe al things which they had ſent concerning this matter, before our comming, by their Abbate. And for the ſame purpoſe, they ſent their Ambaſſadours and letters by vs alſo, vnto our Lord the Pope.

The ſore iourneys of the legates in returning.

EXcellentiſſimo Domino & Chriſtianiſſimo, Lodouico Dei gratia Regi Francorum illuſtri, frater Willielmus de Rubruquis in ordine fratrum Minorum minimus ſalutem, & ſemper triumphare in Chriſto. Scriptum eſt in Eccleſiaſtico de ſapiente, In terram alienarum gentium tranſibit, bona & mala in omnibus tentabit. Hoc opus, Domine mi Rex, feci: ſed vtinam vt ſapiens & non ſtultus. Multi enim faciunt quod facit ſapiens, ſed non ſapienter, ſed magis ſtultè: de quorum numero timeo me eſſe. Tamen quocunque modo fecerim; quia dixiſtis mihi quando receſſi à vobis, vt omnia ſcriberem vobis, quæcunque viderem inter Tartaros, & etiam monuiſtis vt non timerem vobis ſcribere longas literas, facio quod iniunxiſtis: Cum timore tamen & verecundia, quia verba congrua mihi non ſuppetunt, quæ debeam tantæ ſcribere Maieſtati. Nouerit ergò veſtra ſancta maieſtas, quòd anno Domini milleſimo ducenteſſimo, quinquageſſimo tertio, nonas Maij ingreſſi ſumus mare Ponti, quod Bulgarici vocant, Maius Mare: & habet mille octo milliaria in longum, vt didici à mercatoribus, & diſtinguitur quaſi in duas partes. Circa medium enim eius ſunt duæ prouinciæ terræ, vna ad Aquilonem, & alia ad meridiem. Illa quæ eſt ad meridiem dicitur Synopolis; & eſt caſtrum & portus Soldani Turchiæ. Quæ verò ad Aquilonem eſt, eſt Prouincia quædam, quæ nunc dicitur dicitur à Latinis Gaſaria, à Græcis verò qui inhabitant eam ſuper littus maris dicitur Caſſaria, hoc eſt Cæſaria. Et ſunt promontoria quædam extendentia ſe in mare, & contra meridiem verſus Synopolim. Et ſunt trecenta milliaria inter Synopolim & Caſſariam. Ita quòd ſint ſeptingenta milliaria ab iſtis punctis verſus Conſtantinopolim in longum & latum: & ſeptingenta verſus Orientem; hoc eſt, Hiberiam, quæ eſt prouincia Georgiæ. Ad prouinciam Gaſariæ ſiue Caſariæ applicuimus, quæ eſt quaſi triangularis, ad Occidentem habens ciuitatem, quæ dicitur Kerſoua, in qua fuit Sanctus Clemens marterizatus. Et nauigantes corã ea vidimus inſulam, in qua eſt templum illud quod dicitur Angelicis manibus præparatum. In medio verò quaſi in cuſpide ad meridiem habet ciuitatem quæ dicitur Soldaia, quæ ex tranſuerſo reſpicit Synopolim: Et illuc applicant omnes Mercatores venientes de Turchia volentes ire ad terras Aquilonares, & è contrario venientes de Roſſia & terris Aquilonaribus, volentes tranſire in Turchiam. Illi portant varium & griſiam, & alias pelles pretioſas. Alij portant telas de cottone ſiue bombaſio, & pannos ſericos & ſpecies aromaticas. Ad Orientẽ verò illius prouinciæ eſt ciuitas quæ dicitur Matriga, vbi cadit fluuius Tanais in mare Ponti per orificium habens latitudinem duodecem milliarium. Ille enim fluuius antequam ingrediatur mare Ponti, facit quoddam mare verſus Aquilonem, habens in latitudine & longitudine ſeptinginta milliaria, nuſquam habens profunditatem vltra ſex paſſus, vnde magna vaſa non ingrediuntur illud. Sed mercatores de Conſtantinopoli applicantes ad prædictam ciuitatem Matertam, mittunt barcas ſuas vſque ad flumen Tanaim, vt emant piſces ſiccatos, ſturiones, thoſas, borbatas, & alios piſces infinitæ multitudinis. Prædicta verò prouincia Caſſaria cingitur mari in tribus lateribus: ad Occidentem ſcilicet, vbi eſt Kerſoua ciuitas Clementis, ad meridiem vbi eſt ciuitas Soldaia, ad quam applicuimus, quæ eſt cuſpis prouinciæ, & ad Orientem Maricandis, vbi eſt ciuitas Materta, & orificium Tanais. Vltra illud orificium eſt Zikia, quæ non obedit Tartaris: Et Sueui & Hiberi ad Orientem, qui non obediunt Tartaris. Poſteà verſus meridiem eſt Trapeſunda quę habet proprium Dominum nomine Guidonem, qui eſt de genere imperatorum Conſtantinopolitanorum, qui obedit Tartaris: poſteà Synopolis quæ eſt Soldani Turchiæ qui ſimiliter obedit: poſteà terra Vaſtacij cuius filius dicitur Aſtar ab auo materno, qui non obedit. Ab orificio Tanais verſus Occidentem vſque ad Danubium totum eſt ſubditum. Etiam vltrà Danubium verſus Conſtantinopolim, Valakia, quæ eſt terra Aſſani, & minor Bulgaria vſque in Solonomam omnes ſoluunt eis tributum. Et etiam vltra tributum condictum ſumpſerunt annis nuper tranſactis de qualibet domo ſecurim vnam, & totum frumentum quod inuenerunt in maſſa. Applicuimus ergò Soldaię in 12. Kalendas Iunij: & præuenerant nos quidam mercatores de Conſtantinopoli, qui dixerunt venturos illuc nuncios de terra ſancta volentes ire ad Sartach, Ego tamen prędicaueram publicè in Ramis Palmarum apud Sanctam Sophiam, quod non eſſem nuncius, nec veſter, nec alicuius, ſed ibam apud illos incredulos ſecundùm regulam noſtram. Tunc cùm applicuiſſem, monebant me dicti mercatores vt cautè loquerer, quia dixerunt me eſſe nuncium, & ſi non dicerem me eſſe nuncium, quod non præberetur mihi tranſitus. Tunc loquutus ſum hoc modo ad capitaneos ciuitatis, imò ad vicarios capitaneorum, quia capitanei iuerant ad Baatu portantes tributum, & non fuerant adhuc reuerſi. Nos audiuimus, dixi, de Domino veſtro Sartach in Terra Sancta quod eſſet Chriſtianus: & gauiſi ſunt inde vehementer Chriſtiani, & præcipuè Dominus Rex Francorum Chriſtianiſſimus, qui ibi peregrinatur, & pugnat contra Saracenos, vt eripiat loca ſancta de manibus eorum: vnde volo ire ad Sartach, & portare ei literas Domini Regis, in quibus monet eum de vtilitate totius Chriſtianitatis. Et ipſi receperunt nos gratanter, & dederunt nobis hoſpitium in eccleſia Epiſcopali. Et Epiſcopus ipſius eccleſiæ fuerat ad Sartach, qui multa bona dixit mihi de Sartach, quę ego poſtea non inueni. Tunc dederunt nobis optionem vtrum vellemus habere bigas cum bobus ad portandum res noſtras vel equos pro ſummarijs. Et mercatores Conſtantinopolitani conſuluerunt mihi quod non acciperem bigas, imò quod emerem proprias bigas coopertas, in quibus apportant Ruteni pelles ſuas, & in illis includerem res noſtras quas vellem quotidiè deponere, quia ſi acciperem equos, oporteret me in qualibet Herbergia deponere & reponere ſuper alios, & prætereà equitarem lentiori greſſu iuxta boues. Et tunc acquieui conſilio eorum malo, tum quia fui in itinere vſq; Sarthach duobus menſibus, quod potuiſſem vno menſe feciſſe, ſi iuiſſem equis. Attuleram mecum de Conſtantinopoli fructus & vinum muſcatum, & biſcoctum delicatum de conſilio mercatorum ad pręſentandũ capitaneis primis, vt faciliùs pateret mihi tranſitus: quia nullus apud eos reſpicitur rectis oculis, qui venit vacua manu. Quæ omnia poſui in vna biga, quando nõ inueni ibi capitaneos ciuitatis, quia dicebãt mihi, quod gratiſſima forẽt Sarthach, ſi poſſem deferre ea vſq; ad eũ. Arripuimus ergo iter tunc circa Kalend. Iunij cum bigis noſtris quatuor coopertis & cũ alijs duabus quas accepimus ab eis, In quibus portabantur lectiſternia ad dormiendũ de nocte, & quinque equos dabant nobis ad equitandum. Eramus enim quinq; perſonæ. Ego & ſocius meus frater Bartholomeus de Cremona, & Goſet lator præſentium, & homo dei Turgemannus, & puer Nicolaus, quem emeram Conſtantinopoli de noſtra eleemoſyna. Dederunt etiam duos homines qui ducebant bigas & cuſtodiebant boues & equos. Sunt autem alta promontoria ſuper Mare à Kerſoua vſque ad orificium Tanais: & ſunt quadraginta caſtella inter Kerſouam & Soldaiam, quorum quodlibet fere habet proprium idioma: inter quos erant multi Goti, quorum idioma eſt Teutonicum. Poſt illa montana verſus Aquilonem eſt pulcherrima ſylua in planicie, plena fontibus & riuulis: Et poſt illam ſyluam eſt planicies maxima, quæ durat per quinque dietas vſque ad extremitatem illius prouinciæ ad aquilonem, quæ coarctatur habens Mare ad Orientem & Occidentem: Ita quod eſt vnum foſſatum magnum ab vno Mari vſque ad aliud. In illa planicie ſolebant eſſe Comani antequam venirent Tartari, & cogebant ciuitates prædictas & caſtra vt darent eis tributum. Et cum venerunt Tartari, tanta multitudo Comanorũ intrauit prouinciam illam, qui omnes fugerunt vſque ad ripam Maris, quod comedebant ſe mutuo viui morientes: ſecundum quod narrauit mihi quidam mercator, qui hoc vidit: Quod viui deuorabant & lacerabant dentibus carnes crudas mortuorum, ſicut canes cadauera. Verſus extremitatem illius prouinciæ ſunt lacus multi & magni: in quorum ripis ſunt fontes ſalmaſtri, quorum aqua, quàm cito intrat lacum, efficit ſalem durum ad modum glaciei. Et de illis ſalinis habent Baatu & Sartach magnos reditus: quia de tota Ruſſia veniunt illuc pro ſale: & de qualibet biga onuſta dant duas telas de cottone valentes dimidiam Ipperperam. Veniunt & per Mare multæ naues pro ſale, quæ omnes dant tributum ſecundum ſui quantitatem. Poſtquam ergo receſſimus de Soldaia, tertia die inuenimus Tartaros: inter quos cùm intraueram, viſum fuit mihi recte quod ingrederer quoddam aliud ſæculum. Quorum vitam & mores vobis deſcribam prout poſſum.

De Tartaris & domibus eorum.

NVſquam habent manentem ciuitatem, ſed futuram ignorant. Inter ſe diuiſerunt Scythiam, quæ durat à Danubio vſque ad ortum ſolis. Et quilibet Capitaneus, ſecundum quod habet plures vel pauciores homines ſub ſe, ſcit terminos paſcuorum ſuorum, & vbi debet paſcere hyeme & æſtate, vere & autumno. In hyeme enim deſcendunt ad calidiores regiones verſus meridiem. In æſtate aſcendunt ad frigidiores verſus aquilonem. Loca paſcuoſa ſine aquis paſcunt in hyeme quando eſt ibi nix, quia niuem habent pro aqua. Domum in qua dormiunt fundant ſuper rotam de virgis cancellatis, cuius tigna ſunt de virgis, & conueniunt in vnam paruulam rotam ſuperius, de qua aſcendit collum ſurſum tanquam fumigatorium, quam cooperiunt filtro albo: & frequentius imbuunt etiam filtrum calce vel terra alba & puluere oſſium, vt albens ſplendeat, & aliquando nigro. Et filtrum illud circa collum ſuperius decorant pulchra varietate picturæ. Ante oſtium ſimiliter ſuſpendunt filtrum opere polimitario variatum. Conſumunt enim filtrum coloratum in faciendo vites & arbores, aues & beſtias. Et faciunt tales domos ita magnas, quod habent triginta pedes in latitudine. Ego enim menſuraui ſemel latitudinem inter veſtigia rotarum vnius bigæ viginti pedum: & quando domus erat ſuper bigam excedebat extra rotas in vtroque latere quinque pedibus ad minus. Ego numeraui in vna biga viginti duos boues trahentes vnam domum: Vndecem in vno ordine ſecundum latitudinem bigæ, & alios vndecem ante illos: Axis bigæ erat magnus ad modum arboris nauis: Et vnus homo ſtabat in oſtio domus ſuper bigam minans boues. Inſuper faciunt quadrangulos de virgulis fiſſis attenuatis ad quantitatem vnius arcæ magnæ: & poſtea de vna extremitate ad aliam eleuant teſtudinem de ſimilibus virgis, & oſtiolum faciunt in anteriori extremitate: & poſtea cooperiunt illam ciſtam ſiue domunculam filtro nigro imbuto ſeuo ſiue lacte ouino, ne poſſit penetrari pluuia: quod ſimiliter decorant opere polimitario vel plumario. Et in talibus arcis ponunt totam ſuppellectilem ſuam & theſaurum: quas ligant fortiter ſuper bigas alteras quas trahunt cameli, vt poſſint tranſuadare flumina. Tales arcas nunquam deponunt de bigis. Quando deponunt domus ſuas manſionarias, ſemper vertunt portam ad meridiem; & conſequenter collocant bigas cum arcis hinc & inde prope domum ad dimidium iactum lapidis: ita quod domus ſtat inter duos ordines bigarum quaſi inter duos muros.

Nota.

Matronæ faciunt ſibi pulcherrimas bigas, quas neſcirem vobis deſcribere niſi per picturam. ¶ Imo omnia depinxiſſem vobis ſi ſciuiſſem pingere. Vnus diues Moal ſiue Tartar habet bene tales bigas cum arcis ducentas vel centum. Baatu habet ſexdecem vxores: quælibet habet vnam magnam domum, exceptis alijs paruis, quas collocant poſt magnam, quæ ſunt quaſi cameræ; in quibus habitant puellæ. Ad quamlibet iſtarum domorum appendent ducentæ bigæ. Et quando deponunt domus, prima vxor deponit ſuam curiam in capite occidentali, & poſtea aliæ ſecundum ordinem ſuum: ita quod vltima vxor erit in capite Orientali: & erit ſpacium inter curiam vnius dominæ & alterius, iactus vnius lapidis. Vnde curia vnius diuitis Moal apparebit quaſi vna magna Villa: tunc pauciſſimi viri erunt in ea. Vna muliercula ducet 20. bigas vel 30. Terra enim plana eſt. Et ligant bigas cum bobus vel camelis vnam poſt aliam: & ſedebit muliercula in anteriori minans bouem, & omnes aliæ pari greſſu ſequentur. Si contingat venire ad aliquem malum paſſum, ſoluunt eas & tranſducunt ſigillatim: Vadunt enim lento greſſu, ſicut agnus vel bos poteſt ambulare.

De lectis eorum & poculis.

POſtquam depoſuerint domus verſa porta ad meridiem, collocant lectum domini ad partem aquilonarem. Locus mulierum eſt ſemper ad latus Orientale hoc eſt ad ſiniſtrum domini domus cum ſedet in lecto ſuo verſa facie ad meridiem: locus verò virorum ad latus occidentale, hoc eſt ad dextrum. Viri ingredientes domum nullo modo ſuſpenderent pharetram ad partem mulierum, Et ſuper caput Domini eſt ſemper vna imago quaſi puppa & ſtatuuncula de filtro, quam vocant fratrem domini: alia ſimilis ſuper caput dominæ, quam vocant fratrem dominæ, affixa parieti: & ſuperius inter vtramque illarum eſt vna paruula, macilenta, quæ eſt quaſi cuſtos totius domus. Domina domus ponit ad latus ſuum dextrum ad pedes lecti in eminenti loco pelliculam hœdinam impletam lana vel alia materia, & iuxta illam ſtatuunculam paruulam reſpicientem famulas & mulieres. Iuxta oſtium ad partem mulieris eſt iterum alia imago cum vbere vaccino, pro mulieribus quæ mungunt vaccas. De officio fœminarum eſt mungere vaccas. Ad aliud latus oſtij verſus viros eſt alia ſtatua cum vbere equæ pro viris qui mungunt equas. Et cum conuenerint ad potandum primo ſpargunt de potu illi imagini, quæ eſt ſuper caput domini: poſtea alijs imaginibus per ordinem: poſtea exit miniſter domum cum cipho & potu, & ſpargit ter ad meridiem, qualibet vice flectendo genu; & hoc ad reuerentiam ignis: poſtea ad Orientem ad reuerentiam aeris: poſtea ad Occidentem ad reuerentiam aquæ: ad aquilonem proijciunt pro mortuis. Quando tenet dominus ciphum in manu & debet bibere, tunc primo antequam bibat, infundit terræ partem ſuam. Si bibit ſedens ſuper equum, infundit antequam bibat, ſuper collum vel crinem equi. Poſtquam vero miniſter ſic ſparſerit ad quatuor latera mundi, reuertitur in domum & ſunt parati duo famuli cum duobus ciphis & totidem patenis vt deferant potum domino & vxori ſedenti iuxta eum ſurſum in lecto. Et cum habet plures vxores, illa cum qua dormit in nocte ſedet iuxta eum in die: & oportet quod omnes aliæ veniant ad domum illam illa die ad bibendum: & ibi tenetur curia illa die: & xenia quæ deferuntur, illa deponuntur in theſauris illius dominæ, Bancus ibi eſt cum vtre lactis vel cum alio potu & cum ciphis.

De potibus eorum & qualiter prouocant alios ad bibendum.

Similiter in Florida.

FAciunt in hyeme optimum potum, de riſio, de millio, de melle: claret ſicut vinum, Et defertur eis vinum à remotis partibus. In æſtate non curant niſi de Coſmos, Stat ſemper infra domum ad introitum portæ, & iuxta illud ſtat cithariſta cum citherula ſua, Citheras & vielas noſtras non vidi ibi, ſed multa alia inſtrumenta, quæ apud nos non habentur. Et cum incipit bibere tunc vnus miniſtrorũ exclamat alta voce, HA: & cithariſta percutit cicharum. Et quando faciunt feſtum magnum, tunc omnes plaudunt manibus & ſaltant ad vocem citharæ, viri coram Domino, & mulieres coram domina. Et poſtquam dominus biberit, tunc exclamat miniſter ſicut priùs, & tacet cithariſta: tunc bibunt omnes in circuitu viri & mulieres: & aliquando bibunt certatim valde turpiter & guloſe. Et quando volunt aliquem prouocare ad potũ arripiunt eum per aures & trahunt fortiter vt dilatent ei gulam, & plaudunt & ſaltant coram eo. Item cum aliqui volunt facere magnum feſtum & gaudium, vnus accipit ciphum plenum, & alij duo ſunt ei à dextris & ſiniſtris: & ſic illi tres veniunt cantantes vſque ad illum cui debent porrigere ciphum, & cantant & ſaltant coram eo: & cum porrigit manum ad recipiendum ciphum, ipſi ſubito reſiliunt, & iterum ſicut prius reuertuntur, & ſic illudunt ei ter vel quater retrahendo ciphum, donec fuerit bene exhileratus & bonum habeat appetitum, & tunc dant ei ciphum, & cantant & plaudunt manibus & terunt pedibus donec biberit.

De cibarijs eorum.

De cibis & victualibus eorum noueritis, quod indifferenter comedunt omnia morticinia ſua. Et inter tot pecora & armenta non poteſt eſſe quin multa animalia moriantur. Tamen in æſtate quamdiu durat eis coſmos, hoc eſt lac equinum, non curant de alio cibo. Vnde tunc ſi contingat eis mori bouem vel equum, ſiccant carnes ſcindendo per tenues pecias & ſuſpendendo ad ſolem & ventum, quæ ſtatim ſine ſale ſiccantur abſque aliquo fætore. De inteſtinis equorum faciunt andulges meliores quàm de porcis: quas comedunt recentes: reliquas carnes reſeruant ad hyemem. De pellibus boum faciunt vtres magnos, quos mirabiliter ſiccant ad fumum. De poſteriori parte pellis equi faciunt pulcherrimos ſoculares. De carne vnius arietis dant comedere quinquaginta hominibus vel centum. Scindunt enim minutatim in ſcutella cum ſale & aqua, aliam enim ſalſam non faciunt, & tunc cum puncto cultelli vel furcinula, quas proprias faciunt ad hoc, cum qua ſolemus comedere pira & poma cocta in vino, porrigunt cuilibet circumſtantium buccellam vnam vel duas, ſecundum multitudinem comedentium. Dominus antequam proponitur caro arietis in primo ipſe accipit quod placet ei: & etiam ſi dat alicui partem ſpecialem, oportet quod accipiens comedat eam ſolus, & nemini licet dare ei. Si non poteſt totum comedere, aſportat ſecum, vel dat garcioni ſuo, ſi eſt preſens, qui cuſtodiat ei: ſin aliter, recondit in ſaptargat ſuo, hoc eſt in burſa quadrata, quam portant ad recondendum omnia talia, in qua & oſſa recondunt, quando non habent ſpacium bene rodendi ea, vt poſtea rodant, ne pereat aliquid de cibo.

Quomodo faciunt Coſmos.

Ipſum Coſmos, hoc eſt lac iumentinum fit hoc modo. Extendunt cordam longam ſuper terram ad duos palos fixos in terra, & ad illam cordam ligant circiter horas tres, pullos equarum quas volunt mungere. Tunc ſtant matres iuxta pullos ſuos & permittunt ſe pacifice mungi. Et ſi aliqua eſt nimis indomita, tunc accipit vnus homo pullum & ſupponit ei permittens parum ſugere, tunc retrahit illum, & emunctor lactis ſuccedit. Congregata ergo multitudine lactis, quod eſt ita dulce ſicut vaccinum, dum eſt recens, fundunt illud in magnum vtrem ſiue bucellam, & incipiunt illud concutere cum ligno ad hoc aptato, quod groſſum eſt inferius ſicut caput hominis & cauatum ſubtus: & quam cito concutiunt illud, incipit bullire ſicut vinum nouũ, & aceſcere ſiue fermentari, & excutiunt illud donec extrahant butirum. Tunc guſtant illud; & quando eſt temperate pungitiuum bibunt: pungit enim ſuper linguam ſicut vinum raſpei dum bibitur. Et poſtquam homo ceſſat bibere, relinquit ſaporem ſuper linguam lactis amygdalini, & multum reddit interiora hominis iucunda, & etiam inebriat debilia capita: multum etiam prouocat vrinam. Faciunt etiam Cara-coſmos, hoc eſt nigrum coſmos ad vſum magnorum dominorum, hoc modo. Lac equinum non coagulatur. Ratio enim eſt: quod nullius animalis lac niſi cuius fetet venter non inuenitur coagulum. In ventre pulli equi non inuenitur: vnde lac equæ non coagulatur. Concutiunt ergo lac in tantum, quod omnino quod ſpiſſum eſt in eo vadat ad fundum rectà, ſicut fæces vini, & quod purum eſt remanet ſuperius, & eſt ſicut ſerum, & ſicut muſtum album. Fæces ſunt albæ multum, & dantur ſeruis, & faciunt multum dormire. Illud clarum bibunt domini: & eſt pro certo valde ſuauis potus & bonæ efficaciæ. Baatu habet 30. caſalia circa herbergiam ſuam ad vnam dietam, quorum vnumquodq; qualibet die ſeruit ei de tali lacte centum equarum, hoc eſt, qualibet die lac trium millium equarũ, excepto alio lacte albo, quod deferunt alij. Sicut enim in Syria ruſtici dant tertiam partem fructuum, quam ipſi afferunt ad curias dominorum ſuorum, ita & iſti lac equarũ tertiæ diei. De lacte vaccino primò extrahunt butyrũ & bulliunt illud vſque ad perfectã decoctionẽ, & poſtea recondunt illud in vtribus arietinis quos ad hoc reſeruant. Et non ponunt ſal in butiro: tamen propter magnam decoctionẽ non putreſcit: & reſeruant illud contra hyemem. Reſiduũ lac quod remanet poſt butirum permittunt aceſcere quantum acrius fieri poteſt & bulliunt illud, & coagulatur bulliendo, & coagulum illud deſiccant ad ſolem, & efficitur durum ſicut ſcoria ferri. Quod recondunt in ſaccis contra hyemem: tempore hyemali quando deficit eis lac, ponunt illud acre coagulum, quod ipſi vocant grut, in vtre, & ſuper infundunt aquam calidam, & concutiunt fortiter donec illud reſoluatur in aqua; quæ ex illo efficitur tota acetoſa, & illam aquam bibunt loco lactis. Summè cauent ne bibant aquam puram.

De beſtijs quas comedunt, & de veſtibus, ac de venatione eorum.

MAgni domini habent caſalia verſus meridiem, de quibus afferunt eis milium & farinam contra hyemem. pauperes procurant ſibi pro arietibus & pellibus commutando. Sclaui etiam implent ventrem ſuum aqua craſſa, & hac contenti ſunt. Mures cum longis caudis non comedunt & omne genus murium habens curtam caudam. Sunt etiam ibi multæ marmotes, quas ipſi vocant Sogur: quæ conueniunt in vna fouea in hyeme 20. vel 30. pariter, & dormiunt ſex menſibus: quas capiunt in magna multitudine. Sunt etiam ibi, cuniculi habentes longam caudam ſicut cati; & in ſummitate caudæ habent pilos nigros & albos. Habent & multas alias beſtiolas bonas ad comedendum: quas ipſi valde bene diſcernunt. Ceruos non vidi ibi, lepores paucos vidi, gaſelos multos. Aſinos ſylueſtres vidi in magna multitudine, qui ſunt quaſi muli. Vidi & aliud genus animalis quod dicitur Artak, quod habet recte corpus arietis & cornua torta, ſed tantæ quantitatis, quod vix poteram vna manu leuare duo cornua: & faciunt de cornibus illis ciphos magnos. Habent falcones, girfalcones, & herodios in magna multitudine: quos omnes portant ſuper manum dexteram: & ponunt ſemper falconi vnam corrigiam paruulam circa collum, quæ pendet ei vſque ad medietatem pectoris: per quam cum proijciunt eum ad prędam, inclinant cum ſiniſtra manu caput & pectus falconis, ne verberetur à vento, vel ne feratur ſurſum. Magnam ergo partem victus ſui acquirunt venatione. De veſtibus & habitu eorum noueritis, quod de Cataya & alijs regionibus Orientis, & etiam de Perſide & alijs regionibus auſtri veniunt eis panni ſerici & aurei, & telæ de bambaſio, quibus induuntur in æſtate. De Ruſſia, de Moxel, & Maiore Bulgaria & Paſcatir, quæ eſt maior Hungaria, & Kerſis: (quę omnes ſunt regiones ad Aquilonem & plenæ ſyluis:) & alijs multis regionibus ad latus aquilonare, quæ eis obediunt, adducuntur eis pelles precioſæ multi generis: quas nunquã vidi in partibus noſtris: Quibus induuntur in hyeme. Et faciunt ſemper in hyeme duas pelliceas ad minus: vnam, cuius pilus eſt ad carnem: aliam cuius pilus eſt extra contra ventum & niues, quæ multoties ſunt de pellibus lupinis vel vulpibus vel papionibus. Et dum ſedent in domo habent aliam delicatiorem. Pauperes faciunt illas exteriores de canibus & capris. Quum volunt venari feras, conueniunt magna multitudo & circundant regionem in qua ſciunt feras eſſe, & paulatim appropinquant ſibi, donec concludant feras inter ſe quaſi infra circulum, & tunc ſagitant ad eas. faciunt etiam braccas de pellibus. Diuites etiam furrant veſtes ſuas de ſtupa ſetæ, quæ eſt ſupra modum mollis, & leuis & calida. Pauperes furrant veſtes de tela de bambaſio, de delicatiori lana quam poſſunt extrahere: de groſſiori faciunt filtrum ad cooperiendum domos ſuas & ciſtas, & ad lectiſternia. De lana etiam & tertia parte pilorum equi admixta, faciunt cordas ſuas. De filtro etiam faciunt pauellas ſub ſellis, & capas contra pluuiam. Vnde multum expendunt de lana. Habitum virorum vidiſtis.

Nota.

De raſura virorum & ornatu mulierum.

VIri radunt in ſummitate capitis quadrangulum, & ab anterioribus angulis ducunt raſuram criſtæ capitis vſque ad tempora. Radunt etiam tempora & collum vſque ad ſummum concauitatis ceruicis: & frontem anterius vſque ad frontinellam, ſuper quam relinquunt manipulum pilorum deſcendentium vſque ad ſupercilia: In angulis occipitis relinquunt crines, quibus faciunt tricas, quas ſuccingunt nodando vſque ad aures. Et habitus puellarum non differt ab habitu virorum, niſi quod aliquantulum eſt longior. Sed in craſtino poſtquam eſt nupta radit caluariam ſuam à medietate capitis verſus frontem, & habet tunicam latam ſicut cucullam monialis, & per omnia latiorem & longiorem, fiſſam ante, quam ligat ſub dextro latere. In hoc enim differunt Tartari à Turcis: quod Turci ligant tunicas ſuas ad ſiniſtram, Tartari ſemper ad dextram. Poſtea habent ornamentum capitis, quod vocant botta, quod fit de cortice arboris vel alia materia, quam poſſunt inuenire, leuiore: & eſt groſſum & rotundum, quantum poteſt duabus manibus complectij longum vero vnius cubiti & plus, quadrum ſuperius, ſicut capitellum vnius columnæ. Iſtud botta cooperiunt panno ſerico precioſo; & eſt concauum interius: & ſuper capitellum in modio

medio vel ſuper quadraturã illam ponunt virgulam de calamis pennarum vel cannis gracilibus longitudinis ſcilicet vnius cubiti & plus: & illam ſibi virgulam ornant ſuperius de pennis pauonis, & per longum in circuitu pennulis caudæ malardi, & etiam lapidibus præcioſis. Diuites dominæ iſtud ornamentum ponunt in ſummitate capitis quod ſtringunt fortiter cum almucia, quę foramen habet in ſummitate ad hoc aptatũ, & in iſto recondunt crines ſuos quos recolligũt à parte poſteriori ad ſummitatem capitis quaſi in nodo vno & reponunt in illo botta, quod poſtea fortiter ligant ſub gutture. Vnde quum equitant plures dominæ ſimul & videntur à longe, apparent milites, habentes galeas in capitibus cum lanceis eleuatis. Illud enim botta apparet galea deſuper lancea. Et ſedent omnes mulieres ſuper equos ſicut viri diuerſificantes coxas; & ligant cucullas ſuas panno ſerico aerij coloris ſuper renes, & alia faſcia ſtringunt ad mamillas: & ligant vnam peciam albam ſub occulis, quæ deſcendit vſque ad pectus. Et ſunt mulieres miræ pinguedinis, & quæ minus habet de naſo pulchrior reputatur. Deturpant etiam turpiter pinguedine facies ſuas: nunquam cubant in lecto pro puerperio.

OFicium fœminarum eſt ducere bigas, ponere domus ſuper eas & deponere, mungere vaccas, facere butirum & griut, parare pelles, & conſuere eas, quas conſuunt filo deneruis, diuidunt enim neruos in minuta fila, & poſtea illa contorquent in vnum longum filum. Conſuunt etiam ſoculares & ſoccos & alias veſtes. Veſtes vero nunquam lauant, quia dicunt quod Deus tunc iraſcitur, & quod fiant tonitrua ſi ſuſpendantur ad ſiccandum: Imo lauantes verberant & eis auferunt. Tonitrua ſupra modum timent: tunc omnes extraneos emittunt de domibus ſuis; & inuoluunt ſe in filtris nigris, in quibus latitant, donec tranſierit. Nunquã etiã lauant ſcutellos, imo carne cocta alueũ in quo debent ponere eam lauant brodio bulliente de caldaria, & poſtea refundunt in caldariam. faciunt & filtrum & cooperiunt domos. Viri faciunt ſolùm arcus & ſagittas, fabricant ſtrepas & fræna, & faciunt cellas, carpentant domos & bigas: cuſtodiunt equos & mungunt equas, concutiunt ipſum coſmos & lac equinum, faciunt vtres in quibus reconditur: cuſtodiunt etiam camelos, & onerant eos. Oues & Capras cuſtodiunt mixtim & mungunt aliquando viri, aliquando mulieres. De lacte ouium inſpiſſato & ſalſo parant pelles. Cum volunt manus vel caput lauare implent os ſuum aqua & paulatim fundunt de ore ſuo ſuper manus, & eadem humectant crines ſuos, & lauant caput ſuum. De nuptijs eorum noueritis, quod nemo habet ibi vxorem niſi emat eam: vnde aliquando ſunt puellæ multum adultæ ante quam nubant: ſemper enim tenent eas parentes, donec vendant eas. Seruant etiam gradus conſanguinitatis primum & ſecundum: nullum autem ſeruant affinitatis. Habent enim ſimul vel ſucceſſiue duas ſorores. Nulla vidua nubit inter eos, hac ratione; quia credunt quod omnes qui ſeruiunt eis in hac vita ſeruient in futura. Vnde de vidua credunt, quod ſemper reuertitur poſt mortem ad primum maritum. Vnde accidit turpis conſuetudo inter eos quod filius ſcilicet ducit aliquando omnes vxores patris ſui, excepta matre. Curia enim patris & matris ſemper accidit iuniori filio. Vnde oportet quod ipſe prouideat omnibus vxoribus patris ſui, quia adueniunt eæ cum curia paterna. Et tunc ſi vult vtitur eis pro vxoribus, quia non reputat ſibi iniuriam, ſi reuertatur ad patrem poſt mortem. Cum ergo aliquis fecerit pactum cum aliquo de filia accipienda, facit pater puellæ conuiuium, & illa fugit ad conſanguineos, vt ibi lateat: Tunc pater dicit, Ecce filia mea tua eſt, accipe eam vbicunque inueneris: Tunc ille quærit eam cum amicis ſuis, donec inveniat eam, & oportet, quod vi capiat eam, & ducat eam quaſi violenter ad domum.

Pellium paratio

De iuſticijs eorum & iudicijs, et de morte ac ſepultura eorum.

DE iuſticijs eorum noueritis, quod quando duo homines pugnant, nemo audet ſe intermittere. Etiam pater non audet iuuare filium. Sed qui peiorem partem habet, appellat ad curiam domini. Et ſi alius poſt appellationem tangat eum, interficitur. Sed oportet quod ſtatim abſque dilatione vadat: Et ille qui paſſus eſt iniuriam ducit eum quaſi captiuum. Neminem puniunt capitali ſententia, niſi deprehenſus fuerit in facto, vel confeſſus. Sed quum diffamatus eſt à pluribus, bene torquent eum, vt confiteatur. Homicidiũ puniunt capitali ſententia, & etiam coitum cum non ſua. Non ſuam dico vel vxorem vel famulam: Sua enim ſclaua licet vti prout libet. Item enorme furtum puniunt morte. Pro leui furto, ſicut pro vno ariete, dummodo non fuerit ſæpe deprehenſus in hoc, verberant crudeliter. Et ſi dant centum ictus oportet quod habeant centum baculos, de illis dico, qui verberantur ſententia curiæ. Item falſos nuncios, quia faciunt ſe nuncios & non ſunt, interficiunt. Item ſacrilegas, de quibus dicam vobis poſtea plenius, quia tales reputant veneficas. Quando aliquis moritur plangunt vehemẽter vlulando: & tunc ſunt liberi quod non dant vectigal vſque ad annum. Et ſi quis intereſt morti alicujus adulti, non ingreditur domum ipſius Mangucham vſque ad annum. Si paruulus eſt qui moritur, non ingreditur vſque poſt lunationem. Iuxta ſepulturam defuncti ſemper relinquunt domum vnam. Si eſt de nobilibus, hoc eſt de genere Chingis, qui fuit primus pater & dominus eorum, illius qui moritur ignoratur ſepultura: & ſemper circa loca illa vbi ſepeliunt nobiles ſuos eſt vna herbergia hominum cuſtodientium ſepulturas. Non intellexi quod ipſi recondunt theſaurum cum mortuis. Comani faciunt magnum tumulum ſuper defunctum & erigunt ei ſtatuam verſa facie ad orientem, tenentem ciphum in manu ſua ante vmbelicum. fabricant & diuitibus pyramides, id eſt domunculas acutas: & alicubi vidi magnas turres de tegulis coctis: alicubi lapideas domos, quamuis lapides non inueniantur ibi. Vidi quendam nouiter defunctum, cui ſuſpenderant pelles ſexdecem equorum, ad quodlibet latus mundi quatuor inter perticas altas: & appoſuerunt ei coſmos vt biberet, & carnes vt comederet: & tamen dicebant de illo quod fuerat baptizatus. Alias vidi ſepulturas verſus orientem. Areas ſcilicet magnas ſtructas lapidibus, aliquas rotundas, aliquas quadratas, & poſtea quatuor lapides longos erectos ad quatuor regiones mundi circa aream. Et vbi aliquis infirmatur cubat in lecto & ponit ſignum ſuper domum ſuam, quod ibi eſt infirmus, & quod nullus ingrediatur: vnde nullus viſitat infirmum niſi ſeruiens eius. Quando etiam aliquis de magnis curijs infirmatur, ponunt cuſtodes longe circa curiam, qui infra illos terminos neminem permittunt tranſire: timent enim ne mali ſpiritus vel ventus veniant cum ingredientibus, Ipſos diuinatores vocant tanquam ſacerdotes ſuos.

QVando ergo ingreſſi ſumus inter illos barbaros, viſum fuit mihi, vt dixi ſuperius, quod ingrederer aliud ſæculum. Circumdederunt enim nos in equis poſtquam diu fecerant nos expectare ſedentes in vmbra ſub bigis nigris. Prima quæſtio fuit, vtrum vnquam fuiſſemus inter eos. habito quod non: inceperunt impudenter petere de cibarijs noſtris, & dedimus de pane biſcocto & vino quod attuleramus nobiſcum de villa: & potata vna lagena vini, petierunt aliam, dicentes, quod homo non ingreditur domum vno pede. non dedimus eis, excuſantes nos quod parum haberemus. Tunc quæſiuerunt vnde veniremus, & quo vellemus ire. dixi eis ſuperiora verba, quod audieramus de Sartach, quod eſſet Chriſtianus, & quod vellem ire ad eum, quia habebam deferre ei literas veſtras. Ipſi diligenter quæſiuerunt, vtrum irem de mea voluntate, vel vtrum mitterer. Ego reſpondi quod nemo coegit me ad eundum, nec iuiſſem niſi voluiſſem: vnde de mea voluntate ibam, & etiam de voluntate ſuperioris mei. Bene caui, quod nunquam dixi, me eſſe nuncium veſtrum. Tunc quæſiuerunt quid eſſet in bigis, vtrum eſſet aurum vel argentum, vel veſtes precioſæ, quas deferrem Sartach. Ego reſpondi, quod Sartach videret quid deferremus ei, quando perueniremus ad eum; & quod non intererat eorum iſta quærere: ſed facerent me deduci vſque ad capitaneum ſuum, & ipſe ſi vellet mihi præbere ducatum vſque ad Sartach faceret: ſin minus, reuerterer. Erat enim in illa prouincia vnus conſanguineus Baatu, nomine Scacatai, cui dominus imperator Conſtantinopolitanus mittebat literas deprecatorias, quod me permitteret tranſire. Tunc ipſi acquieuerunt, præbentes nobis equos & boues & duos homines, qui deducerent nos. Et alij qui adduxerant nos ſunt reuerſi. Prius tamen antequam prædicta darent, fecerunt nos diu expectare petentes de pane noſtro pro paruulis ſuis: Et omnia quæ videbant ſuper famulos noſtros, cultellos, chirothecas, burſas, corrigias, omnia admirantes & volentes habere. Excuſabam me, quia longa nobis reſtabat via, nec debebamus ita cito ſpoliare nos rebus neceſſarijs ad tantam viam perficiendam. Tunc dicebant quod eſſem barrator. Verum eſt quod nihil abſtulerint vi: Sed valde importune & impudenter petunt quæ vident. Et ſi dat homo eis perdit, quia ſunt ingrati. Reputant ſe dominos mundi, & videtur eis, quod nihil debeat eis negari ab aliquo. Si non dat, & poſtea indigeat ſeruicio eorum, male miniſtrant ei. Dederunt nobis bibere de lacte ſuo vaccino, a quo contractum erat butirum, acetoſo valde, quod ipſi vocant Apram: & ſic receſſimus ab eis. Et viſum fuit mihi recte, quod euaſiſſem de manibus dæmonum. In craſtino peruenimus ad capitaneum, Ex quo receſſimus a Soldaia vſque ad Sartach in duobus menſibus nunquam iacuimus mus in domo nec in tentorio, ſed ſemper ſub dio, vel ſub bigis noſtris, nec vidimus aliquam villam, vel veſtigium alicujus ædificij vbi fuiſſet villa, niſi tumbas Comanorũ in maxima multitudine. Illo ſero dedit nobis garcio qui ducebat nos bibere coſmos; ad cuius hauſtum totus ſudaui propter horrorem & nouitatem, quia nunquam biberam de eo. valde tamen ſapidum videbatur mihi, ſicut vere eſt.

De curia Scacatay, & quod Chriſtiani non bibunt coſmos.

MAne ergo obuiauimus bigis Scacatay onuſtis domibus. Et videbatur mihi quod obuiaret mihi ciuitas magna. Mirabar etiam ſuper multitudine armentorum boum & equorum & gregum ouium: paucos videbam homines qui iſta gubernarent. vnde inquiſiui quot homines haberet ſub ſe? & dictum fuit mihi, quod non pluſquam quingentos, quorum medietatem tranſiueramus in alia herbergia. Tunc incepit mihi dicere garcio qui ducebat nos, quod aliquid oporteret Scacatay dare: & ipſe fecit nos ſtare, & præceſſit nuncians aduentum noſtrum. Iam erat hora pluſquam tertia, & depoſuerunt domos ſuas iuxta quandam aquam. Et venit ad nos interpres ipſius, qui ſtatim cognito, quod nunquam fueramus inter illos, popoſcit de cibis noſtris, & dedimus ei, poſcebat etiam veſtimentum aliquod, quia dicturus erat verbũ noſtrum ante dominum ſuum. Excuſauimus nos. Quæſiuit quid portaremus domino ſuo? Accepimus vnum flaſconem de vino, & impleuimus vnum veringal de biſcocto & platellum vnum de pomis & aliis fructibus. Sed non placebat ei, quia non ferebamus aliquem pannum pretioſum. Sic tamen ingreſſi ſumus cum timore & verecundia. Sedebat ipſe in lecto ſuo tenens citharulam in manu, & vxor ſua iuxta eum: de qua credebã in veritate, quod amputaſſet ſibi naſum inter oculos vt ſimior eſſet: nihil enim habebat ibi de naſo, & vnxerat locum illum quodam vnguento nigro, & etiam ſupercilia: quod erat turpiſſimum in oculis noſtris. Tunc dixi ei verba ſupradicta. Vbique enim oportebat nos dicere idem verbum. Super hoc enim eramus bene præmoniti ab illis qui fuerant inter illos, quod nunquam mutaremus verba noſtra. Nota diligenter. Rogaui etiam eum vt dignaretur accipere munuſculum de manu noſtra, excuſans me, quia monachus eram, nec erat ordinis noſtri poſsidere aurum, vel argentum, vel veſtes precioſas. Vnde non habebam aliquid talium, quod poſſem ei dare: ſed de cibis noſtris acciperet pro benedictione. Tunc fecit recipi, & diſtribuit ſtatim hominibus ſuis qui conuenerant ad potandum. Dedi etiam ei literas Imperatoris Conſtantinopolitani: (Hoc fuit in octauis aſcenſionis) Qui ſtatim eas Soldaiam miſit vt ibi interpretarentur: quia erant in Græco, nec habebat ſecum qui ſciret literas Græcas. Quæſiuit etiam à nobis, ſi vellemus bibere coſmos, hoc eſt, lac iumentinum. Chriſtiani enim Ruteni, Græci, & Alani, qui ſunt inter eos, qui volunt ſtricte cuſtodire legem ſuam, non bibunt illud: Imo non reputant ſe Chriſtianos poſtquam biberunt. Et ſacerdotes eorum reconciliant eos, tanquam negaſſent fidem Chriſtianam. Ego reſpondi, quod habebamus adhuc ſufficienter ad bibendum: & cum ille potus deficeret nobis, oporteret nos bibere illud, quod daretur nobis. Quæſiuit etiam quid contineretur in literis noſtris, quas mittebatis Sartach. Dixi quod clauſæ erant bullæ noſtræ: & quod non erant in eis niſi bona verba & amicabilia. Quæſiuit & quæ verba diceremus Sartach? Reſpondi, Verba fidei Chriſtianę. Quæſiuit quæ? Quia libenter vellet audire. Tunc expoſui ei prout potui per interpretem meum, qui nullius erat ingenij, nec alicuius eloquentiæ, ſymbolũ fidei. Quo audito, ipſe tacuit & mouit caput. Tunc aſſignauit nobis duos homines, qui nos cuſtodirent, & equos & boues: & fecit nos bigare ſecum, donec reuerteretur nuncius, quem ipſe miſerat pro interpretatione literarum imperatoris; & iuimus cum eo vſque in craſtinum Pentecoſtes.

Qualiter Alani venerunt ad eos in vigilia Pentecoſtes.

IN vigilia Pentecoſtes venerunt ad nos quidam Alani, qui ibi dicuntur || Acias, Chriſtiani ſecundum ritum Græcorum; habentes literas Gręcas & ſacerdotes Græcos: tamen non ſunt ſchiſmatici ſicut Græci; ſed ſine acceptione perſonarum venerantur omnem Chriſtianum: & detulerunt nobis carnes coctas, rogantes vt comederemus de cibo eorum, & oraremus pro quodam defuncto eorum. Tunc dixi quod vigilia erat tantæ ſolennitatis, quod illa die non comederemus carnes. Et expoſui eis de ſolennitate, ſuper quo fuerunt multum gauiſi; quia omnia ignorabant quæ ſpectant ad ritum Chriſtianum, ſolo nomine Chriſti excepto. Quæſiuerunt & ipſi & alij multi Chriſtiani, Ruteni & Hungari, vtrum poſſent ſaluari, quia oportebat eos bibere coſmos, & comedere morticinia & interfecta à Saracenis & alijs infidelibus:

|| Vel Akas.

quæ etiam ipſi Græci & Ruteni ſacerdotes reputant quaſi morticinia vel idolis immolata : quia ignorabant tempora ieiunij : nec poterant cuſtodire etiam ſi cognouiſſent. Tunc rectificabar eos prout potui, docens & confortans in fide. Carnes quas detulerant reſeruauimus vſque ad diem feſtum : nihil enim inueniebamus venale pro auro & argento, niſi pro telis & alijs ‖ pannis : & illos non habebamus, Quum famuli noſtri offerebant eis ipperpera, ipſi fricabant digitis, & ponebant ad nares, vt odore ſentirent, vtrum eſſent cuprum. Nec dabant nobis cibum niſi lac vaccinum acre valde & fœtidum, Vinum iam deficiebat nobis. Aqua ita turbabatur ab equis, quod non erat potabilis. Niſi fuiſſet biſcoctum quod habebamus, & gratia dei, fortè fuiſſemus mortui.

De Saraceno qui dixit ſe velle baptizarj, et de hominibus qui apparent leproſi.

IN die pentecoſtes venit ad nos quidam Saracenus, qui cum loqueretur nobiſcum, incepimus exponere fidem. Qui audiens beneficia dei exhibita humano generi in incarnatione Chriſti, & reſurrectionem mortuorum, & iudicium futurum, & quod ablutio peccatorum eſſet in baptiſmo : dixit ſe velle baptizari. Et cum pararemus nos ad baptizandum eum, ipſe ſubito aſcendit equum ſuum, dicens ſe iturum domum & habiturum conſilium cum vxore ſua. Qui in craſtino loquens nobiſcum, dixit quod nullo modo auderet accipere baptiſma, quia tunc non biberet coſmos. Chriſtiani enim illius loci hoc dicebant, quod nullus verus Chriſtianus deberet bibere : & ſine potu illo non poſſet viuere in ſolitudine illa. A qua opinione nullo modo potui diuertere illum. Vnde noueritis pro certo quod multũ elongantur à fide propter illam opinionem quæ iam viguit inter illos per Rutenos, quorum maxima multitudo eſt inter eos. Illa die dedit nobis ille capitaneus vnum hominem, qui nos deduceret vſque ad Sartach : & duos qui ducerent nos vſque ad proximam herbergiam; quæ inde diſtabat quinque dietas prout boues poterant ire. Dederunt etiam nobis vnam capram pro cibo & plures vtres lactis vaccini, & de coſmos parum : quia illud precioſum eſt inter illos. Et ſic arripientes iter rectè in aquilonem, viſum fuit mihi quod vnam portam inferni tranſiſſemus. Garciones qui ducebant nos, incipiebant nobis audacter furari, quia videbant nos parum cautos. Tandem amiſſis pluribus vexatio dabat nobis intellectum. Peruenimus tandem ad extremitatem illius prouinciæ, quæ clauditur vno foſſato ab vno mari vſque ad aliud : extra quam erat herbergia eorum apud quos intraſſemus : videbantur nobis leproſi omnes : quia erant viles homines ibi collocati, vt reciperent tributum ab accipientibus ſal a ſalinis ſuperius dictis. Ab illo loco, vt dicebant, oportebat nos ambulare quindecim diebus, quibus non inueniremus populum. Cum illis bibimus coſmos: & dedimus illis vnum veringal plenum fructibus & panem biſcoctum. Qui dederunt nobis octo boues, vnam capram pro tanto itinere, & neſcio quot vtres plenos lacte vaccino. Sic mutatis bobus arripuinus iter, quod perfecimus decem diebus vſque ad aliam herbergiam : nec inuenimus aquam in illa via niſi in foſſis in conuallibus factis, exceptis duobus paruis fluminibus. Et tendebamus rectè in orientem ex quo exiuimus prædictam prouinciam Gaſariæ, habentes mare ad meridiem & vaſtam ſolitudinem ad aquilonem : quæ durat per viginti dietas alicubi in latitudine : In qua nulla eſt ſylua, nullus mons, nullus lapis. Herba eſt optima. In hac ſolebant paſcere Comani, qui dicuntur Capchat. A Tentonicis verò dicuntur Valani, & prouincia Valania. Ab Iſidoro vero dicitur à flumine Tanai vſque ad paludes Meotidis & Danubium Alania. Et durat iſta terra in longitudine a Danubio vſque Tanaim; qui eſt terminus Aſiæ & Europæ, itinere duorum menſium velociter equitando prout equitant Tartari: Quæ tota inhabitabatur à Comanis Capchat, & etiam vltra à Tanai vſque ‖ Etiliam : Inter quæ flumina ſunt decem dietæ magnæ. Ad aquilonem verò iſtius prouincię iacet Ruſſia, quę vbique ſyluas habet, & protenditur à Polonia & Hungaria vſque Tanaim : quæ tota vaſtata eſt à Tartaris, & adhuc quotidie vaſtatur. Præponunt enim Rutenis, quia ſunt Chriſtiani, Saracenos: & cum non poſſunt amplius dare aurum vel argentum, ducunt eos & paruulos eorum tanquam greges ad ſolitudinem vt cuſtodiant animalia eorum. Vltra Ruſſiam ad aquilonem eſt Pruſſia, quam nuper ſubiugauerunt totam fratres Teutonici. Et certe de facili acquierent Ruſſiam, ſi apponerent manum, Si enim Tartari audirent, quod magnus ſacerdos, hoc eſt, Papa faceret cruce ſignari contra eos, omnes fugerent ad ſolitudines ſuas.

De tedijs quæ patiebantur, & de ſepultura Comanorum.

IBbanus ergo verſus orientem, nihil videntes niſi cœlum & terram, & aliquando mare ad dextram, quod dicitur Mare Tanais, & etiam ſepulturas Comanorum, quæ apparebant nobis à duabus leucis ſecundum quod ſolebant parentelæ eorum ſepeliri ſimul. Quam diu eramus in ſolitudine bene erat nobis: quòd tędium quod patiebar quum veniebamus ad manſiones eorum non poſſem exprimere verbis. Volebat enim dux noſter, quod ad quoſlibet capitaneos ingrederer cum xenio: & ad hoc non ſufficiebant expenſæ. Quotidie enim eramus octo perſonæ comedentes viaticum noſtrũ exceptis ſeruientibus, qui omnes volebant comedere nobiſcum. Nos enim eramus quinque, & ipſi tres qui ducebant nos: duo ducentes bigas, & vnus iturus nobiſcum vſque ad Sartach. Carnes quas dabant non ſufficiebant; nec inueniebamus aliquid venale pro moneta. Et cum ſedebamus ſub bigis noſtris pro vmbra, quia calor erat ibi maximus illo tempore, ipſi ita importune ingerebant ſe nobis, quod conculcabant nos, volentes omnia noſtra videre. Si arripiebat eos appetitus purgandi ventrem, non elongabant ſe a nobis, quam poſſit faba iactari. Imo iuxta nos colloquentes mutuò faciebant immunditias ſuas: & multa alia faciebant quæ erant ſupra modum tędioſa. Super omnia grauabat me, quod cum volebam dicere eis aliquod verbum ædificationis, interpres meus dicebat, non facietis me prædicare; quia neſcio talia verba dicere. Et verum dicebat. Ego enim perpendi poſtea, quum incepi aliquantulum intelligere idioma, quod quum dicebam vnum, ipſe totum aliud dicebat, ſecundum quod ei occurrebat. Tunc videns periculum loquendi per ipſum, elegi magis tacere. Ambulauimus ergo cum magno labore de manſione in manſionem: ita quod paucis diebus ante feſtum beatæ Mariæ Magdalenæ veni ad fluuium magnum Tanais: qui diuidit Aſiam ab Europa, ſicut Nilus fluuius Ægypti, Aſiam ab Africa. In illo loco quo applicuimus fecerunt Baatu & Sartach fieri quoddam caſale de Rutenis in ripa orientali, qui transferunt nuncios & mercatores cum nauiculis. Ipſi tranſtulerunt nos primo & poſtea bigas ponentes vnam rotam in vna barca & aliam in alia, ligantes barcas ad inuicem; & ſic remigantes tranſibant. Ibi egit dux noſter valde ſtulte. Ipſe enim credebat, quod illi de caſali deberent nobis miniſtrare equos, & dimiſit animalia quæ adduxeramus in alia biga, vt redirent ad dominos ſuos. Et quum poſtulauimus ab eis animalia, ipſi reſpondebant quod habebant priuilegiũ à Baatu, quod non tenerentur ad aliud, niſi transferre euntes & redeuntes: etiam à mercatoribus accipiebant magnum tributum. Stetimus ergo ibi in ripa fluminis tribus diebus. Prima die dederunt nobis magnam borbatam recentem: ſecunda die panem de ſiligine & parum de carnibus, quas acceperat procurator villæ oſtiatim per diuerſas domos. Tertia die piſces ſiccos, quos habent ibi in magna multitudine. Fluuius ille erat ibi tantæ latitudinis, quantæ eſt Sequana Pariſijs. Et antequam perueniſſemus ad locum illum, tranſiuimus multas aquas pulcherrimas & piſcoſiſſimas: Sed Tartari neſciunt eos capere: nec curant de piſce niſi ſit ita magnus, quod poſſunt comedere carnes eius, ſicut carnes arietinas. Ille fluuius eſt terminus Orientalis Ruſſiæ; & oritur de paludibus quæ pertingunt ad Oceanum ad aquilonem. Fluuius vero currit ad meridiem in quoddam magnum Mare ſeptingentorum millium, antequam pertingat ad Mare Ponti: Et omnes aquæ quas tranſiuimus vadunt ad illas partes. Habet etiam prędictum flumen magnam ſyluam in ripa Occidentali. Vltra locum illum non aſcendunt Tartari verſus Aquilonem: quia tunc temporis ‖ circa introitum Auguſti incipiunt redire verſus meridiem. Vnde aliud eſt caſale inferius vbi tranſeunt nuncij tempore hyemali. Eramus igitur ibi in magna anguſtia, quia nec equos nec boues inueniebamus pro pecunia. Tandem poſtquam oſtendi eis, quod laboraui pro communi vtilitate omnium Chriſtianorum, accõmodauerunt nobis boues & homines: nos autem oportebat ire pedibus. Tunc temporis metebant ſiliginem: triticum non proficiebat ibi bene. Milium habent in magna copia. Mulieres Rutenæ ornant capita ſicut noſtræ. Supertunicalia ſua exterius ornant vario vel griſio a pedibus vſque ad genua. Homines portant capas ſicut Teutonici: ſed in capite portant pileos de filtro acutos in ſummitate longo acumine. Ambulauimus ergo tribus diebus non inuenientes populum. Et cum eſſemus valde fatigati & boues ſimiliter, nec ſciremus quorſum poſſemus Tartaros inuenire, accurrerunt ſubito duo equi, quos recepimus cum gaudio magno, & aſcenderunt eos dux noſter & interpres, vt ſpecularentur quorſum poſſemus populum inuenire. Tandem quarta die inuentis hominibus gauiſi ſumus tanquam naufragi venientes ad portum. Tunc acceptis equis & bobus iuimus de manſione ad manſionem donec peruenimus vſque ad herbergiam Sartach ſecundo Calendas Auguſti.

De Curia Sartach & de gloria eius.

Coiat Neſtorinus.

INuenimus ergo Sartach prope Etiliam per tres dietas: cuius curia valde magna videbatur nobis: quia habet ſex vxores, & filius eius primogenitus iuxta eum duas vel tres: & quælibet habet domum magnam & bigas forte ducentas. Acceſſit autem ductor noſter ad quendam Neſtorinum Coiat nomine, qui eſt vnus de maioribus Curiæ ſuæ. Ille fecit nos ire valde longe ad domini Iannam. Ita vocant illum qui habet officium recipiendi nuncios. In ſero præcepit nobis dictus Coiat, vt veniremus ad eum. Tunc incepit quærere ductor noſter quid portaremus ei, & cœpit multum ſcandalizari, quum vidit quod nihil parabamus ad portandum. Stetimus coram eo, & ipſe ſedebat in gloria ſua & faciebat ſonare citharam & ſaltare coram ſe. Tunc dixi ei verba prædicta qualiter veniremus ad dominum eius, rogans eum vt iuuaret nos vt Dominus eius videret literas noſtras. Excuſaui etiam me quia monachus eram, non habens, nec recipiens, nec tractans aurum vel argentum vel aliquid precioſum, ſolis libris & capella in qua ſeruiebamus deo exceptis: vnde nullum xenium afferebamus ei nec domino ſuo. Qui enim propria dimiſeram, non poteram portator eſſe alienorum. Tunc reſpondit ſatis manſuete, quod bene faciebam ex quo eram monachus: ſic ſeruarem votum meum, & non indigebat rebus noſtris; ſed magis daret nobis de ſuis, ſi indigeremus: & fecit nos ſedere & bibere de lacte ſuo, Et poſt pauca rogauit vt diceremus benedictionem pro eo, quod & fecimus. Quæſiuit & quis eſſet maior dominus inter Francos. Dixi, Imperator, ſi haberet terram ſuam in pace. Non, inquit, ſed Rex Franciæ. Audiuerat enim de vobis à domino Baldewyno de Hannonia. Inueni etiam ibi vnum de Socijs domus Dominicæ, qui fuerat in Cypro, qui narrauerat omnia quæ viderat. Tunc reuerſi ſumus ad hoſpitium noſtrum. In craſtino miſi ei vnum flaſconem de vino Muſcato, quod optime ſe cuſtodierat in tam longa via; & cophinum plenum biſcocto quod fuit ei gratiſſimum, & retinuit illo ſero famulos noſtros ſecum. In craſtino mandauit mihi quod venirem ad curiam; afferens literas regis & capellam & libros mecum, quia dominus ſuus vellet videre ea: quod & fecimus, onerantes vnam bigam libris & capella, & aliam pane & vino & fructibus. Tunc fecit omnes libros & veſtes explicari, & circumſtabant nos in equis multi Tartari & Chriſtiani & Saraceni: quibus inſpectis, quæſiuit, ſi vellem iſta omnia dare domino ſuo, quo audito, expaui, & diſplicuit mihi verbum, diſſimulans tamen reſpondi, domine rogamus, quatenus dominus noſter dignetur recipere panem iſtum, vinum & fructus non pro xenio quia exiguum quid eſt, ſed pro benedictione, ne vacua manu veniamus coram eo. Ipſe autem videbit literas domini regis, & per eas ſciet, qua de cauſa venimus ad eum: & tunc ſtabimus mandato eius nos & omnes res noſtræ. Veſtes enim ſanctæ ſunt, & non licet eas contingere niſi ſacerdotibus. Tunc præcepit quod indueremus nos ituri coram domino ſuo: quod & fecimus. Ego autem indutus precioſioribus veſtibus accepi in pectore puluinar, quod erat valde pulchrum, & biblium quod dederatis mihi, pſalterium pulcherrimum, quod dederat mihi domina regina, in quo erant picturæ pulchræ. Socius meus accepit miſſale & crucem, clericus indutus ſuperſilicio accepit thuribulum: ſic acceſſimus ante dominum eius: & leuauerunt filtrum quod pendebat ante oſtium vt nos poſſet videre. Tunc fecerunt flectere genua ter clerico & interpreti: à nobis non requiſiuerunt. Tunc monuerunt nos valde diligenter, vt caueremus ingrediendo & egrediendo ne tangeremus limen domus, & vt cantaremus aliquam benedictionem pro eo. Tunc ingreſſi ſumus cantando, Salue regina. In introitu autem oſtij ſtabat bancus cum coſmos & cum ciphis. Et conuenerant omnes vxores eius: & ipſi Moal. Ingredientes nobiſcum comprimebant nos. Illic Coiac tulit ei thuribulum cum incenſo, quod ipſe reſpexit, tenens in manu diligenter: poſtea tulit ei pſalterium quod valde reſpexit, & vxor eius ſedens iuxta eum. Poſtea tulit biblium, & ipſe quæſiuit, ſi euangelium eſſet ibi. Dixi, etiam tota Scriptura Sacra. Accepit etiam crucem in manu ſua, & quæſiuit de imagine, vtrum eſſet imago Chriſti? Reſpondi quod ſic. Ipſi Neſtoriani & Armeni nunquam faciunt ſuper cruces ſuas figuram Chriſti. Vnde videntur male ſentire de paſſione, vel erubeſcunt eam. Poſtea fecit circumſtantes nos retrahere ſe, vt plenius poſſet videre ornamenta noſtra. Tunc obtuli ei literas veſtras cum tranſcriptis in Arabico & Syriano. Feceram enim eas transferri in Acon in vtraque litera & lingua. Et ibi erant ſacerdotes Armeni, qui ſciebant Turcicum & Arabicum, & Ille Socius domus Domini qui ſciebat Syrianum, & Turcicum & Arabicum. Tunc exiuimus & depoſuimus veſtimenta noſtra: & venerunt ſcriptores & ille Coiac, & fecerunt literas interpretari. Quibus auditis, fecit recipi panem & vinum & fructus: veſtimenta & libros fecit nos reportare ad hoſpitium. Hoc actum eſt in feſto Sancti Petri ad vincula.

& leuauerunt

Qualiter habuerunt in mandatis adire Baatu patrem Sartach.

IN craſtino mane venit quidam ſacerdos frater ipſius Coiac poſtulans vaſculum cum chriſmate, quia Sartach volebat illud videre, vt dicebat, & dedimus ei. Hora veſpertina vocauit nos Coiac, dicens nobis: Dominus rex ſcripſit bona verba Domino meo: Sed ſunt in eis difficilia, de quibus nihil auderet facere, ſine conſilio patris ſui. Vnde oportet vos ire ad patrem ſuum, & duas bigas quas adduxiſtis heri cum veſtimentis & libris dimittetis mihi, quia Dominus meus vult res diligentius videre. Ego ſtatim ſuſpicatus ſum malum de cupiditate eius, & dixi ei. Domine, non ſolum illas ſed etiam duas quas adhuc habemus relinquemus ſub cuſtodia veſtra. Non inquit, illas relinquetis, de alijs facietis velle veſtrum. Dixi quod hoc nullo modo poſſet fieri. Sed totam dimitteremus ei. Tunc quæſiuit ſi vellemus morari in terra? Ego dixi, Si bene intellexiſtis literas domini regis, poteſtis ſcire, quod ſic. Tunc dixit, quod oporteret nos eſſe patientes multum, & humiles. Sic diſceſſimus ab eo illo ſero. In craſtino mane miſit vnum ſacerdotem Neſtorinum pro bigis, & nos duximus omnes quatuor. Tunc occurrens nobis frater ipſius Coiacis, ſeperauit omnia noſtra ab ipſis rebus quas tuleramus pridie ad curiam, & illa accepit tanquam ſua, ſcilicet libros & veſtimenta: & Coiac præceperat, quod ferremus nobiſcum veſtimenta quibus induti fueramus coram Sartach vt illis indueremur coram Baatu ſi expediret: quas ille ſacerdos abſtulit nobis vi, dicens: Tu attuliſti eas ad Sartach, modo vis ferre Baatu? Et cum vellem ei reddere rationem, reſpondit mihi, Ne loquaris nimis, & vade viam tuam. Tunc neceſſaria fuit patientia, quia apud Sartach, non patebat nobis ingreſſus; nec aliquis erat, qui nobis exhiberet iuſticiam. Timebam etiam de interprete, ne ipſe aliquid aliter dixiſſet, quam ego dixiſſem ei: quia ipſe bene voluiſſet, quod de omnibus feciſſemus xenium. Vnum erat mihi ſolacium, quia quum perſenſi cupiditatem eorum, ego ſubtraxi de libris Biblium & ſententias, & alios libros quos magis diligebam. Pſalterium dominæ reginæ non fui auſus ſubtrahere, quia illud fuerat nimis notatum propter aureas picturas quæ erant in eo. Sic ergo reuerſi ſumus cum duobus reſiduis bigis ad hoſpitium noſtrum. Tunc venit ille, qui debebat ducere nos ad Baatu, volens cum feſtinatione arripere iter: cui dixi quod nulla ratione ducerem bigas. Quod ipſe retulit ad Coiac. Tunc præcepit Coiac quod relinqueremus eas apud ipſum cum garcione noſtro: quod & fecimus. Sic ergo euntes verſus Baatu recta in Orientem, tertia die peruenimus ad Etiliam: cuius aquas cum vidi, mirabar vnde ab Aquilone deſcenderunt tantæ aquæ. Antequam recederemus à Sartach, dixit nobis ſupradictus Coiac cum alijs multis ſcriptoribus curiæ, Nolite dicere quod dominus noſter ſit Chriſtianus, ſed Moal. Quia nomen Chriſtianitatis videtur eis nomen cuiuſdam gentis. In tantam ſuperbiam ſunt erecti, quod quamuis aliquid forte credant de Chriſto, tamen nolunt dici Chriſtiani volentes nomen ſuum, hoc eſt, Moal

TEmpore quo Franci ceperunt Antiochiam tenebat monarchiam in illis lateribus Aquilonis quidam qui vocabatur Concan, Con eſt proprium nomen: Can nomen dignitatis quod idem eſt qui diuinator. Omnes diuinatores vocant Can. Vnde principes dicuntur Can, quia penes eos ſpectat regimen populi per diuinationem. Vnde legitur in hiſtoria Antiochiæ, quod Turci miſerunt propter ſuccurſum contra Francos ad regnum Con can. De illis enim partibus venerunt omnes Turci. Iſte Con erat Cara-Catay. Cara idem eſt quod nigrum. Catai nomen gentis. Vndè Cara-Catay idem eſt quod nigri Catay. Et hoc dicitur ad differentiam ipſorum Catay qui erant in Oriente ſuper Oceanum de quibus poſtea dicam vobis. Iſti Catay erant in quibuſdam alpibus per quas tranſiui. Et in quadam planicie inter illas Alpes erat quidam Neſtorinus paſtor potens & dominus ſuper populum, qui dicebatur Yayman, qui erant Chriſtiani Neſtorini. Mortuo Con can eleuauit ſe ille Neſtorius in regem, & vocabant eum Neſtoriani Regem Iohannem: & plus dicebant de ipſo in decuplo quàm veritas eſſet. Ita enim faciunt Neſtoriani venientes de partibus illis. De nihilo enim faciunt magnos rumores. Vnde diſſeminauerunt de Sartach quod eſſet Chriſtianus, & de Mangu Can & Ken can: quia faciunt maiorem reuerentiam Chriſtianis, quàm alijs populis, & tamen in veritate Chriſtiani non ſunt. Sic ergo exiuit magna fama de illo Rege Iohanne. Et quando ego tranſiui per paſcua eius, nullus aliquid ſciebat de eo niſi Neſtoriani pauci. In paſcuis eius habitat Kencam, apud cuius curiam fuit frater Andreas: & ego etiam tranſiui per eam in reditu. Huic Iohanni erat frater quidam potens, paſtor ſimiliter, nomine Vut: & ipſe erat vltra Alpes ipſorum Caracatay, diſtans à fratre ſuo ſpacium trium hebdomadarum & erat dominus cuiuſdam Villulæ quæ dicitur Caracarum, populum habens ſub ſe, qui dicebantur Crit, Merkit, qui erant Chriſtiani Neſtorini. Sed ipſe dominus eorum dimiſſo cultu Chriſti, ſectabatur idola; habens ſacerdotes idolorum, qui omnes ſunt inuocatores dæmonum & ſortilegi. Vltra paſcua iſtius ad decem vel quindecem dietas erant paſcua Moal: qui erant pauperrimi homines ſine capitaneo & ſine lege, exceptis ſortilegijs & diuinationibus, quibus omnes in partibus illis intendunt. Et iuxta Moal erant alij pauperes, qui dicebantur Tartari. Rex Iohannes mortuus fuit ſine hærede, & ditatus eſt frater eius Vnc; & faciebat ſe vocari Can: & mittebantur armenta greges eius vſque ad terminos Moal. Tunc temporis Chingis faber quidam erat in populo Moal: & furabatur de animalibus Vnc can quod poterat: In tantum quod conqueſti ſunt paſtores Vut domino ſuo. Tunc congregauit exercitum & equitauit in terram Moal, quærens ipſum Cyngis. Et ille fugit inter Tartaros & latuit ibi. Tunc ipſe Vut accepta prædà Moal & à Tartaris reuerſus eſt. Tunc ipſe Cyngis allocutus eſt Tartaros & ipſos Moal dicens, Quia ſine duce ſumus opprimunt nos vicini noſtri. Et fecerunt ipſum ducem & capitaneum Tartari & Moal. Tunc latenter congregato exercitu irruit ſuper ipſum Vut, & vicit ipſum, & ipſe fugit in Cathaiam. Ibi capta fuit filia eius, quam Cyngis dedit vni ex filijs in vxorem, ex quo ipſa ſuſcepit iſtum qui nunc regnat Mangu. Tunc ipſe Cyngis promittebat vbique ipſos Tartaros: & inde exiuit nomen eorum, quia vbique clamabatur, Ecce Tartari veniunt. Sed per crebra bella modo omnes fere deleti ſunt. Vnde iſti Moal modo volunt extinguere illud nomen, & ſuum eleuare. Terra illa in qua primo fuerunt, & vbi eſt adhuc curia Cyngiscan, vocatur Mancherule. Sed quia Tartari eſt regio circa quam fuit acquiſitio eorum, illam ciuitatem habent pro regali, & ibi prope eligunt ſuum Can.

De Rutenis

De Rutenis & Hungaris, & Alanis, & de mari Caſpio.

DE Sartach autem vtrum credit in Chriſtum vel non neſcio. Hoc ſcio quod Chriſtianus non vult dici. Immò magis videtur mihi deridere Chriſtianos. Ipſe enim eſt in itinere Chriſtianorum, ſcilicet Rutenorum, Blacorum, Bulgarorum minoris Bulgariæ, Soldainorum, Kerkiſorum, Alanorum: qui omnes tranſeunt per eum quum vadunt ad curiam patris ſui deferre ei munera, vnde magis amplectitur eos. Tamen ſi Saraceni veniant, & maius afferant, citiùs expediuntur. Habet etiam circa ſe Neſtorinos ſacerdotes, qui pulſant tabulam, & cantant officium ſuum.

Berta vel Berca,

Eſt alius qui dicitur Berta ſuper Baatu, qui paſcit verſus Portam ferream, vbi eſt iter Saracenorum omnium qui veniunt de Perſide & de Turchia, qui euntes ad Baatu, & tranſeuntes per eum, deferunt ei munera. Et ille facit ſe Saracenum, & non permittit in terra ſua comedi carnes porcinas. Baatu in reditu noſtro præceperat ei, quod transferret ſe de illo loco vltra Etiliam ad Orientem, nolens nuncios Saracenorum tranſire per eum, quia videbatur ſibi damnoſum.

Quatuor autem diebus quibus fuimus in curia Sartach, nunquam prouiſum fuit nobis de cibo, niſi ſemel de modico coſmos. In via verò inter ipſum & patrem ſuum habuimus magnum timorem. Ruteni etiam & Hungari, & Alani ſerui eorum, quorum eſt magna multitudo inter eos, aſſociant ſe viginti vel triginta ſimul, & fugiunt de nocte, habentes pharetras & arcus, & quemcunque inueniunt de nocte interficiunt, de die latitantes. Et quando ſunt equi eorum fatigati veniunt de nocte ad multitudinem equorum in paſcuis, & mutant equos, & vnum vel duos ducunt ſecum, vt comedant quum indiguerint. Occurſum ergo talium timebat multum Dux noſter. In illa via fuiſſemus mortui fame, ſi non portauiſſemus nobiſcum modicum de biſcocto.

Exacta maris Caſpij deſcriptio.

Venimus tandem ad Etiliam maximum flumen. Eſt enim in quadruplo maius quàm Sequana, & profundiſſimum: Veniens de maiori Bulgaria, quæ eſt ad Aquilonem, tendens in quendam lacum, ſiue quoddam mare, quod modò vocant mare Sircan, à quadam ciuitate, quæ eſt iuxta ripam eius in Perſide. Sed Iſidorus vocat illud mare Caſpium. Habet enim montes Caſpios, & Perſidem à meridie: montes verò Muſihet, hoc eſt, Aſſaſſinorum ad Orientem, qui contiguantur cum montibus Caſpijs: Ad Aquilonem verò habet illam ſolitudinem, in qua modò ſunt Tartari. Prius verò erant ibi quidam qui dicebantur Canglæ: Et ex illo latere recipit Etiliam, qui creſcit in æſtate ſicut Nilus Ægypti. Ad Occidentem verò habet montes Alanorum & Leſgi; & Portam ferream, & montes Georgianorum. Habet igitur illud mare tria latera inter montes, Aquilonare verò habet ad planiciem. Frater Andreas ipſe circumdedit duo latera eius, meridionale ſcilicet & Orientale. Ego verò alia duo; Aquilonare ſcilicet in eundo à Baatu ad Mangu cham, Occidentale verò in reuertendo de Baatu in Syriam. Quatuor menſibus poteſt circundari. Et non eſt verum quod dicit Iſidorus, quòd ſit ſinus exiens ab Oceano: nuſquam enim tangit Oceanum, ſed vndique circundatur terra.

TOta illa regio à latere Occidentali iſtius maris, vbi ſunt Porta ferrea Alexandri, & montes Alanorum, vſq; ad Oceanum Aquilonarem & paludes Mæotidis vbi mergitur Tanais, ſolebat dici Albania: de qua dicit Iſidorus, quòd habet canes ita magnos, tantæque feritatis, vt tauros premant, leones perimant. Quod verũ eſt, prout intellexi à narrantibus, quod ibi verſus Oceanum Aquilonarem faciunt canes trahere in bigis ſicut boues propter magnitudinem & fortitudinem eorum. In illo ergo loco vbi nos applicuimus ſuper Etiliam eſt caſale nouum, quod fecerunt Tartari de Rutenis mixtim, qui tranſponunt nuncios euntes, & redeuntes ad curiam Baatu: quia Baatu eſt in vlteriori ripa verſus Orientem: nec tranſit illum locum vbi nos applicuimus aſcendendo in æſtate, ſed iam incipiebat deſcendere. De Ianuario enim vſque ad Auguſtum aſcendit ipſe, & omnes alij verſus frigidas regiones, & in Auguſto incipiunt redire. Deſcendimus ergo in naui ab illo caſali vſque ad curiam eius. Et ab illo loco vſque ad villas maioris Bulgarię verſus Aquilonem, ſunt quinque dietæ. Et miror quis Diabolus portauit illuc legem Machometi. A Porta enim ferrea, quæ eſt exitus Perſidis, ſunt pluſquam triginta dietæ per tranſuerſum, ſolitudinem aſcendendo iuxta Etiliam vſque in illam Bulgariam, vbi nulla eſt ciuitas, niſi quædam caſalia propè vbi cadit Etilia in mare. Et illi Bulgari ſunt peſſimi Saraceni, fortius tenentes legem Machometi, quàm aliqui alij. Quum ergo vidi curiam Baatu, expaui; quia videbantur propè domus eius, quaſi quædam magna ciuitas protenſa in lõgum, & populus vndiq; circumfuſus, vſq; ad tres vel quatuor leucas. Et ſicut populus Iſrael ſciebat vnuſquiſq;, ad quam regionem tabernaculi deberet figere tentoria: ita ipſi ſciunt ad quod latus curiæ debeant ſe collocare, quando ipſi deponunt domus. Vnde dicitur curia Orda lingua eorum, quod ſonat medium, quia ſemper eſt in medio hominum ſuorum: hoc excepto, quod rectà ad meridiem nullus ſe collocat, quia ad partem illam aperiuntur portæ Curiæ: Sed à dextris & à ſiniſtris extendunt ſe quantum volunt ſecundum exigentiam locorum: dummodo rectè ante curiam, vel ex oppoſito curiæ non deſcendunt. Fuimus ergo ducti ad quendam Saracenum, qui non prouidebat nobis de aliquo cibo: ſequenti die fuimus ad curiam, & fecerat extendi magnum tentorium, quia domus non potuiſſet capere tot homines & mulieres, quot conuenerant. Monuit nos ductor noſter vt non loqueremur, donec Baatu præciperet: & tunc loqueremur breuiter. Quæſiuit etiam vtrum miſiſſetis nuncios ad eos. Dixi qualiter miſeratis ad Kencham, & quod nec ad ipſum miſiſſetis nuncios, nec ad Sartach literas, niſi credidiſſetis eos fuiſſe Chriſtianos: quia non pro timore aliquo, ſed ex congratulatione, quia audiueratis eos eſſe Chriſtianos, miſiſtis. Tunc duxit nos ad papilionem: & monebamur, ne tangeremus cordas tentorij, quas ipſi reputant loco liminis domus. Stetimus ibi nudis pedibus in habitu noſtro diſcoopertis capitibus, & eramus ſpectaculum magnum in oculis eorum. Fuerat enim ibi frater Iohannes de Plano carpini, ſed ipſe mutauerat habitum ne contemneretur; quia erat nuncius Domini Papæ. Tunc inducti fuimus vſque ad medium tentorij, nec requiſiuerunt vt faceremus aliquam reuerentiam genua flectendo, ſicut ſolent facere nuncij. Stetimus ergo coram eo quantum poſſit dici, Miſerere mei Deus: & omnes erant in ſummo ſilentio. Ipſe verò ſuper ſolium longum ſedebat & latum ſicut lectus, totum deauratum, ad quod aſcendebatur tribus gradibus, & vna domina iuxta eum. Viri vero diffuſi ſedebant à dextris dominæ & à ſiniſtris: quod non implebant mulieres ex parte vna, quia erant ibi ſolæ vxores Baatu, implebant viri. Bancus verò cum coſmos & ciphis maximis aureis & argenteis, ornatis lapidibus prætioſis erat in introitu tentorij. Reſpexit ergo nos diligentius, & nos eum: & videbatur mihi ſimilis in ſtatura Domino Iohanni de Bello monte cuius anima requieſcit in pace. Erat etiam vultus eius tunc perfuſus gutta roſea. Tandem præcepit vt loquerer. Tunc ductor noſter pręcepit vt flecteremus genua, & loqueremur. Flexi vnum genu tanquam homini: tunc innuit quod ambo flecterem, quod & feci, nolens contendere ſuper hoc. Tunc præcepit quod loquerer. Et ego cogitans quod orarem Dominum, quia flexeram ambo genua, Incepi verba oratione, dicens: Domine, nos oramus Dominum, à quo bona cuncta procedunt, qui dedit vobis iſta terrena, vt det vobis poſt hęc cœleſtia: quia hæc ſine illis vana ſunt. Et ipſe diligenter auſcultauit, & ſubiunxi: Noueritis pro certo quòd cœleſtia non habebitis, niſi fueritis Chriſtianus. Dicit enim Deus, Qui crediderit & baptizatus fuerit, ſaluus erit: qui vero non crediderit, condemnabitur. Ad illud verbum ipſe modeſtè ſubriſit, & alij Moal inceperunt plaudere manus deridendo nos. Et obſtupuit interpres meus, quem oportuit me confortare ne timerem. Tunc facto ſilentio, dixi: Ego veni ad filium veſtrum, quia audiuimus quòd eſſet Chriſtianus, & attuli ei literas ex parte Domini Regis Francorum: ipſe miſit me huc ad vos. Vos debetis ſcire qua de cauſa. Tunc fecit me ſurgere. Et quæſiuit nomen veſtrum, & meum, & ſocij mei, & interpretis, & fecit omnia ſcribi. Quæſiuit etiam, quia intellexerat quod exieratis terram veſtram cum exercitu vt haberetis bellum. Reſpondi, Contra Saracenos violantes domum Dei Hieruſalem. Quæſiuit etiam ſi vnquam miſiſſetis nuncios ad eum. Ad vos dixi nunquam. Tunc fecit nos ſedere, & dari de lacte ſuo ad bibendum, quod ipſi valdè magnum reputant, quando aliquis bibit coſmos cum eo in domo ſua. Et dum ſedens reſpicerem terram, præcepit vt eleuarem vultum, volens adhuc nos amplius reſpicere, vel fortè pro ſortilegio: quia habent pro malo omine vel ſigno, vel pro mala Prognoſtica, quando aliquis ſedet coram eis inclinata facie quaſi triſtis, maximè quum appodiat maxillam, vel mentum ſuper manum. Tunc exiuimus, & poſt pauca, venit Ductor noſter ad nos, & ducens nos ad hoſpitium, dixit mihi, Dominus Rex rogat, quod retinearis in terra iſta: & hoc non poteſt Baatu facere ſine conſcientia Mangu cham. Vnde oportet quod tu & interpres tuus eatis ad Mangu cham. Socius verò tuus & alius homo reuertentur ad curiam Sartach ibi expectantes donec reuertaris. Tunc incepit homo D E I Interpres lugere reputans ſe perditum: Socius etiam meus conteſtari, quod citius amputarent ei caput, quam quod diuideretur à me. Et ego dixi, quod ſine ſocio non poſſem ire: Et etiam quod benè indigebamus duobus famulis, quia ſi contingeret vnum infirmari, non poſſem ſolus remanere. Tunc ipſe reuerſus ad curiam dixit verba Baatu. Tunc præcepit: vadant duo ſacerdotes & interpres: & Clericus reuertatur ad Sartach. Ille reuerſus dixit nobis ſummam. Et quando volebam loqui pro Clerico, quod iret nobiſcum, dixit, Non loquamini amplius, quia Baatu definiuit, & eo amplius non audeo redire ad curiam. De eleemoſyna habebat Goſet clericus viginti ſex ipperpera, & non plus: quorum decem retinuit ſibi & puero: & ſexdecem dedit homini Dei pro nobis. Et ſic diuiſi ſumus cum lachrimis ab inuicem: Illo redeunte ad curiam Sartach, & nobis ibi remanentibus.

De itinere fratrum verſus curiam Mangu cham.

IN Vigilia Aſſumptionis peruenit ipſe clericus ad Curiam Sartach: & in craſtino fuerunt Sacerdotes Neſtorini induti veſtimentis noſtris coram Sartach. Tunc ducti fuimus ad alium hoſpitem, qui debebat nobis prouidere de domo & cibo & equis. Sed quia non habuimus quod daremus ei, omnia malè faciebat. Et bigauimus cum Baatu deſcendendo iuxta Etiliam quinque ſeptimanas. Aliquando habuit ſocius meus tantam famem, quod dicebat mihi quaſi lachrymando: videbatur mihi quod nunquam comederim. Forum ſequitur ſemper Curiam Baatu. Sed illud erat tam longè à nobis, quod non poteramus ire. Oportebat enim nos ire pedibus pro defectu equorum. Tandem inuenerunt nos quidam Hungari, qui fuerant Clericuli, quorum vnus ſciebat adhuc cantare multa corde, & habebatur ab alijs Hungaris quaſi Sacerdos, & vocabatur ad exequias ſuorum defunctorum: Et alius fuerat competenter inſtructus in Grammatica: qui intelligebat quicquid dicebamus ei literaliter, ſed neſciebat reſpondere: qui fecerunt nobis magnam conſolationem, afferentes coſmos ad bibendum, & carnes aliquando ad comedendum: qui quum poſtulaſſent à nobis aliquos libros, & non haberem quos poſſem dare, nullos enim habebam, niſi Biblium & breuiarium, dolui multum. Tunc dixi eis, afferte nobis chartas, & ego ſcribam vobis, quamdiu erimus hic: quod & fecerunt. Et ſcripſi vtraſque horas Beatæ Virginis & officium defunctorum. Quodam die iunxit ſe nobis quidam Comanus, ſalutans nos verbis latinis, dicens, Saluete Domini. Ego mirans, ipſo reſalutato, quæſiui ab eo, quis eum docuerat illam ſalutationem. Et ipſe dixit quod in Hungaria fuit baptizatus à fratribus noſtris qui docuerant illum eam. Dixit etiam quod Baatu quæſiuerat ab eo multa de nobis, & quod ipſe dixerat ei conditiones ordinis noſtri. Ego vidi Baatu equitantem cum turba ſua, & omnes patres familias equitantes cum eo, ſecundùm æſtimationem meam non erant quingenti viri. Tandem circa finem exaltationis ſanctæ crucis venit ad nos quidam diues Moal, cuius pater erat millenarius, quod magnum eſt inter eos, dicens, Ego vos debeo ducere ad Mangu cham, & eſt iter quatuor menſium: & tantum frigus eſt ibi, quod finduntur ibi lapides & arbores pro frigore: Videatis vtrum poteritis ſuſtinere. Cui reſpondi: Spero in virtute Dei, quod nos ſuſtinebimus, quod alij homines poſſunt ſuſtinere. Tunc dixit: Si non poteritis ſuſtinere, ego relinquam vos in via. Cui reſpondi, hoc non eſſet iuſtum: quia non iuimus pro nobis, niſi miſſi à Domino veſtro: Vnde ex quo vobis committimur, non debetis nos dimittere. Tunc dixit, benè erit. Poſt ‖ Qui fuerunt iſti fratres?

Cangle planicies ingens.

POſtquam fueramus duodecim diebus ab Etilia inuenimus magnum flumen, quod vocant Iagag: & venit ab Aquilone de terra Paſcatir deſcendens in prędictum mare. Idioma Paſcatir & Hungarorum idem eſt: & ſunt paſtores ſine ciuitate aliqua. Et contiguatur maiori Bulgariæ ab Occidente. Ab illa terra verſus Orientem in latere illo Aquilonari non eſt amplius aliqua ciuitas. Vnde Bulgaria maior eſt vltima regio habens ciuitatem. De illa regione Paſcatir exierunt Huni, qui poſteà dicti ſunt Hungari. Vnde ipſa eſt maior Bulgaria. Et dicit Iſidorus, quòd pernicibus equis clauſtra Alexandri rupibus Caucaſi feras gentes cohibentia tranſierunt: ita quod vſque in Ægyptum ſoluebatur eis tributum. Deſtruxerunt etiam omnes terras vſque in Franciam. Vnde fuerunt maioris potentiæ, quàm ſunt adhuc Tartari. Cum illis occurrerunt Blaci & Bulgari & Vandali. De illa enim maiori Bulgaria venerunt illi Bulgari: Et qui ſunt vltra Danubium propè Conſtantinopolin, & iuxta Paſcatir ſunt Ilac, quod idem eſt quod Blac: ſed B. neſciunt Tartari ſonare: à quibus venerunt illi qui ſunt in terra Aſſani. Vtroſque enim vocant Ilac, & hos & illos lingua Rutenorum & Polonorum, & Boëmorum. Sclauorum eſt idem idioma cum lingua Vandalorum, quorum omnium manus fuit cum Hunis: & nunc pro maiori parte eſt cum Tartaris quos Deus ſuſcitauit à remotioribus partibus, populum multum, & gentem ſtultam, ſecundùm quod dicit Dominus, Prouocabo eos, id eſt, non cuſtodientes Legem ſuam, in eo qui non eſt populus, & in gente ſtulta irritabo eos: Hoc completur ad literam ſuper omnes nationes non cuſtodientes Legem Dei. Hoc quod dixi de terra Paſcatir ſcio per fratres Prædicatores, ‖ qui iuerunt illuc ante aduentum Tartarorum. Et ex tunc erant ipſi ſubiugati à vicinis Bulgaris Saracenis, & plures eorum facti Saraceni. Alia poſſunt ſciri per Chronica: quia conſtat quod illæ prouinciæ poſt Conſtantinopolim, quæ modo dicuntur Bulgaria, Valachia, Sclauonia, fuerunt prouinciæ Gręcorum. Hungaria fuit Pannonia. Equitauimus ergo per terram Cangle à feſto Sanctæ crucis vſque ad feſtum Omnium Sanctorum, quolibet die ferè quantum eſt à Pariſijs vſque Aurelianum, ſecundùm quod poſſum eſtimare, & plus aliquando: ſecundùm quod habebamus copiam equorum. Aliquando enim mutabamus bis in die vel ter equos. Aliquando ibamus duobus diebus vel tribus, quibus non inueniebamus populum, & oportebat leuius ire. De viginti vel triginta equis nos ſemper habebamus peiores, quia extranei eramus. Omnes enim accipiebant ante nos equos meliores. Mihi ſemper prouidebant de forti equo; quia eram ponderoſus valdè: ſed vtrum ſuauiter ambularet vel non, de hoc non auderem facere quæſtionem. Nec etiam audebam conqueri, ſi durè portaret. Sed fortunam ſuam oportebat vnumquemque ſuſtinere. Vnde oriebatur nobis difficillimus labor: quia multoties fatigabantur equi, antequam poſſemus peruenire ad populum. Et tunc oportebat nos percutere & flagellare equos, ponere etiam veſtes ſuper alios ſaginarios, mutare equos ſaginarios, aliquando nos duos ire in vno equo.

De fame & ſiti, & alijs miſerijs quas ſuſtinuerunt in itinere.

DE fame & ſiti, frigore & fatigatione non eſt numerus. Non enim dant cibum niſi in ſero. In mane dant aliquid bibere, vel ſorbere milium. In ſero dabant nobis carnes, ſcapulam arietis cum coſtis & de brodio ad menſuram bibere. Quando habebamus de brodio carnium ad ſatietatem optimè reficiebamur. Et videbatur mihi ſuauiſſimus potus & maximè nutriens. Feria ſexta permanebam ieiunus vſq; ad noctem, nihil hauriens. Tunc oportebat me in triſtitia & dolore comedere carnes. Aliquando oportebat nos comedere carnes ſemicoctas vel ferè crudas propter defectum materiæ ignis, quando iacebamus in campis & de nocte deſcendebamus: quia tunc non poteramus benè colligere ſtercora equorum vel boum: aliam materiam ignis raro inueniebamus; niſi fortè alicubi aliquas ſpinas. In ripis etiam aliquorum fluminum ſunt alicubi ſyluæ. Sed hoc raro. In principio deſpiciebat nos multùm Ductor noſter, & faſtidiebat eum ducere tam viles homines. Poſtea tamen quando incepit nos melius cognoſcere, ducebat nos per curias diuitum Moallorum: & oportebat nos orare pro ipſis. Vnde ſi habuiſſem bonum interpretem, habebam oportunitatem ſeminandi multa bona. Ille Chingis primus Cham habuit quatuor filios, de quibus egreſſi ſunt multi, qui omnes habent modo magnas curias: & quotidiè multiplicantur & diffunduntur per illam Vaſtam ſolitudinem, quæ eſt ſicut mare. Per multos ergò illorum ducebat nos Ductor noſter. Et mirabantur ſupra modum, quia nolebamus recipere aurum, vel argentum, vel veſtes præcioſas. Quærebant etiam de magno Papa, ſi eſſet ita ſenex ſicut audierant: audierant enim quod eſſet quingentorum annotum. Quærebant de terris noſtris ſi ibi eſſent multæ oues, & boues, & equi. De Oceano mari non potuerunt intelligere, quod eſſet ſine termino vel ſine ripa. In vigilia omnium Sanctorum dimiſimus viam in Orientem, ‖ quia iam populus deſcenderat multum verſus meridiem: Et dereximus iter per quaſdam Alpes rectè in meridiem continuè per octo dies. In illa ſolitudine vidi multos aſinos, quos vocant Colan, qui magis aſſimulantur mulis: quos multum proſequuti ſunt Dux noſte & ſocij eius, ſed nihil profecerunt propter nimiam velocitatem eorum. Septima die inceperunt nobis apparere ad meridiem montes altiſſimi: & intrauimus planiciem, quæ irrigabatur ſicut hortus, & inuenimus terras cultas. In octauis omnium Sanctorum intrauimus villam quandam Saracenorum nomine Kenchat: cuius capiraneus occurrebat extra villam duci noſtro cum ceruiſia & ciphis. Hic eſt enim mos eorum; quod de omnibus villis ſubditis eis, occurratur nuncijs Baatu, & Mangu cham cum cibo & potu. Tunc temporis ibant ibi ſuper glaciem. Et prius à feſto Sancti Michaelis habueramus gelu in ſolitudine. Quæſiui de nomine Prouinciæ illius: ſed quia iam eramus in alio territorio neſcierunt mihi dicere, niſi à nomine ciuitatis, quæ erat valdè parua. Et deſcendebat magnus fluuius de montibus, qui irrigabat totam regionem, ſecundùm quod volebant aquam ducere: nec deſcendebat in aliquod mare, ſed abſorbebatur à terra: & faciebat etiam multas paludes. Ibi vidi vites, & bibi bis de vino.

De interfectione Ban & habitatione Teutonicorum.

SEquenti die venimus ad aliud caſale propinquius montibus. Et quæſiui de montibus, de quibus intellexi, quòd eſſent montes Caucaſi: qui contiguantur ex vtraque parte maris ab Occidente vſque ad Orientem: & quod tranſiueramus mare ſupradictum, quod intrat Etilia. Quæſiui etiam de Talas ciuitate, in qua erant Teutonici ſerui Buri, de quibus dixerat frater Andreas, de quibus etiam quæſiueram multum in curia Sartach & Baatu. Sed nihil poteram intelligere, niſi quod Ban dominus eorum fuerat interfectus tali occaſione. Ipſe non erat in bonis paſcuis. Et quadam die dum eſſet ebrius, loquebatur ita cum hominibus ſuis. Nonne ſum de genere Chingis can ſicut Baatus (Et ipſe erat nepos Baatu vel frater) quare non vadam ſuper ripam Etiliæ, ſicut Baatu, vt paſcam ibi? Quæ verba relata fuerunt Baatu. Tunc ipſe Baatu ſcripſit hominibus illius, vt adducerent ei dominum ipſorum vinctum: quod & fecerunt. Tunc Baatu quæſiuit ab eo ſi dixiſſet tale verbum: & ipſe confeſſus eſt, tamen excuſauit ſe, quia ebrius erat: (quia ſolent condonare ebrijs:) & Baatu reſpondit: Quomodo audebas me nominare in ebrietate tua? Et fecit ei amputari caput. De illis Teutonicis nihil potui cognoſcere vſque ad curiam Mangu. Sed in ſupradicto caſali intellexi, quod Talas erat poſt nos iuxta mõtes per ſex dietas. Quando veni ad curiam Mangu cham, intellexi quod ipſe Mangu tranſtulerat eos de licentia Baatu verſus Orientem ſpacio itineris vnius menſis à Talas ad quandam villam quæ dicitur Bolac: vbi fodiunt aurum, & fabricant arma. Vnde non potui ire nec redire per eos. Tranſiui eundo ſatis prope, per tres dietas fortè, ciuitatem illam: ſed ego ignoraui: nec potuiſſem etiam declinaſſe extra viam, ſi benè ſciuiſſem. A prædicto caſali iuimus ad Orientem iuxta montes prædictos: & ex tunc intrauimus inter homines Mangu cham, qui vbique cantabant & plaudebant coram ductore noſtro: quia ipſe erat nuncius Baatu. Hunc enim honorem exhibent ſibi mutuo, vt homines Mangu cham recipiant nuncios Baatu prædicto modo: Et ſimiliter homines Baatu nuncios Mangu. Tamen homines Baatu superiores ſunt, nec exequuntur ita diligenter. Paucis diebus poſt hoc intrauimus Alpes, in quibus ſolebant habitare Cara catay: & inuenimus ibi magnum fluuium, quem oportuit nos tranſire nauigio. Poſt hæc intrauimus quandam vallem, vbi vidi caſtrum quoddam deſtructum, cuius muri non erant niſi de luto, & terra colebatur ibi. Et pòſt inuenimus quandam bonam villam quæ dicitur Equius, in qua erant Saraceni loquentes Perſicum: longiſſimè tamen erant à Perſide. Sequenti die tranſgreſſis illis Alpibus quæ deſcendebant à magnis montibus ad meridiem, ingreſſi ſumus pulcherrimam planiciem habentem montes altos à dextris, & quoddam mare à ſiniſtris, ſiue quendam lacum qui durat quindecem dietas in circuitu. Et illa planicies tota irrigabatur ad libitum aquis deſcendentibus de montibus, quæ omnes recipiuntur in illud mare. In æſtate rediuimus ad latus Aquilonare illius maris, vbi ſimiliter erant magni montes. In planicie prædicta ſolebant eſſe multæ villæ: ſed pro maiori parte omnes erant deſtructæ, vt paſcerent ibi Tartari: quia optima paſcua erant ibi. Vnam magnam villam inuenimus ibi nomine Cailac, in qua erat forum, & frequentabant eam multi mercatores. In illa quieuimus quindecem diebus, expectantes quendam ſcriptorem Baatu, qui debebat eſſe ſocius ducis noſtri in negotijs expediendis in curia Mangu. Terra illa ſolebat dici Organum: & ſolebant habere proprium idioma, & propriam literam: Sed hæc tota erat occupata à Contomannis. Etiam in literatura illa & idiomate ſolebant facere Neſtorini de partibus illis. Dicuntur Organa, quia ſolebant eſſe optimi Organiſtæ vel Cithariſtæ, vt dicebatur mihi. Ibi primo vidi Idolatrias, de quibus noueritis, quod ſunt multæ ſectæ in Oriente.

fuit apud Caracarum frater Wilhelmus.

PRimi ſunt Iugures, quorum terra contiguatur cum terra prædicta Organum inter montes illos verſus Orientem: Et in omnibus ciuitatibus eorum ſunt mixti Neſtorini & Saraceni. Et ipſi etiã ſunt diffuſi verſus Perſidem in ciuitatibus Saracenorum. In prędicta ciuitate Cealac habebant etiam ipſi tres Idolatrias, quarum duas intraui, vt viderem ſtultitias eorum. In prima inueni quendam, qui habebat cruciculam de atramento ſuper manum ſuam. Vnde credidi quod eſſet Chriſtianus: quia ad omnia quæ quærebam ab eo, reſpondebat vt Chriſtianus. Vnde quęſiui ab eo: Quare ergo non habetis crucem & imaginem Ieſu Chriſti? Et ipſe reſpondit, non habemus conſuetudinem. vnde ego credidi quod eſſent Chriſtiani: ſed ex defectu doctrinę omitterent. Videbam enim ibi poſt quandam ciſtam, quæ erat eis loco altaris, ſuper quam ponunt lucernas & oblationes, quandam imaginationem habentem alas quaſi Sancti Michaelis: & alias quaſi ipſorum tenentes digitos ſicut ad benedicendum. Illo ſero non potui aliud inuenire. Quia Saraceni in tantũ inuitant eos, quod nec etiam volunt loqui inde eis. Vnde quando quærebam a Sararcenis de ritu talium, ipſi ſcandalizabantur. In craſtino fuerunt kalendæ & paſcha Saracenorum & mutaui hoſpitium: ita quod fui hoſpitatus prope aliam Idolatriam. Homines enim colligunt nuncios, quilibet ſecuudum poſſe ſuum vel portionem ſuam. Tunc intrans Idolatriam prædictam inueni ſacerdotes Idolorum. In kalendis enim aperiunt templa ſua, & ornant ſe ſacerdotes, & offerunt populi oblationes de pane & fructibus. Primò ergo deſcribo vobis ritus communes omnes Idolatrarum: & poſtea iſtorum Iugurum; qui ſunt quaſi ſecta diuiſa ab alijs. Omnes adorant ad Aquilonem comploſis manibus: & proſternentes ſe genibus flexis ad terram, ponentes frontem ſuper manus. Vnde Neſtorini in partibus illis nullo modo iungunt manus orando: ſed orant extenſis palmis ante pectus. Porrigunt templa ſua ab Oriente in Occidentem: & in latere Aquilonari faciunt cameram vnam quaſi eorũ exeuntem: vel aliter, Si eſt domus quadrata, in medio domus ad latus aquilonare intercludunt vnam cameram in loco chori. Ibi ergo collocant vnam arcam longam & latam ſicut menſam vnam. Et poſt illam arcam contra meridiem collocant principale idolum: quod ego vidi apud Catacarum, ita magnum ſicut pingitur Sanctus Chriſtopherus. Et dixit mihi quidam ſacerdos Neſtorinus, qui venerat ex Cataya, quod in terra illa eſt Idolum ita magnum, quod poteſt videri à duabus dietis. Et collocant alia idola in circuitu, omnia pulcherrime deaurata: Super ciſtam illam, quæ eſt quaſi menſa vna, ponunt lucernas & oblationes. Omnes portæ templorum ſunt apertæ ad meridiem contrario modo Saracenis. Item habent campanas magnas ſicut nos. Ideo credo quod orientales Chriſtiani noluerunt habere eas. Ruteni tamen habent & Græci in Gaſaria.

OMnes ſacerdotes eorum raſum habent totum caput & barbam ; ſunt veſtiti de croceo, & ſeruant caſtitatem, ex quo radunt caput : Et viuunt pariter centum vel ducenti in vna congregatione. Diebus quibus intrant templum, ponunt duo ſcamna, & ſedent è regione chorus contra chorum habentes libros in manibus, quos aliquando deponunt ſuper illa ſcamna: & habent capita diſcooperta quãdiu inſunt in tẽplo, legentes in ſilencio, & tenentes ſilencium. Vnde cùm ingreſſus fuiſſem apud Oratorium quoddam eorum, & inueniſſem eos ita ſedentes, multis modis tentaui eos prouocare ad verba, & nullo modo potui. Habent etiam quocunque vadunt quendam reſtem centum vel ducentorum nucleorum, ſicut nos portamus pater noſter : Et dicunt ſemper hæc verba : On mam Hactani : hoc eſt, Deus tu noſti ; ſecundum quod quidem eorum interpretatus eſt mihi. Et toties expectant remunerationem à Deo, quoties hoc dicendo memoratur Dei. Circa templum ſuum ſemper faciunt pulchrum atrium, quod bene includunt muro : & ad meridiem faciunt portam magnam, in qua ſedent ad colloquendum, Et ſuper illam portam erigunt perticam longam, quæ emineat ſi poſſint, ſuper totam villam. Et per illam perticam poteſt cognoſci, quod domus illa ſit templum Idolorum. Iſta communia ſunt omnibus Idolatris. Quando ergo ingreſſus fui prędictam Idolatriam, inueni ſacerdotes ſedentes ſub porta exteriori. Illi quos vidi, videbantur mihi fratres Franci eſſe raſis barbis. Tyaras habebant in capitibus cartaceas. Iſtorum Iugurum ſacerdotes habent talem habitum quocunque vadunt : ſemper ſunt in tunicis croceis ſatis ſtrictis accincti deſuper recte ſicut Franci: & habent pallium ſuper humerum ſiniſtrum deſcendens inuolutũ per pectus & dorſum ad latus dextrum ſicut diaconus portans caſulam in quadrageſima. Iſtorum literas acceperunt Tartari. Ipſi incipiunt ſcribere ſurſum, & ducunt lineam deorſum, & eodem modo ipſi legunt & multiplicant lineas a ſiniſtra ad dextram. Iſti multum vtuntur cartis & caracteribus pro ſortilegio. Vnde templa ſua plena ſunt breuibus ſuſpenſis. Et Mangu-cham mittit vobis literas in idiomate Moal & literatura eorum. Iſti comburunt mortuos ſuos ſecundum antiquum modum, & recondunt puluerem in ſummitate pyramidis. Cum ergo ſediſſem iuxta prædictos ſacerdotes, poſtquam ingreſſus fueram templum & vidiſſem idola eorum multa magna & parua: quæſiui ab eis, quid ipſi crederent de Deo. Qui reſponderunt, Non credimus niſi vnum Deum. Et ego quæſiui. Creditis quod ipſe ſit ſpiritus vel aliquid corporale? Dixerunt, credimus quod ſit ſpiritus. Et ego : Creditis quod nunquam ſumpſerit humanam naturam? Dixerunt, minime. Tunc ego : ex quo creditis, quod non ſit niſi vnus ſpiritus, quare facitis ei imagines corporales, & tot inſuper? Et ex quo non creditis quod factus ſit homo, quare facitis ei magis imagines hominum, quàm alterius animalis? Tunc reſponderunt, Nos non figuramus iſtas imagines Deo. Sed quando aliquis diues moritur ex noſtris, vel filius, vel vxor, vel aliquis charus eius facit fieri imaginem defuncti, & ponit eam hic : & nos veneramur eam ad memoriam eius. Quibus ego, Tunc ergo non facitis iſta niſi propter adulationem hominum. Immo dixerunt ad memoriam. Tunc quæſiuerunt à me quaſi deridendo: vbi eſt Deus? Quibus ego, Vbi eſt anima veſtra? Dixerunt, in corpore noſtro. Quibus ego. Nonne eſt vbique in corpore tuo & totum regit, & tamen non videtur? Ita Deus vbique eſt, & omnia gubernat, inuiſibilis tamen, quia intellectus & ſapientia eſt. Tunc cum vellem plura ratiocinari cum illis, interpres meus fatigatus, non valens verba exprimere, fecit me tacere. Iſtorum ſectę ſunt Moal ſiue Tartari, quantum ad hoc, quod ipſi non credunt niſi vnum Deum : tamen faciunt de filtro imagines defunctorum ſuorum, & induunt eas quinque pannis preciociſſimis, & ponunt in vna biga vel duabus, & illas bigas nullus audet tangere : & ſunt ſub cuſtodia diuinatorum ſuorum, qui ſunt eorum ſacerdotes, de quibus poſtea narrabo vobis. Iſti diuinatores ſemper ſunt ante curiam ipſius Mangu & aliorũ diuitum : pauperes enim non habent eos; niſi illi qui ſunt de genere Chingis. Et cum debent bigare, ipſi præcedunt, ſicut columna nubis filios Iſrael, & ipſi conſiderant locum metandi caſtra, & poſt deponunt domos ſuas; & poſt eos tota curia. Et tunc cum ſit dies feſtus ſiue kalendæ ipſi extrahunt prædictas imagines & ponunt eas ordinate per circuitum in domo ſua. Tunc veniunt Moal & ingrediuntur domum illam, & inclinant ſe imaginibus illis & venerantur illas. Et illam domum nemini ingredi extraneo licet: Quadam enim vice volui ingredi & multum durè increpatus fui.

The iournal of frier William de Rubruquis a French man of the order of the minorite friers, vnto the Eaſt parts of the worlde. An.Dom.1253.

TO his moſt Soueraigne, & moſt Chriſtian Lord Lewis, by Gods grace the renowmed king of France, frier William de Rubruk, the meaneſt of the Minorites order, wiſheth health & cõtinual triumph in CHRIST.

It is written in the booke of Eccleſiaſticus concerning the wiſe man: He ſhall trauell into forren countries, and good and euill ſhall he trie in all things. The very ſame action (my lord and king) haue I atchieued: howbeit I wiſh that I haue done it like a wiſe man, and not like a foole. For many there be, that performe the ſame action which a wiſe man doth, not wiſely but more vndiſcreetly: of which number I feare my ſelfe to be one. Notwithſtanding howſoeuer I haue done it, becauſe you commanded mee, when I departed from your highnes, to write all things vnto you, which I ſhould ſee among the Tartars, and you wiſhed me alſo that I ſhould not feare to write long letters, I haue done as your maieſtie inioined me: yet with feare and reuerence, becauſe I want wordes and eloquence ſufficient to write vnto ſo great a maieſtie. Be it knowen therefore vnto your ſacred Maieſtie, that in the yeare of our Lord 1253. about the Nones of May, we entered into the ſea of Pontus, which the Bulgarians call the great ſea. It containeth in length (as I learned of certaine merchants) 1008 miles, and is in a maner, diuided into two parts. About the midſt thereof are two prouinces, one towards the North, and another towards the South. The South prouince is called Synopolis, and it is the caſtle and porte of the Soldan of Turkie: but the North prouince is called of the Latines, Gaſaria: of the Greeks, which inhabite vpon the ſea ſhore thereof, it is called Caſſaria, that is to ſay Cæſaria. And there are certaine head lands ſtretching foorth into the ſea towards Synopolis. Alſo, there are 300. miles of diſtance betweene Synopolis and Caſſaria. Inſomuch that the diſtance from thoſe points or places to Conſtantinople, in length and breadth is about 700. miles: and 700. miles alſo from thence to the Eaſt, namely to the countrey of Hiberia which is a prouince of Georgia. At the prouince of Gaſaria or Caſſaria we arriued, which prouince is, in a maner, three ſquare, hauing a citie on the Weſt part thereof called Kerſoua, wherein S. Clement ſuffered martyrdome. And ſayling before the ſaid citie, we ſawe an iſland, in which a Church is ſayd to be built by the hands of angels. But about the midſt of the ſaid prouince toward the South, as it were, vpon a ſharpe angle or point, ſtandeth a citie called Soldaia directly ouer againſt Synopolis. And there doe all the Turkie merchants, which traffique into the North countries, in their iourney outward, arriue, and as they returne homeward alſo from Ruſſia, and the ſaid Northerne regions, into Turkie. The foreſaid merchants tranſport thither ermines and gray furres, with other rich and coſtly ſkinnes. Others carrie cloathes made of cotton or bombaſt, and ſilke, and diuers kindes of ſpices. But vpon the Eaſt part of the ſaid prouince ſtandeth a citie called Matriga, where the riuer Tanais diſchargeth his ſtreames into the ſea of Pontus, the mouth whereof is twelue miles in breadth. For this riuer, before it entreth into the ſea of Pontus, maketh a little ſea, which hath in breadth and length ſeuen hundreth miles, & it is in no place thereof aboue ſixe paces deepe, whereupon great veſſels cannot ſayle ouer it. Howbeit the merchants of Conſtantinople, arriuing at the foreſayd citie of ‖ Materta, ſend their barkes vnto the riuer of Tanais to buy dried fiſhes, Sturgeons, Thoſſes, Barbils, and an infinite number of other fiſhes. The foreſayd prouince of Caſſaria is compaſſed in with the ſea on three ſides thereof: namely on the Weſt ſide, where Kerſoua the citie of Saint Clement is ſituate: on the South ſide the citie of Soldaia whereat we arriued: on the Eaſt ſide Maricandis, and there ſtands the citie of Matriga vpon the mouth of the riuer Tanais. Beyond the ſayd mouth ſtandeth Zikia, which is not in ſubiection vnto the Tartars: alſo the people called Sueui and Hiberi towards the Eaſt, who likewiſe are not vnder the Tartars dominion. Moreouer towards the South, ſtandeth the citie of Trapeſunda, which hath a gouernour proper to it ſelfe, named Guydo, being of the linage of the emperours of Conſtantinople, and is ſubiect vnto the Tartars. Next vnto that is Synopolis the citie of the Soldan of Turkie, who likewiſe is in ſubiection vnto them. Next vnto theſe lyeth the countrey of Vaſtacius, whoſe ſonne is called Aſtar, of his grandfather by the mothers ſide, who is not in ſubiection. All the land from the mouth of Tanais Weſtward as farre as Danubius is vnder their iuriſdiction. Yea beyond Danubius alſo, towards Conſtantinople, Valakia, which is the land of Aſſanus, and Bulgaria minor as farre as Solonia, doe all pay tribute vnto them. And beſides the tribute impoſed, they haue alſo, of late yeares, exacted of euery houſhold an axe, and all ſuch corne as they found lying on heapes. We arriued therefore at Soldaia the twelfth of the Kalends of Iune. And diuers merchants of Conſtantinople, which were arriued there before vs, reported that certaine meſſengers were comming thither from the holy land, who were deſirous to trauell vnto Sartach. Notwithſtanding I my ſelf had publikely giuen out vpon Palme Sunday within ẏ Church of Sancta Sophia, that I was not your nor any other mans meſſenger, but that I trauailed vnto thoſe infidels according to the rule of our order. And being arriued, the ſaid merchãts admoniſhed me to take diligent heede what I ſpake: becauſe they hauing reported me to be a meſſenger, if I ſhould ſay the contrary, that I were no meſſenger, I could not haue free paſſage granted vnto me. Thẽ I ſpake after this maner vnto the gouernors of the citie, or rather vnto their Lieutenãts, becauſe the gouernors thẽſelues were gone to pay tribute vnto Baatu, & were not as yet returned. We heard of your lord Sartach (quoth I) in the holy land, that he was become a Chriſtian: and the Chriſtians were exceeding glad therof, & eſpecially the moſt Chriſtian king of France, who is there now in pilgrimage, & fighteth againſt the Saracens to redeeme the holy places out of their handes: wherfore I am determined to go vnto Sartach, & to deliuer vnto him ẏ letters of my lord the king, wherein he admoniſheth him concerning the good and commoditie of all Chriſtendome. And they receiued vs with gladnes, and gaue vs enterteinement in the cathedrall Church. The biſhop of which Church was with Sartach, who told me many good things concerning the ſaide Sartach, which afterward I found to be nothing ſo. Then put they vs to our choyce, whither we woulde haue cartes and oxen, or packe horſes to tranſport our cariages. And the marchants of Conſtantinople aduiſed me, not to take cartes of the citizens of Soldaia, but to buy couered cartes of mine owne, (ſuch as the Ruſſians carrie their ſkins in) and to put all our carriages, which I would daylie take out, into them: becauſe, if I ſhould vſe horſes, I muſt be conſtrained at euery baite to take downe my carriages, and to lift them vp againe on ſundry horſes backs: and beſides, that I ſhould ride a more gentle pace by the oxen drawing the cartes. Wherfore, contenting my ſelfe with their euil counſel, I was trauelling vnto Sartach 2. moneths which I could haue done in one, if I had gone by horſe. I brought with me from Conſtantinople (being by the marchants aduiſed ſo to doe) pleaſant fruits, muſcadel wine, and delicate biſket bread to preſent vnto the gouernours of Soldaia, to the end I might obtaine free paſſage: becauſe they looke fauourablie vpon no man which commeth with an emptie hand. All which thinges I beſtowed in one of my cartes, (not finding the gouernours of the citie at home) for they told me, if I could carrie them to Sartach, that they would be moſt acceptable vnto him. Wee tooke our iourney therefore about the kalends of Iune, with fower couered cartes of our owne and with two other which wee borrowed of them, wherein we carried our bedding to reſt vpon in the night, and they allowed vs fiue horſes to ride vpon. For there were iuſt fiue perſons in our company: namely, I my ſelfe and mine aſſociate frier Bartholomew of Cremona, and Goſet the bearer of theſe preſents, the man of God Turgemannus, and Nicolas my ſeruant, whome I bought at Conſtantinople with ſome part of the almes beſtowed vpon me. Moreouer, they allowed vs two men, which draue our carts and gaue attendance vnto our oxen and horſes. There be high promontories on the ſea ſhore from Kerſoua vnto the mouth of Tanais. Alſo there are fortie caſtles betweene Kerſoua and Soldaia, euery one of which almoſt haue their proper languages: amongſt whome there were many Gothes, who ſpake the Dutch tongue. Beyond the ſaid mountaines towards the North, there is a moſt beautifull wood growing on a plaine ful of fountaines & freſhets. And beyond the wood there is a mightie plaine champion, continuing fiue dayes iourney vnto the very extremitie and borders of the ſaid prouince northward, and there it is a narrow Iſthmus or neck land, hauing ſea on the Eaſt & Weſt ſides therof, inſomuch that there is a ditch made frõ one ſea vnto the other. In the ſame plaine (before the Tartars ſprang vp) were the Comanians wont to inhabite, who compelled the foreſayd cities and caſtles to pay tribute vnto them. But when the Tartars came vpon them, the multitude of the Comanians entred into the foreſaid prouince, and fled all of them, euen vnto the ſea ſhore, being in ſuch extreame famine, that they which were aliue, were conſtrained to eate vp thoſe which were dead: and (as a marchant reported vnto me who ſawe it with his owne eyes) that the liuing men deuoured and tore with their teeth, the raw fleſh of the dead, as dogges would gnawe vpon carrion. Towards the borders of the ſayd prouince there be many great lakes: vpon the bankes whereof are ſalt pits or fountaines, the water of which ſo ſoone as it entereth into the lake, becommeth hard ſalte like vnto ice. And out of thoſe ſalte pittes Baatu and Sartach haue great reuenues: for they repayre thither out of all Ruſſia for ſalte: and for each carte loade they giue two webbes of cotton amounting to the value of halfan Yperpera. There come by ſea alſo many ſhips for ſalt, which pay tribute euery one of them according to their burden. The third day after wee were departed out of the precincts of Soldaia, we found the Tartars, Amongſt whome being entred, tered, me thought I was come into a new world. Whoſe life and maners I wil deſcribe vnto your Highnes as well as I can.

The Tartars.

Of the Tartars, and of their houſes. Chap.2.

They haue in no place any ſetled citie to abide in, neither knowe they of the celeſtiall citie to come. They haue diuided all Scythia among themſelues, which ſtretcheth from the riuer Danubius euen vnto the riſing of the ſunne. And euery of their captaines, according to the great or ſmall number of his people, knoweth the bounds of his paſtures, and where he ought to feed his cattel winter and ſummer, Spring and autumne. For in the winter they deſcend vnto the warme regions ſouthward. And in the ſummer they aſcend vnto the colde regions Northward. In winter when ſnowe lyeth vpon the ground, they feede their cattell vpon paſtures without water, becauſe then they vſe ſnow in ſtead of water. Their houſes wherein they ſleepe, they ground vpon a round foundation of wickers artificially wrought and compacted together: the roofe whereof conſiſteth (in like ſorte) of wickers, meeting aboue into one little roundell, out of which roundell aſcendeth vpward a necke like vnto a chimney, which they couer with white felte, and oftentimes they lay morter or white earth vpon the ſayd felt, with the powder of bones, that it may ſhine white. And ſometimes alſo they couer it with blacke felte. The ſayd felte on the necke of their houſe, they doe garniſh ouer with beautifull varietie of pictures. Before the doore likewiſe they hang a felt curiouſly painted ouer. For they ſpend all their coloured felt, in painting vines, trees, birds, and beaſtes thereupon. The ſayd houſes they make ſo large, that they conteine thirtie foote in breadth. For meaſuring once the breadth betweene the wheele-ruts of one of their cartes, I found it to be 20 feete ouer: and when the houſe was vpon the carte, it ſtretched ouer the wheeles on each ſide fiue feete at the leaſt. I told 22. oxen in one teame, drawing an houſe vpon a cart, eleuen in one order according to the breadth of the carte, and eleuen more before them: the axletree of the carte was of an huge bignes like vnto the maſt of a ſhip. And a fellow ſtood in the doore of the houſe, vpon the foreſtall of the carte driuing forth the oxen. Moreouer, they make certaine foureſquare baskets of ſmall ſlender wickers as big as great cheſtes: and afterward, from one ſide to another, they frame an hollow lidde or couer of ſuch like wickers, and make a doore in the fore ſide thereof. And then they couer the ſayd cheſt or little houſe with black felt rubbed ouer with tallow or ſheeps milke to keepe the raine from ſoaking through, which they decke likewiſe with painting or with feathers. And in ſuch cheſts they put their whole houſhold ſtuffe & treaſure. Alſo the ſame cheſts they do ſtrongly bind vpon other carts, which are drawen with camels, to ỹ end they may wade through riuers. Neither do they at any time take down the ſayd cheſts from off their carts. When they take down their dwelling houſes, they turne the doores alwayes to the South: & next of all they place the carts laden with their cheſts, here & there, within half a ſtones caſt of ỹ houſe: inſomuch that the houſe ſtandeth between two ranks of carts, as it were, between two wals. The matrons make for thẽſelues moſt beautiful carts, which I am not able to deſcribe vnto your maieſtie but by pictures onlie: for I would right willingly haue painted al things for you, had my ſkill bin ought in that art. One rich Moal or Tartar hath 200. or 100. ſuch cartes with cheſts. Duke Baatu hath ſixteene wiues, euery one of which hath one great houſe, beſides other little houſes, which they place behind the great one, being as it were chambers for their maidens to dwel in. And vnto euery of the ſaid houſes do belong 100, cartes. When they take their houſes from off the cartes, the principal wife placeth her court on the Weſt frontier, and ſo all the reſt in their order: ſo that the laſt wife dwelleth vpon the Eaſt frontier: and one of the ſaid ladies courts is diſtant from another about a ſtones caſt. Whereupon the court of one rich Moal or Tartar will appeare like vnto a great village, very few men abiding in the ſame. One woman will guide 20. or 30. cartes at once, for their countries are very plaine, and they binde the cartes with camels or oxen, one behind another. And there ſittes a wench in the foremoſt carte driuing the oxen, and al the reſidue follow on a like pace. When they chance to come at any bad paſſage, they let them looſe, and guide them ouer one by one: for they goe a ſlowe pace, as faſt as a lambe or an oxe can walke.

The benefite of a painter in ſtrange countries.

Hauing taken downe their houſes from off their cartes, and turning the doores Southward, they place the bed of the maſter of the houſe, at the North part thereof. The womens place is alwaies on the Eaſt ſide, namely on the left hand of the good man of the houſe ſitting vpon his bed with his face Southwards: but the mens place is vpon ỹ Weſt ſide, namely at the right hand of their maſter. Men when they enter into the houſe, wil not in any caſe hang their quiuers on the womens ſide. Ouer the maſters head there is alwayes an image, like a puppet, made of felte, which they call the maſters brother: and another ouer the head of the good wife or miſtreſſe, which they call her brother being faſtened to the wall: and aboue betweene both of them, there is a little leane one, which is, as it were the keeper of the whole houſe. The good wife or miſtreſſe of the houſe placeth aloft at her beds feete, on the right hand, the ſkinne of a Kidde ſtuffed with wooll or ſome other matter, and neare vnto that a litle image or puppet looking towards the maidens and women. Next vnto the doore alſo on the womens ſide, there is another image with a cowes vdder, for the women that milke the kine. For it is the duety of their women to milke kine. On the other ſide of the doore next vnto the men, there is another image with the vdder of a mare, for the men which milke mares. And when they come together to drinke and make merie, they ſprinckle parte of their drinke vpon the image which is aboue the maſters head: afterward vpon other images in order: then goeth a ſeruant out of the houſe with a cuppe full of drinke ſprinckling it thriſe towards the South, and bowing his knee at euery time: and this is done for the honour of the fire. Then perfourmeth he the like ſuperſtitious idolatrie towards the Eaſt, for the honour of the ayre: and then to the Weſt for the honour of the water: & laſtly to the North in the behalfe of the dead. When the maſter holdeth a cuppe in his hande to drinke, before he taſteth thereof, hee powreth his part vpon the ground. If he drinketh ſitting on horſe backe, hee powreth out part thereof vpon the necke or maine of his horſe before hee himſelfe drinketh. After the ſeruant aforeſaide hath ſo diſcharged his cuppes to the fower quarters of the world, hee returneth into the houſe: and two other ſeruants ſtand ready with two cuppes, and two baſons, to carrie drinke vnto their maſter and his wife, ſitting together vpon a bed. And if he hath more wiues then one, ſhe with whome hee ſlept the night before, ſitteth by his ſide the daye following: and all his other wiues muſt that day reſorte vnto the ſame houſe to drinke: and there is the court holden for that day: the giftes alſo which are preſented that daye are layd vp in the cheſts of the ſayd wife. And vpon a bench ſtands a veſſell of milke or of other drinke and drinking cuppes.

In winter time they make excellent drinke of Riſe, of Mill, and of honie, being well and high coloured like wine. Alſo they haue wine brought vnto them from farre countries. In ſummer time they care not for any drinke, but Coſmos. And it ſtandeth alwaies within the entrance of his doore, and next vnto it ſtands a minſtrell with his fidle. I ſawe there no ſuch citerns and vials as ours commonly be, but many other muſicall inſtruments which are not vſed among vs. And when the maſter of the houſe begins to drinke, one of his ſeruants cryeth out with a lowde voice HA, and the minſtrell playes vpon his fidle. And when they make any great ſolemne feaſt, they all of them clap their hands & daunce to the noyſe of muſique, the men before their maſter and the women before their miſtreſſe. And when the maſter hath drunke, then cries out his ſeruant as before, and the minſtrell ſtayeth his muſique. Then drinke they all around both men and women: and ſometimes they carowſe for the victory very filthily and drunkenly. Alſo when they will prouoke any man, they pul him by the eares to the drinke, and ſo lug and drawe him ſtrongly to ſtretch out his throate clapping their handes and dauncing before him. Moreouer when ſome of them will make great feaſting and reioycing, one of the company takes a full cuppe, and two other ſtand, one on his right hand and another on his left, and ſo they three come ſinging to the man who is to haue the cuppe reached vnto him, ſtill ſinging and dauncing before him: and when he ſtretcheth foorth his hand to receiue the cuppe, they leape ſuddenly backe, returning againe as they did before, and ſo hauing deluded him thrice or fower times by drawing backe the cuppe vntill he be merie, and hath gotten a good appetite, then they giue him the cuppe, ſinging and dauncing and ſtamping with their feete, vntill he hath done drinking.

They vſe the like cuſtome in Florida.

Of their foode and victuals. Chap.5.

Concerning their foode and victuals, be it knowen vnto your Highneſſe that they do, without al difference or exception, eat all their dead carrions. And amongſt ſo many droues it cannot be, but ſome cattell muſt needes die. Howbeit in ſummer, ſo long as their Coſmos, that is, their mares milke laſteth, they care not for any foode. And if they chance to haue an oxe or an horſe dye, they drie the fleſh thereof: for cutting it into thin ſlices and hanging it vp againſt the Sunne and the wind, it is preſently dried without ſalt, and alſo without ſtenche or corruption. They make better puddings of their horſes then of their hogs, which they eate being new made: the reſt of the fleſh they reſerue vntill winter. They make of their oxe ſkins great bladders or bags, which they doe wonderfully dry in the ſmoake. Of the hinder part of their horſe hides they make very fine ſandals & pantafles. They giue vnto 50. or an 100. men the fleſh of one ram to eat. For they mince it in a bowle with ſalt and water (other ſauce they haue none) and then with the point of a knife, or a litle forke which they make for the ſame purpoſe (ſuch as wee vſe to take roſted peares or apples out of wine withal) they reach vnto euery one of the company a morſell or twaine, according to the multitude of gueſtes. The maſter of the houſe, before the rams fleſh be diſtributed, firſt of all himſelfe taketh thereof, what he pleaſeth. Alſo, if he giueth vnto any of the company a ſpeciall part, the receiuer therof muſt eat it alone, and muſt not impart ought therof vnto any other. Not being able to eate it vp all, he caries it with him, or deliuers it vnto his boy, if he be preſent, to keepe it: if not, he puts it vp into his Saptargat, that is to ſay, his foure ſquare buget, which they vſe to cary about with them for the ſauing of all ſuch prouiſion, and wherein they lay vp their bones, when they haue not time to gnaw them throughly, that they may burniſh them afterward, to the end that no whit of their food may come to nought.

How they make their drinke called Coſmos. Chap. 6.

Their drinke called Coſmos, which is mares milke, is prepared after this maner. They faſten a long line vnto 2. poſts ſtanding firmely in the ground, & vnto the ſame line they tie the young foles of thoſe mares, which they mean to milke. Then come the dams to ſtand by their foles gently ſuffering themſelues to be milked. And if any of them be too vnruly, then one takes her fole, & puts it vnder her, letting it ſuck a while, and preſently carying it away againe, there comes another man to milke the ſaid mare. And hauing gotten a good quantity of this milke together (being as ſweet as cowes milke) while it is newe they powre it into a great bladder or bag, and they beat the ſaid bag with a piece of wood made for the purpoſe, hauing a club at the lower ende like a mans head, which is hollow within: and ſo ſoone as they beat vpon it, it begins to boile like newe wine, & to be ſower and ſharp of taſte, and they beate it in that maner till butter come thereof. Then taſte they thereof, and being indifferently ſharpe they drinke it: for it biteth a mans tongue like the wine of raſpes, when it is drunk. After a man hath taken a draught therof, it leaueth behind it a taſte like the taſte of almon milke, and goeth downe very pleaſantly, intoxicating weake braines: alſo it cauſeth vrine to be auoided in great meaſure. Likewiſe Caracoſmos, that is to ſay black Coſmos, for great lords to drink, they make on this maner. Firſt they beat the ſaid milke ſo long till the thickeſt part thereof deſcend right downe to the bottome like the lees of white wine, and that which is thin and pure remaineth aboue, being like vnto whey or white muſt. The ſaid lees or dregs being very white, are giuen to ſeruants, and will cauſe them to ſleepe exceedingly. That which is thinne and cleare their maſters drinke: and in very deed it is maruellous ſweete and haleſome liquor. Duke Baatu hath thirty cottages or granges within a daies iourney of his abiding place: euery one of which ſerueth him dayly with the Caracoſmos of an hundreth mares milk, and ſo all of them together euery day with the milke of 3000. mares, beſides white milke which other of his ſubiects bring. For euen as the huſbandmen of Syria beſtow the third part of their fruicts and carie it vnto the courts of their lords, euen ſo doe they their mares milke euery third day. Out of their cowes milke they firſt churne butter, boyling the which butter vnto a perfect decoction, they put it into rams ſkinnes, which they reſerue for the ſame purpoſe. Neither doe they ſalte their butter: and yet by reaſon of the long ſeething, it putrifieth not: and they keepe it in ſtore for winter. The churnmilke which remaineth of the butter, they let alone till it be as ſowre as poſſibly it may be, then they boile it and in boiling, it is turned all into curdes, which curds they drie in the ſun, making them as hard as the droſſe of iron: and this kind of food alſo they ſtore vp in ſachels againſt winter. In the winter ſeaſon when milke faileth them, they put the foreſaid curds (which they cal Gry-vt) into a bladder, and powring hot water thereinto, they beat it luſtily till they haue reſolued it into the ſaid water, which is thereby made exceedingly ſowre, and that they drinke in ſtead of milke. They are very ſcrupulous, and take diligent heed that they drinke not fayre water by it ſelfe.

Of the beaſtes which they eat, of their garments, and of their maner of hunting. Chap. 7.

Great lords haue cottages or granges towards the South, from whence their tenants bring them Millet and meale against winter. The poorer ſort prouide themſelues of ſuch neceſſaries, for ẏ exchange of rams, & of other beaſts ſkins. The Tartars ſlaues fil their bellies with thick water, & are therewithall contented. They wil neither eate miſe with long tailes, nor any kinde of miſe with ſhort tailes. They haue alſo certaine litle beaſts called by thẽ Sogur, which lie in a caue twenty or thirty of them together, al the whole winter ſleeping there for the ſpace of ſixe moneths: and theſe they take in great abundance. There are alſo a kind of conies hauing long tayles like vnto cats: & on the outſide of their tailes grow blacke & white haires. They haue many other ſmall beaſts good to eat, which they know and diſcerne right well. I ſaw no Deere there, & but a fewe harts, but a great nūber of Roes. I ſaw wild aſſes in great abundance, which be like vnto Mules. Alſo I ſaw another kind of beaſt called Artak, hauing in al reſemblance the body of a ram, & crooked hornes, which are of ſuch bignes, that I could ſcarce lift vp a paire of them with one hand: & of theſe hornes they make great drinking cups. They haue Falcons, Girfalcons, & other haukes in great plenty: all which they cary vpon their right hands: & they put alwaies about their Falcons necks a ſtring of leather, which hangeth downe to yͤ midſt of their gorges, by the which ſtring, whē they caſt them off the fiſt at their game, with their left hand they bow downe the heads & breaſts of the ſayd haukes, leaſt they ſhould be toſſed vp & downe, & beaten with the wind, or leaſt they ſhould ſoare too high. Wherefore they get a great part of their victuals, by hunting & hauking. Concerning their garments and attire be it knowen vnto your Maieſtie, that out of Cataya & other regions of the Eaſt, out of Perſia alſo and other countries of the South, there are brought vnto them ſtuffes of ſilke, cloth of gold, & cotton cloth, which they weare in time of ſummer. But out of Ruſſia, Moxel, Bulgaria the greater, & Paſcatir, that is Hungaria the greater, and out of Kerſis (all which are Northerne regions & full of woods) & alſo out of many other countries of the North, which are ſubiect vnto them, the inhabitants bring them rich and coſtly ſkins of diuers ſortes (which I neuer ſaw in our countries) wherewithal they are clad in winter. And alwaies againſt winter they make themſelues two gownes, one with the fur inward to their ſkin, & another with the furre outward, to defend them from wind & ſnow, which for the moſt part are made of woolues ſkins, or Fox ſkins, or els of Papions. And whē they ſit within the houſe, they haue a finer gowne to weare. The poorer ſort make their vpper gowne of dogs or of goats ſkins. When they goe to hunt for wild beaſts, there meets a great company of them together, & inuironing the place round about, where they are ſure to find ſome game, by litle & litle they approch on al ſides, til they haue gotten the wild beaſts into the midſt, as it were into a circle, & then they diſcharge their arrowes at them. Alſo they make thēſelues breeches of ſkins. The rich Tartars ſomtimes fur their gowns with pelluce or ſilke ſhag, which is exceeding ſoft, light, & warme. The poorer ſort do line their clothes with cottō cloth which is made of the fineſt wooll they can pick out, & of the courſer part of the ſaid wool, they make felt to couer their houſes and their cheſts, and for their bedding alſo. Of the ſame wool, being mixed with one third part of horſe haire, they make all their cordage. They make alſo of the ſaid felt couerings for their ſtooles, and caps to defende their heads from the weather: for all which purpoſes they ſpend a great quantity of their wooll. And thus much concerning the attyre of the men.

Our falconers vſe the left fiſt. Another ſtrāge cuſtome, which I leaue to be ſcanned by falconers themſelues.

Great expenſe of wooll.

Of the faſhion which the Tartars vſe in cutting their haire, and of the attire of their women. Chap. 8.

The men ſhaue a plot foure ſquare vpon the crownes of their heads, and from the two formoſt corners they ſhaue, as it were, two ſeames downe to their temples: they ſhaue alſo their temples and the hinder part of their head euen vnto the nape of the necke: likewiſe they ſhaue the forepart of their ſcalp downe to their foreheads, & vpon their foreheads they leaue a locke of hayre reaching downe vnto their eye browes: vpon the two hindermoſt corners of of their heads, they haue two lockes alſo, which they twine and braid into knots and ſo bind and knit them vnder each eare one. Moreouer their womens garments differ not from their mens, ſauing that they are ſomwhat longer. But on the morrowe after one of their women is maried, ſhee ſhaues her ſcalpe from the middeſt of her head down to her forehead, & weares a wide garment like vnto the hood of a Nunne, yea larger and longer in all parts then a Nuns hood, being open before and girt vnto them vnder the right ſide. For herein doe the Tartars differ from the Turkes: becauſe the Turkes faſten their garments to their bodies on the left ſide: but the Tartars alwaies on the right ſide. They haue alſo an ornament for their heads which they call Bocca, being made of the barke of a tree, or of ſome ſuch other lighter matter as they can find, which by reaſon of the thickneſs & roundnes therof cannot be holden but in both hands together: & it hath a ſquare ſharp ſpire riſing frō the top therof, being more then a cubite in length, & faſhioned like vnto a pinacle. The ſaid Bocca they couer al ouer with a piece of rich ſilke: & it is hollow within: & vpon the midſt of the ſayd ſpire or ſquare toppe, they put a bunch of quils or of ſlender canes a cubite long and more: & the ſayd bunch, on the top therof, they beautifie with Peacocks feathers, & round about al yͤ length therof, with the feathers of a Malards taile, & with precious ſtones alſo. Great ladies weare this kind of ornament vpon their heads binding it ſtrongly with a certain hat or coyfe, which hath an hole in the crowne, fit for the ſpire to come through it: & vnder the foreſaid ornament they couer the haires of their heads, which they gather vp round together frō the hinder part therof to the crowne, & ſo lay them vp in a knot or bundel within the ſaid Botta, which afterward they bind ſtrongly vnder their throtes. Hereupon when a great company of ſuch gentlewomen ride together, and are beheld a far off, they ſeem to be ſouldiers with helmets on their heads carrying their launces vpright: for the ſaid Botta appeareth like an helmet with a launce ouer it. Al their women ſit on horſebacke beſtriding their horſes like men: & they bind their hoods or gownes about their waſtes with a ſkie coloured ſilke ſkarfe, & with another ſkarfe they girde it aboue their breaſts: & they bind alſo a piece of white ſilke like a muſler or maſke vnder their eyes, reaching down vnto their breaſt. Theſe gentlewomen are exceeding fat, & the leſſer their noſes be, the fairer are they eſteemed: they daube ouer their ſweet faces with greaſe too ſhamefully: and they neuer lie in bed for their trauel of childbirth.

Of the dueties inioined vnto the Tartarian women, and of their labours, and alſo of their mariages. Chap.9.

The duties of women are, to driue carts: to lay their houſes vpon carts & to take them downe again: to milke kine: to make butter & Gry-vt: to dreſſe ſkins & to ſow them, which they vſually ſowe with thread made of ſinewes, for they diuide ſinewes into ſlender threads, & then twine thē into one long thread. They make ſandals & ſocks & other garments. Howbeit they neuer waſh any apparel: for they ſay that God is then angry, & that dreadful thunder wil enſue, if waſhed garmēts be hanged forth to drie: yea, they beat ſuch as waſh, & take their garments frō them. They are wonderfully afraid of thunder: for in the time of thunder they thruſt all ſtrangers out of their houſes, & then wrapping thēſelues in black felt, they lie hidden therein, til the thunder be ouerpaſt. They neuer waſh their diſhes or bowles: yea, when their fleſh is ſodden, they waſh the platter wherein it muſt be put, with ſcalding hot broth out of the pot, & then powre the ſaid broth into the pot againe. They make felte alſo, & couer their houſes therewith. The duties of the men are to make bowes & arrowes, ſtirrops, bridles, and ſaddles: to build houſes & carts, to keepe horſes: to milke mares: to churne Coſmos and mares milke, & to make bags wherein to put it: they keepe camels alſo & lay burthens vpon them. As for ſheepe & goates they tend and milke them, aſwell the men as the women. With ſheeps milke thicked & ſalted they dreſſe and tan their hides. When they wil waſh their hands or their heads, they fil their mouthes full of water, & ſpouting it into their hands by little and little, they ſprinckle their haire & waſh their heades therwith. As touching mariages, your Highnes is to vnderſtand, that no man can haue a wife among them till he hath bought her: whereupon ſomtimes their maids are very ſtale before they be maried, for their parents alwaies keepe thē till they can ſel them. They keepe the firſt and ſecond degrees of conſanguinitie inuiolable, as we do: but they haue no regard of the degrees of affinity: for they wil marrie together, or by ſucceſſion, two ſiſters. Their widowes marie not at al, for this reaſon: becauſe they beleeue, that al who haue ſerued them in this life, ſhall do them ſeruice in the life to come alſo. Whereupon they are perſwaded, that euery widow after death ſhal returne vnto her own huſband. And herehence ariſeth an abominable & filthy cuſtome among them, namely that the ſonne marieth ſomtimes all his fathers wiues except his own mother: For the court or houſe of the father or mother falleth by inheritance alwaies to the yonger ſon. Whereupon he is to prouide for all his fathers wiues, becauſe they are part of his inheritance aſwel as his fathers poſſeſſions. And then if he will he vſeth them for his owne wiues: for he thinks it no iniurie or diſparagement vnto himſelfe, although they returne vnto his father after death. Therfore whē any man hath bargained with another for a maid, the father of the ſaid damoſel makes him a feaſt: in the meane while ſhe fleeth vnto ſome of her kinſfolks to hide her ſelfe. Then ſaith her father vnto the bridegrome: Loe, my daughter is yours, take her whereſoeuer you can find her. Then he and his friends ſeek for her till they can find her, and hauing found her he muſt take her by force and cary her, as it were, violently vnto his owne houſe.

Of their execution of iuſtice and iudgement: and of their deaths and burials. Chap.10.

Concerning their lawes or their execution of iuſtice, your Maieſty is to be aduertiſed, that when two men fight, no third man dare intrude himſelf to part them. Yea, the father dare not help his owne ſonne. But he that goes by the worſt muſt appeale vnto the court of his lord. And whoſoeuer els offereth him any violence after appeale, is put to death. But he muſt go preſently without all delay: and he that hath ſuffered the iniury, carieth him, as it were captiue. They puniſh no man with ſentence of death, vnles hee bee taken in the deede doing, or confeſſeth the ſame. But being accuſed by the multitude, they put him vnto extreame torture to make him confeſſe the trueth. They puniſh murther with death, and carnall copulation alſo with any other beſides his owne. By his own, I meane his wife or his maid ſeruant, for he may vſe his ſlaue as he liſteth himſelf. Heinous theft alſo or felony they puniſh with death. For a light theft, as namely for ſtealing of a ram, the party (not being apprehended in the deed doing, but otherwiſe detected) is cruelly beaten. And if ẏ executioner laies on an 100. ſtrokes, he muſt haue an 100. ſtaues, namely for ſuch as are beaten vpon ſentēce giuen in the court. Alſo counterfeit meſſengers, becauſe they feine themſelues to be meſſengers, when as indeed they are none at all, they puniſh with death. Sacrilegious perſons they vſe in like maner (of which kind of malefactors your Maieſty ſhall vnderſtand more fully hereafter) becauſe they eſteeme ſuch to be witches. When any man dieth, they lament & howle moſt pitifully for him: & the ſaid mourners are free from paying any tribute for one whole yeare after. Alſo whoſoeuer is preſent at the houſe where any one growen to mans eſtate lieth dead, he muſt not enter into the court of Mangu-Can til one whole yere be expired. If it were a child deceaſed he muſt not enter into the ſaid court til the next moneth after. Neere vnto the graue of the partie deceaſed they alwaies leaue one cottage. If any of their nobles (being of the ſtock of Chingis, who was their firſt lord & father) deceaſeth, his ſepulcher is vnknowen. And alwayes about thoſe places where they interre their nobles, there is one houſe of men to keep the ſepulchers. I could not learn that they vſe to hide treaſures in the graues of their dead. The Comaniās build a great toomb ouer their dead, & erect the image of the dead party thereupon, with his face towards the Eaſt, holding a drinking cup in his hand, before his nauel. They erect alſo vpon the monuments of rich men, Pyramides, that is to ſay, litle ſharpe houſes or pinacles: & in ſome places I ſaw mighty towers made of brick, in other places Pyramides made of ſtones, albeit there are no ſtones to be found thereabout. I ſaw one newly buried, in whoſe behalfe they hanged vp 16. horſe hides, vnto each quarter of the world 4, betweene certain high poſts: & they ſet beſides his graue Coſmos for him to drink, & fleſh to eat: & yet they ſayd that he was baptized. I beheld other kinds of ſepulchers alſo towards the Eaſt: namely large flowres or pauemēts made of ſtone, ſome roūd & ſome ſquare, & then 4. long ſtones pitched vpright, about the ſaid pauement towards the 4. regions of the world. When any man is ſicke, he lieth in his bed, & cauſeth a ſigne to be ſet vpon his houſe, to ſignifie that there lieth a ſicke perſon there, to the end that no man may enter into the ſayd houſe: whereupon none at all viſit any ſicke party but his ſeruant only. Moreouer, when any one is ſicke in their great courts, they appoint watchmen to ſtand round about the ſaid court, who wil not ſuffer any perſon to enter within the precincts thereof. For they feare leaſt euill ſpirits or winds ſhould come together with the parties that enter in. They eſteeme of ſoothſayers, as of their prieſts.

Of our firſt entrance among the Tartars, and of their ingratitude. Chap. 11.

AND being come amōgſt thoſe barbarous people, me thought (as I ſaid before) ẏ I was entred into a new world: for they came flocking about vs on horſe back, after they had made vs a long time to awaite for them ſitting in the ſhadow, vnder their black carts. The firſt queſtion which they demanded was whether we had euer bin with them heretofore, or no? And giuing thē anſwere that we had not, they began impudently to beg our victuals frō vs. And we gaue them ſome of our biſket & wine, which we had brought with vs from the towne of Soldaia. And hauing drunke off one flagon of our wine they demanded another, ſaying, that a man goeth not into the houſe with one foote. Howbeit we gaue them no more, excuſing our ſelues that we had but a litle. Then they aſked vs, whence we came, & whither we were bound? I anſwered them with the words aboue mentioned: that we had heard concerning duke Sartach, that he was become a Chriſtian, & that vnto him our determination was to trauel, hauing your Maieſties letters to deliuer vnto him. They were very inquiſitiue to know whether I came of mine own accord, or whether I were ſent? I anſwered that no man compelled me to come, neither had I come, vnles I my ſelfe had bin willing: & that therefore I was come according to mine own wil, & to the will of my ſuperior. I tooke diligent heed neuer to ſay that I was your Maieſties ambaſſador. Then they aſked what I had in my carts; whether it were gold or ſiluer, or rich garments to carie vnto Sartach? I anſwered that Sartach ſhould ſee what we had brought, when we were once come vnto him, & that they had nothing to do to aſke ſuch queſtions, but rather ought to conduct me vnto their captaine, and that he, if he thought good, ſhould cauſe me to be directed vnto Sartach: if not, that I would returne. For there was in the ſame prouince one of Baatu his kinſmen called Scacati, vnto whom my lord the Emperor of Conſtantinople had written letters of requeſt, to ſuffer me to paſſe through his territory. With this anſwere of ours they were ſatiſfied, giuing vs horſes & oxen, & two men to conduct vs. Howbeit before they would allow vs the foreſayd neceſſaries for our iourney, they made vs to awayt a long while, begging our bread for their yong brats, wondering at all things which they ſawe about our ſeruants, as their kniues, gloues, purſes, & points, and deſiring to haue them. I excuſed my ſelf that we had a long way to trauel, & that we muſt in no wiſe ſo ſoon depriue our ſelues of things neceſſary, to finiſh ſo long a iourney. Then they ſaid that I was a very varlet. True it is, that they tooke nothing by force frō me: howbeit they wil beg that which they ſee very importunatly & ſhameleſly. And if a man beſtow ought vpon thē, it is but coſt loſt, for they are thankles wretches. They eſteeme thēſelues lords & think ÿ nothing ſhould be denied thē by any man. If a man giues them nought, & afterward ſtands in neede of their ſeruice, they will do right nought for him. They gaue vs of their cowes milke to drink after ÿ butter was cherned out of it, being very ſower, which they cal Apram. And ſo we departed from thē. And in very deed it ſeemed to me ÿ we were eſcaped out of the hands of diuels. On the morrow we were come vnto the captain. From the time wherin we departed frō Soldaia, till we arriued at the court of Sartach, which was the ſpace of two moneths, we neuer lay in houſe or tent, but alwaies vnder the ſtarry canopy, & in the open aire, or vnder our carts. Neither yet ſaw we any village, nor any mention of building where a village had bin, but the graues of the Comanians in great abundance. The ſame euening our guide which had conducted vs, gaue vs ſome Coſmos. After I had drunke thereof I ſweat moſt extreamly for the nouelty and ſtrangenes, becauſe I neuer dranke of it before. Notwithſtanding me thought it was very ſauory, as indeed it was.

Of the court of Scacatai: and how the Chriſtians drinke no Coſmos. Chap. 12.

On the morrow after we met with the cartes of Scacatai laden with houſes, and me thought that a mighty citie came to meete me. I wōdered alſo at the great multitude of huge droues of oxen, & horſes, and at the flockes of ſheepe. I could ſee but a fewe men that guided all theſe matters: wherupon I inquired how many men he had vnder him, & they told me that he had not aboue 500. in all, the one halfe of which number we were come paſt, as they lay in another lodging. Then the ſeruant which was our guide told me, that I muſt preſent ſomwhat vnto Scacatay: & ſo he cauſed vs to ſtay, going himſelfe before to giue notice of our comming. By this time it was paſt three of the clocke, and they vnladed their houſes nere vnto a certain water: And there came vnto vs his interpreter, who being aduertiſed by vs that wee were neuer there before, demanded ſome of our victuals, & we yeelded vnto his requeſt. Alſo he required of vs ſome garment for a reward, becauſe he was to interpret our ſayings vnto his maſter. Howbeit we excuſed our ſelues as well as wee could. Then he aſked vs, what we would preſent vnto his Lord? And we tooke a flagon of wine, & filled a maund with biſket, & a platter with apples & other fruits. But he was not contented therewith, becauſe we brought him not ſome rich garment. Notwithſtanding we entred ſo into his preſence with feare and baſhfulnes. He ſate vpon his bed holding a citron in his hand, and his wife ſate by him: who (as I verily thinke) had cut and pared her noſe betweene the eyes, that ſhe might ſeeme to be more flat and ſaddle-noſed: for ſhe had left her ſelfe no noſe at all in that place, hauing annointed the very ſame place with a black ointment, and her eye browes alſo: which ſight ſeemed moſt vgly in our eies. Then I rehearſed vnto him the ſame wordes, which I had ſpoken in other places before. For it ſtoode vs in hand to vſe one and the ſame ſpeech in all places. For we were wel forewarned of this circumſtance by ſome which had been amongſt the Tartars, that we ſhould neuer varie in our tale. Then I beſought him, that he would vouchſafe to accept that ſmall gifte at our hands, excuſing my ſelfe that I was a Monke, and that it was againſt our profeſſion to poſſeſſe gold, or ſiluer, or precious garments, and therefore that I had not any ſuch thing to giue him, howbeit he ſhould receiue ſome part of our victuals in ſtead of a bleſſing. Hereupon he cauſed our preſent to be receiued, and immediately diſtributed the ſame among his men, who were mette together for the ſame purpoſe, to drinke and make merrie. I deliuered alſo vnto him the Emperor of Conſtantinople his letters (this was eight dayes after the feaſt of Aſcenſion) who ſent them forthwith to Soldaia to haue them interpreted there: for they were written in Greeke, and he had none about him that was ſkilfull in the Greeke tongue. He aſked vs alſo whether we would drink any Coſmos, that is to ſay mares milke? (For thoſe that are Chriſtians among them, as namely the Ruſſians, Grecians, and Alanians, who keep their own law very ſtrictly, wil in no caſe drinke thereof, yea, they accompt themſelues no Chriſtians after they haue once drunke of it, & their prieſts reconcile them vnto the Church as if they had renounced the Chriſtian faith.) I gaue him anſwere, that we had as yet ſufficient of our owne to drinke, and that when our drinke failed vs, we muſt be conſtrained to drink ſuch as ſhould be giuen vnto vs. He enquired alſo what was contained in our letters, which your Maieſtie ſent vnto Sartach? I anſwered: that they were ſealed vp, and that there was nothing conteined in them, but good and friendly wordes. And he aſked what wordes wee would deliuer vnto Sartach? I anſwered: the words of Chriſtian faith. He aſked again what theſe words were? For he was very deſirous to heare thē. Then I expoſined vnto him as well as I could, by mine interpreter, (who had no wit nor any vtterance of ſpeech) the Apoſtles creed. Which after he had heard, holding his peace, he ſhooke his head. Then hee aſſigned vnto vs two men, who ſhoulde giue attendance vpon our ſelues, vpon our horſes, and vpon our Oxen. And hee cauſed vs to ride in his companie, till the meſſenger whome hee had ſent for the interpretation of the Emperours letters, was returned. And ſo wee trauelled in his companie till the morrowe after Pentecoſt.

A caueat right worthy the noting.

Howe the Alanians came vnto vs on Pentecoſt or Whitſon euen. Chap. 13.

*Or, Akas.

Vpon the euen of Pentecoſt, there came vnto vs certaine Alanians, who are there called *Acias, being Chriſtians after the maner of the Grecians, vſing greeke bookes and Grecian prieſts: howbeit they are not ſchiſmatiques as the Grecians are, but without acceptiõ of perſons, they honour al Chriſtiãs. And they brought vnto vs ſodden fleſh, requeſting vs to eat of their meat, and to pray for one of their company being dead. Then I ſayd, becauſe it was the euen of ſo great and ſo ſolemne a feaſt day, that we would not eate any fleſh for that time. And I expounded vnto them the ſolemnitie of the ſayd feaſt, whereat they greatly reioyced: for they were ignorant of all things appertayning to Chriſtian religion, except only the name of Chriſt. They and many other Chriſtians, both Ruſſians, and Hungarians demanded of vs, whether they might be ſaued or no, becauſe they were conſtrained to drinke Coſmos, & to eate the dead carkaſes of ſuch things, as were ſlaine by the Saracens, and other infidels? Which euen the Greeke & Ruſſian prieſts themſelues alſo eſteeme as things ſtrangled or offered vnto idoles: becauſe they were ignorant of the times of faſting, neither could they haue obſerued them albeit they had knowen them. Then inſtructed I them aſwell as I could and ſtrengthened them in the faith. As for the fleſh which they had brought we reſerued it vntill the feaſt day. For there was nothing to be ſold among the Tartars for gold & ſiluer, but only for cloth and garments, of the which kind of marchandiſe wee had none at all. When our ſeruants offered them any coine called Yperpera, they rubbed it with their fingers, and put it vnto their noſes, to try by the ſmell whether it were copper or no. Neither did they allow vs any foode but cowes milke onely which was very ſowre & filthy. There was one thing moſt neceſſary greatly wanting vnto vs. For the water was ſo foule and muddy by reaſon of their horſes, that it was not meete to be drunk. And but for certaine biſket, which was by the goodnes of God remaining vnto vs, we had vndoubtedly periſhed.

Cloth is the chiefe marchãdiſe in Tartarie.

Of a Saracen which ſaid that he would be baptized: and of certaine men which ſeemed to be lepers. Chap. 14.

Vpon the day of Pentecoſt there came vnto vs a certain Saracen, vnto whome, as hee talked with vs, we expounded the Chriſtian faith. Who (hearing of Gods benefits exhibited vnto mankind by the incarnation of our Sauiour Chriſt, and the reſurrection of the dead, & the iudgement to come, & that in baptiſme was a waſhing away of ſinnes) ſayd, that hee would be baptized. But when we prepared our ſelues to the baptizing of him, he ſuddenly mounted on horſebacke, ſaying that he would goe home and conſult with his wife what were beſt to be done. And on the morrow after he told vs, that he durſt in no caſe receiue baptiſme, becauſe then he ſhould drinke no more Coſmos. For the Chriſtians of that place affirme that no true Chriſtians ought to drinke thereof: and that without the ſaid liquor he could not liue in that deſert. From which opinion, I could not for my life remoue him. Wherefore be it knowen of a certainty vnto your highnes, that they are much eſtranged from the Chriſtian faith by reaſon of that opinion which hath bin broached & confirmed among them by the Ruſſians, of whom there is a great multitude in that place. The ſame day Scacatay the captaine aforeſayd gaue vs one man to conduct vs to Sartach, and two other to guide vs vnto the next lodging, which was diſtant from that place fiue dayes iourney for oxen to trauell. They gaue vnto vs alſo a goate for victuals, and a great many bladders of cowes milke, & but a little Coſmos, becauſe it is of ſo great eſtimation among them. And ſo taking our iourney directly toward the North, me thought that wee had paſſed through one of hell gates. The ſeruants which conducted vs began to play the bold theeues with vs, ſeeing vs take ſo little heed vnto our ſelues. At length hauing loſt much by their theeuery, harme taught vs wiſdome. And then we came vnto the extremity of that prouince, which is fortified with a ditch from one ſea vnto another: without the bounds whereof their lodging was ſituate. Into the which, ſo ſoone as we had entred, al the inhabitants there ſeemed vnto vs to be infected with leproſie: for certain baſe fellowes were placed there to receiue tribute of al ſuch as tooke ſalt out of the ſalt pits aforeſaid. From that place they told vs that we muſt trauel fifteen daies iourney, before we ſhuld find any other people. With them wee dranke Coſmos, and gaue vnto them a baſket full of fruites and of bisket. And they gaue vnto vs eight oxen and one goate, to ſuſtaine vs in ſo great a iourney, and I knowe not how many bladders of milke. And ſo changing our oxen, we tooke our iourney which we finiſhed in tenne dayes, arriuing at another lodging: neither found we any water all that way, but onely in certaine ditches made in the valleys, except two ſmall riuers. And from the time wherein wee departed out of the foreſaid prouince of Gaſaria, we trauailed directly Eaſtward, hauing a Sea on the South ſide of vs, and a waſte deſert on the North, which deſert, in ſome places, reacheth twenty dayes iourney in breadth, and there is neither tree, mountaine, nor ſtone therein. And it is moſt excellent paſture. Here the Comanians, which were called Capthac, were wont to feede their cattell. Howbeit by the Dutch men they are called Valani, and the prouince it ſelfe Valania. But Iſidore calleth all that tract of land ſtretching from the riuer of Tanais to the lake of Męotis, and ſo along as farre as Danubius, the countrey of Alania. And the ſame land continueth in length from Danubius vnto Tanais (which diuideth Aſia from Europe) for the ſpace of two moneths iourney, albeit a man ſhould ride poſte as faſt as the Tartars vſe to ride: and it was all ouer inhabited by the Comanians, called Capthac: yea and beyond Tanais, as farre as the riuer of Edil or Volga: the ſpace betweene the two which riuers is a great and long iourney to bee trauailed in ten dayes. To the North of the ſame prouince lieth Ruſſia, which is full of wood in all places, and ſtretcheth from Polonia and Hungaria, euen to the riuer of Tanais: and it hath bene waſted all ouer by the Tartars, and as yet is daily waſted by them.

Ruſſia.

Of our afflictions which we ſuſtained: and of the Comanians maner of buriall. Chap.15.

They preferre the Saracens before the Ruſſians, becauſe they are Chriſtians, and when they are able to giue them no more golde nor ſiluer, they driue them and their children like flockes of ſheepe into the wildernes, conſtraining them to keepe their cattell there. Beyond Ruſſia lieth the countrey of Pruſſia, which the Dutch knights of the order of Saint Maries hoſpitall of Ieruſalem haue of late wholly conquered and ſubdued. And in very deede they might eaſily winne Ruſſia, if they would put to their helping hand. For if the Tartars ſhould but once know, that the great Prieſt, that is to ſay, the Pope did cauſe the enſigne of the croſſe to bee diſplaied againſt them, they would flee all into their deſert and ſolitarie places. We therefore went on towards the Eaſt, ſeeing nothing but heauen and earth, and ſometimes the ſea on our right hand, called the Sea of Tanais, and the ſepulchres of the Comanians, which appeared vnto vs two leagues off, in which places they were wont to burie their kinred altogether. So long as we were trauelling through the deſert, it went reaſonably well with vs. For I cannot ſufficiently expreſſe in words the irkeſome and tedious troubles which I ſuſteined, when I came at any of their places of abode. For our guide would haue vs goe in vnto euery Captaine with a preſent, and our expenſes would not extend ſo farre. For we were euery day eight perſons of vs ſpending our waifaring prouiſion, for the Tartars ſeruants would all of them eate of our victuals. We our ſelues were fiue in number, and the ſeruants our guides were three, two to driue our carts, and one to conduct vs vnto Sartach. The fleſh which they gaue vs was not ſufficient for vs: neither could we finde any thing to be bought for our money. And as we ſate vnder our carts in the coole ſhadowe, by reaſon of the extreame and vehement heate which was there at that time, they did ſo importunately and ſhameleſly intrude themſelues into our companie, that they would euen tread vpon vs, to ſee whatſoeuer things we had. Hauing liſt at any time to eaſe themſelues, the filthy lozels had not the maners to withdrawe themſelues farther from vs, then a beane can bee caſt. Yea, like vile ſlouens they would lay their tailes in our preſence, while they were yet talking with vs: many other things they committed, which were moſt tedious and loathſome vnto vs. But aboue all things it grieued me to the very heart, that when I would vtter ought vnto them, which might tend to their edification, my fooliſh interpreter would ſay: you ſhall not make me become a Preacher now: I tell you, I cannot nor I will not rehearſe any ſuch wordes. And true it was which he ſaide. For I perceiued afterward, when I began to haue a litle ſmattering in the language, that when I ſpake one thing, he would ſay quite another, whatſoeuer came next vnto his witleſſe tongues end. Then ſeeing the danger I might incurre in ſpeaking by ſuch an interpreter, I reſolued much rather to holde my peace, and thus we traueiled with great toile from lodging to lodging, till at the length, a fewe dayes before the feaſt of Saint Marie Magdalene, we arriued at the banke of the mightie riuer Tanais which diuideth Aſia from Europa, euen as the riuer Nilus of Ægypt diſioyneth Aſia from Africa. At the ſame place where wee arriued, Baatu and Sartach did cauſe a certaine cottage to be built, vpon the Eaſterne banke of the riuer, for a companie of Ruſſians to dwell in t to the ende they might tranſport Ambaſſadours and merchants in ferrie-boates ouer that part o the riuer. Firſt they ferried vs ouer, and then our carts, putting one wheele into one lyter, an the other wheele into another lyter, hauing bounde both the lyters together, and ſo they rowe them ouer. In this place our guide played the foole moſt extreamely. For hee imagining that th ſaid Ruſſians, dwelling in the cottage, ſhould haue prouided vs horſes, ſent home the beaſts which we brought with vs, in another cart, yͤ they might returne vnto their owne maſters. And when we demanded to haue ſome beaſts of thẽ, they anſwered, that they had a priuiledge from Baatu, whereby they were bound to none other ſeruice, but only to ferry ouer goers & commers: and that they receiued great tribute of marchants in regard therof. We ſtaied therfore by the ſaid riuers ſide three daies. The firſt day they gaue vnto vs a great freſh turbut: the ſecond day they beſtowed rye bread, and a litle fleſh vpon vs, which the purueyer of the village had taken vp at euerie houſe for vs: and the third day dried fiſhes, which they haue there in great abundance. The ſaide riuer was euen as broad in that place, as the riuer of Sein is at Paris. And before we came there, we paſſed ouer many goodly waters, and full of fiſh: howbeit the barbarous and rude Tartars know not how to take them: neither do they make any reckoning of any fiſh, except it be ſo great, that they may pray vpon the fleſh therof, as vpon the fleſh of a ram. This riuer is the limite of the Eaſt part of Ruſſia, and it ſpringeth out of the fennes of Mæotis, which fennes ſtretch vnto the North Ocean. And it runneth Southward into a certain great ſea 700. miles about, before it falleth into the ſea called Põtus Euxious. And al the riuers, which we paſſed ouer, ran with ful ſtream into thoſe quarters. The foreſaid riuer hath great ſtore of wood alſo growing vpon the Weſt ſide thereof. Beyond this place the Tartars aſcend no farther vnto the North: for at that ſeaſon of the yeere, about the firſt of Auguſt, they begin to returne backe vnto the South. And therfore there is another cottage ſomwhat lower, where paſſengers are ferried ouer in Winter time. And in this place wee were driuen to great extremitie, by reaſon that we could get neither horſes, nor oxen for any money. At length, after I had declared vnto them, that my comming was to labour for the common good of all Chriſtians, they ſent vs oxen & men; howbeit we our ſelues were faine to trauel on foote. At this time they were reaping their rye. Wheat proſpereth not wel in that ſoile. They haue the ſeed of Millium in great abundance. The Ruſſian women attire their heads like vnto our women. They imbroder their ſafegards or gowns on the outſide, from their feet vnto their knees with particoloured or grey ſtuffe. The Ruſſian men weare caps like vnto the Dutch men. Alſo they weare vpon their heads certain ſharpe, & high-crowned hats made of felt, much like vnto a ſugar loafe. Then trauelled we 3. daies together, not finding any people. And when our ſelues and our oxen were exceeding weary and faint, not knowing how far off we ſhould find any Tartars, on the ſudden, there came two horſes running towards vs, which we tooke with great ioy, and our guide and interpreter mounted vpon their backes, to ſee, how far off they could deſcry any people. At length vpon the fourth day of our iourney, hauing found ſome inhabitants, we reioyced like ſea-faring men, which had eſcaped out of a dangerous tempeſt, and had newly recouered the hauen. Then hauing taken freſh horſes, and oxen, we paſſed on from lodging to lodging, till at the laſt, vpon the ſecond of the Kalends of Auguſt, we arriued at the habitation of Duke Sartach himſelfe.

The breadth of Tanais.

He is much deceiued.

About the beginning of Auguſt, the Tartars returne Southward.

Of the dominion of Sartach, and of his Subiects. Chap.16.

The region lying beyond Tanais, is a very goodly countrey, hauing ſtore of riuers and woods toward the North part thereof. There be mighty huge woods which two ſorts of people do inhabite. One of them is called Moxel, being meere Pagans, and without law. They haue neither townes nor cities, but only cottages in yͤ woods. Their lord & a great part of themſelues were put to the ſword in high Germanie. Whereupon they highly commend the braue courage of the Almans, hoping as yet to be deliuered out of the bondage of the Tartars, by their meanes. If any merchant come vnto them, he muſt prouide things neceſſary for him, with whom he is firſt of all enterteined, all the time of his abode among them. If any lieth with another mans wife, her huſband, vnles he be an eie witnes therof, regardeth it not: for they are not ielous ouer their wiues. They haue abundance of hogs, and great ſtore of hony & waxe, and diuers ſorts of rich & coſtly ſkins, and plentie of falcons. Next vnto them are other people called Merclas, which the Latines cal Merdui, and they are Saracens. Beyond them is the riuer of Etilia or Volga, which is yͤ mightieſt riuer that euer I ſaw. And it iſſueth from the North part of Bulgaria the greater, & ſo trending along Southward, diſimboqueth into a certain lake cõteining in circuit the ſpace of 4. moneths trauel, whereof I will ſpeak hereafter. The two foreſaid riuers, namely Tanais & Etilia, otherwiſe called Volga, towards the Northren regions through the which we trauelled, are not diſtãt aſunder aboue x. daies iourney, but Southward they are diuided a great ſpace one from another. For Tanais deſcēdeth into the ſea of Pontus: Etilia maketh the foreſaid ſea or lake, with the help of many other riuers which fal therinto out of Perſia. And we had to the South of vs huge high mountains, vpon the ſides wherof, towards the ſaid deſert, doe the people called Cergis, and the Alani or Acas inhabit, who are as yet Chriſtians, & wage warre againſt the Tartars. Beyond thē, next vnto the ſea or lake of Etilia, there are certaine Saracens called Lesgi, who are in ſubiection vnto the Tartars. Beyond theſe is Porta ferrea, or the yron gate, nowe called Derbent, which Alexander built to exclude the barbarous nations out of Perſia. Concerning the ſituation whereof, your maieſtie ſhall vnderſtand more about the end of this Treatiſe: for I trauailed in my returne by the very ſame place. Betweene the two foreſaid riuers, in the regions through the which we paſſed did the Comanians of olde time inhabite, before they were ouerrun by the Tartars.

Of the Court of Sartach, and of the magnificence thereof. Chap. 17.

AND we found Sartach lying within three daies iourney of the riuer Etilia: whoſe Court ſeemed vnto vs to be very great. For he himſelfe had ſixe wiues, and his eldeſt ſonne alſo had three wiues: euery one of which women hath a great houſe, & they haue ech one of them about 200. cartes. Our guide went vnto a certaine Neſtorian named Coiat, who is a man of great authoritie in Sartachs Court. He made vs to goe very farre vnto the Lordes gate. For ſo they call him, who hath the office of enterteining Ambaſſadours. In the euening Coiac commanded vs to come vnto him. Then our guide began to enquire what we would preſent him withal, & was exceedingly offended, when he ſaw that we had nothing ready to preſent. We ſtoode before him, and he ſate maieſtically, hauing muſicke and dauncing in his preſence. Then I ſpake vnto him in the wordes before recited, telling him, for what purpoſe I was come vnto his lorde, and requeſting ſo much fauour at his hands, as to bring our letters vnto the ſight of his Lord. I excuſed my ſelfe alſo, that I was a Monke, not hauing, nor receiuing, nor vſing any golde, or ſiluer, or any other precious thing, ſaue onely our bookes, and the veſtiments wherein wee ſerued God: and that this was the cauſe why I brought no preſent vnto him, nor vnto his Lord. For I that had abandoned mine owne goods, could not be a tranſporter of things for other men. Then hee anſwered very courteouſly, that being a Monke, and ſo doing, I did well: for ſo I ſhould obſerue my vowe: neither did himſelfe ſtand in neede of ought that we had, but rather was readie to beſtow vpon vs ſuch things as we our ſelues ſtood in neede of: and he cauſed vs to ſit downe, and to drinke of his milke. And preſently after he requeſted vs to ſay our deuotions for him: and we did ſo. He enquired alſo who was the greateſt Prince among the Franckes? And I ſaide, the Emperour, if he could inioy his owne dominions in quiet. No (quoth he) but the king of France. For he had heard of your Highnes by lord Baldwine of Henault. I found there alſo one of the Knights of the Temple, who had bene in Cyprus, and had made report of all things which he ſawe there. Then returned wee vnto our lodging. And on the morowe we ſent him a flagon of Muſcadel wine (which had laſted very wel in ſo long a iourney) and a boxe full of biſket, which was moſt acceptable vnto him. And he kept our ſeruants with him for that euening. The next morning he commanded me to come vnto the Court, and to bring the kings letters and my veſtimentes, and bookes with me: becauſe his Lorde was deſirous to ſee them. Which we did accordingly, lading one cart with our bookes and veſtiments, and another with biſket, wine, and fruites. Then he cauſed all our bookes and veſtiments to bee laide forth. And there ſtoode round about vs many Tartars, Chriſtians and Saracens on horſeback. At the ſight whereof, he demanded whether I would beſtow all thoſe things vpon his Lord or no? Which ſaying made me to tremble, and grieued me full ſore. Howbeit, diſſembling our griefe as well as we could, we ſhaped him this anſwere: Sir, our humble requeſt is, that our Lorde your maſter would vouchſafe to accept our bread, wine, and fruits, not as a preſent, becauſe it is too meane, but as a benediction, leaſt we ſhould come with an emptie hand before him. And he ſhall ſee the letters of my ſoueraigne Lord the king, and by them he ſhall vnderſtand for what cauſe we are come vnto him, and then both our ſelues, and all that we haue, ſhall ſtand to his curteſie: for our veſtiments be holy, and it is vnlawfull for any but Prieſts to touch them. Then he commanded vs to inueſt our ſelues in the ſaide garments, that we might goe before his Lord: and wee did ſo. Then I my ſelfe putting on our moſt precious ornaments, tooke in mine armes a very faire cuſhion, and the Bible which your Maieſty gaue me, and a moſt beautifull Pſalter, which the Queenes Grace beſtowed vpon me, wherein there were goodly pictures. Mine aſſociate tooke a miſſal and a croſſe: ant the clearke hauing put on his ſurpleſſe, tooke a cenſer in his hand. And ſo wee came vnto the preſence of his Lord: and they lifted vp the felt hanging before his doore, that hee might behold behold vs. Then they cauſed the clearke and the interpreter thriſe to bow the knee: but of vs they required no ſuch ſubmiſſion. And they diligently admoniſhed vs to take heed, that in going in, and in comming out, we touched not the threſhold of the houſe, and requeſted vs to ſing a benediction for him. Then we entred in, ſinging Salue Regina. And within the entrance of the doore, ſtood a bench with coſmos, and drinking cups thereupon. And all his wiues were there aſſembled. Alſo the Moals or rich Tartars thruſting in with vs preſſed vs ſore. Then Coiat caried vnto his lord the cenſer with incenſe, which he beheld very diligently, holding it in his hand. Afterward hee caried the Pſalter vnto him, which he looked earneſtly vpon, and his wife alſo that ſate beſide him. After that he caried the Bible: then Sartach aſked if the Goſpel were contained therein? Yea (ſaid I) and all the holy ſcriptures beſides. He tooke the croſſe alſo in his hand, and demanded concerning the image, whether it were the image of Chriſt or no? I ſaid it was. The Neſtorians & the Armenians do neuer make the figure of Chriſt vpō their croſſes. Wherfore either they ſeem not to think wel of his paſſion, or els they are aſhamed of it. Then he cauſed them that ſtood about vs, to ſtand aſide, that he might more fully behold our ornaments. Afterward I deliuered vnto him your Maieſties letters, with the tranſlation therof into the Arabike, & Syriake languages. For I cauſed them to be tranſlated at Acon into the character, & dialect of both the ſaide tongues. And there were certain Armenian prieſts, which had ſkil in the Turkiſh & Arabian languages. The aforeſaid knight alſo of the order of the Temple had knowledge in the Syriake, Turkiſh, & Arabian tongues. Then we departed forth, and put off our veſtiments, and there came vnto vs certaine Scribes together with the foreſaid Coiat, & cauſed our letters to be interpreted. Which letters being heard, he cauſed our bread, wine and fruits to be receiued. And he permitted vs alſo to carie our veſtiments and bookes vnto our owne lodging. This was done vpon the feaſt of S. Peter ad vincula.

No good conſequence.

How they were giuen in charge to goe vnto Baatu the Father of Sartach. *Chap.*18.

The next morning betimes came vnto vs a certaine Prieſt, who was brother vnto Coiat, requeſting to haue our boxe of Chriſme, becauſe Sartach (as he ſaid) was deſirous to ſee it: and ſo we gaue it him. About euentide Coiat ſent for vs, ſaying: My lord your king wrote good words vnto my lord and maſter Sartach. Howbeit there are certaine matters of difficulty in them concerning which he dare not determine ought, without the aduiſe and counſell of his father. And therfore of neceſſitie you muſt depart vnto his father, leauing behind you the two carts, which you brought hither yeſterday with veſtiments and bookes, in my cuſtodie: becauſe my lorde is deſirous to take more diligent view thereof. I preſently ſuſpecting what miſchiefe might enſue by his couetouſnes, ſaid vnto him: Sir, we will not onely leaue thoſe with you, but the two other carts alſo, which we haue in our poſſeſſion, will we commit vnto your cuſtodie. You ſhall not (quoth he) leaue thoſe behinde you, but for the other two carts firſt named, we will ſatiſfie your requeſt. I ſaide that this could not conueniently be done: but needes we muſt leaue all with him. Then he aſked, whether we meant to tarie in the land? I anſwered: If you throughly vnderſtand the letters of my lorde the king, you know that we are euen ſo determined. Then he replied, that we ought to bee patient and lowly: and ſo we departed from him that euening. On the morrowe after he ſent a Neſtorian Prieſt for the carts, and we cauſed all the foure carts to be deliuered. Then came the foreſaid brother of Coiat to meet vs, and ſeparated all thoſe things, which we had brought the day before vnto the Court, from the reſt, namely, the bookes and veſtiments, and tooke them away with him. Howbeit Coiat had commanded, that we ſhould carie thoſe veſtiments with vs, which wee ware in the preſence of Sartach, that we might put them on before Baatu, if neede ſhould require: but the ſaid Prieſt tooke them from vs by violence, ſaying: thou haſt brought them vnto Sartach, and wouldeſt thou carie them vnto Baatu? And when I would haue rendred a reaſon, he anſwered: be not too talkatiue, but goe your wayes. Then I ſawe that there was no remedie but patience: for wee could haue no acceſſe vnto Sartach himſelfe, neither was there any other, that would doe vs iuſtice. I was afraide alſo in regard of the interpreter, leaſt he had ſpoken other things then I ſaide vnto him: for his will was good that we ſhould haue giuen away all that wee had. There was yet one comfort remaining vnto me: for when I once perceiued their couetous intent, I conueyed from among our bookes the Bible, and the ſentences, and certaine other bookes which I made ſpeciall account of. Howbeit I durſt not take away the Pſalter of my ſoueraigne Lady the Queene, becauſe it was too wel knowen, by reaſon of the golden pictures therein. And ſo we returned with the two other carts vnto our lodging. Then came he that was appointed to be our guide vnto the court of Baatu, willing vs to take our iourney in all poſte-haſte: vnto whom I ſaid, that I would in no caſe haue the carts to goe with me. Which thing he declared vnto Coiat. Then Coiat commaunded, that we ſhould leaue them and our ſeruant with him: And we did as he commanded. And ſo traueling directly Eaſtward towards Baatu, the third day we came to Etilia or Volga: the ſtreams whereof when I beheld, I wondered from what regions of the North ſuch huge and mighty waters ſhould deſcend. Before we were departed from Sartach, the foreſaid Coiat, with many other Scribes of the court ſaid vnto vs: doe not make report that our Lord is a Chriſtian, but a Moal. Becauſe the name of a Chriſtian ſeemeth vnto them to be the name of ſome nation. So great is their pride, that albeit they beleeue perhaps ſome things concerning Chriſt, yet will they not bee called Chriſtians, being deſirous that their owne name, that is to ſay, Moal ſhould be exalted aboue all other names. Neither wil they be called by the name of Tartars. For the Tartars were another nation, as I was informed by them.

They are come as farre as Volga.

The Tartars wil be called Moal.

Howe Sartach, and Mangu-Can, and Ken-Can doe reuerence vnto Chriſtians. Chap. 19.

At the ſame time when the French-men tooke Antioch, a certaine man named Con Can had dominion ouer the Northren regions, lying thereabouts. Con is a proper name: Can is a name of authority or dignitie, which ſignifieth a diuiner or ſoothſayer. All diuiners are called Can amongſt them. Whereupon their princes are called Can, becauſe that vnto them belongeth the gouernment of the people by diuination. Wee doe reade alſo in the hiſtorie of Antiochia, that the Turkes ſent for aide againſt the French-men, vnto the kingdome of Con Can. For out of thoſe parts the whole nation of the Turkes firſt came. The ſaid Con was of the nation of Kara-Catay. Kara ſignifieth blacke, and Catay is the name of a countrey. So that Kara-Catay ſignifieth the blacke Catay. This name was giuen to make a difference betweeen the foreſaid people, and the people of Catay, inhabiting Eaſtward ouer againſt ẏ Ocean ſea: concerning whom your maieſty ſhall vnderſtand more hereafter. Theſe Catayans dwelt vpon certaine Alpes, by the which I trauailed. And in a certain plaine countrey within thoſe Alpes, there inhabited a Neſtorian ſhepheard, being a mighty gouernour ouer the people called Yayman, which were Chriſtians, following the ſect of Neſtorius. After the death of Con Can, the ſaid Neſtorian exalted himſelfe to the kingdome, and they called him King Iohn, reporting ten times more of him then was true. For ſo the Neſtorians which come out of thoſe parts, vſe to doe. For they blaze abroade great rumors, and reports vpon iuſt nothing. Whereupon they gaue out concerning Sartach, that he was become a Chriſtian, and the like alſo they reported concerning Mangu Can, and Ken Can: namely becauſe theſe Tartars make more account of Chriſtians, then they doe of other people, and yet in very deede, themſelues are no Chriſtians. So likewiſe there went foorth a great report concerning the ſaid king Iohn. Howbeit, when I trauailed along by his territories, there was no man that knew any thing of him, but onely a fewe Neſtorians. In his paſtures or territories dwelleth Ken Can, at whoſe Court Frier Andrew was. And I my ſelfe paſſed by it at my returne. This Iohn had a brother, being a mightie man alſo, and a ſhepheard like himſelfe, called Vut, and he inhabited beyond the Alpes of Cara Catay, being diſtant from his brother Iohn, the ſpace of three weekes iourney. He was lord ouer a certain village, called Cara Carum, hauing people alſo for his ſubiects, named Crit, or Merkit, who were Chriſtians of the ſect of Neſtorius. But their Lorde abandoning the worſhip of Chriſt, followed after idoles, reteining with him Prieſts of the ſaide idoles, who all of them are worſhippers of deuils and ſorcerers. Beyond his paſtures ſome tenne or fifteene dayes iourney, were the paſtures of Moal, who were a poore and beggerly nation, without gouernour, and without Lawe, except their ſoothſayings, and their diuinations, vnto the which deteſtable ſtudies, all in thoſe partes doe apply their mindes. Neere vnto Moal were other poore people called Tartars. The foreſaid king Iohn died without iſſue male, and thereupon his brother Vut was greatly inriched, and cauſed himſelfe to be named Can; and his droues and flockes ranged euen vnto the borders of Moal. About the ſame time there was one Cyngis, a blacke ſmith among the people of Moal. This Cyngis ſtole as many cattel from Vut Can, as he could poſſibly get: inſomuch that the ſhepheards of Vut complained vnto their Lord. Then prouided he an armie, and marched vp into the countrey of Moal to ſeeke for the ſaide Cyngis. But Cyngis fledde among the Tartars, and hidde himſelfe amongeſt them. And Vut hauing taken ſome ſpoiles both from Moal, and alſo from the Tartars, returned home. Then ſpake Cyngis vnto the Tartars, and vnto the people of Moal, ſaying: Sirs, becauſe we are deſtitute of a gouernour and Captaine, you ſee howe our neighbours do oppreſſe vs. And the Tartars and Moals appointed him to be their Chiefetaine. Then hauing ſecretly gathered together an armie, he brake in ſuddenly vpon Vut, and ouercame him, and Vut fledde into Cataya. At the ſame time was the daughter of Vut taken, which Cyngis maried married vnto one of his ſonnes, by whom ſhe conceiued, & brought forth the great Can, which now reigneth, called Mangu-Can. Then Cyngis ſent yͤ Tartars before him in al places where he came: and thereupon was their name publiſhed and ſpread abroade: for in all places the people woulde crie out: Loe, the Tartars come, the Tartars come. Howbeit, through continuall warres, they are nowe, all of them in a maner, conſumed and brought to nought. Whereupon the Moals indeuour what they can, to extinguiſh the name of the Tartars, that they may exalt their owne name. The countrey wherein they firſt inhabited, and where the Court of Cyngis Can as yet remaineth, is called Mancherule. But becauſe Tartaria is the region, about which they haue obtained their conqueſts, they eſteeme that as their royall and chiefe citie, and there for the moſt part doe they elect their great Can.

Frier Andrew.

NOw, as concerning Sartach, whether he beleeues in Chriſt, or no, I knowe not. This I am ſure of, that he will not be called a Chriſtian. Yea rather he ſeemeth vnto mee to deride and ſkoffe at Chriſtians. He lieth in the way of the Chriſtians, as namely of the Ruſſians, the Valachians, the Bulgarians of Bulgaria the leſſer, the Soldaianes, the Kerkis, and the Alanians: who all of them paſſe by him, as they are going to the Court of his father Baatu, to carie giftes: whereupon he is more in league with them. Howbeit, if the Saracens come, and bring greater giftes then they, they are diſpatched ſooner. He hath about him certaine Neſtorian Prieſtes, who pray vpon their beades, and ſing their deuotions. Alſo, there is another vnder Baatu called Berta, who feedeth his cattell toward Porta ferrea, or Derbent, where lieth the paſſage of all thoſe Saracens, which come out of Perſia, and out of Turkie to goe vnto Baatu, and paſſing by, they giue rewards vnto him. And he profeſſeth himſelfe to be a Saracene, and will not permit ſwines fleſh to be eaten in his dominions. Howbeit, at the time of our returne, Baatu commanded him to remoue himſelfe from that place, and to inhabite vpon the Eaſt ſide of Volga: for hee was vnwilling that the Saracens meſſengers ſhould paſſe by the ſaide Berta, becauſe he ſawe it was not for his profite. For the ſpace of foure dayes while we remained in the court of Sartach, we had not any victuals at all allowed vs, but once onely a litle Coſmos. And in our iourney betweene him and his father, wee trauelled in great feare. For certaine Ruſſians, Hungarians, and Alanians being ſeruants vnto the Tartars (of whom they haue great multitudes among them) aſſemble themſelues twentie or thirtie in a companie, and ſo ſecretly in the night conueying themſelues from home, they take bowes and arrowes with them, and whomeſoeuer they finde in the night ſeaſon, they put him to death, hiding themſelues in the day time. And hauing tired their horſes, they goe in the night vnto a company of other horſes feeding in ſome paſture, and change them for newe, taking with them alſo one or two horſes beſides, to eate them when they ſtand in neede. Our guide therefore was ſore afraide, leaſt we ſhould haue met with ſuch companions. In this iourney wee had died for famine, had we not caried ſome of our biſket with vs. At length we came vnto the mighty riuer of Etilia, or Volga. For it is foure times greater, then the riuer of Sein, and of a wonderfull depth: and iſſuing forth of Bulgaria the greater, it runneth into a certaine lake or ſea, which of late they cal the Hircan ſea, according to the name of a certain citie in Perſia, ſtanding vpon the ſhore thereof. Howbeit Iſidore calleth it the Caſpian ſea. For it hath the Caſpian mountaines and the land of Perſia ſituate on the South ſide thereof: and the mountaines of Muſihet, that is to ſay, of the people called Aſſaſſini towards the Eaſt, which mountaines are conioyned vnto the Caſpian mountaines: but on the North ſide thereof lieth the ſame deſert, wherein the Tartars doe now inhabite. Howbeit heretofore there dwelt certaine people called Changlæ. And on that ſide it receiueth the ſtreams of Etilia; which riuer increaſeth in Sommer time, like vnto the riuer Nilus in Ægypt. Vpon the Weſt part thereof, it hath the mountaines of Alani, and Lesgi, and Porta ferrea, or Derbent, and the mountaines of Georgia. This Sea therefore is compaſſed in on three ſides with the mountaines, but on the North ſide with plaine grounde. Frier Andrew, in his iourney trauelled round about two ſides thereof, namely the South and the Eaſt ſides: and I my ſelfe about other two, that is to ſay, the North ſide in going from Baatu to Mangu-Can, and in returning likewiſe: and the Weſt ſide in comming home from Baatu into Syria. A man may trauel round about it in foure monethes. And it is not true which Iſidore reporteth, namely that this Sea is a bay or gulfe comming forth of the Ocean: for it doeth, in no part thereof, ioyne with the Ocean, but is inuironed on all ſides with lande.

Of the court of Baatu: and howe we were interteined by him. Chap. 21.

All the region extending from the Weſt ſhore of the foreſaid ſea, where Alexanders Iron gate, otherwiſe called the citie of Derbent, is ſituate, and from the mountaines of Alania, all along by the fennes of Meotis, whereinto the riuer of Tanais falleth, and ſo forth, to the North Ocean, was wont to be called Albania. Of which countrey Iſidore reporteth, that there be dogs of ſuch an huge ſtature, and ſo fierce, that they are able in fight to match buls, and to maſter lions. Which is true, as I vnderſtand by diuers, who tolde me, that there towards the North Ocean they make their dogges to draw in carts like oxen, by reaſon of their bigneſſe and ſtrength. Moreouer, vpon that part of Etilia where we arriued, there is a new cottage built, wherein they haue placed Tartars and Ruthenians both together, to ferrie ouer, and tranſport meſſengers going and comming to and fro the court of Baatu. For Baatu remaineth vpon the farther ſide towards the Eaſt. Neither aſcendeth hee in Sommer time more Northward then the foreſaide place where we arriued, but was euen then deſcending to the South. From Ianuarie vntill Auguſt both he and all other Tartars aſcend by the bankes of riuers towards cold and Northerly regions, and in Auguſt they begin to returne backe againe. We paſſed downe the ſtreame therefore in a barke, from the foreſaid cottage vnto his court. From the ſame place vnto the villages of Bulgaria the greater, ſtanding toward the North, it is fiue dayes iourney. I wonder what deuill caried the religion of Mahomet thither. For, from Derbent, which is vpon the extreame borders of Perſia, it is aboue 30. daies iourney to paſſe ouerthwart the deſert, and ſo to aſcend by the banke of Etilia, into the foreſaid countrey of Bulgaria. All which way there is no citie, but onely certaine cottages neere vnto that place where Etilia falleth into the ſea. Thoſe Bulgarians are moſt wicked Saracens, more earneſtly profeſſing the damnable religion of Mahomet, then any other nation whatſoeuer. Moreouer, when I firſt beheld the court of Baatu, I was aſtonied at the ſight thereof: for his houſes or tents ſeemed as though they had bene ſome huge and mightie citie, ſtretching out a great way in length, the people ranging vp and downe about it for the ſpace of ſome three or foure leagues. And euen as the people of Iſrael knew euery man, on which ſide of the tabernacle to pitch his tent: euen ſo euery one of them knoweth right well, towards what ſide of the court he ought to place his houſe when he takes it from off the cart. Whereupon the court is called in their language Horda, which ſignifieth, the midſt: becauſe the gouernour or chieftaine among them dwels alwaies in the middeſt of his people: except onely that directly towards the South no ſubiect or inferiour perſon placeth himſelfe, becauſe towards that region the court gates are ſet open: but vnto the right hand, and the left hand they extend themſelues as farre as they will, according to the conueniencie of places, ſo that they place not their houſes directly oppoſite againſt the court. At our arriual we were conducted vnto a Saracen, who prouided not for vs any victuals at all. The day following, we were brought vnto the court: and Baatu had cauſed a large tent to be erected, becauſe his houſe or ordinarie tent could not containe ſo many men and women as were aſſembled. Our guide admoniſhed vs not to ſpeake, till Baatu had giuen vs commandement ſo to doe, and that then we ſhould ſpeake our mindes briefly. Then Baatu demanded whether your Maieſtie had ſent Ambaſſadours vnto him or no? I anſwered, that your Maieſtie had ſent meſſengers to Ken-Can: and that you would not haue ſent meſſengers vnto him, or letters vnto Sartach, had not your Highneſſe bene perſwaded that they were become Chriſtians: becauſe you ſent not vnto them for any feare, but onely for congratulation, and curteſies ſake, in regard that you heard they were conuerted to Chriſtianitie. Then led he vs vnto his pauilion: and wee were charged not to touch the cordes of the tent, which they account in ſtead of the threſhold of the houſe. There we ſtoode in our habite bare-footed, and bare-headed, and were a great and ſtrange ſpectacle in their eyes. For indeed Frier Iohn de Plano Carpini had byn there before my comming: howbeit, becauſe he was the Popes meſſenger, he changed his habit that he might not be contemned. Then we were brought into the very midſt of the tent, neither required they of vs to do any reuerence by bowing our knees, as they vſe to doe of other meſſengers. Wee ſtood therefore before him for the ſpace wherein a man might haue rehearſed the Pſalme, Miſerere mei Deus: and there was great ſilence kept of all men. Baatu himſelfe ſate vpon a ſeate long and broad like vnto a bed, guilt all ouer, with three ſtaires to aſcend thereunto, and one of his ladies ſate beſide him. The men there aſſembled, ſate downe ſcattering, ſome on the right hand of the ſaide Lady, and ſome on the left. Thoſe places on the one ſide which the women filled not vp (for there were only the wiues of Baatu) were ſupplied by the men. Alſo, at the very entrance of the tent, ſtoode a bench furniſhed with coſmos, and with ſtately great cuppes of ſiluer, and golde, beeing richly ſet with precious ſtones. Baatu beheld vs earneſtly, and we him: and he ſeemed to me to reſemble in perſonage, Mon-ſieur Iohn de beau mont, whoſe ſoule reſteth in peace. And hee had a freſh ruddie colour in his countenance. At length he commanded vs to ſpeake. Then our guide gaue vs direction, that wee ſhould bow our knees & ſpeak. Whereupon I bowed one knee as vnto a man: then he ſignified that I ſhould kneele vpon both knees: and I did ſo, being loath to contend about ſuch circumſtances. And againe he commanded me to ſpeak. Then I thinking of praier vnto God, becauſe I kneeled on both my knees, began to pray on this wiſe: Sir, we beſeech the Lord, from whom all good things doe proceed, and who hath giuen you theſe earthly benefites, that it would pleaſe him hereafter to make you partaker of his heauenly bleſſings: becauſe the former without theſe are but vaine and vnprofitable. And I added further. Be it knowen vnto you of a certainty, that you ſhal not obtain the ioyes of heauen, vnles you become a Chriſtian: for God ſaith, Whoſoeuer beleeueth & is baptized, ſhalbe ſaued: but he that beleeueth not, ſhalbe condemned. At this word he modeſtly ſmiled: but the other Moals began to clap their hands, and to deride vs. And my ſilly interpreter, of whom eſpecially I ſhould haue receiued comfort in time of need, was himſelf abaſhed & vtterly daſht out of countenance. Then, after ſilence made, I ſaid vnto him, I came vnto your ſonne, becauſe we heard that he was become a Chriſtian: and I brought vnto him letters on the behalfe of my ſoueraigne Lord the king of France: and your ſonne ſent me hither vnto you. The cauſe of my comming therefore is beſt knowen vnto your ſelfe. Then he cauſed me to riſe vp. And he enquired your maieſties name, and my name, and the name of mine aſſociate and interpreter, and cauſed them all to be put downe in writing. He demanded likewiſe (becauſe he had bene informed, that you were departed out of your owne countreys with an armie) againſt whom you waged warre? I anſwered: againſt the Saracens, who had defiled the houſe of God at Ieruſalem. He asked alſo, whether your Highnes had euer before that time ſent any meſſengers vnto him, or no? To you ſir (ſaid I) neuer. Then cauſed he vs to ſit downe, and gaue vs of his milke to drinke, which they account to be a great fauour, eſpecially when any man is admitted to drinke Coſmos with him in his own houſe. And as I ſate looking downe vpon the ground, he commanded me to lift vp my countenance, being deſirous as yet to take more diligent view of vs, or els perhaps for a kinde of ſuperſtitious obſeruation. For they eſteeme it a ſigne of ill lucke, or a prognoſtication of euill vnto them, when any man ſits in their preſence, holding downe his head, as if he were ſad: eſpecially when he leanes his cheeke or chinne vpon his hand. Then we departed forth, and immediatly after came our guide vnto vs, and conducting vs vnto our lodging, ſaide vnto me: Your maſter the King requeſteth that you may remaine in this land, which requeſt Baatu cannot ſatiſfie without the knowledge and conſent of Mangu-Can. Wherefore you, and your interpreter muſt of neceſſitie goe vnto Mangu-Can. Howbeit your aſſociate, and the other man ſhall returne vnto the court of Sartach, ſtaying there for you, till you come backe. Then began the man of God mine interpreter to lament, eſteeming himſelfe but a dead man. Mine aſſociate alſo proteſted, that they ſhould ſooner chop off his head, then withdrawe him out of my companie. Moreouer I my ſelfe ſaide, that without mine aſſociate I could not goe: and that we ſtood in neede of two ſeruants at the leaſt, to attend vpon vs, becauſe, if one ſhould chance to fall ſicke, we could not be without another. Then returning vnto the court, he told theſe ſayings vnto Baatu. And Baatu commanded ſaying: let the two Prieſts and the interpreter goe together, but let the clearke returne vnto Sartach. And comming againe vnto vs, hee tolde vs euen ſo. And when I would haue ſpoken for the clearke to haue had him with vs, he ſaide: No more words: for Baatu hath reſolued, that ſo it ſhall be, and therefore I dare not goe vnto the court any more. Goſet the clearke had remaining of the almes money beſtowed vpon him, 26. Yperperas, and no more: 10. whereof he kept for himſelfe and for the lad, and 16. he gaue vnto the man of God for vs. And thus were we parted aſunder with teares: he returning vnto the court of Sartach, and our ſelues remaining ſtill in the ſame place.

Chap.22.

Vpon Aſſumption euen our clearke arriued at the court of Sartach. And on the morrow after, the Neſtorian Prieſtes were adorned with our veſtments in the preſence of the ſaide Sartach. Then wee our ſelues were conducted vnto another hoſte, who was appointed to prouide vs houſeroome, victualles, and horſes. But becauſe wee had not ought to beſtowe vpon him, hee did all things vntowardly for vs. Then wee rode on forwarde with Baatu, deſcending along by the banke of Etilia, for the ſpace of fiue weekes together: Sometimes mine aſſociate was ſo extremelie hungrie, that hee would tell mee in a manner weeping, that it fared with him as though hee had neuer eaten any thing in all his life before. There is a faire or market following the court of Baatu at all times: but it was ſo farre diſtant from vs that we could not haue recourſe thereunto. For wee were conſtrained to walke on foote for want of horſes. At length certaine Hungarians (who had ſometime bene after a ſort Cleargie men) found vs out: and one of them could as yet ſing many ſongs without booke, and was accompted of other Hungarians as a Prieſt, and was ſent for vnto the funerals of his deceaſed countrey men. There was another of them alſo prettily wel inſtructed in his Grammer: for hee could vnderſtand the meaning of any thing that wee ſpake, but could not anſwere vs. Theſe Hungarians were a great comfort vnto vs, bringing vs Coſmos to drinke, yea, and ſometimes fleſh for to eate alſo: who, when they requeſted to haue ſome bookes of vs, and I had not any to giue them (for indeede we had none but onely a Bible, and a breuiarie) it grieued mee exceedingly. And I ſaide vnto them: Bring mee ſome inke and paper, and I will write for you ſo long as we ſhall remaine here: and they did ſo. And I copied out for them Horas beatæ Virginis, and Officium defunctorum. Moreouer, vpon a certaine day, there was a Comanian that accompanied vs, ſaluting vs in Latine, and ſaying: Saluete Domini. Wondering thereat and ſaluting him againe, I demaunded of him, who had taught him that kinde of ſalutation? Hee ſaide that hee was baptized in Hungaria by our Friers, and that of them hee learned it. He ſaide moreouer, that Baatu had enquired many things of him concerning vs, and that hee tolde him the eſtate of our order. Afterwarde I ſawe Baatu riding with his companie, and all his ſubiects that were houſholders or maſters of families riding with him, and (in mine eſtimation) they were not fiue hundred perſons in all. At length about the ende of Holy roode, there came a certaine rich Moal vnto vs (whoſe father was a Millenarie, which is a great office among them) ſaying: I am the man that muſt conduct you vnto Mangu-Can, and wee haue thither a iourney of foure moneths long to trauell, and there is ſuch extreame colde in thoſe parts, that ſtones and trees doe euen riue aſunder in regarde thereof. Therefore I would wiſh you throughly to aduiſe your ſelues, whether you be able to indure it or no. Vnto whome I anſwered: I hope by Gods helpe that we ſhalbe able to brooke that which other men can indure. Then he ſaide: if you cannot indure it, I wil forſake you by the way. And I anſwered him: it were not iuſt dealing for you ſo to doe: for wee goe not thither vpon anie buſineſſe of our owne, but by reaſon that we are ſent by your lord. Wherfore ſithence we are committed vnto your charge, you ought in no wiſe to forſake vs. Then he ſaide: all ſhalbe well. Afterward he cauſed vs to ſhewe him all our garments: and whatſoeuer hee deemed to be leſſe needfull for vs, he willed vs to leaue it behind in the cuſtodie of our hoſte. On the morrow they brought vnto ech of vs a furred gowne, made all of rammes ſkinnes, with the wool ſtil vpon them, and breeches of the ſame, and bootes alſo or buſkins according to their faſhion, and ſhooes made of felt, and hoods alſo made of ſkinnes after their maner. The ſecond day after Holy rood, we began to ſet forward on our iourney, hauing three guides to direct vs: and we rode continually Eaſtward, till the feaſt of All Saints. Throughout all that region, and beyonde alſo did the people of Changle inhabite, who were by parentage deſcended from the Romanes. Vpon the North ſide of vs, wee had Bulgaria the greater, and on the South, the foreſaid Caſpian ſea.

Or, Iaic.

Hauing trauelled twelue dayes iourney from Etilia, wee found a mightie riuer called Iagac: which riuer iſſuing out of the North, from the land of Paſcatir, deſcendeth into the foreſaid ſea. The language of Paſcatir, and of the Hungarians is all one, and they are all of them ſhepheards, not hauing any cities. And their countrey bordereth vpon Bulgaria the greater, on the Weſt frontier thereof. From the Northeaſt part of the ſaid countrey, there is no citie at all. For Bulgaria the greater is the fartheſt countrey that way, that hath any citie therein. Out of the forenamed region of Paſcatir, proceeded the Hunnes of olde time, who afterwarde were called Hungarians. Next vnto it is Bulgaria the greater. Iſidore reporteth concerning the people of this nation, that with ſwift horſes they trauerſed the impregnable walles and bounds of Alexander, (which, together with the rocks of Caucaſus, ſerued to reſtraine thoſe barbarous and blood-thirſtie people from inuading the regions of the South) inſomuch that they had tribute paied vnto them, as farre as Ægypt. Likewiſe they waſted all countreis euen vnto France. Whereupon they were more mightie then the Tartars as yet are. And vnto them the Blacians, the Bulgarians, and the Vandals ioyned themſelues. For out of Bulgaria the greater, came thoſe Bulgarians. Moreouer, they which inhabit beyond Danubius, neere vnto Conſtantinople, and not farre from Paſcatir, are called Ilac, which (ſauing the pronunciation) is al one with Blac, (for the Tartars cannot pronounce the letter B) from whom alſo deſcended the people which inhabit the land of Aſſani. For they are both of thẽ called Ilac (both theſe, & the other) in yͤ languages of the Ruſſians, yͤ Polonians, & the Bohemians.

Cangle an huge plaine countrey.

The Sclauonians ſpeake all one language with the Vandals, all which banded themſelues with the Hunnes: and now for the moſt part, they vnite themſelues vnto the Tartars: whō God hath raiſed vp from the vtmoſt partes of the earth, according to that which the Lord ſaith: I will prouoke them to enuy (namely ſuch as keepe not his Law) by a people, which is no people, and by a fooliſh nation will I anger them. This prophecie is fulfilled, according to the literal ſenſe thereof, vpon all nations which obſerue not the Law of God. All this which I haue written concerning the land of Paſcatir, was told me by certaine Friers prædicants, which trauailed thither before euer the Tartars came abroad. And from that time they were ſubdued vnto their neighbors the Bulgarians being Saracens, whereupon many of them proued Saracens alſo. Other matters concerning this people, may be knowen out of Chronicles. For it is manifeſt, that thoſe prouinces beyond Conſtantinople, which are now called Bulgaria, Valachia, & Sclauonia, were of old time prouinces belonging to the Greekes, Alſo Hungaria was heretofore called Pannonia. And wee were riding ouer the land of Cangle, from the feaſt of Holy roode, vntill the feaſt of All Saints: trauelling almoſt euery day (according to mine eſtimation) as farre, as from Paris to Orleans, and ſometimes farther, as we were prouided of poſte horſes: for ſome dayes we had change of horſes twiſe or thriſe in a day. Sometimes we trauailed two or three daies together, not finding any people, and then we were conſtrained not to ride ſo faſt. Of 20. or 30. horſes we had alwayes the worſt, becauſe wee were ſtrangers. For euery one tooke their choice of the beſt horſes before vs. They prouided mee alwaies of a ſtrong horſe, becauſe I was very corpulent & heauy: but whether he ambled a gentle paſe or no, I durſt not make any queſtion. Neither yet durſt I complaine, although he trotted full ſore. But euery man muſt be contented with his lot as it fell. Whereupon wee were exceedingly troubled: for oftentimes our horſes were tired before we could come at any people. And then wee were conſtrained to beate and whip on our horſes, and to lay our garments vpon other emptie horſes: yea and ſometimes two of vs to ride vpon one horſe.

Of the hunger, and thirſt, and other miſeries, which wee ſuſtained in our iourney. Chap.24.

Certaine riuers.

Of hunger and thirſt, colde and wearineſſe, there was no end. For they gaue vs no victuals, but onely in the euening. In the morning they vſed to giue vs a little drinke, or ſome ſodden Millet to ſup off. In the euening they beſtowed fleſh vpon vs, as namely, a ſhoulder and breaſt of rams mutton, and euery man a meaſured quantitie of broath to drinke. When we had ſufficient of the fleſh-broath, we were maruellouſly wel refreſhed. And it ſeemed to me moſt pleaſant, and moſt nouriſhing drinke. Euery Saterday I remained faſting vntil night, without eating or drinking of ought. And when night came, I was conſtrained, to my great grief and ſorow, to eat fleſh. Sometimes we were faine to eate fleſh halfe ſodden, or almoſt rawe, and all for want of fewel to ſeethe it withal: eſpecially when we lay in the fields, or were benighted before we came at our iourneis end: becauſe we could not then conueniently gather together the doung of horſes or oxe: for other fewel we found but ſeldome, except perhaps a few thornes in ſome places. Likewiſe vpon the bankes of ſome riuers, there are woods growing here and there. Howbeit they are very rare. In the beginning our guide highly diſdained vs, and it was tedious vnto him to conduct ſuch baſe fellowes. Afterward, when he began to know vs ſomewhat better, he directed vs on our way by the courts of rich Moals, and we were requeſted to pray for them. Wherefore, had I caried a good interpreter with me, I ſhould haue had opportunitie to haue done much good. The foreſaid Chingis, who was the firſt great Can or Emperour of the Tartars, had foure ſonnes, of whome proceeded by naturall deſcent many children, euery one of which doeth at this day enioy great poſſeſſions: and they are daily multiplied and diſperſed ouer that huge and waſte deſert, which is, in dimenſions, like vnto the Ocean Sea. Our guide therefore directed vs, as we were going on our iourney, vnto many of their habitations. And they maruelled exceedingly, that we would receiue neither gold, nor ſiluer, nor precious and coſtly garments at their hands. They inquired alſo, concerning the great Pope, whether he was of ſo laſting an age as they had heard? For there had gone a report among them, that he was 500. yeeres olde. They inquired likewiſe of our countreis, whether there were abundance of ſheep, oxen, & horſes or no? Concerning the Ocean ſea, they could not conceiue of it, becauſe it was without limits or banks. Vpon the euen of yͤ feaſt of Al Saints, we forſook the way leading towards the Eaſt, (becauſe the people were now deſcended very much South) and we went on our iourney by certaine Alpes, or mountaines directly Southward, for the ſpace of 8. dayes together. In the foreſaid deſert I ſaw many aſſes (which they cal Colan) being rather like vnto mules: theſe did our guide & his companions chaſe very eagerly: howbeit, they did but loſe their labour: for the beaſtes were two ſwift for them. Vpon the 7. day there appeared to the South of vs huge high mountaines, mountaines, and we entred into a place which was well watered, and freſh as a garden, and found land tilled and manured. The eight day after the feaſt of All Saints, we arriued at a certain towne of the Saracens, named Kenchat, the gouernour whereof met our guide at the townes end with ale and cups. For it is their maner at all townes and villages, ſubiect vnto them, to meet the meſſengers of Baatu and Mangu-Can with meate and drinke. At the ſame time of the yere, they went vpon the yce in that countrey. And before the feaſt of S. Michael, we had froſt in the deſert. I enquired the name of that prouince: but being now in a ſtrange territorie, they could not tell mee the name thereof, but onely the name of a very ſmal citie in the ſame prouince. And there deſcended a great riuer downe from the mountaines, which watered the whole region, according as the inhabitants would giue it paſſage, by making diuers chanels and ſluces: neither did this riuer exonerate it ſelfe into any ſea, but was ſwallowed vp by an hideous gulfe into the bowels of the earth: and it cauſed many fennes or lakes. Alſo I ſaw many vines, and dranke of the wine thereof.

How Ban was put to death: and concerning the habitation of the Dutch men. Chap. 25.

THe day following, we came vnto another cottage neere vnto the mountains. And I enquired what mountains they were, which I vnderſtood to be the mountains of Caucaſus, which are ſtretched forth, & continued on both parts to the ſea, from the Weſt vnto the Eaſt: and on the Weſt part they are conioyned vnto the foreſaid Caſpian ſea, wherinto the riuer of Volga diſchargeth his ſtreams. I enquired alſo of the city of Talas, wherein were certaine Dutchmen ſeruants vnto one Buri, of whom Frier Andrew made mention. Concerning whom alſo I enquired very diligently in the courts of Sartach & Baatu. Howbeit I could haue no intelligence of them, but onely that their lord & maſter Ban was put to death vpon the occaſion following: This Ban was not placed in good and fertile paſtures. And vpon a certain day being drunken, he ſpake on this wiſe vnto his men. Am not I of the ſtocke and kinred of Chingis Can, as well as Baatu? (for in very deede he was brother or nephew vnto Baatu.) Why then doe I not paſſe and repaſſe vpon the banke of Etilia, to feed my cattel there, as freely as Baatu himſelfe doeth? Which ſpeeches of his were reported vnto Baatu. Whereupon Baatu wrote vnto his ſeruants to bring their Lorde bound vnto him. And they did ſo. Then Baatu demanded of him whether he had ſpoken any ſuch words? And hee confeſſed that he had. Howbeit, (becauſe it is the Tartars maner to pardon drunken men) he excuſed himſelfe that he was drunken at the ſame time. Howe durſt thou (quoth Baatu) once name mee in thy drunkenneſſe? And with that hee cauſed his head to be chopt off. Concerning the foreſaid Dutchmen, I could not vnderſtand ought, till I was come vnto the court of Mangu-Can. And there I was informed that Mangu-Can had remoued them out of the iuriſdiction of Baatu, for the ſpace of a moneths iourney from Talas Eaſtward, vnto a certaine village, called Bolac: where they are ſet to dig gold, and to make armour. Whereupon I could neither goe nor come by them. I paſſed very neere the ſaide citie in going forth, as namely, within three dayes iourney thereof: but I was ignorant that I did ſo: neither could I haue turned out of my way, albeit I had knowen ſo much. From the foreſaide cottage we went directly Eaſtward, by the mountaines aforeſaid. And from that time we trauailed among the people of Mangu-Can, who in all places ſang and daunced before our guide, becauſe hee was the meſſenger of Baatu. For this curteſie they doe afford eche to other: namely, the people of Mangu-Can receiuing the meſſengers of Baatu in maner aforeſaide: and ſo likewiſe the people of Baatu intertaining the meſſengers of Mangu-Can. Notwithſtanding the people of Baatu are more ſurlie and ſtoute, and ſhewe not ſo much curteſie vnto the ſubiectes of Mangu-Can, as they doe vnto them. A fewe dayes after, wee entered vpon thoſe Alpes where the Cara Catayans were woont to inhabite. And there wee found a mightie riuer: inſomuch that wee were conſtrained to imbarke our ſelues, and to ſaile ouer it. Afterward we came into a certaine valley, where I ſaw a caſtle deſtroyed, the walles whereof were onely of mudde: and in that place the ground was tilled alſo. And there wee founde a certaine village, named Equius, wherein were Saracens, ſpeaking the Perſian language: howbeit they dwelt an huge diſtance from Perſia. The day following, hauing paſſed ouer the foreſaide Alpes which deſcended from the great mountains Southward, we entred into a moſt beautiful plaine, hauing high mountaines on our right hande, and on the left hande of vs a certaine Sea or lake, which containeth fifteene dayes iourney in circuite. All the foreſayde plaine is moſt commodiouſly watered with certaine freſhes diſtilling from the ſaid mountaines, all which do fall into the lake. In Sommer time wee returned by the North ſhore of the ſaide lake, and there were great mountaines on that ſide alſo. Upon the forenamed plaine there were wont to bee great ſtore of villages: but for the moſt part they were all waſted, in regarde of the fertile paſtures, that the Tartars might feede their cattel there. Wee found one great citie there named Cailac, wherein was a mart, and great ſtore of Merchants frequenting it. In this citie wee remained fifteene dayes, ſtaying for a certaine Scribe or Secretarie of Baatu, who ought to haue accompanied our guide for the diſpatching of certaine affaires in the court of Mangu. All this countrey was wont to be called Organum: and the people thereof had their proper language, and their peculiar kinde of writing. But it was altogether inhabited of the people called Contomanni. The Neſtorians likewiſe in thoſe parts vſed the very ſame kinde of language and writing. They are called Organa, becauſe they were wont to be moſt ſkilfull in playing vpon the Organes or citherne, as it was reported vnto me. Here firſt did I ſee worſhippers of idoles, concerning whom, bee it knowen vnto your maieſtie, that there be many ſects of them in the Eaſt countries.

The people called Iugures idolaters.

The firſt ſort of theſe idolaters are called Iugures: whoſe land bordereth vpon the foreſaid land of Organum, within the ſaid mountains Eaſtward: and in al their cities Neſtorians do inhabit together, and they are diſperſed likewiſe towards Perſia in the cities of the Saracens. The citizens of yͤ foreſaid city of Cailac had 3. idole-Temples: and I entred into two of them, to beholde their fooliſh ſuperſtitions. In the firſt of which I found a man hauing a croſſe painted with ink vpō his hand, wherupon I ſuppoſed him to be a Chriſtian: for he anſwered like a Chriſtian vnto al queſtions which I demanded of him. And I asked him, Why therefore haue you not the croſſe with the image of Ieſu Chriſt therupon? And he anſwered: We haue no ſuch cuſtome. Whereupon I coniectured that they were indeede Chriſtians: but, that for lacke of inſtruction they omitted the foreſaide ceremonie. For I ſaw there behind a certaine cheſt (which was vnto them in ſteed of an altar, whereupon they ſet candles and oblations) an image hauing wings like vnto the image of Saint Michael, and other images alſo, holding their fingers, as if they would bleſſe ſome body. That euening I could not find any thing els. For the Saracens doe onely inuite men thither, but they will not haue them ſpeake of their religion. And therfore, when I enquired of the Saracens concerning ſuch ceremonies, they were offended thereat. On the morrow after were the Kalends, and the Saracens feaſt of Paſſeouer. And changing mine Inne or lodging the ſame day, I tooke vp mine abode neere vnto another idole-Temple. For the citizens of the ſaid citie of Cailac doe curteouſly inuite, & louingly intertaine all meſſengers, euery man of them according to his abilitie and portion. And entring into the foreſaid idole-Temple, I found the Prieſts of the ſaid idoles there. For alwayes at the Kalends they ſet open their Temples, and the prieſts adorne themſelues, and offer vp the peoples oblations of bread and fruits. Firſt therefore I will deſcribe vnto you thoſe rites and ceremonies, which are common vnto all their idole-Temples: and then the ſuperſtitions of the foreſaid Iugures, which be, as it were, a ſect diſtinguiſhed from the reſt. They doe all of them worſhip towards the North, clapping their hands together, and proſtrating themſelues on their knees vpon yͤ earth, holding alſo their foreheads in their hands. Wherupon the Neſtorians of thoſe parts will in no caſe ioyne their hands together in time of prayer: but they pray, diſplaying their hands before their breaſts. They extend their Temples in length Eaſt and Weſt: and vpon the North ſide they build a chamber, in maner of a Veſtry for themſelues to goe forth into. Or ſometimes it is otherwiſe. If it be a foure ſquare Temple, in the midſt of the Temple towards the North ſide thereof, they take in one chamber in that place where the quire ſhould ſtand. And within the ſaid chamber they place a cheſt long and broad like vnto a table: and behinde the ſaide cheſt towardes the South ſtands their principall idole: which I ſawe at Caracarum, and it was as bigge as the idole of Saint Chriſtopher. Alſo a certaine Neſtorian prieſt, which had bin in Catay, ſaide that in that countrey there is an idole of ſo huge a bignes, that it may be ſeen two daies iourney before a man come at it. And ſo they place other idoles round about the foreſaid principal idole, being all of them finely gilt ouer with pure golde: and vpon the ſaide cheſt, which is in manner of a table, they ſet candles and oblations. The doores of their Temples are alwayes opened towards the South, contrary to the cuſtome of the Saracens. They haue alſo great belles like vnto vs. And that is the cauſe (as I thinke) why the Chriſtians of the Eaſt will in no caſe vſe great belles. Notwithſtanding they are common among the Ruſſians, and Gręcians of Gaſaria.

Frier William was at Caracarum.

Of their Temples and idoles: and howe they behaue themſelues in worſhipping their falſe gods. Chap.27.

All their Prieſts had their heads and beards ſhauen quite ouer: and they are clad in ſaffron coloured garments: and being once ſhauen, they lead an vnmaried life from that time forward:

and they liue an hundreth or two hundreth of them together in one cloiſter or couent. Upon thoſe dayes when they enter into their temples, they place two long foormes therein: and ſo ſitting vpon the ſayd foormes like ſinging men in a quier, namely the one halfe of them directly ouer againſt the other, they haue certaine books in their hands, which ſometimes they lay downe by them vpon the foormes: and their heads are bare ſo long as they remaine in the temple. And there they reade ſoftly vnto themſelues, not vttering any voice at all. Whereupon comming in amongſt them, at the time of their ſuperſtitious deuotions, and finding them all ſiting mute in maner aforeſayde, I attempted diuers waies to prouoke them vnto ſpeach, and yet could not by any means poſſible. They haue with them alſo whitherſoeuer they goe, a certaine ſtring with an hundreth or two hundreth nutſhels thereupon, much like to our bead-roule which we cary about with vs. And they doe alwayes vtter theſe words: On mam Hactani, God thou knoweſt: as one of them expounded it vnto me. And ſo often doe they expect a reward at Gods hands, as they pronounce theſe words in remembrance of God. Round about their temple they doe alwayes make a faire court, like vnto a churchyard, which they enuiron with a good wall: and vpon the South part thereof they build a great portal, wherein they ſit and conferre together. And vpon the top of the ſaid portall they pitch a long pole right vp, exalting it, if they can, aboue all the whole towne beſides. And by the ſame pole all men may knowe, that there ſtands the temple of their idoles. Theſe rites and ceremonies aforeſayd be common vnto all idolaters in thoſe parts. Going vpon a time towardes the foreſayd idole-temple, I found certain prieſts ſitting in the outward portal. And thoſe which I ſawe, ſeemed vnto me, by their ſhauen beards, as if they had bene French men. They wore certaine ornaments vpon their heads made of paper. The prieſtes of the foreſaide Iugures doe vſe ſuch attire whitherſoeuer they goe. They are alwaies in their ſaffron coloured iackets, which be very ſtraight being laced or buttened from the boſome right downe, after the French faſhion. And they haue a cloake vpon their left ſhoulder deſcending before and behind vnder their right arme, like vnto a deacon carying the houſſel-boxe in time of lent. Their letters or kind of writing the Tartars did receiue. They begin to write at the top of their paper drawing their lines right downe: and ſo they reade and multiply their lines from the left hand to the right. They doe vſe certaine papers and characters in their magical practiſes. Whereupon their temples are full of ſuch ſhort ſcroules hanged round about them. Alſo Mangu-Can hath ſent letters vnto your Maieſtie written in the language of the Moals or Tartars, and in the foreſayd hand or letter of the Iugures. They burne their dead according to the auncient cuſtome, and lay vp the aſhes in the top of a Pyramis. Now, after I had ſit a while by the foreſaid prieſts, and entred into their temple and ſeene many of their images both great and ſmall, I demanded of them what they beleeued concerning God? And they anſwered: We beleeue that there is onely one God. And I demaunded farther: Whether do you beleeue that he is a ſpirit, or ſome bodily ſubſtance? They ſaide: We beleeue that he is a ſpirite. Then ſaid I: Doe you beleeue that God euer tooke mans nature vpon him? They anſwered: Noe. And againe I ſaid: Sithence ye beleeue that he is a ſpirit, to what end doe you make ſo many bodily images to repreſent him? Sithence alſo you beleeue not that hee was made man: why doe you reſemble him rather vnto the image of a man then of any other creature? Then they anſwered ſaying: we frame not thoſe images whereby to repreſent God. But when any rich man amongſt vs, or his ſonne, or his wife, or any of his friends deceaſeth, hee cauſeth the image of the dead party to be made, and to be placed here: and we in remembrance of him doe reuerence thereunto. Then I replyed: you doe theſe things onely for the friendſhip and flatterie of men. Noe (ſaid they) but for their memory. Then they demanded of me, as it were in ſcoffing wiſe: Where is God? To whom I anſwered: where is your ſoule? They ſaid, in our bodies. Then ſaide I, is it not in euery part of your bodie, ruling and guiding the whole bodie, and yet notwithſtanding is not ſeene or perceiued? Euen ſo God is euery where and ruleth all things, and yet is he inuiſible, being vnderſtanding and wiſedome it ſelfe. Then being deſirous to haue had ſome more conference with them, by reaſon, that mine interpreter was weary, and not able to expreſſe my meaning, I was conſtrained to keepe ſilence. The Moals or Tartars are in this regard of their ſect: namely they beleeue that there is but one God: howbeit they make images of felt, in remembrance of their deceaſed friends, couering them with fiue moſt rich and coſtly garments, and putting them into one or two carts, which carts no man dare once touch: and they are in the cuſtody of their ſoothſayers, who are their prieſts, concerning whom I will giue your Highneſſe more at large to vnderſtand hereafter. Theſe ſoothſayers or diuiners do alwaies attend vpon the court of Mangu and of other great perſonages. As for the poorer or meaner ſorte, they haue them not, but ſuch onely as are of the ſtocke and kindred of Chingis. And when they are to remoue or to take any iourney, the ſaid diuiners goe before them, euen as the cloudie piller went before the children of Iſrael, And they appoint ground where the tents muſt be pitched, and firſt of al they take down their owne houſes: & after them the whole court doth the like. Alſo vpon their feſtiual daies or kalends they take forth the foreſayd images, and place them in order round, or circle wiſe within the houſe. Then come the Moals or Tartars, and enter into the ſame houſe, bowing themſelues before the ſaid images and worſhip them. Moreouer, it is not lawfull for any ſtranger to enter into that houſe. For vpon a certaine time I my ſelfe would haue gone in, but I was chidden full well for my labour.

Of diuers and ſundry nations: and of certaine people which were wont to eate their owne parents. Chap.28.

BUt the foreſayd Iugures (who liue among the Chriſtians, and the Saracens) by their ſundry diſputations, as I ſuppoſe, haue bene brought vnto this, to beleeue, that there is but one onely God. And they dwelt in certaine cities, which afterward were brought in ſubiection vnto Chingis Can: whereupon he gaue his daughter in mariage vnto their king. Alſo the citie of Caracarum it ſelfe is in a manner within their territory: and the whole countrey of king or Presbyter Iohn, & of his brother Vut lyeth neere vnto their dominions: ſauing, that they inhabite in certaine paſtures Northward, and the ſayde Iugures betweene the mountaines towardes the South. Whereupon it came to paſſe, that the Moals receiued letters from them. And they are the Tartars principall ſcribes: & al the Neſtorians almoſt can ſkill of their letters. Next vnto them, betweene the foreſaid mountaines Eaſtward, inhabiteth the nation of Tangut, who are a moſt valiant people, and tooke Chingis in battell. But after the concluſion of a league hee was ſet at libertie by them, and afterward ſubdued them. Theſe people of Tangut haue oxen of great ſtrength, with tailes like vnto horſes, and with long ſhagge haire vpon their backes and bellyes. They haue legges greater then other oxen haue, and they are exceedingly fierce. Theſe oxen drawe the great houſes of the Moals: and their hornes are ſlender, long, ſtreight, and moſt ſharpe pointed: inſomuch that their owners are faine to cut off the endes of them. A cowe will not ſuffer her ſelfe to be coupled vnto one of them, vnles they whiſtle or ſing vnto her. They haue alſo the qualities of a Buffer for if they ſee a man clothed in red, they run vpon him immediately to kill him. Next vnto them are the people of Tebet, men which were wont to eate the carkaſes of their deceaſed parents: that for pities ſake, they might make no other ſepulchre for them, then their owne bowels. Howbeit of late they haue left off this cuſtome, becauſe that thereby they became abominable and odious vnto al other nations. Notwithſtanding vnto this day they make fine cups of the ſkuls of their parents, to the ende that when they drinke out of them, they may amidſt all their iollities and delights call their dead parents to remembrance. This was tolde mee by one that ſaw it. The ſayd people of Tebet haue great plentie of golde in their land. Whoſoeuer therefore wanteth golde, diggeth till he hath found ſome quantitie, and then taking ſo much thereof as will ſerue his turne, he layeth vp the reſidue within the earth: becauſe, if he ſhould put it into his cheſt or ſtorehouſe, hee is of opinion that God would withholde from him all other gold within the earth. I ſawe ſome of thoſe people, being very deformed creatures. In Tangut I ſaw luſty tall men, but browne and ſwart in colour. The Iugures are of a middle ſtature like vnto our French men. Amongſt the Iugures is the originall and roote of the Turkiſh, and Comanian languages. Next vnto Tebet are the people of Langa and Solanga, whoſe meſſengers I ſaw in the Tartars court. And they had brought more then ten great cartes with them, euery one of which was drawen with ſixe oxen. They be little browne men like vnto Spaniards. Alſo they haue iackets, like vnto the vpper veſtment of a deacon, ſauing that the ſleeues are ſomewhat ſtreighter. And they haue miters vpon their heads like biſhops. But the fore part of their miter is not ſo hollow within as the hinder part: neither is it ſharpe pointed or cornered at the toppe: but there hang downe certaine ſquare flappes compacted of a kinde of ſtrawe which is made rough and rugged with extreme heat, and is ſo trimmed, that it glittereth in the ſunne beames, like vnto a glaſſe, or an helmet well burniſhed. And about their temples they haue long bands of the foreſayd matter faſtened vnto their miters, which houer in the wind, as if two long hornes grewe out of their heads. And when the winde toſſeth them vp and downe too much, they tie them ouer the midſt of their miter from one temple to another: and ſo they lie circle wiſe ouerthwart their heads. Moreouer their principal meſſenger comming vnto the Tartars court had a table of elephants tooth about him of a cubite in length, and a handfull in breadth, being very ſmoothe. And whenſoeuer hee ſpake vnto the Emperor himſelfe, or vnto any other great perſonage, hee alwayes beheld that table, as if hee had found therein thoſe things which hee ſpake: neither did he caſt his eyes to the right hand, nor to the lefte, nor vpon his face, with whom he talked. Yea, going too and fro before his lord, he looketh no where but only vpon his table. Beyond thē (as I vnderſtand of a certainty) there are other people called Muc, hauing villages, but no one particular man of them appropriating any cattell vnto himſelfe. Notwithſtanding there are many flockes and droues of cattell in their countrey, & no man appointed to keepe them. But when any one of them ſtandeth in neede of any beaſt, hee aſcendeth vp vnto an hill, and there maketh a ſhout, and all the cattell which are within hearing of the noyſe, come flocking about him, and ſuffer themſelues to be handled and taken, as if they were tame. And when any meſſenger or ſtranger commeth into their countrie, they ſhut him vp into an houſe, miniſtring there things neceſſary vnto him, vntill his buſineſſe be diſpatched. For if anie ſtranger ſhould trauell through that countrie, the cattell would flee away at the very ſent of him, and ſo would become wilde. Beyond Muc is great Cathaya, the inhabitants whereof (as I ſuppoſe) were of olde time, called Seres. For from them are brought moſt excellent ſtuffes of ſilke. And this people is called Seres of a certain towne in the ſame countrey. I was credibile informed, that in the ſaid countrey, there is one towne hauing walles of ſiluer, and bulwarkes or towers of golde. Part of the great Charter granted by king Edward the firſt to the Barons of the Cinque portes, in the ſixt yeere of his reigne 1278. for their good ſeruices done vnto him by ſea: wherein is mention of their former ancient Charters from Edward the Confeſſor, William the Conqueror, William Rufus, Henry the ſecond, king Richard the firſt, king Iohn, and Henry the third continued vnto them.

Edward by the grace of God king of England, lord of Ireland, & duke of Gaſcoigne, to all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earles, Barons, Iuſtices, Shirifs, Prouoſts, Officers, & to all Bayliffes and true ſubiects greeting. You ſhall knowe that for the faithfull ſeruice that our Barons of the fiue Portes hitherto to our predeceſſors kings of England, & vnto vs lately in our armie of Wales haue done, and for their good ſeruice to vs and our heires kings of England, truly to be continued in time to come, we haue granted & by this our Charter confirmed for vs and our heires, to the ſame our Barons and to their heires, all their liberties and freedomes. So that they ſhall be free from all toll, and from all cuſtome; that is to ſay from all laſtage, tallage, paſſage, caringe, rinage, aſponſage, and from all wrecke, and from all their ſale, carping and recarping through all our realme and dominion, with ſocke and ſouke, toll and theme. And that they ſhall haue Infangthefe, and that they ſhall be wreckefree, laſtagefree, and louecopfree. And that they ſhall haue Denne and Strande at great Yarmouth, according as it is contayned in the ordinance by vs thereof made perpetually to bee obſerued. And alſo that they are free from all ſhires and hundreds: ſo that if any perſon will plead againſt them, they ſhall not anſwere nor pleade otherwiſe then they were wont to plead in the time of the lord, king Henrie our great grandfather: And that they ſhall haue their findelles in the ſea and in the land: And that they be free of all their goods and of all their marchandiſes as our freemen. And that they haue their honours in our court, and their liberties throughout all the land whereſoeuer they ſhall come. And that they ſhall be free for euer of all their lands, which in the time of Lord Henrie the king our father they poſſeſſed: that is to ſay in the 44. yere of his reign, from all maner of ſummonces before our Iuſtices to any maner of pleadings, iourneying in what ſhire ſoeuer their lands are. So that they ſhall not be bound to come before the Iuſtices aforeſaid, except any of the ſame Barons doe implead any man, or if any man be impleaded. And that they ſhall not pleade in any other place, except where they ought, and where they were wont, that is to ſay, at Shepway. And that they haue their liberties and freedomes from henceforth, as they and their predeceſſors haue had them at any time better, more fully and honourably in the time of the kings of England, Edward, William the firſt, William the ſecond, Henrie the king our great grandfather, and in the times of king Richard, and king Iohn our grandfathers, and lord king Henrie our father, by their Charters: as the ſame Charters which the ſame our Barons thereof haue, and which we haue ſeene, doe reaſonably teſtifie. And we forbid that no man vnlawfully trouble them nor their marchandiſe vpon our forfeyture of ten pounds. So neuertheleſſe, that when the ſame Barons ſhall fayle in doing of Iuſtice or in receiuing of Iuſtice, our Warden, and the wardens of our

So alſo that the ſayd Barons and their heires, do vnto vs and to our heirs kings of England by the yeare their full ſeruice of 57. ſhippes at their coſts by the ſpace of fifteene dayes at our ſomounce, or at the ſomounce of our heires. We haue granted alſo vnto them of our ſpeciall grace that they haue Outfangtheſe in their lands within the Ports aforeſayd, in the ſame maner that Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earles and Barons, haue in their manours in the countie of Kent. And they be not put in any Aſſiſes, Juries, or Recogniſances by reaſon of their forreine tenure againſt their will: and that they be free of all their owne wines for which they do trauaile of our right priſe, that is to ſay, of one tunne before the maſt, and of another behind the maſte. We haue granted furthermore vnto the ſaid Barons for vs and our heires, that they for euer haue this liberty, that is to ſay, That we or our heires ſhall not haue the wardſhip or mariages of their heires by reaſon of their landes, which they holde within the liberties and Portes aforeſayde, for the which they doe their ſeruice aforeſayd: and for the which wee and our progenitors had not the wardſhips and mariages in time paſt. But we our aforeſayd confirmation vpon the liberties and freedomes aforeſayde, and our grants following to them of our eſpeciall grace, of newe haue cauſed to be made, ſauing alwaies in al things our kingly dignitie: And ſauing vnto vs and to our heires, plea of our crowne, life and member. Wherefore we will and ſurely command for vs and our heires that the aforeſaid Barons and their heires for euer haue all the aforeſaid liberties and freedomes, as the aforeſaid Charters do reaſonably teſtifie. And that of our eſpecial grace they haue outfangtheſe in their lands within the Ports aforeſaid after the maner that Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earles and Barons haue in their manours in the county of Kent. And that they be not put in Aſſiſes, Juries, or Recogniſances by reaſon of their forreine tenure againſt their will. And that they bee free of their owne wines for which they trauaile of our right price or cuſtome, that is to ſay of one tunne of wine before the maſſe, and of another tunne behinde the maſſe. And that likewiſe for euer they haue the libertie aforeſayde: that is to ſay: That wee and our heires haue not the wardſhips or mariages of their heires by reaſon of their landes which they holde within the liberties and Portes aforeſayd, for which they doe their ſeruice aforeſaid, and for which wee and our predeceſſors the wardſhips and mariages haue not had in times paſt. But our aforeſayd confirmation of their liberties and freedomes aforeſaid and other grants following to them of our eſpeciall grace of new we haue cauſed to bee made, Sauing alwayes and in all things our regall dignity. And ſauing vnto vs and our heires the pleas of our crowne of life and member as is aforeſayd. IN the yeere of our Lord 1359. Iohn the French king craftily, and vnder pretence of peace, offered vnto Edward the third king of England, Flanders, Picardie, Gaſcoigne, and other territories which he had ſpoyled and waſted: for the ratifying of which agreement, the foreſaid king Edward ſent his ambaſſadors into France, but the Frenchmen gainſaied them in all their articles and demaunds. Whereupon the king of England being prouoked, ſpeedily prepared himſelfe and his forces to croſſe the ſeas, carying with him Edward Prince of Wales his heire apparant, and Henry duke of Lancaſter and almoſt all his Nobles, with a thouſand wagons and cartes attending vpon them. And the ſaid king had at Sandwich eleuen hundred ſhips exceedingly well furniſhed: with which preparation he paſſed ouer the ſeas, to abate the Frenchmens arrogancie: leauing his yonger ſonne Thomas of Woodſtocke, being very tender of age, as his vicegerent in the Realme of England; albeit not without a protectour, &c.

The wordes of Gerardus Mercator, in the foote of his general Map, vpon the deſcription of the North partes.

QVod ad deſcriptionem partium Septentrionalium attinet, eam nos accipimus ex Itinerario Iacobi Cnoyen Buſcoducenſis, qui quædam ex rebus geſtis Arthuri Britanni citat, maiorem autem partem & potiora, à Sacerdote quodam apud Regem Noruegiæ, An. Dom. 1364. didicit. Deſcenderat is ex illis quos Arthurus ad has habitandas inſulas miſerat, & referebat, An. 1360. Minoritam quendam Anglum Oxonienſem Mathematicum in eas inſulas veniſſe, ipſiſque relictis ad vlteriorã arte Magica profectũ deſcripſiſſe omnia, & Aſtrolabio dimenſum eſſe in hanc ſubiectam formam ferè, vti ex Iacobo collegimus. Euripos illos quatuor dicebat tanto impetu ad interiorem voraginem rapi, vt naues ſemel ingreſſæ nullo vento retroagi poſſent, neque verò vnquam tantum ibi ventum eſſe, vt molæ frumentarię circumagendæ ſufficiat. Simillima his habet Giraldus Cambrenſis (qui floruit, An. 1210.) in libro de mirabilibus Hyberniæ, ſic enim ſcribit. Non procul ab inſulis Hebridibus, Iſlandia, &c. ex parte Boreali, eſt maris quædam miranda vorago, in quam à remotis partibus omnes vndique fluctus marini tanquam ex condicto fluunt, & recurrunt, qui in ſecreta naturæ penetralia ſe ibi transfundentes, quaſi in Abyſſum vorantur. Si verò nauem hâc fortè tranſire contigerit, tanta rapitur, & attrahitur fluctuum violentia, vt eam ſtatim irreuocabiliter vis voracitatis abſorbeat.

Quatuor voragines huius Oceani, a quatuor oppoſitis mundi partibus Philoſophi deſcribunt, vnde & tam marinos fluctus, quàm & Æolicos flatus cauſaliter peruenire nonnulli coniectant.

The ſame in Engliſh.

TOuching the deſcription of the North partes, I haue taken the ſame out of the voyage of Iames Cnoyen of Hartzeuan Buſke, which alleageth certaine conqueſts of Arthur king of Britaine: and the moſt part, and chiefeſt things among the reſt, he learned of a certaine prieſt in the king of Norwayes court, in the yeere 1364. This prieſt was deſcended from them which king Arthur had ſent to inhabite theſe Iſlands, and he reported that in the yeere 1360, a certaine Engliſh Frier, a Franciſcan, and a Mathematician of Oxford, came into thoſe Iſlands, who leauing them, and paſſing further by his Magicall Arte, deſcribed all thoſe places that he ſawe, and tooke the height of them with his Aſtrolabe, according to the forme that I (Gerard Mercator) haue ſet downe in my mappe, and as I haue taken it out of the aforeſaid Iames Cnoyen. Hee ſayd that thoſe foure Indraughts were drawne into an inward gulfe or whirlepoole, with ſo great a force, that the ſhips which once entred therein, could by no meanes be driuen backe againe, and that there is neuer in thoſe parts ſo much winde blowing, as might be ſufficient to driue a Corne mill.

Giraldus Cambrenſis (who floriſhed in the yeere 1210, vnder king Iohn) in his booke of the miracles of Ireland, hath certaine words altogether alike with theſe, videlicet:

There is a notable whirlepoole on the coaſt of Norway, called Maleſtrande, about the latitude of 68.

Not farre from theſe Iſlands (namely the Hebrides, Iſland &c.) towards the North there is a certaine woonderful whirlpoole of the ſea, whereinto all the waues of the ſea from farre haue their courſe and recourſe, as it were without ſtoppe: which, there conueying themſelues into the ſecret receptacles of nature, are ſwallowed vp, as it were, into a bottomleſſe pit, and if it chance that any ſhippe doe paſſe this way, it is pulled, and drawen with ſuch a violence of the waues, that eftſoones without remedy, the force of the whirlepoole deuoureth the ſame.

The Philoſophers deſcribe foure indraughts of this Ocean ſea, in the foure oppoſite quarters of the world, from whence many doe coniecture that as well the flowing of the ſea, as the blaſts of the winde, haue their firſt originall.

A Teſtimonie of the learned Mathematician maſter Iohn Dee, touching the foreſaid voyage of Nicholas De Linna.

ANno 1360. (that is to wit, in the 34. yeere of the reigne of the triumphant king Edward the third) a frier of Oxford, being a good Aſtronomer, went in companie with others to the moſt Northren Iſlands of the world, and there leauing his company together, hee trauailed alone, and purpoſely deſcribed all the Northerne Iſlands, with the indrawing ſeas: and the record thereof at his returne he deliuered to the king of England. The name of which booke is Inuentio Fortunata (aliter fortunæ) qui liber incipit a gradu 54. vſque ad polum. Which frier for ſundry purpoſes after that did fiue times paſſe from England thither, and home againe.

Inuentio Fortunata.

It is to be noted, that from the hauen of Linne in Norfolke (whereof the foreſaid Franciſcan frier tooke his name) to Iſland, it is not aboue a fortnights ſailing with an ordinarie winde, and hath bene of many yeeres a very common and vſuall trade: which further appeareth by the priuileges granted to the Fiſhermen of the towne of Blacknie in the ſaid Countie of Norfolke, by king Edward the third, for their exemption and freedome from his ordinary ſeruice, in reſpect of their trade to Iſland.

About the ſame time L. Henry the Earle of Derbie trauailed into Pruſſia, where, with the helpe of the Marſhall of the ſame Prouince, and of a certaine king called Wytot, hee vanquiſhed the armie of the king of Lettowe, with the captiuitie of foure Lithuanian Dukes, and the ſlaughter of three, beſides more then three hundred of the principall common ſouldiers of the ſayd armie which were ſlaine. The Citie alſo which is called Wil or Vilna, into the caſtle whereof the king of Lettow named Skirgalle fled for his ſauegard, was, by the valour of the ſayd Earle eſpecially and of his followers, ſurpriſed and taken. For certaine of the chiefe men of his familie, while others were ſlouthfull or at leaſt ignorant of their intent, ſcaling the walles, aduanced his colours thereupon. And there were taken and ſlaine foure thouſand of the common ſouldiers, and amongſt others was ſlaine the king of Poland his brother, who was our profeſſed enemie. And the caſtle of the foreſaid Citie was beſieged for the ſpace of fiue weekes: but by reaſon of the infirmities and inconueniences wherewith the whole armie was annoyed, the great maſters of Pruſſia and of Liſland would not ſtay any longer. There were conuerted of the nation of Lettowe eight perſons vnto the Chriſtian faith. And the maſter of Liſland carried home with him into his countrey three thouſand captiues.

At the ſame time the Duke of Gloceſter Lord Thomas of Woodſtock (the yongeſt ſonne of Edward the third) to the great griefe of many, tooke his iourney towards Pruſſia: whom neither the Londoners mones nor yet the lamentation of the communaltie could reſtraine from his intended expedition. For the common people both of the Citie and of the countrey feared leſt in his abſence ſome newe calamitie might happen; which they feared not while he was preſent. For in him the whole nation ſeemed to repoſe their hope and comfort. Howbeit hauing ſcarce paſſed as yet the bounds of his owne countrey, he was immediatly by hard fortune toſſed vp and downe with dangerous ſtormes and tempeſts, and was brought into ſuch diſtreſſe, that he deſpaired euen of his owne life. At length, hauing not without danger of death, ſailed along the coaſtes of Denmarke, Norway, and Scotland, he returned into Northumberland, and went to the caſtle of Tinmouth as vnto a place of refuge knowen of olde vnto him: where, after hee had refreſhed himſelfe a fewe dayes, hee tooke his iourney toward his Mannour of Plaſhy, bringing great ioy vnto the whole kingdome, aſwell in regard of his ſafetie as of his returne.

The verſes of Geofrey Chaucer in the knights Prologue, who *liuing in the yeere 1402. Protection of the Engliſh Marchants.

An ancient teſtimonie tranſlated out of the olde Saxon lawes, containing among other things the aduancement of Marchants for their thriſe croſſing the wide ſeas, ſet downe by the learned Gentleman Maſter William Lambert pagina 500. of his perambulation of Kent.

IT was ſometime in Engliſh lawes, that the people and the lawes were in reputation: and then were the wiſeſt of the people worſhip-worthy, euery one after his degree: Earle, and Churle, Thein, and vnder-Thein. And if a churle thriued ſo, that hee had fully fiue hides of his owne land, a Church and a Kitchin, a Belhouſe, and a gate, a ſeate, and a ſeuerall office in the Kings hall, then was he thenceforth the Theins right worthy. And if a Thein ſo thriued, that he ſerued the king, and on his meſſage rid in his houſhold, if he then had a Thein that followed him, the which to the kings iourney fiue hides had, and in the kings ſeate his Lord ſerued, and thriſe with his errand had gone to the king, he might afterward with his forcoth his lords part play at any great neede. And if a Thein did thriue ſo, that he became an Earle; then was he afterward an Earles right worthie. And if a Marchant ſo thriued, that he paſſed thriſe ouer the wide ſeas, of his owne craft, he was thencefoorth a Theins right worthie. And if a ſcholar ſo proſpered thorow learning that he degree had, and ſerued Chriſt, he was then afterward of dignitie and peace ſo much worthie, as thereunto belonged: vnleſſe he forfaited ſo, that he the vſe of his degree vſe ne might.

A teſtimonie of certaine priuiledges obtained for the Engliſh and Daniſh Marchants of Conradus the Emperour and Iohn the Biſhop of Rome by Canutus the King of England in his iourney to Rome, extracted out of a letter of his written vnto the Cleargie of England.

SIt vobis notum quia magna congregatio nobilum in ipſa ſolemnitate Paſcali, Romæ cum Domino Papa Ioanne, & imperatore Conrado erat, ſcilicet omnes principes gentium a monte Gargano, vſque ad iſtum proximum Mare: qui omnes me & honorifice ſuſcepere, & magnificis donis honorauere. YOu are to vnderſtand, that at the feaſt of Eaſter, there was a great company of Nobles with Pope Iohn and Conradus the Emperour aſſembled at Rome, namely all the princes of the nations from mount Garganus vnto the Weſt Ocean ſea. Who all of them honourably intertained me, and welcomed mee with rich and magnificent gifts: but eſpecially the Emperour beſtowed diuers coſtly preſents and rewards vpon mee, both in veſſels of golde and ſiluer, and alſo in cloakes and garments of great value. Wherefore I conferred with the Emperour himſelfe and the Pope, and with the other Princes who were there preſent, concerning the neceſſities of all my ſubiects both Engliſhmen and Danes; that a more fauourable law & ſecure peace in their way to Rome might bee graunted vnto them, and that they might not bee hindered by ſo many ſtops & impediments in their iourney, and wearied by reaſon of vniuſt exactions. And the Emperour condeſcended vnto my requeſt, and king Rodulphus alſo, who hath greateſt authoritie ouer the foreſaid ſtops and ſtreights, and all the other princes confirmed by their Edicts, that my ſubiects, as well Marchants, as others who trauailed for deuotions ſake, ſhould without all hinderance and reſtraint of the foreſaid ſtops and cuſtomers, goe vnto Rome in peace, and returne from thence in ſafetie.

NOt farre from Rocheſter, about the diſtance of fiue and twenty miles, ſtandeth the Noble Citie of London, abounding with the riches of the inhabitants, and being frequented with the traffique of Marchants reſorting thither out of all nations, and eſpecially out of Germanie. Whereupon it commeth to paſſe, that when any generall dearth of victuals falleth out in England, by reaſon of the ſcarcitie of corne, things neceſſary may there be prouided and bought with leſſe gaine vnto the ſellers, and with leſſe hinderance and loſſe vnto the buyers, then in any other place of the Realme. THere were preſent alſo the ſame time, the meſſengers of Henry king of England preſenting diuers rich and precious gifts, and that with great learning & eloquence of ſpeech. Amongſt the which we ſaw a pauilion, moſt large in quantity, & moſt excellent in quality. For if you deſire to know the quantitie thereof, it could not be erected without engines and a kinde of inſtruments, and maine force: if the qualitie, I thinke there was neuer any furniture of the ſame kinde, that ſurpaſſed the ſame either in ſtuffe or workemanſhip. The ſaid king directed his letters alſo, full of ſugred ſpeeches, the tenour whereof was this that followeth.

To his entirely beloued friend Frederick by the grace of God Emperour of the Romanes moſt inuincible, Henry king of England, duke of Normandie and Aquitaine, Earle of Anjou wiſheth health and concord of ſincere amitie. We doe render vnto your highnes (moſt renowmed and peereleſſe Prince) exceeding great thanks for that you haue ſo graciouſly vouchſafed by your meſſengers to viſite vs, in your letters to ſalute vs, with your gifts to preuent vs, and (which wee doe more highly eſteeme of then all the reſt) to beginne a league of peace and friendſhip betweene vs. We reioyced, and in a maner ſenſibly felt our ſelues to bee greatly emboldened, and our courage to encreaſe, whileſt your promiſe, whereby you put vs in good comfort, did make vs more cheerefull and reſolute, in managing the affaires of our kingdome. We reioyced (I ſay) & in our ſecret cogitations did humble obeiſance vnto your Maieſtie, giuing you at this time to vnderſtand frō the ſincere & vnfained affection of our heart, that whatſoeuer we ſhal know to tend vnto your honour, we are, to our power moſt ready to put in practiſe. Our kingdome, and whatſoeuer is vnder our iuriſdiction we doe offer vnto you, and commit the ſame vnto your highneſſe, that all matters may be diſpoſed according to your direction, and that your pleaſure may in all things be fulfilled. Let there be therefore betweene our ſelues and our ſubiects, an indiuiſible vnitie of friendſhip and peace, and ſafe trade of Merchandize: yet ſo, as that vnto you (who excell in dignitie) authoritie in commanding may bee aſcribed, and diligence in obeying ſhall not want in vs. And as the liberalitie of your rewards doeth often put vs in remembrance of your Maieſtie, euen ſo in like maner ſending vnto your Highneſſe the moſt rare things in our cuſtodie, and which we thought ſhould be moſt acceptable vnto you, wee doe moſt heartily wiſh that your ſelfe alſo would not altogether bee vnmindefull of vs. Haue reſpect therefore not vnto the gifts, but vnto the affection of the giuer, and accept of them with that minde, wherewith they are offered vnto you.

Concerning the hawk of S. Iames, about which you wrote vnto vs, we haue ſent you word by M. Herbert, and by William the Clerke. Witnes Thomas our Chancelour at Northanton.

The charter of Lubek granted for ſeuen yeeres, obtained in the one and fortieth yeere of Henry the third.

HEnry by the grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandie and Aquitaine, and Earle of Anjou, to all his Bailifs ſendeth greeting. Know ye that at the inſtant requeſt of our welbeloued and truſty brother Richard Earle of Cornewal being of late elected king of the Romanes, we haue receiued vnder our protection and defence, and vnder our ſafe and ſecure conduct, the citizens of Lubek in Alemain, with all their goods and wares, which they ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into our kingdome. We haue alſo granted vnto them, that of all their goods and merchandize, nothing ſhal be ſeized vnto the vſe of our ſelues, or of any other without their owne conſent, but that they may freely ſell and exerciſe traffike therewith, according as they ſhall thinke expedient. And therefore we ſtraightly command you, that neither your ſelues do offer, nor that you permit any other to offer any impediment or moleſtation vnto the ſaid Burgers or vnto their meſſengers, either at their comming into our land, with their goods and marchandize, in the time of their abode there, or at their departure from thence, and that yee neither moleſt them your ſelues, nor yet ſuffer them by others to be moleſted, contrary to the aforeſaid Charter. The aforeſaid generall Charter in Engliſh.

EDward by the grace of God king of England, lord of Ireland, duke of Aquitaine, to Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earles, Barons, Iuſtices, Vicounts, gouernours, officers, and all bayliffes, and his faithfull people ſendeth greeting. Wee haue ſpeciall care for the good eſtate of all marchants of the kingdomes, lands, and countreis following: to wit of Almaine, France, Spaine, Portugal, Nauarre, Lombardie, Florence, Prouence, Catalonia, of our duchie of Aquitaine, Tholoſa, Caturlune, Flanders, Brabant, and of all other forreine countreis and places by what name ſoeuer they be called, which come into our kingdome of England, and there remayne, that the ſayd marchants may liue in quiet and full ſecuritie vnder our dominion in time to come. Wherefore that their hearts deſires may bee more readily inclined to our ſeruice and the ſeruice of our kingdome, wee fauourably agreeing to their petitions, for the fuller aſſuring of their eſtate, haue thought good to graunt to the ſayd marchants for vs and our heires for euer theſe priuiledges vnder written, ordaining in forme as followeth.

First, that all marchants of the ſayd kingdomes and countreys may come into our kingdome of England, and any where elſe into our dominion with their marchandiſes whatſoeuer ſafely and ſecurely vnder our defence and protection without paying wharfage, pontage, or pannage. And that in Cities, Boroughs, and market townes of the ſayd kingdome and dominion they may traffique onely by the great as well with the naturall ſubiects and inhabitants of our aforeſayde kingdome and dominion, as with forreiners, ſtrangers, or priuate perſons. Yet ſo, that marchandiſes which are commonly called mercerie wares, 1.

and ſpices, may be ſold by the ſmall, as heretofore hath bin accuſtomed. And that all the aforeſaid marchants may cary or cauſe to be caried whither they will, aſwell within our realme or dominion, as out of the ſame; ſauing vnto the countreis of the manifeſt and knowne enemies of our kingdome, thoſe marchandiſes which they ſhall bring into our foreſayd realme and dominion, or buy, or otherwiſe purchaſe in our ſayd realme and dominion, paying ſuch cuſtomes as they ought to doe: except onely wines, which it ſhall not be any wayes lawfull for them to cary out of our ſayd realme and dominion without our ſpeciall fauour and licence, after they be once brought into our realme and dominion.

An exception for traficking with yͤ known enemies of the kingdoms.

2. Item that the aforeſayd marchants may at their pleaſure lodge & remaine with their goods in the cities, boroughs, and townes aforeſaid, with the good liking of thoſe which are owners of their lodgings.

3. Item that euery bargaine made by the ſaid marchants with any maner of perſons, of what places ſoeuer they be, for any kind of marchādiſe whatſoeuer, ſhalbe firme & ſtable, ſo that none of both the marchants ſhall ſhrinke or giue backe from that bargaine, after that the earneſt penie be once giuen and taken betweene the principall bargayners. And if peraduenture any ſtrife ariſe about the ſame bargaine, the triall and inquirie thereof ſhall be made according to the vſes and cuſtomes of the fayres and townes where it chanced that the ſaid bargaine was made and contracted.

4. Item, we promiſe the aforeſaid marchants granting for euer for vs and our heires, that from hence foorth we will not in any wiſe make nor cauſe to be made any ſtay or arreſt, or any delay by reaſon of arreſt of their wares, marchandiſes or other goods, by our ſelues, or by any other or others for any neede or accident againſt the will of the ſayd marchants, without preſent payment of ſuch a price as the marchants would haue ſold thoſe marchandiſes for to other men, or without making of them other ſatiſfaction, ſo that they ſhall hold themſelues well contented: and that no price or valuation ſhalbe ſet vpon their wares, marchandiſes, & goods by vs or by any officer of ours.

5. Item, we will that all bayliffes and officers of fayres, cities, boroughs, and market townes ſhall doe ſpeedie iuſtice from day to day without delay according to the lawe of Marchants to the aforeſayd marchants when they ſhall complaine before them, touching all and ſinguler cauſes, which may be determined by the ſame law. And if default be found in any of the bayliffes or officers aforeſayd, whereby the ſayd marchants or any of them haue ſuſtained, or do ſuſtaine any damage through delay, though the marchant recouer his loſſes againſt the partie principall, yet the bayliffe or other officer ſhall be puniſhed to vs ward, according to the qualitie of the default. And wee doe grant this puniſhment in fauour of the aforeſayd marchants in regard of the haſtening of their iuſtice.

Where is this law now become?

6. Item, that in al maner of pleas, ſauing in caſe where puniſhmēt of death is to be inflicted, where a marchant is impleaded, or ſueth another, of what condition ſoeuer hee bee which is ſued, whether ſtranger or home borne, in fayres, cities, or boroughs, where ſufficient numbers of marchants of the foreſayd countreis are, and where the triall ought to bee made, let the one halfe of the Iurie be of the ſayd marchants, and the other halfe of good and lawfull men of the place where the ſuite ſhall fall out to bee: and if ſufficient number of marchants of the ſayd countries cannot bee found, thoſe which ſhall be found fit in that place ſhall be put vpon the iurie, and the reſt ſhall be choſen of good and fit men of the places where ſuch ſuit ſhall chance to be.

7. Item we will, we ordaine, and wee appoint, that in euery market towne and fayre of our realme aforeſayd and elſewhere within our dominion our weight ſhall bee ſet in ſome certaine place; and that before the weighing the balance ſhall bee ſeene emptie in the preſence of the buyer and of the ſeller, and that the ſkales bee equall: and that afterward the weigher weigh in the equall balance. And when hee hath ſet the balances euen, let him ſtraightway remoue his hands, ſo that the balance may remayne euen: And that throughout all our kingdome and dominion there be one weight and one meaſure, and that they be marked with the marke of our ſtandard. And that euery man may haue a weight of one quarter of an hundred, and vnder, where the ſame hath not bin contrary to the liberty of the lord of the place, and contrary to the libertie granted by vs and our predeceſſors, or contrary to the cuſtome of townes and fayres which hath hitherto beene obſerued.

8. Item we will and we grant that ſome certaine faythfull and diſcreete man reſident in London be appointed to doe Iuſtice to the aforeſayd marchants, before whome they may haue their ſutes decided, and may ſpeedilie recouer their debts, if the Shiriffes and Maior ſhould not from day to day giue them ſpeedy iuſtice. And hereof let a Commiſſion be made: which we grant vnto the aforeſaid marchants beſides this preſent Charter: to wit, of ſuch things as betweene marchant and marchant are to be decided according to the lawe of marchants.

9. Item we ordayne and appoynt, and wee will that this ordinance and ſtatute ſhall firmely bee obſerued for euer for vs and our heires, that the aforeſayd marchants ſhal not looſe the aforeſayd liberties nor any of them, for any libertie whatſoeuer, which wee or our heires hereafter ſhall grant. And for the obtayning of the aforeſayd liberties and free cuſtomes, and for remiſſion of our arreſting of their goods, the aforeſayd marchants all and euery of them for themſelues and all other of their parties with one accorde and one conſent haue granted vnto vs, that of euery tunne of wine, which they ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into our realme and dominion, for which they ſhall bee bound to pay freight vnto the mariners, beſides the olde cuſtomes which are due and were woont to bee payd vnto vs, they will pay vnto vs and to our heires in the name of a cuſtome two ſhillings in money, either out of hande, or elſe within fortie dayes after the ſayd wines-ſhall bee brought on land out of the ſhippes. Item for euery ſacke of wooll, which the ſayd marchants or others in their name ſhall buy and carie out of the realme, or cauſe to bee brought and caried out, they will pay forty pence aboue the old cuſtome of halfe a marke, which was payed heretofore: And for a laſt of hides to bee carryed out of our realme and dominion halfe a marke aboue that which heretofore was payed by the olde cuſtome. And likewiſe for three hundreth Felles with the wooll on them to bee tranſported out of our realme and dominion fortie pence, aboue that certaine rate which before was payed by the olde cuſtome: Alſo two ſhillings vpon euery ſcarlate and euery cloth died in graine. Item eighteene pence for euery cloth wherein any kind of graine is mingled. Item twelue pence vpon euery cloth dyed without graine. Item twelue pence vpon euerie quintall of copper.

And whereas ſundrie of the aforeſayd marchants are woont to exerciſe other marchandiſes, as of Hauer de pois, and other fine wares, as ſarcenets, lawnes, cindalles, and ſilke, and diuers other marchandiſes, and to ſell horſes and other beaſtes, corne, and ſundrie other things and marchandiſes, which cannot eaſily bee reduced vnto a certaine cuſtome: the ſayd marchants haue granted to giue vnto vs, and to our heires of euery pound of ſiluer of the eſtimation and value of theſe kinde of goods and marchandiſes, by what name ſoeuer they be called, three pence in the pound in the bringing in of theſe goods into our realme and dominion aforeſaid, within twentie dayes after theſe goods and marchandiſes ſhall be brought into our realme and dominion, and ſhall be there vnladen and ſolde. And likewiſe three pence vpon euery pound of ſiluer in the carying out of any ſuch goods and marchandiſes which are bought in our realme and dominion aforeſayd aboue the cuſtomes beforetime payd vnto vs or any of our progenitors. And touching the value and eſtimation of theſe goods and marchandiſes, whereof three pence of euery pound of ſiluer, as is aforeſayd, is to be payd, credite ſhalbe giuen vnto them vpon the letters which they are able to ſhewe from their maſters or parteners. And if they haue no letters in this behalfe, we will ſtand to the othe of the foreſayd marchants if they bee preſent, or in their abſence to the othes of their ſeruants.

Moreouer, it ſhall be lawfull for ſuch as be of the company of the aforeſayd marchants within our realme and dominion aforeſayd, to ſell woolles to other of their company, and likewiſe to buy of them without paying of cuſtome. Yet ſo, that the ſaid wools come not to ſuch hands, that wee be defrauded of the cuſtome due vnto vs. And furthermore it is to be vnderſtood, that after that the aforeſaid marchants haue once payed in one place within our realme and dominion, the cuſtome aboue granted vnto vs in forme aforeſayd for their marchandiſes, & haue their warrant therof, whether theſe marchandiſes remayne within our kingdome or be caried out (excepting wines, which in no wiſe ſhalbe caried forth of our realme and dominion aforeſayd, without our fauour & licence as is aforeſayd) we wil and we grant for vs and our heires, that no execution, attachment, or loane, or any other burthen be layd vpon the perſons of the aforeſayd marchants, vpon their marchandiſes or goods in any caſe, contrary to the forme before mentioned and granted. The faithfull & principall witneſſes of theſe preſents are theſe, Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, Walter biſhop of Couētrey and Lichfield, Henry Lacie of Lincolne, Humfrey de Bohume, Earle of Herford and Eſſex, high Conſtable of England, Adomare of Valentia, Geofrey of Gaymal, Hugh Spenſer, Walter Beauchampe Seneſchall of our houſe, Robert of Bures, and others. Giuen by our owne hand at Windeſore the firſt day of February, in the yere of our reigne xxxi.

The letters of Edward the ſecond vnto Haquinus king of Norway, concerning the Engliſh marchants arreſted in Norway, and their goods to be freed from arreſt.

TO the mighty Prince, loꝛd Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous king of Norway his moſt deare friend, Edward by the ſame grace of God, king of England, loꝛd of Ireland, duke of Aquitaine, greeting and ſincere loue. We maruell not a little, and are much diſquieted in our cogitations, conſidering the greeuances and oppꝛeſſions, which (as wee haue beene infoꝛmed by pitifull complaints) are at this pꝛeſent, moꝛe then in times paſt, without any reaſonable cauſe inflicted vpon our ſubiects, which doe vſually reſoꝛt vnto your kingdome foꝛ traffiques ſake. Foꝛ of late one William the ſonne of Laurence of Wainfleete, and one Simon the ſonne of Alan of the ſame towne, and Guido the ſonne of Mathew, and their aſſociates our marchants, in complayning wiſe declared vnto vs: that hauing ſent certaine of their factoꝛs and ſeruants, with thꝛee ſhippes into your dominions, there to exerciſe traffique, and the ſayd ſhips being laden in the hauen of your towne of Tonnesbergh, with Herrings and other commodities, to a great value: and alſo the ſaid mariners, men, and ſeruants of the foꝛeſayd ſhippes, being licenced by vertue of the ſafe conduct which you had granted them, freely to returne from your kingdome vnto the parts of England with their ſhips and goods afoꝛeſayd, but afterward not being able to depart out of your hauen by reaſon of contrary windes: certaine of your bayliffes vpon occaſion of the ſlaughter of a knight being himſelfe alſo of late your bayliffe of Vikia, committed by malefactoꝛs and Pirates vpon the ſea, whileſt the ſayd ſhippes remained in the hauen afoꝛeſayd, did at your commandement (as they ſay) arreſt, and foꝛ a long ſeaſon alſo detained vnder that arreſt, the foreſaid ſhips, with all the men and goods that were in them: namely vntill ſuch time, as the men and mariners aforeſaide (beeing driuen perforce, and conſtrained thereunto) ſhould lay in ſufficient ſecuritie for the payment of fortie pounds ſterling, vpon a certain day appointed, vnto your vſe, for euery of the foreſaide ſhips : and alſo vntill they had moreouer deliuered three pledges, for the bringing of the ſaide ſhips and men backe againe into the foreſaid hauen, before the feaſt of the natiuitie of S. Iohn the Baptiſt next enſuing, then and there to ſtand vnto your fauour and curteſie, as touching the ſaid perſons, and thoſe ſhips of theirs : which dealing, the parties themſelues take very grieuouſly, yea, and all others that heare thereof thinke it to be a ſtrange and vnwonted courſe. And becauſe it is moſt vndoubtedly contrary to all reaſon, equitie, iuſtice, and lawe, that the faults or demerites of offenders ſhould in any ſort be puniſhed in ſuch perſons, or in their goods, as neither haue bene acceſſory nor partakers in the crime, nor haue had any ſociety with the ſaide offenders : we doe heartily intreat and requeſt your Highnes, that weighing and pondering the matter in the balance of iuſtice, you would of your loue and friendſhip, command the foreſaid pledges to be ſet at libertie, and the ſaid ſecuritie vtterly to bee releaſed and acquited. And know you this for a certaintie, that if the foreſaide malefactors, who (as it is reported) ſlewe your Knight aforeſaide, ſhall any where within our realme and dominions be found, we wil cauſe iuſtice and iudgement to bee executed vpon them, according to the Lawe and cuſtome of our ſayde Realme. For we cannot in theſe times conueniently and well indure, that the ſhips aforeſaide, or any other ſhips of our kingdome (which ought alwayes to be in a readineſſe for our ſeruice) ſhould without ſpeciall licence, depart out of our ſaide kingdome, vnto forreine dominions. Nowe, what you ſhall think good at this our requeſt to performe in the premiſſes, may it pleaſe you by the bearer of theſe preſents to returne an anſwere vnto vs. Geuen at Windſore the 16. of April.

TO the mightie Prince Lord Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous King of Norway, his moſt deare friend Edward by the ſame grace of God king of England, Lorde of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitaine, greeting and ſincere loue. Wee receiued the complaint of our welbelo- Merchants Thomas de Swyn of Waynfleet, and Simon the ſonne of Alanus of the ſame towne: the contents whereof are, that whereas of late, the ſaide parties ſent certaine of their ſeruants to traffike in your kingdome, your Treaſurer vpon the feaſt of S. Michael laſt paſt, without any iuſt or reaſonable occaſion, cauſed the goods and merchandiſe of the foreſaide Thomas and Simon, to the value of fortie pound, which their ſaid ſeruants had vnder their cuſtodie at the towne of Northberne, to be arreſted, and as yet alſo iniuriouſly deteineth the ſame vnder the ſame arreſt, to the great damage and impoueriſhing of the ſayd Thomas and Simon. And foraſmuch as our deſire is to ſuccour theſe our marchants ſo far foorth as we can, Iuſtice requiring no leſſe in this behalfe, wee doe right earneſtly requeſt you, that hauing hearde the complaint and ſupplication of the foreſayde Thomas and Simon, or of their Atturneyes, you woulde of your loue and friendſhip, vouchſafe them ſpeedie adminiſtration of Iuſtice, about the reſtitution of their goods and marchandiſe aforeſaide: leaſt that for want of the exhibiting of Iuſtice about the foreſaid arreſt, we be conſtrained to prouide ſome other remedie for our marchants aforeſaid. Our requeſt is, that you would by the bearer of theſe preſents, returne an anſwere vnto vs, what you are determined to doe, at this our inſtant motion. Giuen as aboue.

A third letter of King Edward the ſecond, to Haquinus King of Norway in the behalfe of certaine Engliſh Marchants.

MAgnifico Principi Domino Haquino Dei gratia Regi Norwegiæ illuſtri, amico ſuo chariſſimo, Edwardus eadem Dei gratia Rex Angliæ, dominus Hyberniæ, & dux Aquitaniæ, ſalutem cum dilectione ſincera. Pro mercatoribus noſtris Lennæ, & partium vicinarum, quos Balliuus & Officiarij veſtri ciuitatis veſtræ Bergen dudum ceperunt, & ſtricto carceri manciparunt, quorum multi vt iam intelleximus, propter alimentorum ſubtractionem & duritiam, ac aſperitatem carceris perierunt, vt ipſorum & bonorum ſuorum deliberationem præcipere curaretis, veſtræ ſerenitati Regiæ noſtras nuper tranſmiſimus literas ſpeciales. Sed vos, retentis adhuc in carcere noſtris mercatoribus ſicut prius, nobis per literas veſtras quas audiuimus & intelleximus diligenter, inter cætera reſcripſiſtis, quod quidam mercatores de regno veſtro de iniurijs, violentijs & arreſtationibus, quibus in regno noſtro his diebus ſunt, vt aſſerunt, contra iuſtitiam aggrauati, multipliciter conqueruntur, adijciendo in veſtris literis memoratis, quod quidam iniquitatis filij in villa Lennæ, ad piſcandum vt dicebant halecia venientes, quendam militem Balliuum veſtrum, in Vikia vnà cum decem alijs ſubditis veſtris, in veſtris & regni veſtri negotijs exiſtentibus crudeliter occiderunt. Super quibus mens noſtra grauatur quàmplurimum & turbatur, præſertim quum nunquam noſtræ fuerit voluntatis, quod iniuriæ, violentiæ, ſeu arreſtationes aliquæ mercatoribus, vel alijs de regno veſtro per aliquos de regno & poteſtate noſtris fierent indebitè vel iniuſtè: nec adhuc intelligere poſſumus, quod mercatoribus veſtris per aliquem vel aliquos de ſubditis noſtris huc vſque aliter factum fuerit: Scientes pro certo quod ſi nobis per inquiſitiones legitimas conſtare poterit huiuſmodi grauamina ſubditis veſtris infra regnum noſtrum illata fuiſſe, nos ſufficientes emendas, & ſatisfactiones debitas ſuper illis, celeriſque iuſtitiæ complementum fieri faciemus. Et inſuper ſi malefactores prædicti, qui præfatum militem, & alios ſecum exiſtentes, vt præmittitur, occiderunt, de regno, ſeu poteſtate noſtra ſint, vel infrà idem regnum vel poteſtatem poterunt inueniri, de ipſis iudicium & iuſtitiam fieri præcipiemus, ſecundùm Leges & conſuetudines regni noſtri. Et quia inter nos & vos, noſtróſque & veſtros ſubditos hinc inde foueri deſideramus mutuam concordiam & amorem; ita quod mercatores noſtri & veſtri mercandiſas ſuas in noſtris & veſtris regnis & dominijs liberè, & abſque impedimento valeant exercere, prout temporibus progenitorum noſtrorum fieri conſueuit, & ex dictarum literarum veſtrarum ſerie collegimus euidenter vos promptos eſſe ſimiliter, & paratos ad omnia & ſingula, quæ pro vobis & veſtris ſubditis ſuper diſcordijs, contentionibus, aut grauaminibus inter noſtros & veſtros ſubditos qualitercunque ſuſcitatis pro bono pacis & iuſtitiæ fuerint æquanimiter facienda: Nos conſimilia pro nobis & noſtris, quantum ad nos & ad ipſos attinet, illius amore, qui pacis author fore dinoſcitur, & pro quiete & commodo populi vtriuſque regnorum noſtrorum, quatenus ius & ratio dictitauerint, promittimus nos facturos: Veſtram amicitiam requirentes obnixius & rogantes, quatenus mercatores noſtros prædictos, qui adhuc ſuperſtites relinquuntur, quos etiam tempore, quo dicta felonia committi dicebatur, interclusos tenebat cuſtodia carceralis, iubere velitis noſtri contemplatione, zelóque iuſtitiæ ab huiuſmodi cuſtodia liberari, bona ab ipſis capta eis prout iuſtum fuerit reſtitui faciendo. Et vt deliberatio mercatorum noſtrorum prædictorum, & bonorum ſuorum eò facilius concedatur, placeat vobis cum diligentia debita ponderare, quod Galfridus Drewe, & quidam alij mercatores noſtri de Lenne, quibuſdam mercatoribus de regno veſtro occaſione eiuſdem grauaminis ipſis mercatoribus veſtris, ad ſectam Tidemanni Lippe infrà regnum noſtrum, vt dicebatur, illati, centum libras ſterlingorum perſoluerunt, ſicut in quodam ſcripto indentato inter Ingelramum Lende de Thorenden, & quoſdam alios mercatores veſtros ex parte vna, & præfatum Galfridum, & quoſdam alios de regno noſtro ſimiliter ex altera confecto, vidimus contineri. Si qui verò de ſubditis veſtris de aliquibus ſubditis noſtris, de aliqua iniuria ipſis facta querelas in curia noſtra deponere voluerint, & proſequi cum effectu, ipſorum ſubditorum veſtrorum petitiones admitti, & eis ſuper querelis huiuſmodi plenam & celerem iuſtitiã fieri faciemus. Ita quod ijdem ſubditi veſtri exinde reputare debebunt meritò ſe contentos. Et interim de exceſſibus & grauaminibus ſubditis veſtris infrà regnum noſtrum qualitercunque illatis inquiri faciemus cum diligentia veritatem. Veſtræ igitur voluntatis beneplacitum in pręmiſſis nobis reſcribere velitis per præſentium portitorem. Datæ apud Weſtminſter tertio die Aprilis.

TO the mightie Prince king Haquinus, by the grace of God the famous king of Norway, his moſt deare friend Edward by the ſame grace of God, king of England, lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitaine, greeting and ſincere loue. We ſent of late vnto your royall maieſtie our ſpecial letters, for the behalfe of our late marchants of Lenne, and of the coaſt adioyning (whome your baily and officers of the citie of Bergen lately apprehended, committing them to cloſe priſon, many of whome, as we vnderſtand, are, for want of due nouriſhment, and by reaſon of the extremitie ⁊ loathſomneſſe of the priſon, quite periſhed) that you would cauſe them and their goods to bee releaſed. Howbeit, you reteining as yet our marchants in durance as before, in your letters, which we haue diligently heard, and throughly vnderſtood, haue, amongſt other matters, returned this anſwere vnto vs: that certaine marchants of your kingdome doe make ſundrie complaints of iniuries, violences and arreſts, whereby they haue lately (as themſelues auouch) contrary to iuſtice bene aggrieued and oppreſſed in our dominions: adding moreouer in your ſayde letters, that certaine ſonnes of iniquitie of the towne of Lenne, comming, as they ſaide, to fiſh for herrings, cruelly murthered a certaine Knight, who was in times paſt your bayliffe of Vikia, together with ten others of your ſubiects, being imployed about the affaires of your kingdome. In conſideration whereof our minde is exceedingly and aboue meaſure grieued and troubled, eſpecially ſithence it was neuer any part of our intent, that any iniuries, violences, or arreſts ſhould vniuſtly be inflicted vpon any marchants, or any others of your realme by any of our kingdomes: neither can we as yet haue any intelligence, that any ſuch hard meaſure hath bene offered vnto any of your marchants, by anyone or moe of our ſubiects: giuing you for a certaintie to vnderſtand, that if vpon lawfull inquiſition we ſhalbe aduertiſed of any ſuch grieuances, which haue bene offered vnto your ſubiects within our realme, we will cauſe ſpeedie iuſtice to be adminiſtred, and ſufficient recompence, and due ſatiſfaction to be made in regarde thereof. And moreouer, if the ſaide malefactors, which, as it is aforeſaid, ſlewe the forenamed Knight, and others of his companie, either be appertaining vnto our kingdome and dominion, or may at any time be found within our ſaide kingdome or dominion, we will command iuſtice and iudgement to be executed vpon them, according to the lawes and cuſtomes of our realme. And foraſmuch as our deſire is, that mutuall concord and amitie ſhould be mainteined and cheriſhed between your and our ſubiects on both parts: ſo that our and your marchants may, in both our Realmes and dominions, freely and without impediment exerciſe their traffique, as in the times of our progenitors it hath bene accuſtomed: Whereas alſo we euidently gathered out of the contents of your letter, that you are in like ſort readie and willing to put all things in practiſe, which are by you and your ſubiects (for the taking away of diſcords, contentions, and moleſtations howſoeuer occaſioned, and ſpring vp betweene your and our ſubiects) louingly to be performed: we alſo doe promiſe for our ſelues, and our ſubiects, ſo much as in vs and them lieth, for his ſake who is knowen to be the author of peace, and for the benefite ⁊ tranquillitie of both our Realmes (as iuſtice and reaſon ſhall moue vs) to doe the like. Deſiring and earneſtly requeſting at your hands, that of your loue and friendſhip, hauing regard of vs, and conſideration of iuſtice, you would command that our foreſaide marchants, who as yet remaine aliue, and who alſo at the time of the ſaide felonie committed, were ſhut vp in cloſe priſon, be deliuered out of the ſaide thraldome, cauſing their goods which haue bene taken from them, to bee, according vnto iuſtice, reſtored to them again. And that the deliuerie of our foreſaide marchants and goods, may be the more eaſily yeelded vnto, may it pleaſe you with diligent obſeruation to conſider, that Gefferey Drew, and certaine other of our marchants of Lenne, vpon occaſion of the greiuances offered vnto your marchants within our Realme, (as the report goeth) at the ſuite of Tidman Lippe, paide vnto the ſame your marchants an hundreth pound ſterling: euen as in a certain Indenture made betweene Ingelram Lende of Thorenden, and ſome other of your marchants on the one part, and betweene the foreſaide Geffrey, and certaine of our marchants on the other part, wee ſawe conteined. Moreouer, if any of your ſubiects be minded to exhibite, and effectually to proſecute their complaints in our Court, concerning any of our ſubiects, or of any iniury done vnto them, we will cauſe the petitions of thoſe your ſubiects to be admitted, and alſo full and ſpeedie iuſtice to be adminiſtred, vpon any ſuch like complaints of theirs. Inſomuch, that thoſe your ſubiects ſhal thinke themſelues right well and ſufficiently contented therewithall. And in the meane ſpace we will cauſe diligent inquiſition of the trueth to be made, of all exceſſes and grieuances howſoeuer offered vnto your ſubiects within our dominions. May it pleaſe you therfore, by the bearer of theſe preſents, to returne an anſwere vnto vs, what you are determined to doe in the premiſſes. Giuen at Weſtminſter, the third day of April.

An Ordinance of the Staple to bee holden at one certaine place.

The King vnto his Collectors of cuſtome, for wooll and woollen fels, in his port of London, greeting. Whereas we vpon the 20. of May, in the firſt yeere of our reigne, conſidering the damages and grieuances that haue diuerſly happened vnto the marchants of our realme, vpon occaſion that the marchants both of our owne, & of other countreis, buying vp wooll and woollen fels within our kingdome and dominions, haue, for the better ſale thereof, at their pleaſure conueyed thēſelues, and trāſported the ſaid wooll & fels into ſundry places within the prouinces of Brabant, Flanders and Artoys: and being deſirous alſo, to our power, to prouide a remedie againſt ſuch damages and inconueniences, haue ordained by our counſel, that all marchants, both homeborne and aliens, buying vp ſuch wools and fels, within our kingdome and dominion aforeſaid, and being deſirous to tranſport them into the foreſaid prouinces, there to bee ſolde, may carrie the ſaide wools and fels, or cauſe them to be caried to ſome certaine Staple, within any of the ſaide Prouinces, by the Maior and Communaltie of the ſaid marchants of our realme, to be appointed and aſſigned, and when they ſhall thinke it expedient, to be changed and remoued, and not vnto any other place within the ſaide Prouinces whatſoeuer: and whereas alſo, amongſt other things, we haue granted vnto the marchants of our foreſaid realme, for vs and our heires, that the Maior and Councel of the ſaide marchants for the time being, may impoſe vpon all marchants, home-borne or aliens whatſoeuer, that ſhall tranſgreſſe the foreſaid ordination, and ſhall thereof lawfully be conuicted, certaine ſummes of money to be paid for their offences, and that ſuch ſummes muſt by our miniſters and officers, to our vſe, be leuied out of the goods and wares of the marchants ſo offending, whereſoeuer they ſhall chance to be found within our kingdome and dominions aforeſaid, as in our Charter made for the ſame purpoſe, it is more plainly expreſſed, (which Charter we haue cauſed to be publiſhed vpon the Sea-coaſts, throughout all the countreys of our realme, and a ſtrong prohibition to be proclaimed, that no marchants, neither home-borne, nor ſtrangers, may in any wiſe tranſgreſſe the tenour of the foreſaide Charter, vnder the penalties therein contained) and whereas afterward it beeing giuen vs to vnderſtand, that diuers marchants both home-borne, and aliens, bought vp ſuch woolles and woollen felles within our ſaide Realme and dominions, and conueyed themſelues with the ſaide wools and felles for the ſale thereof, vnto other places within the foreſaide Prouinces, beſides the ſaide Staple, which was, according to our graunt aforeſaide, appointed and ordained by the Maior and communaltie of the ſaid marchants of our Realme, in ſome one of thoſe Prouinces, to the contempt of our authoritie, and contrary to the Charter of the ordination, publication, and inhibition aforeſaide, wee aſſigned certaine of our faithfull ſubiects, in diuers parts of our Realme, to make inquiſition for ſuch wools and woollen felles, as were conueyed vnto any other place of the ſaide Prouinces, then vnto the Staple, ſo that by theſe meanes, the penalties due vnto vs might bee leuied vnto our vſe: and hauing intelligence alſo, that in a maner all marchants both home-borne, and ſtrangers bartering ſuch wares in our kingdome, are culpable of the premiſſes, and that many being indicted thereupon, and others fearing to bee indicted, doe cauſe their wools and woollen felles to bee auouched vnder the names of perſons ſons not culpable, and to be ſent ouer vnto certaine ſtrangers being alſo culpable, and not minding perhaps to return any more into our realme, that they may ſo eſcape the foreſaid forfeitures, and defraud vs of the penaltie, appertaining of right vnto vs, (which abuſes, if they were ſuffered ſo to goe vnpuniſhed woulde redound vnto our extreame hinderance:) and beeing likewiſe deſirous to withſtand ſuch deceitefull dealing, and ſo farre forth as wee can, to preuent our owne loſſes, we firmely command, and ſtreightly charge you, that you doe receiue of euery particular marchant, deſirous to conuey any wools, or woollen fels out of the foreſaid port, into any forrein dominions, a corporal oath vpon Gods holy Euangeliſts: that they ſhall auouch all thoſe wools and woollen fels vnder his name vnto whom they doe properly belong, & vnder the name of none other: and then taking ſufficient ſecurity from the owner of thoſe wools and fels, or in his name, in regard whereof you will vndertake to warrantize, and make good vnto vs thoſe penalties and forfaitures which ſhal vnto vs appertaine, for all wools, and woollen fels conueied or ſent by any of the foreſaid merchants vnto any of the ſaid prouinces of Flanders, Brabant, and Arroys, contrary to the Charter of the Proclamation and inhibition aboue mentioned (if they ſhal chance to be conuinced hereof) that firſt, our due cuſtome being receiued, you doe permit the ſaid wools and woollen fels to paſſe out of the foreſaid port into forrein countries. Witnes the king at Douer the 18. day of June. By the king himſelfe and his Councell.

A Charter made in the firſt yeere of his reigne.

And afterwarde by a Writte vnder the Kings priuie Seale there was a like commandement giuen vnto the Collectors of the cuſtome aforeſayde in the portes vnderwritten.

A Catalogue of the great Maſters of the Order of the Dutch knights, commonly called the Hoſpitalaries of Ieruſalem: and what great exploites euery of the ſaide Maſters hath atchieued, either in conquering the land of Pruſſia, or in taming and ſubduing the Infidels, or els in keeping them vnder their obedience and ſubiection, taken out of Munſter.

The order of the Dutch knights had their firſt original at Ieruſalem in the yere of our Lorde 1190. within the Hoſpitall of the bleſſed Virgine: and the firſt Maſter of the ſaide order was called Henrie of Walpot, vnder whome many good things, and much wealth and riches were throughout all Germanie and Italie procured vnto the order: and the ſaide Hoſpitall was remoued from Ieruſalem vnto Ptolemais, otherwiſe called Acon, and the foreſaid Order grew and mightily increaſed, whereof I will hereafter diſcourſe more at large in my Treatiſe of Syria. Henrie of Walpot deceaſed in the yeere of Chriſt 1200. The 2. Maſter was Otto of Kerpen, and he continued Maſter of the Order for the ſpace of ſixe yeeres. The 3. was Hermannus Bart a godly and deuout perſon, who deceaſed in the yeere 1210. being interred at Acon, as his predeceſſors were. The 4. was Hermannus de Saltza, who thirtie yeeres together gouerned the ſaide Order, and managed the firſt expedition of warre againſt the infidels of Pruſſia, and ordained another Maſter alſo in Pruſſia to bee his Deputie in the ſame region. In the yeere 1239. the knights of the ſword, who trauelled into Liuonia to conuert the inhabitants thereof vnto Chriſt, ſeeing they were not of ſufficient force to performe that enterpriſe, and that their enemies increaſed on all ſides, they vnited themſelues vnto the famous Order of the Dutch knights in Pruſſia, that their worthie attempt might bee defended and promoted by the aide and aſſiſtance of the ſaide Duch knights. At the very ſame time the enſigne of the croſſe was exalted throughout all Germanie againſt the Pruſſians, and a great armie of ſouldiers was gathered together, the Burgraue of Meidenburg being generall of the armie, who combining themſelues vnto the Dutch knights, ioyned battell with the Infidels, and ſlew about fiue hundred Gentiles, who beforetime had made horrible inuaſions and in-roades into the dominions of Chriſtians, waſting all with fire and ſword, but eſpecially the land of Colm, and Lubonia, which were the Prouinces Enſiferi fratres.

The firſt warre moued againſt the Pruſſian infidels, anno dom. 1239.

ces of Conradus Duke of Maſſouia. Nowe, the foreſaide knights hauing made ſo huge a ſlaughter, built the caſtle of Reden, betweene Pomerania and the land of Colm, and ſo by degrees they gotte footing in the lande, and daylie erected more caſtles, as namely, Crutzburg, Wiſſenburg, Reſil, Bartenſtein, Brunsburg, and Heilsburg, and furniſhed them all with garriſons. The firſt Maſter of the Order was Conradus Landgrauius, the brother of Lodouick, which was huſband vnto Ladie Elizabeth. This Conradus, by his fathers inheritance, gaue great riches and poſſeſſions vnto the Order, and cauſed Ladie Elizabeth to be interred at Marpurg, within the religious houſe of his ſaide Order. Vnder the gouernment of this Maſter, Acon in the lande of Paleſtina was ſubdued vnto the Saracens. Moreouer, in the yeere 1254. there was another great armie of Souldiers prepared againſt Pruſsia, by the Princes of Germanie. For Octacer, aliâs Odoacer king of Bohemia, Otto Marques of Brandeburg, the Duke of Auſtria, the Marques of Morauia, the Biſhops of Colen and of Olmutz came marching on with great ſtrength of their Nobles and common ſouldiers, and inuading the lande of Pruſsia in the Winter ſeaſon, they conſtrained the inhabitants thereof to receiue the Chriſtian faith, and to become obedient vnto the knights. After which exploite, by the aduiſe and aſſiſtance of king Odoacer, there was a caſtle built vpon a certaine hill of Samogitia, which immediately after grewe to be a great citie, being at this day the ſeate of the Prince of Pruſsia: and it was called by Odoacer Kunigsberg, that is to ſay, Kings Mount, or Mount royall, being finiſhed in the yeere 1255. Out of this fort the knights did bridle and reſtraine the furie of the Infidels on all ſides, and compelled them to obedience. The firſt Maſter was called Boppo ab Oſterna, vnder whom the citie of Kunigsberg was built. At the very ſame inſtant the knights beeing occupied about the warre of Curland, the Pruſsians conſpiring together, and abandoning the Chriſtian faith, in furious maner armed themſelues againſt ye Chriſtians, defaced and burnt down Churches, ſlew Prieſts, and to the vtmoſt of their abilitie, baniſhed all faithfull people. The report of which miſdemeanour being publiſhed throughout all Germanie, an huge armie was leuied and ſent for the defence and ſuccour of the knights, which marching into the land of Natan, made many ſlaughters, & through the inconſtancie of fortune ſometimes woonne, and ſometimes loſt the victorie. Alſo the Infidels beſieged theſe three caſtles, namely, Barſtenſtein, Crutzberg and Kunigsberg, and brought extreame famine vpon the Chriſtians contained within the ſaide fortes. Againe, in the yeere of our Lord 1262. the Earle of Iuliers, with other Princes and great chiualrie came downe, and giuing charge vpon the Pruſſians, put three thouſand of them to the edge of the ſworde. Afterward the Pruſſians banding themſelues together, were determined to ſpoile the caſtle of Kunigſberg, but their confederacie being diſcloſed, they had the repulſe. And when the knightes had preuailed againſt them, they laide in pledges, and yet for all that were not afraid to breake their fidelitie. For vpon a certaine time, after they had giuen diuers pledges, they ſlewe two noble knights of the Order, and ſo by that meanes incenſed the principall of the ſaide order, inſomuch that they cauſed two paire of gallous to be ſet vp beſides the caſtle, & thirtie of the Pruſſians pledges to be hanged thereupon. Which ſeueritie ſo vexed and prouoked the Pruſsians, that in reuenge of the ſaid iniury, they renewed bloody and cruel warres, ſlew many Chriſtians, yea, and put 40. knights with the maſter of the Order, and the Marſhal, vnto the edge of the ſworde. There was at the ſame inſtant in Pomerania a Duke called Suandepolcus, profeſſing the Chriſtian faith, but being ioyned in league with the Pruſsians, he indeuoured for many yeeres, not onely to expell the knights, but all Chriſtians whatſoeuer out of the lande of Pruſsia, in which warre the foreſaide knights of the Order ſuffered many abuſes. For they loſt almoſt all their caſtles, and a great number of themſelues alſo were ſlaine. This Suandepolcus put in practiſe many lewde attempts againſt religion. For albeit he was baptized, he did more miſchiefe then the very Infidels themſelues, vntill ſuch time as the knights being aſſiſted by the Princes of Germanie, brought the ſaide Duke and the Pruſsians alſo into ſuch ſtraights, that (maugre their heads) they were conſtrained to ſue for peace. Afterward Swandepolcus lying at the point of death, admoniſhed his ſonnes that they ſhould not doe any iniurie vnto the knights of the order, affirming that himſelfe neuer proſpered ſo long as he vrged warre againſt them. Howbeit his ſonnes for a certaine time obſerued not their fathers counſel, vntill at length one of them named Warteſlaus, was created one of the Order, and the other called Samborus beſtowed by legacie his goods and poſſeſſions vpon the ſaide Order, receiuing maintenance and exhibition from the ſaide Order, during the terme of his life. It fortuned alſo vnder the gouernment of the foreſayde Maſter Boppo, that one Syr Martine a Golin beeing accompanied with another knight, went into the countrey to ſee howe the Pruſsians were imployed. And meeting with three Pruſsians, they ſlew two, and the thirde they reſerued to guide them the directeſt way. But this guide betrayed them into their enemies handes. Which when they perceiued, they ſlewe the Traytour. Then fiue Pruſſian horſemen came riding and tooke them, deliuering them bounde to the cuſtodie of two. And the other three purſued the horſes of the two, which broke looſe in the time of the fraye. And they tarying ſomewhat long, the other two woulde haue beheaded the two Knightes in the meane ſeaſon. And as one of them was ſtriking with his drawen ſworde, at the necke of Sir Martine, hee ſaide vnto them: Sirs, you doe vnwiſely in that you take not off my garment before it bee defiled with blood. They therefore looſing the corde wherewith hee was bounde, to take off his garment, ſet his armes more at libertie. Which Syr Martine well perceiuing reached his keeper ſuch a boxe, that his ſworde fell to the grounde. Which hee with all ſpeede taking vp, ſlewe both the keepers and vnbounde his fellowe Knight. Moreouer, ſeeing the other three Pruſſians comming furiouſly vpon them, with ſtoute couragious hearts they made towarde the ſaide Pruſſians, and ſlew them, and ſo eſcaped the danger of death. The ſeuenth great Maſter was Hanno de Sangerſhuſen, who deceaſed in the yeere one thouſand two hundreth ſeuentie fiue. The eight was Hartmannus ab Heldringen who deceaſed in the yeere 1282. The ninth was Burckardus a Schuuenden beeing afterwarde made knight of the order of Saint Iohns. The tenth was Conradus a Feuchtuuang: vnder this man the Citie of Acon in Paleſtina was ſacked by the Soldan, and manie people were ſlayne. The Templars which were therein returned home out of Fraunce, where they had great reuenewes. The Knightes of Saint Iohn, who alſo had an Hoſpitall at Acon, changed their place, and went into the Iſle of Cyprus, and from thence departing vnto Rhodes, they ſubdued that Iſlande vnto themſelues. Nowe the Dutch Knights abounded with wealth and poſſeſſions throughout all Germanie, beeing Lordes of a good part of Pruſſia, Liuonia, and Curland, whoſe chiefe houſe was then at Marpurg, till ſuch time as it was remooued vnto Marieburg, a Towne of Pruſia. The eleuenth great Maſter was Godfrey Earle of Hohenloe. Vnder this man the knights ſuſtained a great ouerthrowe in Liuonia: but hauing ſtrengthned their armie, they ſlewe neere vnto Rye foure thouſande of their enemies. The twelfth Maſter was Sifridus a Feuchtuuang. Vnder this man, the principall houſe of the Order was tranſlated from Marpurg to Marieburg, which in the beginning was eſtabliſhed at Acon, and from thence was remooued vnto Venice, and from Venice vnto Marpurg. This Sifridus deceaſed in the yeere 1341. The thirteenth Maſter was called Charles Beffart of Triers. This man built a fort vpon the riuer of Mimmel, and it was named Chriſtmimmel. The foureteenth was Warnerus ab Orſele, whome a certaine knight of the Order ſlewe with his ſworde. The 15. was Ludolphus Duke of Brunſwick, who built the Towne of Ylgenburg, and deceaſed 1352. The ſixteenth was Theodoricus Earle of Aldenborg, and hee built the Towne of Bartenſtein. The ſeuenteenth was Ludolphus ſirnamed King. The eighteenth was Henrie a Tuſimer. The nineteenth Winricus a Knoppenrodt. In this mans time the knights took the king of the Lithuanians named Kinſtut captiue, and kept him priſoner in Marieburg halfe a yeere, but by the helpe of a ſeruaunt, hauing broken out of the Caſtle, hee eſcaped away by night. But fearing that hee was layde waite for in all places, hee left his horſe, and went on foote through vnknowen pathes. In the day time hee hidde himſelfe in ſecrete places, and in the night hee continued his iourney vntill hee came vnto Maſſouia. But all the Knightes ioye was turned into ſorrowe, after they had loſt ſo great an enemie. The twentieth grand Maſter was Conradus Zolner of Rotenſtein. The one and twentieth Conradus Walenrod. The two and twentieth Conradus a Iungingen, who deceaſed in the yeere one thouſand foure hundreth and ſeuen. The three and twentieth Vlricus a Iungingen. This man dyed in battell in the yeere one thouſand foure hundreth and tenne: which battell was fought againſt Vladiſlaus Father of Caſimire. Both partes had leuied mightie and huge forces: vnto the Polonians the Lithuanians and the Tartars had ioyned themſelues, ouer whome one Vitoldus was captaine: the Dutch Knights had taken vp Souldiers out of all Germanie. And when eache armie had encamped themſelues one within twentie furlongs of another, (hoping for victorie and impatient of delay) the great Maſter of the Pruſians ſent an Herault to denounce warre vnto the King, and immediately (alarme beeing giuen) it is reported that there were in both armies fourtie thouſand horſemen in a readineſſe. Vladiſlaus commaunded the Lithuanians and the Tartars to giue the firſt onſette, and placed the Polonians in the rerewarde of the battell: on the contrarie ſide, the Pruſſians regarded leaſt of all to reſerue any ſtrong troupes behinde, which might reſcue ſuch as were wearie, and renewe the fight, if neede ſhoulde require, but ſet forwarde the flower and chiualrie of all his Souldiers in the verie forefront of the battell. The charge beeing giuen certaine vnarmed

The Pruſsians abandon Chriſtianitie.

This man ſent an ambaſſage to Richard the ſecond.

Tartars & Lithuanians were ſlaine handſmooth: howbeit the multitude preſſed on, neither durſt the fearefull Polonians turne their backes, and ſo a cruell battell was fought vpon the heapes of dead carkaſes. The combate continued a long time, terrible ſlaughters were committed, and the Lithuanians and Tartars were ſlaine like ſheepe. But when newe and freſh enemies continually iſſued foorth, the Dutch knights being wearied, began to fight more faintly. Which Vladiſlaus no ſooner perceiued, but in all haſte hee ſends forwarde his mightie and well armed bande of Polonians, who ſuddenly breaking in renewed the ſkirmiſh. The Dutch were not able to withſtand the furie of the freſh troupes (great oddes there is betweene the wearied Souldier and him that comes in a freſh) inſomuch that the knights with their people were conſtrained to flee. The maſter of the Order ſeeing his ſouldiers giue way vnto the enemie, gathered a companie together, and withſtoode him in the face, howbeit himſelfe was ſlaine for his labour, the flight of his people proued greater and more diſhonourable, neither did the Dutch ceaſe to flee, ſo long as the Polonian continued the chaſe. There fell on the Knights partie manie thouſands of men, and the Polonians gotte not the victorie without great ſpoile and damage. This battell was foughten in regard of the bounds of regions in the yeere 1410. All Pruſſia following the happie ſucceſſe of the Polonian king (except Marieburg onely) yeelded themſelues vnto him being Conquerour. Howbeit the Emperour Sigiſmund taking vp the quarell, peace was ordained betweene the knights and Polonia, and a league concluded, certaine ſummes of money alſo were paide vnto the Polonian, Pruſſia was reſtored vnto the knights, neither was the ſaide order diſturbed in the poſſeſſion of their lands vntill the time of Friderick. The 24. Maſter was Henrie Earle of Plaen. This man being depoſed by the Chapter, was 7. yeres holden priſoner at Dantzik. The 25. Maſter was Michael Kuchenmeiſter, that is, maſter of the Cookes of Sternberg. The 26. was Paulus a Ruſsdorff. The 27. Conradus ab Ellerichſhauſen. This man, after diuers and ſundry conflicts betweene the Dutch knights, and the king of Polonia, concluded a perpetuall league with the ſaide king. Howbeit the citizens of Dantzig ſecretely going about to obteyne their freedome, that the foreſaide Order might haue no dominion ouer them, made ſute vnto the Polonian king to be their Protector. This Conradus died in the yeere 1450. The 28. was Lewis ab Ellerichſhauſen. Vnder this man there aroſe a dangerous ſedition in Pruſſia betweene the chiefe cities and the knights of the Order. The citizens demanded libertie, complaining that they were oppreſſed with diuers moleſtations. Whereupon they priuily made ſute vnto Caſimir then king of Polonia. The Maſter of the Order ſeeing what would come to paſſe began to expoſtulate with the king, that he kept not the peace which had bene concluded betweene them to laſt for euer. Alſo Frederick the Emperour commaunded the Pruſſians to returne vnto the obedience of the knights, who by the dint of their ſwordes had releaſed that prouince out of the hands of Infidels, and had bought it with the ſhedding of much blood. Notwithſtanding the popular ſort perſiſting ſtil in their ſtubborne determination, proceeded at length to open warre. The cities adhearing vnto the king vſurped diuers Caſtles belonging to the Maſter, tooke certain Commanders and knights, yea, and ſome they ſlewe alſo. Fiftie and fiue townes conſpired together in that rebellion: but thinking their eſtate and ſtrength not ſure enough againſt their owne gouernors without forrein aide, they choſe king Caſimir to be their lord. Heereupon the Polonian king marched into Pruſſia with a great armie, taking poſſeſſion of ſuch cities as yeelded themſelues vnto him, and proceeding forward againſt Marieburg, beſieged the caſtle and the towne. In the meane ſeaſon the Maſter hauing hired an armie of Germane ſouldiers, ſuddenly ſurpriſed the king at vnawares in his tents, and ſlewe about 300. Polonians, tooke priſoners 136. noblemen, ſpoiled their tents, tooke away their horſes, victuals, and armour, inſomuch that the king himſelfe hardly eſcaped vpon one horſe. Theſe things came to paſſe in the yeere 1455. The Maſter hauing thus obtained the victorie, ſent his armie into the countrey, and recouered the caſtles and cities which he had loſt, to the nūber of 80, putting many of his enemies alſo vnto the ſword. Moreouer, he recouered Kunigsberg being one of the foure principall cities, which are by name Thorne, Elburg, Kunigsberg, and Gdanum, that is to ſay, Dantzig. And when the warre was longer protracted then the Maſter could well beare, and a whole yeres wages was vnpaid vnto his captains, thoſe captaines which were in the gariſon of Marieburg conſpired againſt the Maſter, and for a great ſumme of money betrayed the caſtle of Marieburg vnto the king. Which practiſe beeing knowen, the Maſter fled to Kunigsberg, and newe warre was begunne, and great ſpoile and deſolation was wrought on both ſides: vntill at length, after compoſition made, the king reteyned Pomerella, and all the caſtles and townes therein, together with Marieburg and Elburg: and the maſter inioyed Samaitia, Kunigsberg, &c. This compoſition was concluded in the yeere 1466. The 29. Maſter was Henrie Reuſſ, firſt being deputie, and afterwarde Maſter of Pruſsia, The 30, was Henric a Richtenberg, who deceaſed in the yeere 1477. The 31. called

The great maſter ouercommeth the king of Polonia.

The king by treaſon ouerthroweth the Maſter.

Martine Truchſes died in the yeere 1489. The 32. Iohn a Tieflen died in the yeere 1500. The 33. being Duke of Saxonie, and marques of Miſn, deceaſed in the yeere 1510. This man began to call in queſtion, whether the foreſaid compoſition concluded betweene the king of Polonia, and the Order, were to bee obſerued or no: eſpecially ſithence it conteined certaine articles againſt equitie and reaſon. Wherupon he appealed vnto the Biſhop of Rome, vnto the Emperor, vnto the princes and electors of Germany, and preuailed with them ſo farre forth, that there was a day of hearing appointed at Poſna in Polonia. And the Legates of both parts meeting heard complaints and excuſes, & diſpatched no other buſineſſe. In the meane time Prince Frederick deceaſed in the tenth yeere of his gouernment. The 34. Maſter was Albertus marques of Brandenburg, whom the King of Polonia did ſo grieuouſly moleſt with war, and oppreſſed all Pruſſia with ſuch extreme rigour, that the Prince of the countrey was conſtrained to make a league of foure yeeres with him, and to yeeld vnto ſuch conditions, as turned to the vtter ouerthrowe of the whole Order. And amongſt other conditions are theſe which follow. Sithence that the originall of all diſcorde betweene Polonia and the order doeth from hence ariſe, for that hitherto in Pruſſia, no lawfull heyre and ſucceſſor hath borne rule and authoritie, but diuers and ſundry haue had the gouernment therof, by whoſe meanes the nations haue bene prouoked one againſt another, much Chriſtian blood hath bin ſhed, the lands and inhabitants grieuouſly ſpoiled, and many widowes and Orphans made: the Popes, Emperors, and Princes being often ſollicited for the eſtabliſhing of that perpetual league, which Caſimir hath heretofore concluded &c. Sithence alſo that the truce which hath bene agreed vpon of both parties is in ſhort time to be expired, and that it is to bee feared, that bloody warres will then be renewed, and that all things will proue worſe and worſe, vnleſſe ſome lawfull compoſition be made, and ſome good and wholeſome deuiſe be put in practiſe, as well for the benefit of the King and of his poſteritie, as for the commoditie of the whole common weale of Pruſſia, eſpecially conſidering that Albertus the Marques refuſeth not to ſubmitte himſelfe to the Councell of the King, &c.

The Oration or ſpeech of the Ambaſſadours ſent from Conradus de Zolner Maſter generall of the land of Pruſſia, vnto Richard the ſecond, King of England, and France, &c.

The meſſengers which are ſent from the Maſter generall of the land of Pruſſia, doe propound and declare the affaires and negotiations vnderwritten.

The ancient aſſiſtance of the kings of England againſt infidels.

VHereas it is apparant, that diuers and ſundrie times heeretofore, your famous progenitours and predeceſſours the kings of England haue alwaies bene gracious promoters and ſpeciall friends vnto the generall Maſters of the land of Pruſſia, and of the whole order: whereas alſo they haue vouchſafed, by their Barons, Knights, and other their nobles of the kingdome of England, vnto the Maſters and order aforeſaide, ſundry and manifolde fauourable aſſiſtances in the conqueſt of the Infidels (in whoſe ſteppes your excellent Maieſtie inſiſting, haue, in theſe your dayes ſhewed your ſelfe in like ſort right graciouſly affected vnto the Maſter generall which nowe is, and vnto his famous Predeceſſour) in due conſideration of the premiſſes, and in regard alſo of diuers other affaires, which are at this preſent to be propounded vnto your Highnes, the foreſaid Maſter general which now is hath cauſed vs his meſſengers to be ſent with letters of credence vnto your Maieſtie: humbly praying, and earneſtly beſeeching your roial clemency, that in times to come, the ſaid Maſter general, his ſucceſſors, & our whole Order may of your bounty moſt graciouſly obtaine the ſame fauour, beneuolẽce, and ſtedfaſt amity & friendſhip, which hath bin continued from the times of your foreſaid predeceſſors: in regard wherof we do offer the ſaid Maſter of ours, and our whole company, vnto your highnes, as your perpetual and deuote friends. Notwithſtanding (moſt ſoueraigne Prince) certaine other things we haue to propound vnto your Grace, in the name & behalfe of our ſaide Maſter and Order, by way of complaint, namely, that at certaine times paſt, and eſpecially within the ſpace of x. yeres laſt expired, his ſubiects and marchants haue ſuſtained ſundry damages and ablations of their goods, by diuers ſubiects and inhabitants of your realme of England, and that very often, both by ſea and land: the which, for the behalf, and by the appointment of the Maſter general aforeſaid, & of his predeceſſor, are put downe in regiſters, and recorded in the writings of his cities in the land of Pruſſia. Of which parties damnified, ſome haue obtained letters frõ the Maſter general that now is, & alſo from his predeceſſor, vnto your renowned grandfather K. Edward of famous memory,and ſundry times vnto your highnes alſo,to haue reſtitution made for their goods taken from them: whereby they haue nothing at al preuailed, but heaping loſſe vpon loſſe haue miſſpent their time & their charges: both becauſe they were not permitted to propound & exhibit their complaints & letters before your maieſty,and alſo for diuers other impediments. Certain of them alſo conſidering how others of their countriemen had laboured in vain, & fearing the like ſucceſſe,haue troubled the Maſter general very often with grieuous and ſundry complaints,crauing & humbly beſeeching at his hands,that he would vouchſafe graciouſly to prouide for thẽ as his faithful & loial ſubiects,as touching the reſtitution of their loſſes: eſpecially ſeeing ẏ ſo much wealth of the Engliſh marchants was euery yeere to be found in Pruſſia,as being arreſted,they might obtaine ſome reaſonable ſatiſfaction for their loſſes. Which thing the Maſter general aforeſaid & his predeceſſor alſo haue deferred vnto this preſent (albeit to ẏ great loſſe of their ſubiects) thereby hauing meere & principal reſpect vnto thoſe ſpecial curteſies and fauours which your excellent Maieſty & your worthy progenitors haue right graciouſly vouchſafed vpon our Maſters and Order : neither yet for the iniuries aforeſaid, was there euer any maner of offence,or moleſtation offered vnto any of your ſubiects noble or ignoble whatſoeuer. Moreouer, in the name & behalfe of our foreſaid Ma. general we do propound vnto your excellency by way of cõplaint,that in the yere laſt paſt,6. dayes after ẏ feaſt of the Aſcenſion,certain perſons of your realm of England,with their ſhips & captains comming vnto the port of Flanders,named Swen,& finding there,amongſt ſundry other,6. ſhips of Pruſſia reſident,which had there arriued wͭ diuers goods & marchandiſes: and being informed that they were of Pruſſia,& their friends,they cauſed them & their ſhips to remain next vnto their owne ſhips,proteſting vnto them,that they ſhould in no ſort be moleſted or dammified by thẽſelues or by any other of their company,& that they would faithfully defend them,as if they were their own people,frõ ẏ hands of their aduerſaries: & for their farther ſecurity & truſt,they deliuered ſome of their own men & their ſtanderds into our mens ſhips: howbeit a while after being ſtirred vp,& bent far otherwiſe,they took out of ẏ foreſaid ſhips al kind of armor,wherwith they were to gard & defẽd themſelues frõ pirats, & they deteined the maſters of thoſe ſhips,not ſuffring them to return vnto their own ſhips & cõpanies,one alſo of ẏ ſaid ſhips (hauing taken al the goods out of her) they cõſumed with fire. And within 3. daies after they came with one accord vnto ẏ abouenamed ſhips,and tooke away from them all goods and marchandiſes which they could find,and all the armour and weapons of the ſaid ſhips,the cheſtes alſo of the marchants,of the ſhip-maſters,& of other perſons they brake opẽ,taking out money,iewels,garments,& diuers other commodities : and ſo they inflicted vpõ them irrecouerable loſſes and vnkind grieuances. And departing out of the foreſaid hauen,they caried 2. of the Pruſſian ſhip-maſters with thẽ, as their captiues vnto an hauen of England called Sandwich. Who, being afterward releaſed,were compelled to ſweare,that they ſhould not declare ẏ iniuries offred vnto them,either before your roiall maieſty,or your hon. Councell,or your chãcelor: neither were they permitted to come on ſhore. And being offred ſuch hard meaſure, when they made pitiful mones & complaints vnto your foreſaide ſubiects,amongſt other matters they ſpake on this wiſe vnto them: Do you complain of iniuries & loſſes offered vnto you? Loe, in your own cõtrey of Pruſſia there are English marchants,& goods ſufficient,go your waies home therfore,& recouer your loſſes,taking two for one: and in this maner they were left,& ſo departed. Afterward returning vnto ẏ land of Pruſſia,they & their friends repaired vnto the Maſt. general, iointly and wͭ one conſent making their complaint vnto him of the loſſes which had bin inflicted vpon thẽ by your ſubiects. And proſtrating thẽſelues at his feet, they all and euery of them made their humble ſutes,ẏ he would haue compaſſion on them,as vpon his poore ſubiects,regarding thẽſelues,their wiues,& children,and pitying their diſtres,and penury,and that he would graciouſly procure ſome redreſſe for them. And when he offred his letters vnto them,wiſhing them to proſecute their cauſe before your highnes,they anſwered that they were no way able to defray the expenſes,and that others,who were in like ſort dammified,had laboured that way altogether in vain & to no purpoſe: beſeeching him again and again,that he would by another kind of means, namely by arreſting of your marchants and their goods, procure thẽ reſtitution of their loſſes. At length the Maſter general being moued by ſo many and ſo great complaints, and by the moleſtation of his ſubiects, cauſed (albeeit full ſore againſt his will) a certaine portion of English marchants goods to be laid hold on,and to be arreſted,in his cities of Elburg & Dantzik, and to be beſtowed in ſure places, vntil ſuch time as he might conueniently by his meſſengers propound and exhibit all and ſingular the premiſſes vnto your highnes. And foraſmuch as the foreſaid Maſter general and our Order do know no iuſt occaſion, wherby they haue deſerued your maieſties indignation, but are firmely and moſt vndoubtedly perſwaded, to finde all curteſie , fauour, and friendſhip at your Highneſſe,according to your wonted clemencie: the ſaid Maſter generall therefore maketh no doubt, that al the aboue written damages & moleſtations, being in ſuch ſort, againſt God and iuſtice, offred vnto his ſubiects by yours, be altogether vnknowen vnto your magnificence, & committed againſt your mind: wherfore preſently vpon the foreſaid arreſt of your marchants goods, he diſpatched his meſſengers vnto your roial maieſty. Wherof one deceaſed by the way, namely in the territory of Holland: & the other remained ſick in thoſe parts for a long ſeaſon: & ſo that ambaſſage took none effect. Wherfore the ſaid maſter general was deſirous to ſend vs now ẏ ſecond time alſo vnto your Highnes. We do make our humble ſute therfore, in the name & behalf of our Maſter and Order aforeſaid, vnto your kingly ſupremacy, that, hauing God and iuſtice before your eies, and alſo the dutifull and obſequious demeanor of the ſaid maſter, and order towards you, you would vouchſafe to extend your gracious clemency, for the redreſſe of the premiſſes: wherby the foreſaid loſſes may be reſtored and repaied vnto our ſubiects. All which notwithſtanding, that it would pleaſe you of your wiſedome & prouidence to procure ſo abſolute a remedy, by meanes whereof, in time to come, ſuch dealings and inconueniences may be auoided on both parts, & finally that your marchants may quietly be poſſeſſed of their goods arreſted in Pruſſia, and our marchants may be admitted vnto the poſſeſſion of their commodities attached in England, to conuert & apply them vnto ſuch vſes, as to themſelues ſhal ſeem moſt conuenient. Howbeit (moſt gracious prince and lord) we are to ſollicite your Highneſſe, not onely about the articles to be propounded concerning the loſſes aforeſaide, but more principally, for certain ſiniſter reports and ſuperſtitious ſlanders, wherwith certaine of your ſubiects, not ſeeking for peace, haue falſly informed your maieſty, & your moſt honorable & diſcreete Cōſel: affirming that at the time of ẏ aforeſaid arreſt your marchants were barbarouſly intreated, that they were caſt into lothſom priſons, drenched in myre and water vp to ẏ neck, reſtrained from al conference and company of men, and alſo that their meat was throwen vnto them, as a bone to a dog, with many other enormities, which they haue moſt ſlanderouſly deuiſed concerning the maſter general aforeſaid, and his people, and haue publiſhed them in theſe dominions: vpon the occaſion of which falſhoods certain marchants of our parts, and of other regions of Alemain (who, of your ſpecial beneuolence, were indued with certaine priuileges and fauours in your citie of London, and in other places) were, as malefactors, apprehended and caried to priſon, vntil ſuch time as the trueth was more apparant. Whereupon, the foreſaide maſter generall propoundeth his humble ſute vnto your maieſtie, that ſuch enemies of trueth and concord, your Maieſty woulde vouchſafe in ſuch ſort to chaſtiſe, that they may be an example vnto others preſuming to doe the like.

Edward the 3.

The arreſting of the English goods and marchants.

Moreouer, (high and mighty Prince and lord) it was reported vnto our Maſter general, that his former Legats required of your maieſty ſafe conduct freely to come into your highneſſe Realme. Which when hee heard, he was exceedingly offended therat, ſithence vndoubtedly they did not this at his commaundement or direction. We therefore humbly beſeech your Grace, as touching this ouerſight, to holde the Maſter generall excuſed, becauſe there is no need of ſafeconduct, betweene ſo ſpeciall friends.

Furthermore, ſundry damages and complaints of the foreſaid general Maſter, and his ſubiects are briefly exhibited, and put downe in the billes following. Alſo, all and ſingular damnified perſons, beſides other proofes, were compelled to verifie their loſſes by their formall othes, taken vpon the holy Bible.

Laſtly, we doe make our humble ſuite and petition vnto the prouidence and diſcretion of your Highnes, and of your honorable Councell, that concerning the premiſſes, and all other matters propounded, or to be propounded vnto your Maieſty, we may obtaine a ſpeedy anſwere, and an effectuall end. For it would redound vnto our great charges and loſſe to make any long delayes.

An agreement made by the Ambaſſadors of England and Pruſsia, confirmed by king Richard the ſecond.

Richard by the grace of God, king of England, and France, and lorde of Ireland, To all, vnto whom theſe preſent letters ſhall come, greeting. We haue ſeene and conſidered the compoſition, ordination, concord, and treatie, betweene our welbeloued clearke, maſter Nicholas Stocket, licentiat in both lawes, Walter Sibel, and Thomas Graa, citizens of our cities of London & York, our meſſengers and ambaſſadors on the one part: and the honourable and religious perſonages, Conradus de Walrode, great commander, Sifridus Walpode de Baſſenheim, chiefe hoſpitalary commander in Elburg, and Vlricus Hachenberg Treaſurer, the meſſengers and ambaſſadors of the right reuerend and religious lord, lord Conradus Zolner de Rothenſtein, maſter generall of the knightly order of the Dutch hoſpital of Saint Mary at Ieruſalem on the other part, lately concluded and agreed vpon in theſe words. In the name of the ſupreame and indiuiſible Trinitie, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, Amen. Foraſmuch as the author of peace will haue peace-makers to be the ſons of bleſſednes, and the execrable enemie of peace to be expelled out of the dominions of Chriſtians: therefore for the perpetuall memorie of the thing, be it knowen vnto all men who ſhall ſee or heare the tenour of theſe preſents: that there being matter of diſſenſion and diſcord bred betweene the moſt renowmed prince and king, Richard by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, and his ſubiects on the one part: and the right reuerend and religious lord, lord Conradus Zolner de Rochinſtein, Maſter generall of the knightly order of the Dutch hoſpitall of S. Marie at Ieruſalem, and his land of Pruſſia, and his ſubiects alſo, on the other part: the foreſaid lord and generall maſter, vpon mature counſell and deliberation had, ſent his honourable ambaſſadours towards England vnto the forenamed moſt ſoueraigne prince and king, to propound and make their complaint vnto him of violence and iniuries offered (as it is ſayd) by the Engliſh vnto the Pruſſians: in conſideration whereof certaine goods of the marchants of England were arreſted in the land of Pruſſia. Whoſe complaint the foreſayd moſt gracious prince did courteouſly and friendly admit, receiue, and accept, and after many ſpeeches vttered in this treaty, louingly diſmiſſed them vnto their owne countrey againe, promiſing by his letters vnto the foreſayd reuerend Maſter generall, that hee would diſpatch his ambaſſadours vnto the land of Pruſſia. Whereupon, in the yeere 1388. he ſent the hono: and reuerend perſonages Maſter Nicholas Stocket licentiate of both lawes, Thomas Graa, and Walter Sibill, citizens of London and Yorke, with ſufficient authoritie and full commandement, to handle, diſcuſſe, and finally to determine the foreſaid buſines, and with letters of credence vnto the right reuerend lord and maſter generall aforeſayd. Which ambaſſadours, together with Iohn Beuis of London their informer, and the letters aforeſaid, and their ambaſſage, the ſaid right reuerend lord and Maſter generall, at his caſtle of Marienburgh, the 28. of Iuly, in the yeare aforeſaid, reuerently and honourably receiued and entertained: and in his minde eſteemed them worthy to treate and decide the cauſes aforeſayd: and ſo vnto the ſayd ambaſſadours he ioyned in commiſſion on his behalfe, three of his owne counſellers, namely the honourable and religious perſonages Conradus de Walrode great commander, Seiffridus Walpode de Baſſenheim chiefe hoſpitalary and commander in Elburg, Wolricus Hachenberger treaſurer, being all of the order aforeſaid. Which ambaſſadors ſo entreating about the premiſſes, and ſundry conferences and conſultations hauing paſſed betweene them, friendly and with one conſent, concluded an agreement and concord in manner following: That is to ſay:

1. Firſt, that all arreſtments, repriſals, and impignorations of whatſoeuer goods and marchandiſes in England and Pruſſia, made before the date of theſe preſents, are from henceforth quiet, free, and releaſed, without all fraud and diſſimulation: inſomuch that the damages, charges and expenſes occaſioned on both parts by reaſon of the foreſayd goods arreſted, are in no caſe hereafter to be required or chalenged by any man: but the demaunds of any man whatſoeuer propounded in this regard, are and ought to be altogether fruſtrate and voide, and all actions which may or ſhall be commenced by occaſion of the ſayd goods arreſted, are to be extinct and of none effect.

2. Moreouer, it is ſecondly concluded and agreed, that all and ſinguler Pruſſians pretending themſelues to be iniuried by the Engliſh at the Porte of Swen, or elſewhere, howſoeuer, and whenſoeuer, before the date of theſe preſents, hauing receiued the letters of the foreſaide right reuerende lord and Maſter generall, and of the cities of their abode, are to repayre towards England, vnto the ſayd hon: embaſſadours, who are to aſſiſt them, and to propound and exhibite their complaintes, vnto the forenamed lord and king. The moſt gracious prince is bounde to doe his indeuor, that the parties dammified may haue reſtitution of their goods made vnto them, or at leaſt complete iuſtice and iudgement without delay. Alſo in like maner all Engliſh men affirming themſelues to haue bene endamaged by Pruſſians, whereſoeuer, howſoeuer, and whenſoeuer, are to haue recourſe vnto the often forenamed right reuerend lorde the Maſter generall, with the letters of their king and of the cities of their abode, propounding their complaints and cauſes vnto him. Who likewiſe is bound to doe his indeuour that the ſayd loſſes and damages may be reſtored, or at the leaſt that ſpeedie iudgement may be, without all delayes, executed. This caueat being premiſed in each clauſe, that it may and ſhall be freely granted and permitted vnto euery man that will ciuilly make his ſuite and complaint, to doe it either by himſelfe, or by his procurator or procurators.

3. Alſo thirdly it is agreed, that whoſoeuer of Pruſſia is determined criminally to propound his criminal complaints in England: namely that his brother or kinſeman hath beene ſlaine, wounded, or maimed, by Engliſh men, the ſame partie is to repayre vnto the citie of London in England, and vnto the ſayd ambaſſadors, bringing with him the letters of the ſayd right reuerend lord the maſter generall, and of the cities of their abode: which ambaſſadors are to haue free and full authority, according to the complaints of the men of Pruſſia, and the anſwers of the Engliſh men, to make and ordaine a friendly reconciliation or honeſt recompence betweene ſuch parties: which reconciliation the ſayd parties reconciled are bound vndoubtedly & without delay to obſerue. But if there be any Engliſh man found, who ſhall raſhly contradict or contemne the compoſition of the foreſayd ambaſſadors: then the ſayd ambaſſadours are to bring the forenamed Pruſſian plaintifes before the preſence of the kings Maieſtie: and alſo to make ſupplication on the behalfe of ſuch plaintifes, that complete iuſtice and iudgment may without delayes bee adminiſtred, according as thoſe ſuites are commenced. Moreouer whatſoeuer Engliſh man, againſt whom anie one of Pruſſia would enter his action, ſhall abſent himſelfe at the terme, the ſayd ambaſſadours are to ſummon and aſcite the foreſayd Engliſh man to appeare at the terme next inſuing, that the plaintifes of Pruſſia may in no wiſe ſeeme to depart or to returne home, without iudgement or the aſſiſtance of lawe. Nowe if the ſayd Engliſh man being ſummoned ſhall be found ſtubborne or diſobedient, the forenamed ambaſſadours are to make their appeale and ſupplication in manner aforeſayd. And in like ſorte in all reſpects ſhall the Engliſh plaintifes be dealt withall in Pruſſia, namely in the citie of Dantzik, where the deputies of the ſayd citie and of the citie of Elburg ſhal take vnto themſelues two other headboroughs, one of Dantzik, and the other of Elburg: which foure commiſſioners are to haue in al reſpects, the very like authoritie of deciding, diſcuſſing, and determining all criminall complaints propounded criminally, by Engliſh men againſt any Pruſſian or Pruſſians, by friendly reconciliation, or honeſt recompenſe, if it be poſſible. But if it cannot friendly be determined, or if anie Pruſsian ſhall not yeeld obedience vnto any ſuch order or compoſition, but ſhalbe found to contradict and to contemne the ſame: from thenceforth the ſaid foure deputies and headboroughs are to make their appeale and ſupplication vnto the Maſter generall of the land aforeſayd, that vnto the ſayd Engliſh plaintifes ſpeedy iudgement and complete iuſtice may be adminiſtred. But if it ſhall ſo fall out that any of the principall offenders ſhall decease, or already are deceaſed in either of the ſayd countries, that then it ſhall bee free and lawfull for the plaintife to proſecute his right againſt the goods or heires of the party deceaſed. Alſo, for the executing of the premiſſes the termes vnder written are appointed: namely the firſt, from the Sunday whereupon Quaſi modo geniti is to be ſung next enſuing, vntill the ſeuenth day following: The ſecond vpon the feaſt of the holy Trinitie next to come, and for ſeuen dayes following: The third vpon the eight day after Saint Iohn Baptiſt next to come, & for ſeuen daies following: The fourth, laſt, and peremptory terme ſhall be vpon the feaſt of S. Michael next to come, and vpon ſeuen dayes next following. And from thenceforth all cauſes which concerne death, or the mayming of a member, with all actions proceeding from them, are to remaine altogether voide and extinct. And if peraduenture any one of the foreſayd ambaſſadours, ſhall in the meane ſeaſon dye, then the other two ſhall haue authoritie to chuſe a third vnto them. And if after the date of theſe preſents any cauſe great or ſmall doth ariſe or ſpring foorth, it muſt bee decided in England and in Pruſsia, as it hath beene accuſtomed in times paſt and from ancient times.

An ancient cuſtome.

4. The priuiledges of the Engliſh marchants in Pruſsia.

Alſo, it is farther concluded and agreed vpon, that all lawfull marchants of England whoſoeuer ſhall haue free licence and authoritie, with all kindes of ſhippes, goods, and marchandiſes, to reſorte vnto euery port of the land of Pruſsia, and alſo to tranſport all ſuch goods and marchandiſes vp farther vnto any other place in the ſayde land of Pruſsia, and there with all kindes of perſons freely to bargaine and make ſale, as heretofore it hath from auncient times bene accuſtomed. Which priuiledge is granted in all things and by all circumſtances vnto the Pruſsians in England. And if after the date of theſe preſents, betweene the ſayd kingdome of England, and land of Pruſsia any diſſenſion or diſcorde (which God forefend) ſhould ariſe: then the foreſayd ſoueraigne prince and king of England, and the ſayd right reuerend lord the Maſter generall are mutually by their letters and meſſengers to giue certificate and intimation one vnto another, concerning the matter and cauſe of ſuch diſſenſion and diſcord: which intimation, on the behalfe of the foreſaid ſoueraigne prince & king of England, ſhall be deliuered in the forenamed caſtle of Marienburg: but on the behalfe of the ſayd right reuerend lord the Maſter generall, ſuch intimation ſhall be giuen in the citie of London aforeſayd, vnto the Maior of the ſaid city: that then ſuch a denunciation or intimation being made, the marchants of England and the ſubiects of the land of Pruſsia may, within the ſpace of one yeere next following, freely and ſafely returne home with al their goods & marchandiſes: if at the leaſt, in the mean while, ſome compoſition, & friendly league betweene the two forſayd countreis be not in ſome ſorte concluded. And that all the premiſſes may more firmely and faithfully be put in due practiſe and execution on both partes, for the ſtrong and inuiolable keeping of peace and tranquillity: and alſo for the full confirmation and ſtrengthening of all the ſayde premiſſes, the three foreſayd honourable and religious perſonages being by the ſaid right reuerend lord the Maſter general appointed as commiſſioners to deale in the aboue written ordination and compoſition, haue cauſed their ſeales vnto theſe preſents to be put : and the ſayd ordination alſo, and letter in the ſame tenour word for word, and in all points euen as it is inſerted into theſe preſents, they haue mutually receiued frõ the abouenamed three ambaſſadours of the right ſoueraigne king of England vnder their ſeales. Giuen at the caſtle of Marienburg in the yeare of our lord aforeſayd, vpon the twentieth day of the moneth of Auguſt. And we therefore doe accept, approue, ratifie, and by the tenour of theſe preſents doe confirme, the compoſition, ordination, concorde, and treaty aforeſayd. In teſtimony whereof we haue cauſed theſe our letters to be made patents. Witneſſe our ſelues a Weſtminſter the 22, of October, in the thirteenth yeare of our reigne.

By the king and his counſell,

Lincolne.

The letters of Conradus de Iungingen, Maſter generall of Pruſſia, written vnto Richard the ſecond, king of England, in the yeere 1398, for the renouncing of a league and compoſition concluded betweene England and Pruſſia, in regard of manifold iniuries offered vnto the Pruſſians.

OUr humble commendations, with our earneſt prayers vnto God for your Maieſtie, premiſed. Moſt renowmed prince and mighty lord, it is not (we hope) out of your Maieſties remembrance, how our famous predeceſſour going immediately before vs ſent certaine letters of his vnto your highneſſe, effectually conteyning ſundry complaints of grieuances, iniuries and loſſes, wherewith the marchants of his lande and Order being woont in times paſt to viſite your kingdome with their goods and marchandiſes, haue bene contrary to their liberties and priuileges annoyed with manifold iniuries and wrongs. Eſpecially ſithens they haue beene moleſted in your realme, being contrary to the friendly compoſition made and celebrated by the hono: perſonages, maſter Nicholas Stocket, Thomas Graa and Walter Sibil, in the yeare 1388, with the aſſiſtance of their coarbiters on our part, and contrary to God and all iuſtice, oppreſſed with manifold damages, loſſes, and grieuances : as in certaine articles exhibited vnto our predeceſſors aforeſayd it doeth more manifeſtly appeare. In conſideration whereof being vehemently moued by the damnified parties, he humbly beſought your highneſſe by his meſſengers and letters, for complement and execution of iuſtice. About the which affayres your Maieſtie returned your letters of anſwere vnto our ſayd predeceſſor, ſignifying that the ſayd buſineſſe of articles concerned al the communalty of your realme, and that your highneſſe purpoſed, after conſultation had in your parliament, to ſend a more deliberate anſwere concerning the premiſſes, vnto our predeceſſour aforeſayd. Howbeit he being by death tranſlated out of this preſent world, and our ſelues by the prouidence of God ſucceeding in his roome, and alſo long time expecting an effectuall anſwere from your highneſſe, are not yet informed as we looked for : albeit the complaints of iniuries and loſſes offered vnto our ſubiects doe continually increaſe. But from henceforth to prouide a remedie and a caueat for the time to come, the ſayd complaynt doeth vpon great reaſons mooue and inuite me. Sithens therefore in regard of the ſayd compoſition, neither you nor your ſubiects may be iudged in the empire : and ſithens plaine reaſon requireth that the one be not inriched by the others loſſe : as vndoubtedly our ſubiects ſhould ſuſtaine great damage by the compoſition aforeſayd, by vertue whereof your ſubiects doe inioy all commodities in our lande, and contrariwiſe our ſubiects in your realme haue ſuffered, & as yet ſundrie wayes do ſuffer manifold diſcommodities, loſſes and iniuries. Wherefore (moſt ſoueraigne prince and mighty lord) being reaſonably mooued vpon the cauſes aforeſayd, we doe, by the aduiſe of our counſellers, reuoke and repeale the ſayd compoſition concluded as is aboue written, together with the effect thereof, purely and ſimply renouncing the ſame by theſe preſents : refuſing hereafter to haue either our ſelues or our ſubiects in any reſpect to ſtand bound by the vertue of the ſayd compoſition : but from henceforth, and for the times heretofore alſo, bee it altogether voide and of none effect.

Prouided notwithſtanding, that from the time of the notice of this denunciation giuen vnto the hono: Maior of your citie of London, for the ſpace of a yeare next enſuing, it ſhall be lawfull for all marchants of your kingdome whatſoeuer, with their goods and marchandiſes to returne home, according to the forme in the foreſayd compoſition expreſſed : conditionally that our ſubiects may euen ſo in all reſpects be permitted to depart, with the ſafety of their goods and liues out of your dominions : this preſent renuntiation, reuocation, and retractation of the order and compoſition aforeſayd, notwithſtanding. Howbeit in any other affayres whatſoeuer, deuoutly to ſubmit our ſelues vnto your highneſſe pleaſure and command, both our ſelues, and our whole order are right willing and deſirous: and alſo to benefite and promote your ſubiects we will indeuour to the vtmoſt of our ability. Giuen in our caſtle of Marienburg in the yeare of our Lord 1398, and vpon the 22. day of February.

Frater Conradus de Iungingen, maſter generall of the Order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hoſpital at Ieruſalem.

A briefe relation of VVilliam Eſturmy, and Iohn Kington concerning their ambaſſages into Pruſsia, and the Hanſ-townes.

1403. INprimis, that in the moneth of July, and in the yeare of our Lord 1403, and the fift yeare of the reigne of our ſoueraigne Lord the king that nowe is, there came into England the ambaſſadours of the mighty lord Fr: Conradus de Iungingen, being then Maſter general of Pruſsia, with his letters directed vnto our foreſayd ſoueraigne lord the king, requiring amends and recompenſe for certaine iniuries vniuſtly offered by Engliſh men vnto the ſubiects of the ſayd Maſter generall, written in 20. articles, which amounted vnto the ſumme of 19120. nobles and a halfe &c.

Item, that the third day of the moneth of October, in the yeare of our Lord aboue written, and in the fift yere of the reigne of our ſoueraigne lord the king, betweene the reuerend father in God, Henrie then biſhop of Lincolne lord chancelor, and William lord de Roos high treaſurer of England, on the one party and the ſayd ambaſſadours on the other party, it was (according to their petition) amongſt other things ordayned: namely that the liege people of our ſoueraigne lord the king ſhould freely be permitted, vntill the feaſt of Eaſter then next after enſuing to remaine in the land of Pruſsia, and from thence with their goods & marchandiſes to returne vnto their own home: and alſo, that the ſubiects of the ſayd Maſter generall in the kingdome of England ſhould haue licence and liberty to doe the like. Prouided alwayes, that after the time aboue limitted, neither the Engliſh marchants in the land of Pruſsia, nor the Pruſſian marchãts in the realme of England ſhould vſe any traffique of marchandiſe at all, vnleſſe in the meane ſpace it were otherwiſe agreed and concluded by the ſayd king and the ſayd Maſter general.

Item, immediately after our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king ſent his letters by Iohn Browne marchant of Lin vnto the foreſayd Maſter generall, for to haue mutuall conuerſation and intercourſe of dealing to continue ſome certain ſpace, betweene the marchants of England and of Pruſsia: promiſing in the ſame letters, that he would in the meane ſeaſon ſend vnto the foreſayd Maſter his ambaſſadors to intreat about the pretended iniuries aforeſaid: which letters the foreſayd Maſter, for diuers cauſes, refuſed to yeelde vnto, as in his letters ſent vnto our lord the king, bearing date the 16. day of the moneth of July, in the yeare of our lord 1404, more plainely appeareth.

Item, that after the receit of the letters of the Maſter aforeſaid, which are next aboue mentioned, our ſayd king, according to his promiſe, ſent William Eſturmy knight, M. Iohn Kington clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London, from his court of parliament holden at Couentrie, very ſlightly informed, as his ambaſſadours into Pruſsia.

Item, before the arriuall of the ſayd ambaſſadours in Pruſsia, all intercourſe of traffique betweene the Engliſh and the Pruſſians, in the realme of England, and in the land of Pruſsia was altogether reſtrained and prohibited: and in the ſame land it was ordayned and put in practiſe, that in whatſoeuer porte of the land of Pruſsia any Engliſh marchant had arriued with his goods, he was not permitted to conueigh the ſayd goods, out of that porte, vnto any other place of the land of Pruſsia, either by water, or by lande, vnder the payne of the forfeiting of the ſame: but was enioyned to ſell them in the very ſame porte, vnto the Pruſſians onely and to none other, to the great preiudice of our Engliſh marchants.

1405. Item, that after the arriuall of the ſayd Engliſh ambaſſadours in the land of Pruſsia, it was ordayned, that from the eight day of the moneth of October, in the yeare of our lord 1405, all Engliſh marchants whatſoeuer ſhould haue free liberty to arriue with all kindes of their marchandiſe in whatſoeuer port of the land of Pruſsia, and to make ſale of them in the ſaid land, as hath heretofore from auncient times bene accuſtomed. Alſo ſundry other commodious priuiledges vnto the realme of England were then ordayned and eſtabliſhed: as in the indentures made for this purpoſe it doth more manifeſtly appeare.

Item, the ſaid Engliſh ambaſſadours being arriued in the land of Pruſsia, demanded of the ſaid Maſter generall, a reformation and amends, for the damages and iniuries offered by the Pruſsians vnto the liege people of our ſoueraigne lord and king, written in fifteene articles, which loſſes amounted vnto the ſumme of 4535. nobles.

Item, the ſaid Maſter generall, beſides the articles exhibited vnto our ſoueraigne lord the king (as it is aboue mentioned) deliuered vnto the ſayd ambaſſadours diuers other articles of certaine iniuries offered (as he ſayd) vniuſtly by Engliſh men, vnto his ſubiects, which amounted vnto the ſumme of 5100. nobles.

Item, it was afterward concluded, that vpon the firſt of May next then inſuing, namely in the yeere of our Lord 1406, or within the ſpace of one yeare immediatly following there ſhould bee made a conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable ſatiſfaction, for all moleſtations vniuſtly offered on both partes; as well on the behalfe of our ſoueraigne lord the king, as of the foreſayd Maſter general. Which ſatiſfaction not being performed, the Pruſſians with their goods & marchandiſes, within three moneths after the end of the ſayd yere next following, were without moleſtation or impediment, enioined to depart out of the realme of England with their ſhips and goods, and the Engliſh men likewiſe, out of the territories and dominions of the ſaid Maſter general, & both of them, without any further admonition, to abſtaine & ſeparate themſelues, from both the countreis aforeſayd. For the performance of which premiſſes, the ambaſſadors on both parts being ſufficiently inſtructed, were appointed to meete the firſt day of May, at the towne of Dordract in Holland. 1406.

Item, that the ſayd William Eſturmy and Iohn Kington in their returne homewards from Pruſſia towards England paſſed through the chiefe cities of the Hans, and treated in ſuch ſorte with the Burgomaſters of them, that there were ſent meſſengers and agents, in the behalfe of the common ſociety of the Hans marchants, vnto the towne of Dordract, to conferre with the ambaſſadors of England, about the redreſſing of iniuries attempted on both parts: where diuers agreements were ſet downe betweene the ſayd ambaſſadors, and meſſengers, as in the indentures made for the ſame purpoſe it doth more manifeſtly appeare.

Item, that the meeting appointed at the towne of Dordract, vpon the firſt of May, was by the letters of the foreſayd ambaſſadors, prolonged vnto the firſt of Auguſt then next enſuing, and afterward by vertue of the kings letters vnto the firſt day of March next following: and there was another day of prorogation alſo.

Item, that after the prorogations aforeſayd, the ambaſſadors of England, and the meſſengers & commiſſioners of Pruſſia met together at the towne of Hage in Holland, the 28. day of Auguſt, in the yere of our lord 1407. And there was a treaty betweene thē concerning the ſumme 25934. nobles and an halfe, demanded on the behalfe of the ſayd Maſter generall for amends and recompenſe in conſideration of wrongs offered vnto himſelfe and vnto his ſubiects of Pruſſia, as is aforeſayd. Alſo the ſayd Maſter and his Pruſſians, beſides the ſumme not yet declared in the articles, which is very ſmall, are to reſt contented and ſatiſfied with the ſumme of 8957. nobles, in lieu of al the damages aforeſaid: no times of paiment being then aſſigned or limited, but afterward to be reaſonably limited and aſſigned, by our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king. Inſomuch, that our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king is to write his full intention & determination concerning this matter, in his letters to be deliuered the 16. day of March, vnto the aldermen of the marchants of the Hans reſiding at Bruges. Otherwiſe, that from thenceforth all league of friendſhip ſhall bee diſſolued betweene the realme of England and the land of Pruſſia.

Alſo it is farther to be noted, that in the appointment of the ſumme next before written to be diſburſed out of England, this condition was added in writing, namely, that if by lawful teſtimonies it may ſufficiently and effectually be prooued, concerning the chiefe articles abouewritten, or any part of them, that ſatiſfaction was made vnto any of thoſe parties, to whom it was due: or that the goods, of and for the which complaint was made on the the behalfe of Pruſſia, in the ſayd articles, did or doe pertayne vnto others, or that any other iuſt, true, or reaſonable cauſe may lawfully be prooued & alledged, why the foreſaid ſums or any of them ought not to be payed: that thē in the ſummes contained in the articles abouementioned, ſo much only muſt be cut off, or ſtopped, as ſhalbe found, either to haue bene payd already, or to appertaine vnto others, or by any true, iuſt, and reaſonable cauſe alleaged, not to be due. Neither is it to be doubted, but for the greater part of the ſumme due vnto the Pruſſians, that not our lord the king, but others (which will in time be nominated) are, by all equity and iuſtice, to be compelled to make ſatiſfaction.

Alſo, at the day and place aboue mentioned it was appointed and agreed vpon, that our lord the king and his liege ſubiects, for the ſaid 4535. nobles demanded of the Engliſh in conſideration of recompenſe to be made for iniuries offered vnto the Pruſſians, are to diſcharge & pay the ſumme of 764. nobles, which are not as yet diſburſed: but they haue reſerued a petition to them, vnto whom the ſayd ſumme is due, or if they pleaſe, there ſhalbe made ſatiſfaction: which will be very hard and extreme dealing.

Item, that in the laſt aſſembly of the ſayd ambaſſadors of England and meſſengers of Pruſſia, holden at Hage, made as is aforeſayd, for the behalfe of England, there were exhibited anew certaine articles of iniuries againſt the Pruſſians. The value of which loſſes amounted vnto the ſumme of 1825. nobles and three ſhillings.

Item, on the contrary part for the behalfe of the Pruſſians the ſumme of 1355. nobles, eight ſhillings and ſixe pence.

Item, foraſmuch as diuers articles propounded, as well on the behalfe of England, as of Pruſſia, and of the cities of the Hans, both heretofore and alſo at the laſt conuention holden at Hage, were ſo obſcure, that in regard of their obſcuritie, there could no reſolute anſwere bee made vnto them: and other of the ſayd articles exhibited, for want of ſufficient proofes, could not cleerely be determined vpon: it was appointed and concluded, that all obſcure articles giuen vp by any of the foreſayd parties whatſoeuer, ought before the end of Eaſter then next enſuing, and within one whole yeare after, to be declared before the Chancelour of England, for the time being: and other articles euidently exhibited, but not ſufficiently proued, to be proued, vnder paine of perpetuall excluſion. Which being done accordingly, complete iuſtice ſhall be adminiſtred on both parts.

Item, as concerning the eleuenth article, for the behalfe of the Pruſſians, firſt exhibited, which conteined loſſes amounting vnto the ſumme of 2445. nobles: as touching the firſt article on the behalfe of England exhibited in the land of Pruſſia, conteining loſſes which amounted to the ſumme of 900. nobles: after many things alleadged on both parts, relation thereof ſhall be made in the audience of the king and of the Maſter generall: ſo that they ſhall ſet downe, ordaine, and determine ſuch an ende and concluſion of thoſe matters, as ſhall ſeeme moſt expedient vnto them.

Now concerning the Liuonians who are ſubiect vnto the great Maſter of Pruſsia.

INprimis, that the Maſter of Pruſsia demaunded of the ſayd Engliſh ambaſſadours, at their being in Pruſsia, on the behalfe of them of Liuonia, who are the ſayd Maſter his liege people, to haue reſtitution of their loſſes, vniuſtly (as he ſayth) offered vnto them by the Engliſh, namely, for the robbing and rifling of three ſhips. The value of which ſhips and of the goods contained in them, according to the computation of the Liuonian marchants, doeth amount vnto the ſumme of 8037. pound, 12. ſhillings 7. pence.

These ſhips were taken by the Engliſh yͤ 20. of July 1404.

Howbeit afterward the trueth being inquired by the ſayd ambaſſadors of England, the loſſe of the Liuonians exceedeth not the ſumme of 7498. pound, 13. ſhillings, 10. pence halfepeny farthing.

Item, foraſmuch as in the ſayd ſhips, on the behalfe of the ſayd Maſter, and of certaine cities of the Hans, there are alleadged about 250. men very barbarouſly to be drowned, of whome ſome were noble, and others honourable perſonages, and the reſt common marchants & mariners, there was demaunded, in the firſt dyet or conuention holden at Dordract, a recompenſe at the handes of the ſayd Engliſh ambaſſadors: albeit this complaint was exhibited in the very latter end of al the negotiations, in forme of a ſcedule, the tenor whereof is in writing at this preſent, & beginneth in maner following: Cum vita hominum &c. Howbeit in the laſt conuention holden at Hage, as is aforeſaid, it was concluded betweene the ambaſſadours of England, and the meſſengers and commiſſioners of the land of Pruſsia, and of the cities of the Hans; that our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king, ſhould, of his great pietie, vouchſafe effectually to deuiſe ſome conuenient and wholeſome remedie for the ſoules of ſuch perſons as were drowned.

Item, that our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king will ſignifie in writing his full purpoſe & intention as touching this matter, vnto the aldermen of the Hans marchants reſiding at Bruges, vpon the fifteenth day of March next following. Otherwiſe, that from henceforth all amitie and friendſhip, betweene the realme of England and the land of Pruſsia ſhall be diſſolued.

Neither is it to be doubted, but that a great part of the ſayd goods, for the which they of Liuonia doe demaund reſtitution, namely waxe and furres, redounded vnto the vſe and commoditie of our ſoueraigne lord the king. And alſo our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king gaue commandement by his letters, that ſome of the ſayd goods ſhould be deliuered vnto others. And a great part of them is as yet reſerued in the towne of Newcaſtle. One Benteld alſo hath the beſt of the ſayd three ſhips in poſſeſſion. Alſo it is reported and thought to be true, that certaine Furriers of London, which will be detected in the end, haue had a great part of the ſayd goods, namely of the Furres.

Now as concerning the cities of the Hans.

Hamburgh.

INprimis the Hamburgers exhibited nine articles, wherein they demaunded reſtitution for certaine damages offered, as they ſayd, by the Engliſh men, the value of which loſſes amounted vnto the ſumme of 9117. nobles, 20. pence. For the which, after due examination, there was promiſed reſtitution to the ſumme of 416. nobles, 5. ſhillings. Beſides the two articles propounded againſt thē of Scardeburg, the ſumme whereof was 231. pounds, 15. s. 8. d. cōcerning the which there was ſentence giuen in England by the commiſſioners of our lord the king, the execution whereof was promiſed vnto the ſaid Hamburgers by the ambaſſadors of England: leaue and licence being reſerued vnto the ſayd Hamburgers, of declaring or explaning certaine obſcure articles by them exhibited, which declaration was to be made at the feaſt of Eaſter then next to come, or within one yeare next enſuing the ſaid feaſt, vnto the chancelor of England for the time being, and of prouing the ſayd articles and others alſo, which haue not as yet ſufficiently bene proued. Which being done they are to haue full complement and execution of iuſtice.

Alſo by the Hamburgers there are demaunded 445. nobles from certaine of the inhabitants of Linne in England. Which ſumme, if it ſhalbe proued to be due vnto any Engliſh men, the Hamburgers are to reſt contented with thoſe goods, which they haue already in their poſſeſſions.

Item, they of Breme propounded fiue articles, wherein the ſumme conteined amounteth vnto 4414. nobles. And there was no ſatiſfaction promiſed vnto them. But the ſame libertie and licence was reſerued vnto them, in like maner as before vnto the Hamburgers. Brem.

Item, they of Straleſſund propounded 23. articles, whereof the ſumme amounted vnto 7415. nobles, 20. d. for the which there was promiſed ſatiſfaction of 253. nobles, 3. q. Alſo here is a caueat to be obſerued: that they of Straleſſund had of Engliſh mens goods a great ſumme particularly to be declared, which will peraduenture ſuffice for a recompenſe. And ſome of their articles are concerning iniuries offered before 20, 22, 23, 24. yeeres paſt. Alſo their articles are ſo obſcure that they will neuer, or very hardly be able to declare or proue them. Howbeit there is reſerued the very ſame liberty vnto them, that was before vnto the Hamburgers. Straleſſund.

Item, they of Lubec propounded 23. articles, the ſumme whereof extended vnto 8690. nobles and an halfe: whereupon it was agreed, that they ſhould haue paied vnto them 550. nobles. There was reſerued the ſame libertie vnto them, which was vnto the men of Straleſſund. Lubec.

Item, they of Gripeſwold exhibited 5. articles, the ſumme whereof amounted vnto 2092. nobles and an halfe. For the which there was promiſed ſatiſfaction of 153. nobles and an half. And the ſaid men of Gripeſwold haue of the goods of Engliſh men in poſſeſſion, to the value of 22015. nobles, 18. s. as it is reported by them of Linne. And the ſame libertie is reſerued vnto them that was vnto the Hamburgers. Gripeſwold.

Item, they of Campen propounded ten articles, the ſumme whereof extended vnto 1405. nobles. There is no ſatiſfaction promiſed vnto them: but the ſame liberty is reſerued vnto them, which was vnto the other abouementioned. Campen.

Item, the ambaſſadors of England demaunded of the citizens of Roſtok & Wiſmer, for damages & iniuries by them committed againſt the ſubiects of the foreſayd ſoueraigne king 32407. nobles, 2. s. 10. d. And albeit euery of the foreſayd cities ſent one of their burgomaſters vnto the towne of Hage in Holland, to treat with the Engliſh ambaſſadours, it was in the end found out, that they had not any authority of negotiating or concluding ought at al. And therfore they made their faithfull promiſes, that euery of the ſaid cities ſhould ſend vnto our ſoueraigne Lord the king one or two procurator or procurators ſufficiently inſtructed to treat & conclude with our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king about the damages and iniuries aforeſaid at the feaſt of the natiuitie of Saint Iohn the Baptiſt.

Compoſitions and ordinances concluded betvveen the meſſengers of Frater Conradus de Iungingen maſter generall of Pruſsia: and the chancelor and treaſurer of the realme of England 1403.

IN the yere of our Lord 1403, vpon the feaſt of S. Michael the Archangel, the right hono: Henrie biſhop of Lincoln, chancelor of England, and the lord de Roos high treaſurer of England, & the ambaſſadors of Pruſsia, Iohn Godek of Dantzik, & Henry Monek of Elbing, maſters of the ſame cities haue at Weſtminſter treated in maner of compoſition about the articles vnderwritten: betweene the moſt ſoueraigne lord the king of England, and the right reuerend & honorable Conradus de Iungingen Maſter general of Pruſsia, as concerning the iniuries offered vnto the people of Pruſsia and Liuonia vpon the ſea by the Engliſh.

Firſt, that all ſhips with their appurtenances, & the commodities of the mariners, according vnto the condition of the things, and all other goods taken away by the Engliſh, which are actually in being & whole, are incontinently & with al ſpeed to bee reſtored. And if there bee any defect in ought, the value of the ſaid defect is to be accounted, & with other loſſes of goods to be reſtored, at the terme of the reſtitution to be made and deliuered.

Item, that all ſhips, damages, and goods (as they are conteined in our bill of accuſation) which are not now immediately reſtored, are to be reſtored and payd in the land of Pruſsia, betweene this and the terme appointed, with full execution and complement of iuſtice.

Item, concerning the perſons throwen ouer boord or ſlaine in the ſea: it ſhall remaine to be determined at the will and pleaſure of the moſt mightie prince the king of England, and of the right reuerend the Maſter of Pruſſia.

Item, betweene this and the terme appointed for the reſtoring of the goods taken away, & vntill there be due payment & reſtitution of the ſaid goods performed, the marchants of England and of Pruſſia are in no wiſe to exerciſe any traffique of marchandiſe at all in the foreſaid lands.

1403. Memorandum, that the third day of the moneth of October, in the yere of our Lord 1403. and in the fift yere of the reigne of the moſt mighty prince and lord, king Henrie the fourth, by the grace of God king of England and France &c. betweene the reuerend father Henrie biſhop of Lincoln, chancelor, and the right honorable William lord de Roos, high treaſurer of England, both of them counſellers vnto the ſayd ſoueraigne king on the one party, and the right worſhipfull Iohn Godeke, and Henrie Moneke, ſent as meſſengers by the right reuerend and religious perſonage, Frater Conradus de Iungingen Maſter generall of the Dutch knights of the Order of S. Mary on the other party: it was, at the requeſt and inſtancie of the ſayd meſſengers, appoynted, and mutually agreed vpon, that all the liege people and ſubiects of the ſayd ſoueraigne lord and king ſhall haue free licence and liberty vntill the feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing, ſafely to trauel vnto the land of Pruſſia aforeſayd, there to remaine, and thence, with their ſhips, marchandiſes, & other their goods whatſoeuer, to returne vnto their owne home: which on the other ſide, all the ſubiects of the ſayd Maſter general may, within the terme prefixed, likewiſe doe, in the foreſaid realme of England. Prouided alwaies, that after the time aboue limited, neither the ſayd marchants of the realme of England may in the land of Pruſſia, nor the marchants of that land, in the realme of England, exerciſe any traffique at al: vnles it be otherwiſe ordained by ſome compoſition, betweene the foreſaid king of England, & the ſaid Maſter general in the meane time concluded. In witneſſe whereof, one part of this preſent Indenture is to remaine in the cuſtodie of the foreſaid meſſengers. Giuen in the Chapter-houſe of the Church of S. Paul at London, the day and yere aboue written.

The letters of the chancelor and treaſurer of England, vnto Frater Conradus de Iungingen, maſter generall of Pruſſia 1403.

Right reuerend and mighty lord, your honorable meſſengers Iohn Godeke, and Henry Moneke, the bearers hereof comming of late before the preſence of our moſt ſoueraigne lord the king of England and of France, and being welcomed by our ſaid lord with a chearefull and fauourable countenance, they preſented certaine letters on your behalfe vnto the kings Maieſtie, with that reuerence which beſeemed them: expounding vnto his highnes, ſundry piracies & moleſtations offered of late vpon the ſea, by his liege people & ſubiects vnto yours, contrary to the leagues of peace and amitie, which hitherto (by Gods grace) haue bene maintained and continued on both parts. In conſideration of which piracies and moleſtations, your meſſengers demanded full reſtitution and recompenſe to be made, either vnto the damnified parties, or vnto their procurators. We therefore at that time, eſpecially being in the preſence of our ſoueraigne (who with his puiſſant army tooke his progreſſe towards the remote part of Wales being ſubiect vnto his dominion, to ſee iuſtice executed vpon his people of thoſe parts, who very raſhly haue preſumed to rebell againſt him their ſoueraigne, contrary to their allegeance) right well perceiued that it was his highneſſe intention, that euery one ſhould haue due iuſtice faithfully adminiſtred vnto him, eſpecially your ſubiects, and that with all fauour, whom he hath alwayes in times paſt right graciouſly intreated, as if they had bene his owne liege ſubiects and natiue country men, whome alſo hee purpoſeth hereafter friendly to protect: inſomuch that betweene him and his ſubiects on the one party, and betweene you and yours on the other party, great abundance and perfection of mutuall amity may increaſe. And therefore we offered vnto your foreſayd meſſengers, after they had particularly declared vnto vs ſuch piracies and wrongs, to ſende the kings letters vnto them of whom complaint was made, firmely inioyning them, vnder grieuous penalties, that without delay they reſtore or cauſe to bee reſtored vnto the parties damnified, or vnto their procurators, all ſhips, marchandiſes, wares, and goods, by them taken or violently ſtolne from your ſubiects. And that your ſaid meſſengers may partly attaine their deſire, we haue commanded certaine ‡ ſhips, marchandiſes, wares, and goods, found in certaine hauens, to be deliuered vnto them. Howbeit, as touching other goods, which are perhaps periſhed or wanting by infortunate diſſipation or deſtruction, and for the which the ſaid meſſengers of yours demand ſatiſfaction to be made vnto them within a certain time by vs limited: may it pleaſe your honor to vnderſtand, that in the abſence of our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king, being as yet farre diſtant from vs, wee can in no wiſe limit or ſet downe any ſuch terme of time. Notwithſtanding, at the proſperous returne of our ſoueraigne, we are determined to commune with him about this matter. Of whoſe anſwere ſo ſoone as we be certified, we purpoſe to ſignifie his intention vnto you by our letters. Sithens alſo (right reuerend and mighty lord) your ſayd meſſengers are contented, for the preſent, to accept of our offer aforeſayde, as indeede by all reaſon they ought thereat to reſt content, eſpecially whereas by this meanes they ſhall the more ſpeedily attaine vnto the effect of their purpoſes (to the ſhorte and wiſhed execution and performance of which offer, we will, by Gods helpe, endeuour, to the vtmoſt of our ability) may it be your will and pleaſure, that as in the kingdome of England, your marchants and ſubiects are courteouſly intreated: euen ſo the marchants and liege people of our ſoueraigne lord the king and of his kingdomes peaceably frequenting your parts, either in regard of traffique or of any other iuſt occaſion, may there in like manner friendly bee vſed, and with your marchants and ſubiects ſuffered to communicate, and to haue intercourſe of traffique, inioying the commodities of the ancient league. By this alſo the feruent zeale and affection which you beare vnto the royall crowne of England ſhall vndoubtedly appeare: albeit betweene the famous houſes of England and of Pruſsia, the bandes of vnfained loue and friendſhip haue bin ſucceſsiuely confirmed and kept inuiolable in times paſt. And thus (right reuerend and mighty lord) wiſhing vnto you increaſe of honour and proſperity, wee take our leaues. Written at London the fift of October, in the yeare of our lord 1403.

Note well. 1403.

By the chancelor, the treaſurer, and other lords of the hono: counſell of the king of England and France, being perſonally preſent at London.

The letters of king Henry the 4. vnto Conradus de Iungingen the maſter general of Pruſsia, for mutual conuerſation and intercourſe of traffique to continue between the marchants of England and of Pruſsia, for a certaine terme of time.

Henry by the grace of God, king of England & France, and lord of Ireland, to the noble and mighty perſonage of ſacred religion, Frater Conradus de Iungingen Maſter generall of the Order of the Dutch knights of S. Marie &c. our moſt deare and welbeloued friend, greeting, and continuall increaſe of our auncient and ſincere amity. By the grieuous complaynts of our liege ſubiects concerning traffique, as it were circular wiſe too & fro both our dominions, we haue often bene aduertiſed that in regard of diuers iniuries and damages, which as well our as your marchants (who by their dealings in marchandiſe were woont peaceably to vſe mutual conuerſation together, whereupon very many commodities are knowen to haue proceeded) haue, by occaſion of pirates, rouing vp and downe the ſea, ſometimes heretofore ſuſtayned: both the ſayd marchants of our & of your dominions do abſtaine themſelues frõ their wonted mutual cõuerſation & traffique, as they haue likewiſe carefully abſtained at ſometimes heretofore, and eſpecially from that time, wherein at the inſtant requeſt of your meſſengers, being of late before our preſence, the free acceſſe of our marchants vnto your territories and dominions, & of your marchants vnto our realmes hath bene forbidden. Sithens therefore (our moſt deare friend) ſuch iniuries (if any) as haue bene attempted againſt your ſubiects, were neuer committed by our will and conſent, as we thinke that your ſelfe on the other ſide haue done the like: ſithens alſo, ſo much as in vs lieth, wee are ready to exhibit full iuſtice with fauour vnto any of your people being deſirous to make complaint, ſo that accordingly iuſtice may equally be done vnto our marchants by you & your ſubiects, which marchants haue in like ſort bene iniuried, wiſhing with all our heart, that the ancient friendſhip & loue, which hath continued a long time betweene our realme and your territories and dominions, may perſeuere in time to come, and that ſweet and acceptable peace, which is to be embraced of al Chriſtians, may according to the good pleaſure of the author of peace, be nouriſhed & mayntained: we do moſt heartily require the ſayd friendſhip, exhorting you in the Lord that you would on your behalf conſent & ordain (euen as, if you ſhall ſo do, we for our part wil conſent likewiſe) that from this preſent vntil the feaſt of Eaſter next inſuing (al moleſtatiõs & iniuries which may be offered ceaſing on both parts) our ſubiects by your territories & dominions, & your ſubiects by our realms, may peaceably & ſecurely trauel, & that according to their wonted maner, they may friendly cõuerſe & exerciſe mutual traffick together: becauſe we are determined to ſend vnto you & your counſel in the mean time ſome of our ambaſſadors, friendly to intreat about the foreſaid pretẽded iniuries, ſo far forth as they ſhal cõcerne our ſubiects. At whoſe arriual we ſtand in good hope that by the due adminiſtration of iuſtice on both parts, ſuch order (by Gods aſſiſtance) ſhalbe taken, that mutual peace and tranquillity may be eſtabliſhed between vs in times to come. Alſo our deſire is in particular, that our marchants & liege ſubiects may haue more free paſſage granted them vnto the parts of Sconia, for the prouiding of herrings and of other fiſhes there, that they may there remayne, and from thence alſo may more ſecurely returne vnto their owne home: and we beſeech you in conſideration of our owne ſelues, that you would haue our marchants and liege ſubiects eſpecially recommended vnto you, ſafely protecting them (if need ſhall require) vnder the ſhadow of your defence: euen as you would haue vs to deale in the like caſe with your own ſubiects. Moreouer, whatſoeuer you ſhall thinke good to put in practiſe in this behalfe, may it pleaſe you of your friendſhip, by our faythfull ſubiect Iohn Browne the bearer hereof to giue vs to vnderſtand. In the ſonne of the glorious virgine fare ye well, with continuall proſperity and felicity according to your owne hearts deſire. Giuen vnder our priuie ſeale, at our palace of Weſtminſter, the fift day of Iune, and in the fift yere of our reigne.

Poſtſcriptum.

Right reuerend and our moſt deare friend: albeit our welbeloued Arnold de Daſſele the procurator of your foreſaid meſſengers, being deſirous at this time to make his final returne vnto your parts, by reaſon of the affayres, for which he hath remained in our realme of England, cannot as yet obtaine his wiſhed expedition: notwithſtanding you of your ſincere affection ought not to maruel or any whit to be grieued thereat: becauſe troubles of wars ariſing, which in ſome ſort concerned our ſelues, and eſpecially in regard of the continuall aſſaults of the French men & Britons againſt vs and our kingdome, for the offence of whom, and our owne defence, our liege ſubiects (eſpecially they, of whom your ſubiects damnified haue made their complaints) haue armed themſelues to combate vpon the ſea: we could not grant vnto the foreſayd Arnold ſuch and ſo ſpeedy an expedition, as he earneſtly deſired to haue. Vnto the which Arnold your procurator we haue offered in as ſhort time as may be, to adminiſter complete iuſtice with fauour, to yͤ end that for this cauſe he might diſpoſe himſelfe to remaine in our realme of England: & yet notwithſtanding wee would do the very ſame euen in the abſence of the ſayd procurator. Giuen as aboue.

To the moſt renowmed prince and mighty Lord, Henrie king of England &c. our gracious Lord.

Our humble recommendations, with our moſt inſtant and continuall prayers for you being graciouſly by your Maieſtie taken in good part &c. Moſt ſoueraigne king, mighty prince, gracious lord, and vnto vs moſt vnfaynedly beloued, we receiued of late your gracious letters by your Maieſties liege ſubiect Iohn Brown, the contents whereof ſeemed to be theſe following: firſt that of long time heretofore, there haue bene between the marchants of your realm & of our lands, not only quiet & peaceable acceſſe one vnto another, but alſo mutual participation, & common traffique of their wares, being right cōmodious & auaileable for them both: howbeit, that now the foreſaid profitable conuerſation, by reaſon of certain notorious robberies, committed vpon the ſea by pyrates againſt both parts, & the wonted acceſſe alſo of your ſubiects vnto our dominions, were altogether forbidden. Moreouer, you call to remembrance the ancient amity & friendſhip betweene both our lands, with the inualuable commodity of ſweet amiable peace, which are by al faithful Chriſtians, to the vtmoſt of their endeuour to be imbraced. Wherupon you of your exceeding clemency, do offer your Maieſties ful conſent, that the foreſaid prohibition being releaſed vntil the feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing, the ſaid marchants of your dominions may in our territories, and our marchants likewiſe may in your realms (al moleſtations ceaſing) exerciſe their woonted traffique: eſpecially ſithens in the mean ſeaſon your royall wiſdome hath determined to direct vnto vs your hono: ambaſſadors in friendly ſort to treat and parle with vs as touching the pretended iniuries, ſo far forth as they may concerne your ſubiects. Adding moreouer in particular that when your people ſhall repayre vnto the parts of Sconia to fiſh for herrings, hauing conſideration & regard vnto your maieſtie, we would haue them eſpecially recommended vnto our protection &c. Moſt ſoueraigne lord & king, & gracious prince, wee doe with vnfained and hearty affection embrace the oracles of your maieſties moſt courteous & acceptable offer: wherein you haue vſed moſt diligent & effectuall perſwaſions, that cōplement of iuſtice ſhould be done vnto the parties iniuried, & that peace & friendſhip ſhould take place, making no doubt of your own royall perſon, nor of our ſelues or of any appertayning vnto vs, but that our inclinations and deſires in this regarde are all one and the ſame: neither would we lightly tranſgreſſe the limits of your perſwaſions without ſome iuſt, weighty, & reaſonable cauſe, foraſmuch as the matters perſwaded are in very deede moſt happy preſeruatiues of a common weale, yea & of nature it ſelfe. Moreouer whereas your highnes hath farther requeſted vs, that the prohibition of your ſubiects acceſſe vnto our dominions might, vntill the feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing, be releaſed: we anſwere (vnder correction of your maieſties more deliberate counſell) that it is farre more expedient for both parts to haue the ſayd prohibition continued then releaſed, vntil ſuch time as ſatiſfaction be performed on both ſides vnto the parties endamaged, not in words only, but actually & really in deeds, or by ſome courſe of law or friendly compoſition. For there is no equall nor indifferent kinde of conſort or trade betweene the impoueriſhed party and him that is inriched, betweene the partie which hath obtayned iuſtice and him that hath obtayned none between the offender and the party offended: becauſe they are not mooued with like affections. For the remembrance of iniuries eaſily ſtirreth vp inconſiderate motions of anger. Alſo, ſuch a kind of temperature or permixtion, as it were, by way of contrariety breedeth more bitternes then ſweetnes, more hate then loue: whereupon more grieuous complaints aſwel vnto your highnes as vnto our ſelues, might be occaſioned. The lord knoweth, that euen now we are too much wearied and diſquieted with the importunate and inſtant complaints of our ſubiects, inſomuch that wee cannot at this preſent by any conuenient meanes releaſe or diſſolue the ſayd prohibition, before wee be ſufficiently informed by your maieſties ambaſſadors, of the ſatiſfaction of our endamaged ſubiects. Furthermore, whereas your maieſties requeſt, concerning your ſubiects that ſhal come vnto the parts of Sconia, is that we would defend them vnder our protection: be it knowen vnto your highnes, that for diuers conſiderations vs reaſonably mouing, being prouoked by the queene of Denmarke and her people, being alſo vrged thereunto full ſore againſt our wils, for the repelling and auoiding of iniuries, we haue ſent forth our armie againſt them. Howbeit for a certaine time a truce is concluded on both parts, ſo that our people are actually returned home. Farre be it from vs alſo, that our ſubiects being occupied in warres, ſhould in any ſort willingly moleſt or reproch any ſtrangers, of what landes or nations ſoeuer, not being our profeſſed enemies. For this ſhould be to oppreſſe the innocent in ſtead of the guilty, to condemne the iuſt for the vniuſt: then which nothing can be more cruel, nor a reuenge of greater impietie. In very deede (moſt gracious prince and lorde) we are moued with right hearty ſympathy and compaſſion for any inconuenience which might happen in your regiment: wiſhing from the bottome of our hearts, that all affayres may right proſperouſly and happily ſucceede, about the royall perſon and regiment of your moſt excellent Maieſtie; and that continually. The like whereof wee hope from you: moſt humbly commending our ſelues, and our whole Order vnto your highnes. Giuen at our caſtle of Marienburgh, the 16 day the moneth of Iuly, in the yere of our Lord 1404.

Margaret queene of Denmarke.

An agreement made betweene king Henry the fourth and Conradus de Iungingen Maſter generall of the land of Pruſsia.

THis Indenture made between Sir William Eſturmy knight, Iohn Kington clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London the ambaſſadors, commiſſioners, & meſſengers of the moſt mighty prince and lord, our ſoueraigne lord Henrie by the grace of God king of England and France, and lorde of Ireland, for the repayring, reformation, and amends of whatſoeuer damages, grieuances, exceſſes, violences, and iniuries in any ſort vniuſtly attempted, done, or offered, by our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king and his liege people and ſubiects, vnto the great and mighty lord Conradus de Iungingen Maſter general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hoſpitall of Ieruſalem, or his ſubiects: and for the requiring, demanding, and receiuing of ſuch like reparations, reformations & amends, by the foreſayd lord the Maſter generall, for the behalfe of himſelfe or any of his ſubiects whatſoeuer, from & in the name of our ſoueraign lord the king & his ſubiects, vnto the ſayd Maſter general, into his land of Pruſsia, by our ſoueraigne lord the king, & appointed as ambaſſadors on the one party: And betweene the hono: Lords and religious perſonages Conradus de Lichtenſtein great commander, Warnherus de Tettingen chiefe hoſpitalary & commāder in Elbing, & Arnold de Hacken treaſurer, the procurators & commiſſioners of the great & mighty lord the Maſter general, being in like & equal ſort and in all reſpects, as the ambaſſadours of England are, authorized on the contrary ſide by the authoritie and power of the ſayd Maſter general on the other part, witneſſeth: That diuers treaties & conferences being holden between the ſaid ambaſſadors, meſſengers, & procurators or cōmiſſioners of & concerning the reparations, reformations & amends of certaine damages, grieuances, exceſſes, violences & iniuries offered and attempted, aſwel by the Pruſſians againſt the Engliſh as by the Engliſh againſt the Pruſſians, and of other actes vniuſtly committed on both parts: in concluſion, after the ſayd treatiſe, the foreſayd ambaſſadours, procurators and commiſſioners by vertue of the authority committed vnto them appoynted, and with one conſent agreed vnto the articles vnder written.

Inprimis, that for the conſideration of mutuall loue and wonted friendſhip, and of peace and tranquillity hereafter to be continued and maintained, and alſo that the articles vnderwritten may more proſperouſly be brought vnto a wiſhed effect, betweene our ſaid ſoueraign lord the king & his liege people & ſubiects, & the ſubiects, people, & inhabitants of the territories and dominions of the foreſayd lord the Maſter generall, it is agreed and concluded, that all liege marchants of England whatſoeuer, ſhall haue free licence and libertie to arriue with their ſhippes, goods and marchandiſes whatſoeuer, at any Porte of the land of Pruſsia, and alſo the ſayd goods and marchandiſes farther vnto any place of the ſayd land of Pruſsia to tranſport, and there with any perſon or perſons freely to contract and bargaine, euen as heretofore, and from auncient times it hath bene accuſtomed. Which liberty in all reſpects is granted vnto the Pruſſians in England.

Item it is farther agreed betweene the ſayd ambaſſadours, procurators, and commiſſioners, that whereas of late, namely in the yeare of our lord 1403, the ſayd Maſter general by his diſcreet ſubiects Iohn Godek of Dantzik, and Henry Monek of Elbing, his ambaſſadors & meſſengers, for this purpoſe hath cauſed certain articles, (namely 20. in number) containing in them matters of damages, moleſtations, violences, and iniuries committed and offered againſt the ſaid Maſter generall & his ſubiects, by our ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king his ſubiects & liege people, to be exhibited, giuen vp and deliuered vnto our lord the king aforeſaid in his kingdome of England: it is concluded and agreed about the ſayd 20. articles, by the aforeſaid ambaſſadors, commiſſioners, and procurators, as in the acts & pleas had and made before the ſayd ambaſſadors, commiſſioners and procurators, and in the records made and written of and about the examination of ſuch articles, it is more at large contayned (vnto the which the ſayd ambaſſadors, commiſſioners, and meſſengers doe here in this place referre themſelues) of the which articles alſo ſome are receiued by the commiſſioners aforeſayd, and others are prorogued vnto a certaine time vnder written, euen as in the foreſayd regiſters it is more fully contayned and put downe in writing.

As touching certaine other articles alſo exhibited a newe vnto the ſayd Engliſh ambaſſadors, in the land of Pruſsia being 16 in number (whereof one is admitted, & the reſt are prorogued vntil a terme vnderwritten) the ſame courſe is to be taken and obſerued, which was before appoynted and agreed vpon, about the articles deliuered and exhibited vnto our foreſayd ſouraigne lorde the king, as is aforeſayd.

Moreouer, as touching the articles exhibited by the Engliſh ambaſſadours in the name and behalfe of their ſayd ſoueraigne lord the king of England, vnto the procuratours and commiſſioners of the foreſayd lord the Maſter generall (of the which ſome are declared already, and the declaration of the reſt is prorogued vntill a certayne terme vndernamed, euen as in the regiſters made of and vpon the examination of the ſayd articles, it is more manifeſtly prouided) the ſame courſe is to be taken, which muſt be obſerued about the articles of the ſayd lord the Maſter generall, exhibited, as well vnto the foreſayd ſoueraigne prince in England, as vnto his ambaſſadors in the land of Pruſsia, euen as about the ſayd articles it is before concluded.

The cōplaints of the Liuonians

And whereas on the behalfe of the citizens and marchants of the cities of Rij and Dorp, and of other townes in the land of Liuonia, many and great complaints haue bene by way of articles exhibited and deliuered vnto the ſayd Engliſh ambaſſadours in the land of Pruſsia, which for diuers cauſes, could not as then be ended: therefore it is concluded and agreed vpon betweene the ambaſſadours, and the commiſſioners aforeſayd, that the ſaide citizens and marchants may in the towne of Dordract in Holland, vpon the firſt day of the moneth of May next enſuing (at the which time and place, the continuation and prorogation of all other articles not fully declared in the partes of Pruſsia, ſhall be put in vre) by themſelues or their lawfull procurators, make their appearance, for the obtayning of a conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reformation of all iniuries attempted againſt them, then, or at ſome other times within one whole yere next following, and not afterward, being effectually ſet downe and limited, at the place aforeſaid, by the conſent of the ambaſſadours and commiſſioners of either parte, all lawfull impediments ceaſing.

Prouided alwayes, that the value and price of all wares, goods, and marchandiſes, whereof the ſaid citizens and marchants of Liuonia, in their articles receiued by the ſayde Engliſh ambaſſadours, as is aforeſayd, doe make mention, ſhall be iuſtly eſteemed, prized, and approoued, not by any of England, or of Pruſsia, or of Liuonia, but by ſome other indifferent marchants of good credite, valuing them at the true rate of marchants, which ſuch like marchandiſe would haue amounted vnto, if, at the time when they were taken, they had bene to be ſolde at the towne of Bruges in Flanders.

Foraſmuch alſo, as diuers and ſundry Pruſſians (who exhibited manifolde Articles of complaints, being receiued by the ſaid Engliſh Ambaſſadours, at their abode in Pruſsia) made not their perſonall appearance, before the ſaide Engliſh Ambaſſadours, in the lande of Pruſsia aforeſaide: The prorogation aboue-mentioned was made vnto the firſt day of the moneth of May: and alſo it was agreed vpon by the ſaide Ambaſſadours, Procurators, and Commiſſioners, that the ſaide parties which had not appeared before ſhall haue libertie graunted them, lawfully to make their appearance, vpon the firſt of May aforeſaide, at the towne of Dordract, either by themſelues or by their Procurators, and alſo to bring with them the letters teſtimonial, and patents, ſealed with the ſeale of the ſaide Lord the Maſter generall, (he hauing firſt of all receiued ſound and ſufficient information from the cities whereof the parties plaintife are citizens, of the damages and grieuances any way vniuſtly inflicted vpon them or any of them by the Engliſh) to the end that they may there by articles conueniently declare and proue, before the Ambaſſadours, Procurators, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners of both partes, the rate and value of their ſaide goods: and that in ſo doing they may obtaine conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reſtitution, for all acts vniuſtly attempted againſt them, then, or at ſome other times effectually to bee ſet downe and limited at the foreſaid place by the conſent of the Ambaſſadors and Commiſſioners of both parts, euen as it was aboue promiſed vnto the marchants of Liuonia.

But if they of Pruſsia laſt aboue-mentioned, ſhall not vpon the firſt of May, and at the place appointed, for ſome cauſe, make their appearance, that then it ſhalbe lawfull for them, at any time within one whole yeere next following, to repaire vnto the lord Chancelor of England, at the citie of London, and to inſinuate and declare vnto him their complaints before exhibited vnto the ſaide Engliſh Ambaſſadours in the land of Pruſsia, or which complaints ſhould haue bene deliuered at the foreſaid terme and place, or els, the which were not then and there fully finiſhed and diſpatched: and alſo by articles as is aforeſaide, to declare and proue the true worth and eſtimation of all damages and grieuances any wayes vniuſtly offered by the Engliſh vnto them or any of them: to the ende that they may (as it is aboue mentioned) effectually receiue, and alſo ſpeedily and eaſily obtaine conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reformation and ſatiſfaction, for al acts vniuſtly attempted againſt them, which are contained in the complaints not as yet fully declared and finiſhed.

Moreouer, it is appointed and agreed vpon betweene the foreſaide Ambaſſadours and Commiſſioners: that the forenamed ſoueraign Lord & the ſaid lord the Maſter general are to ſend and ſet forward their Ambaſſadours, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners, vpon the firſt of May vnto the place appointed, to treate, parle, agree, and conclude about thoſe affaires, which ſhal then and there happen to be treated of and handled among them.

Furthermore, betweene the often mentioned Ambaſſadours, Procurators, and Commiſſioners, it is enacted and concluded: that vnto all and ſingular lawfull ſtatutes, ordinations, and prohibitions framed, made, and ordained, by the ſaide lorde the Maſter generall, in his land of Pruſsia, or by his Proconſuls and Conſuls, and his gouernours of cities, townes, villages, and of other places in the land of Pruſsia, vnto the obſeruation whereof, aſwell the ſubiectes of the ſaid Maſter general, as forners and ſtrangers, are tyed and bound: vnto the very ſame ſtatutes, ordinations, and prohibitions, al Engliſh marchants whatſoeuer reſorting vnto the land of Pruſsia, muſt be firmely bounden and ſubiect. Note well.

Alſo it is ordained, that whatſoeuer ſale-clothes are already tranſported, or at any time hereafter to bee tranſported out of England into Pruſsia by the Engliſh marchants, and ſhall there be offered to bee ſolde, whether they be whole cloathes or halfe cloathes, they muſt containe both their endes.

Laſtly, that the matters aboue-mentioned fall not ſhort and voyde of their wiſhed effect; the treaty and conference about all and ſingular damages and grieuances (whereof there is not as yet done, but there muſt be, by the vertue of theſe preſents, performed, a reformation and amendment) muſt be continued and proroged vntill the firſt of May next enſuing: as by theſe preſents they are continued and proroged with the continuation of the dayes then immediately following, at the towne of Dordract aforeſaide: at the which time and place, or at other times and places, in the meane ſpace, as occaſion ſhall ſerue, by both parties to be limited and aſſigned, or elſe within one yeere after the ſaid firſt day of the moneth of May next enſuing bee expired: the hurt and damaged parties generally before-mentioned, ſhall haue performed vnto them a conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reformation on both partes. Prouided alwayes, if within the terme of the ſaide yeere, ſome conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reformation bee not performed vnto the parties iniuried, and endamaged, which are generally aboue mentioned: that then, within three whole moneths after the foreſaid yere ſhall expired, the Pruſſians ſhall depart out of the realmes and dominions of the ſaide Soueraigne Lorde the king of England, together with their marchandize, and with other goods which they ſhal haue gotten or bought, within the ſpace of the foreſaide three moneths: and that the Engliſh men alſo are likewiſe in all reſpects bounden to auoid and (no lawfull impediment hindering them) to withdrawe themſelues and to depart out of the territories and dominions of the ſaide Maſter generall, without all moleſtation, perturbation, and impediment whatſoeuer, none other intimation or admonition being neceſſarie in this regard.

Howbeit leaſt that by the robberies and piracies of ſome inſolent and peruerſe people, matter ſhould be miniſtred vnto the ſaid lord the Maſter generall, of ſwaruing from the faithfull obſeruation of the foreſaide agreements, or (which God forbid) any occaſion bee giuen him of not obſeruing them: it is alſo decreed by the often aboue mentioned Ambaſſadours and meſſengers, that if the goods and marchandize of any of the ſaide lorde Maſter generall his ſubiectes whatſoeuer ſhall be from henceforth vniuſtly taken vpon the Sea, by any Engliſh Pirates, and ſhalbe caried into the realme of England, and there receiued, that the Gouernours and keepers of portes, and of other places (with whatſoeuer names they be called) at the which portes and places ſuch marchandiſes and goods ſhall chaunce to arriue, being onely informed of the ſaide goods and marchandiſes, by ſole report, or (other prooſes wanting) by probable ſuſpition are bound to arreſt and to keep them in ſafe cuſtodie, fauourably to be reſtored vnto the owners thereof, whenſoeuer they ſhall be lawfully demaunded: which if they ſhall omit or deny to performe, from thenceforth the ſaide gouernours and keepers are bound to make vnto the parties endamaged, a recompenſe of their loſſes.

And for fault of iuſtice to be executed, by the ſaid gouernours and keepers, our ſoueraign lord the king aboue named, after he ſhall conueniently be requeſted by the parties damnified, is bound within three moneths next enſuing (all lawfull impediments being excepted) to make correſpondent, iuſt, and reaſonable ſatiſfaction, vnto the ſaide parties endamaged. Otherwiſe, that it ſhal be right lawfull for the ſaide lorde the Maſter generall, to arreſt, and after the arreſt to keepe in ſafe cuſtodie the goods of the Engliſh marchants being in the land of Pruſsia, to the condigne ſatiſfaction of ſuch iniuries, as haue bene offered vnto his ſubiects, vntill his ſaid ſubiects be iuſtly and reaſonably contented.

Likewiſe alſo in all reſpects, the ſame iuſtice is to be done vnto the Engliſh by the ſaid Lord the Maſter generall and his ſubiects in Pruſſia, euen as it hath bene enacted and decreed in the aboue written clauſe, beginning, Cæterum ne per &c. In Engliſh, Howbeit leaſt that &c. for the ſaid Maſter general, and his ſubiects by the foreſaide ambaſſadors of England, and the commiſſioners of the ſaid lord the Maſter generall, that in like caſes iuſtice ought to be adminiſtred on the behalfe of himſelfe, and of his ſubiects in the realme of England.

And that all and ſingular the couenants aboue written, may in time to come, by the parties whom they concerne, firmly and inuiolably be obſerued; the forenamed ambaſſadors, meſſengers, and commiſſioners, all and euery of them, for the full credite, probation, and teſtimonie of all the premiſſes, haue vnto theſe preſent Indentures, made for the ſame purpoſe, cauſed euerie one of their ſeales with their owne hands to be put. One part of the which indentures remaineth in the cuſtodie of the Engliſh ambaſſadors, and the other part in the hands of the commiſſioners of Pruſſia. Giuen at the caſtle of Marienburgh in Pruſſia, in the yeere of our Lorde 1405. vpon the 8. day of the moneth of October.

An agreement made betweene King Henrie the fourth and the common ſocietie of the Marchants of the Hans.

This Indenture made betweene the honourable Sir William Eſturmy knight, and Iohn Kington clearke, procurators, meſſengers, and commiſſioners ſufficiently deputed and authorized by the moſt mighty Prince, Lord Henry, by the grace of God king of England, & France, and lord of Ireland, for the performation of yͤ things vnder written, on the one part: & the hon. perſonages M. Henry Vredeland, M. Riman Salum chief notaries, Thederic Kneſuolc ſecretary, M. Simõ Clouesten chief notary, and Iohn Zotebotter citizen, being ſufficiently made and ordained procurators and meſſengers, on the behalfe of the cities of Lubec, Bremen, Hamburg, Sund, and Gripeſwold, for the demanding & obtaining ſeuerally, of due reformation, and recompenſe at the hands of our ſaide ſoueraigne lord the king, and of his meſſengers and commiſſioners aforeſayde, for all iniuries, damages, grieuances, and manſlaughters, any wayes vniuſtly done, and offred ſeuerally by the liege people and ſubiects of our ſoueraigne lord the king, vnto the common ſocietie of the marchants of the Hans, and vnto any of the Citizens, people and inhabitants of the cities aforeſaide whatſoeuer on the other part, Witneſſeth: That betweene all and euery of the ſaide Procurators, meſſengers, and Commiſſioners, by vertue of the authoritie committed vnto them, it hath bene and is appointed, concluded, and decreed: that the liege marchants and ſubiects of our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king, and the marchants of the common ſocietie of the Dutch Hans aforeſaide, from henceforth for one whole yeere and ſeuen moneths immediately next enſuing and following, ſhalbe permitted and licenced friendly, freely, and ſecurely, to exerciſe mutual traffike, and like marchants to buy & ſell together, one of, and vnto another, euen as in times paſt, namely, in the yeere 1400. and before that time alſo, they haue bin accuſtomed to exerciſe mutuall traffike and marchandiſe, and to buy and ſell. 1408.

Alſo the ſaide William and Iohn agreed and conſented, that they themſelues, or ſome other perhaps to be appointed in this behalfe by their ſaide lord the king in their ſtead, ſhall vpon the firſt day of the moneth of May next to come, with the continuation of the dayes following, at the towne of Dordract in Holland, or vpon any other terme or termes, then perhaps to bee limited, competently ſatiſfie, and performe conuenient recompence vnto the ſaide common ſocietie, citizens, people, and inhabitants of the cities aforeſaide, and alſo of other cities, townes, and villages of the Hans, of and for all iniuries, damages, grieuances, and drownings, or manſlaughters done and committed, as they alleage, againſt them, deliuered and exhibited in written articles, vnto the aboue named William and Iohn, or els heereafter to bee deliuered and exhibited, either by the ſame procurators or by ſome others, which ſhall perhaps be authorized in their ſtead, or by the meſſengers procurators and commiſſioners of other cities, townes, and places of the Hans, in equall and like maner and forme, euen as at the ſaide terme limited, or then perhaps to be prorogued, there is appointed by the ſaid William and Iohn, reparation, reformation, and recompence vnto the inhabitants of Pruſſia, and Liuonia, for the iniuries, damages, and grieuances vniuſtly done and committed againſt them by the liege people and ſubiects of the ſaide ſoueraigne lord the king, in the preſence of the mightie lord the Maſter general of Pruſſia, in his land of Pruſſia, as in certain letters indented, bearing date in the caſtle of Marienburgh in Pruſſia the eight day of the moneth of October, in the yeere of our lord 1405. and being made and written about the reparation, reformation, and recompence of ſuch like iniuries &c. (the tenour whereof ought here to be vnderſtood as if it were inſerted) it is more manifeſtly contained.

It was furthermore promiſed by the ſaid William and Iohn, that they ſhould not inforce nor compell the citizens, people, or inhabitants of the common ſociety of the Hans, or of the aboue named cities, or of any other cities of the Hans aforeſaid (hauing receiued ſufficient information of their dwelling and place of abode) to more difficult or diſtrict proofes of their Articles of complaints alreadie exhibited, and in the foreſaide termes to come, to bee exhibited, then vnto the inhabitants of the lands of Pruſſia and Liuonia, according to the forme of the Indentures aboue mentioned.

Moreouer the ſaide William and Iohn doe promiſe, that ſo ſoone as they ſhall come into the kingdome of England, and before the preſence of their king, they ſhall prouide, that all and ſingular the priuiledges graunted vnto the marchants of the ſaide Hans by the renowmed kings of England, and confirmed by the ſaid Soueraigne lord the king that now is, muſt, according to al their contents, be inuiolably obſerued by the ſaid ſoueraigne king and his ſubiects: and alſo, that from henceforth nothing is vniuſtly to be attempted, vpon any occaſion, pretenſe, or colour, by the ſaide Soueraigne Prince, and the inhabitants of the realme of England, to the preiudice of the ſayde priuiledges. They ſhall prouide alſo, that all things heretofore attempted and practiſed againſt the ſaide priuiledges, ſhall, by reaſonable amendement and iuſt reformation, vtterly be aboliſhed.

But if after the date of theſe preſents (which God forfend) within the ſpace of the ſaid one yere and ſeuen moneths preſcribed any damages, iniuries or grieuances, in ſhips, goods, or perſons, ſhould, either by the Engliſh and the inhabitants of England be vniuſtly inflicted vpon the cities, and marchants of the cities, townes, and places of the Hans aforeſaid, or by any marchants or others of the cities or townes of the ſaide Hans, either vnto the Engliſh, or vnto any of the inhabitants of that Realme, vpon any fained pretenſe whatſoeuer, all and ſingular the foreſaid meſſengers, commiſſioners, ambaſſadours, and procurators haue promiſed, that all ſuch damages, iniuries and moleſtations ſo inflicted by them who ſhall offer and commit them, muſt bee reformed and amended, after the very ſame forme and manner, that in the like caſe reformation, reparation and amends of iniuries, damages, and moleſtations committed by the Engliſh againſt them of Pruſſia is to be performed, according vnto a certaine clauſe contained in the letters aboue mentioned, which beginneth: Cęterum ne per &c. In Engliſh: Howbeit leaſt that &c. continuing vnto that clauſe: Et vt præſcripta omnia &c. In Engliſh: And that all the couenants aboue written &c.

It was alſo concluded betweene the foreſaide meſſengers, commiſſioners, and procurators, and with one generall conſent agreed vpon, that if from the firſt day of the moneth of May next to come, within one whole yeere following, ſome conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable reformation be not performed vnto the parties iniuried and damnified generally aboue mentioned, in regard of their damages, moleſtations, and iniuries: then, within three moneths after the ſaide yeere bee expired, the marchants of the Hans cities aforeſaid are bound, without any moleſtation, perturbation, and impediment whatſoeuer (none other intimation or admonition being neceſſarie in this behalfe) to auoyde (and if no lawfull impediment ſhall hinder them) to abſtaine and depart from the Realmes and dominions of the ſaid Soueraigne king of England, with their marchandize and other goods bought or gotten within the ſpace of the ſaide three moneths: and alſo the Engliſh likewiſe in all reſpects ſhall auoide, abſtaine, and depart from the territories and dominions of the Hans cities aforeſaide.

Alſo it was promiſed by the ſaide William and Iohn, that at the terme appointed, namely vpon the firſt of May next following, or at ſome other terme or termes then limited or to bee limited, there muſt be made a due recompenſe, and a proportionall ſatiſfaction, for all thoſe perſons of the land of Pruſsia, Liuonia, and of the cities, townes, and other places of the Hans, who haue vniuſtly bene drowned, and ſlaine by the Engliſh: and that according to the tenour of a certaine ſchedule written concerning a recompenſe to be had in regarde of the ſaide perſons drowned and ſlaine, and preſented vnto them by Albertus Rode conſul of the citie of Thoren, and by the forenamed procurators and meſſengers of the cities aforeſaid, they muſt faithfully and effectually, to the vtmoſt of their abilitie indeuour, for the obtaining of the ſaide recompenſe and amends. In witneſſe whereof (theſe letters of Indenture remaining in the poſſeſſion of the ſaide William and Iohn the meſſengers, procurators, & commiſſioners of England aforeſaid, and left in their cuſtodie, by the aboue named procurators and meſſengers Henrie Rimarus, Thedericus, Simon, and Iohn Sotebotter, of their certaine knowledge and aſſurance) and for the full confirmation and teſtimonie of al the premiſſes, the foreſaid procurators and meſſengers haue put to their ſeales. Giuen in the towne of Dordract the 15. day of December in the yere of our Lord 1405.

William Eſturmy knight, and Iohn Kington canon of Lincolne (being in this behalfe ſufficiently authorized and deputed as Ambaſſadours, procurators, meſſengers and commiſſioners, by our ſaid ſoueraigne lord the king, namely in regard of the moleſtations, iniuries and damages vniuſtly done and committed againſt the liege people and ſubiectes of the foreſaide moſt excellent Prince and lord, Lord Henry by the grace of God king of England & France, and Lord of Ireland, by the communalties of the cities of Wiſmer and Roſtok vnderwritten, their common coũſel being aſſembled for the ſame purpoſe, & authorized alſo, and as well cloſely as expreſly maintained and ratified, by the whole companie of the common ſociety of the marchants of the Dutch Hans) doe, in this preſent diet at the towne of Hage ſituate in the countrey of Holland, being appointed for the very ſame occaſion, demaund of you Syr Iohn de Aa knight, and Hermannus Meyer deputies for the cities of Wiſmer and Roſtok, and ſufficiently ordeined by authority requiſite in this behalfe, to be the procurators and meſſengers of the ſaid cities, that conuenient, iuſt, and reaſonable ſatiſfaction and recompenſe may certainely and effectually be done vnto the iniuried and endamaged parties, who are ſpecified in the articles vnder written.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1395. about the feaſt aforeſaid, the ſaid Godekins and Stertebeker, & their companions of the Hans vniuſtly took vpon the ſea a certaine ſhip of Thomas Peirs of Cley called the Iſabel (whereof William Noie was maſter) and conueyed it vnto Mawſtrond, and there robbed the ſaid maſter and his company of diuers commodities, as namely of furniture, and ſalt fiſhes, being in the ſaid ſhip, to the value of 406. nobles.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere next aboue mentioned, vpon the Saterday, about the foreſaid feaſt, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker, and other their accomplices of the Hans vnlawfully took vpō the ſea, a certain ſhip of one Thomas Lyderpole of Cley, called the Helena, wherein Robert Alwey was maſter, & alſo wickedly and vniuſtly drowned in the bottom of the ſea diuers commodities, as namely ſalt fiſhes, together with the ſhip it ſelfe.

Cley.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1398. about the feaſt of S. Michael the archangel, the foreſaid Godekin & Stertebeker, with other their cōfederats of the Hans, took at Langſound in Norway a certain craper of one Thomas Motte of Cley, called the Peter, (wherein Thomas Smith was maſter) & the foreſaid craper they wickedly and vniuſtly caried away, being worth 280. nobles.

Wiueton.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1395. about the feaſt of the natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptiſt, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker, and others of the Hans vniuſtly tooke a certain ſhip of Simon Durham, called the Dogger-ſhip, and the Peter of Wiueton, laden with ſalt fiſhes (whereof Iohn Auſten was maſter) vpon the coaſt of Denmarke. And they caried away the ſaide Dogger, with the furniture thereof, and the foreſaid ſalt fiſhes, to the value of 170. pound. Moreouer, the maſter, and 25. mariners in the ſame ſhip they maliciouſly ſlewe, and a certaine ladde of the ſaide Dogger they caried with them vnto Wiſmer.

Wiueton.

Item, in the foreſaid yeere, and about the feaſt aforeſaid, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker, with other their complices, vniuſtly tooke vpon the ſea a certaine ſhip of Thomas Lyderpole, and Iohn Coote of Wiueton: and the maſter and mariners which were in the ſaide ſhippe, they villanouſly ſlue, among whom they put to death one Simon Andrew, the godſonne, nephew, and ſeruant of the foreſaid Simon Durham. Which ſhip, with the goods and furniture that were therein was worth 410. nobles.

Wiueton.

Item, in the very ſame yeere, about the feaſt aforeſaid, the forenamed Godekins and Stertebeker & other their complices wickedly ſpoiled a certaine ſhip of the foreſaid Simon Durham called the Dogger, wherein Geruaſe Cat was maſter, lying at an anker, while the companie were occupied about fiſhing, and likewiſe vniuſtly tooke away with them the ſalt fiſhes, and furniture of the ſaid ſhip. Moreouer, the maſter and his company that were in the ſaid Dogger they beate and wounded, ſo that they vtterly loſt their fiſhing for that yeere, the maſter and his ſaid companie being endamaged thereby, to the ſumme of 200. nobles.

Wiueton.

Item, in the yere of our Lord 1396. the foreſaid Godekins and Stertebeker, and other their complices vniuſtly tooke vpon the ſea a certain crayer, called the Buſſ of Zeland, which one Iohn Ligate marchant, and ſeruant vnto the forenamed Simon Durham had laden in Pruſſia, on the behalfe of the ſaid Simon, to ſaile for England, and ſpoiled the ſaid craier, and alſo tooke and caried away with them the goods and marchandiſes of the ſaid Simon, being in the foreſaid ſhip, to the value of 66. pounds.

Wiueton.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1397. certaine malefactors of Wiſmer and Roſtok, with certaine others of the Hans, tooke a crayer of one Peter Cole of Zeland, called the Buſſhip, which Alan Barret the ſeruant and factor of the foreſaid Simon Durham had laden with maſtes, ſparres, and other marchandize, for the behalfe of the ſaid Simon, and vniuſtly tooke from thence the goods of the ſaid Simon, to the value of 24. pounds, and caried the ſame away.

Lenne.

Item, in the yeere of our Lord 1394. certaine malefactors of Wiſmer and others of the Hans vniuſtly tooke vpon the ſea, and caried away with them a packe of woollen cloth of the foreſaid Simon, worth 42. pounds, out of a certain crayer of one Thomas Fowler of Lenne being laden and bound for Dantzik in Pruſſia.

Lenne.

Item, pitifully complaining the marchants of Lenne doe auouch, verifie, & affirme, that about the feaſt of S. George the martyr, in the yeere of our Lord 1394. ſundry malefactors and robbers of Wiſmer & Roſtok, and others of the Hans, with a great multitude of ſhips, arriued at the towne of Norbern in Norway, and tooke the ſaid town by ſtrong aſſault, and alſo wickedly and vniuſtly took al the marchants of Lenne there reſiding with their goods & cattels, and burnt their houſes and manſions in the ſame place, and put their perſons vnto great ranſoms: euen as by the letters of ſafeconduct deliuered vnto the ſaid marchants it may more euidently appeare, to the great damage and impoueriſhment of the marchants of Lenne: namely, Inprimis they burnt there 21. houſes belonging vnto the ſaid marchants, to the value of 440. nobles. Item, they tooke from Edmund Belyetere, Thomas Hunt, Iohn Brandon, and from other marchants of Lenne, to the value of 1815. pounds.

21. houſes of Engliſh marchants burnt at Norbern in Norway.

Concerning this ſurpriſe Albertus Krantzius in the ſixt book of his hiſtory of Norway, and the 8. Chapter writeth in maner following.

The Vitalians.

In the meane while Norway enioyed peace vnder the gouernment of a woman: vntil Albertus king of Succia, who had now ſeuen yeeres continued in captiuity vnder Queen Margaret, was to be ſet at liberty. Which, when the common ſouldiers of Roſtok & Wiſmer, called the Vitalians perceiued, (who, whileſt their king was holden captiue, in the right of the forenamed cities, for the behalfe of their lord the king being prince of Mekleburg by birth, vndertooke and waged warre al the time of his captiuitie) banding their forces together, they reſolued, at their own coſts & charges, but in the right of the ſaid cities, to ſaile into the 3. kingdoms, and to take ſuch ſpoiles as they could lay hold on. Theſe common ſouldiers therfore, ſeeing an end of their tyrannical and violent dealing to approch, ſailed into Norway, vnto the towne of Norbern, being a mart town for al the marchants of Germanie: who tranſporting fiſhes from thence, doe bring thither marchandiſes of all kinds, eſpecially corne, vnto the ſcarcitie wherof, vnleſſe it be brought out of other countreys, that kingdome (as we haue ſaid) is very much ſubiect. Departing out of their ſhips and going on ſhore, they ſet vpon the towne, and by fire and ſword they eaſily compelled the inhabitants dwelling in weake wooden houſes, to giue place. Thus theſe Vitalians entring and ſurpriſing the towne conueyed ſuch ſpoiles vnto their ſhips as them pleaſed, and hauing laden their ſhips with thoſe booties, they returned home frolike vnto the ports of their own cities. Without all reſpect, they robbed and rifled the goods, aſwel of the Germanes, as of the Noruagians: and like lewde companions, waſting and making hauock of all things, proued themſelues neuer the wealthier. For it is not the guiſe of ſuch good fellowes to ſtore vp or to preſerue ought. The citizens, at the firſt, ſeemed to be inriched: howbeit afterward, (no man miſdoubting any ſuch calamitie) goods ill gotten were worſe ſpent. Thus farre Krantzius.

Lenne.

Item, pitifully complaining, the foreſaide marchants auouch, verifie, and affirme, that vpon the 14. day after the feaſt of S. George, in the yeere of our Lord next aboue written, as 4. ſhips of Lenne, laden with cloth, wine, and other marchandiſes, were ſailing vpon the maine ſea, with all the goods and wares conteined in them, for Pruſſia, ſundry malefactors of Wiſmer and Roſtok, with others of the Hans, being in diuers ſhips, came vpon them, and by force of armes and ſtrong hand tooke the ſaid ſhips, with the goods and marchandiſes contained in them: and ſome of the people which were in the ſaide foure ſhips, they ſlew, ſome they ſpoyled, and others they put vnto extreame ranſomes. And carying away with them thoſe foure ſhips with the commodities and marchandiſe therin, they parted ſtakes therwith, as them liſted, to the great impouerishment & loſſe of the ſaid marchants of Lenne, namely in cloth of William Sileſden, Tho. Waterden, Ioh. Brandon, Ioh. Weſenhã, & other marchants of Lenne, to the value of 3623.li.5.s.11.d.

Lenne.

Item, pitifully complaining the foreſaid marchants doe affirme, that one Henry Lambolt and other his adherents, in the yeere of our Lord 1396. tooke vpon the maine ſea betweene Norway and Scaw, one crayer laden with oſmunds, and with diuers other marchandiſes, perteining vnto Iohn Brandon of Lenne, to the ſumme and value of 443.li.4.s.2.d. Moreouer, they tooke from Iohn Lakingay 4. laſts and an halfe of oſmunds, to the value of 220.lib.10.s.

Lenne.

Item, the foreſaid marchants complaine, that certain malefactors of Wiſmer, with other their complices of the Hans, in the yeere of our Lord 1396. tooke from Thomas Ploket of Lenne, out of a certaine ſhip ſailing vpon the maine ſea towards Sconeland (whereof Iames Snycop was maſter) cloth and other marchandiſe, to the ſumme and value of 13.lib.13.s.4.d.

Lenne.

Item, the aboue-named marchants complaine ſaying, that certaine malefactors of Wiſmer, with others of the Hans ſociety, in the yere of our Lord 1397. wickedly and vniuſtly took out of a certaine ſhip of Dantzik (whereof Laurence van Ruſſe was maſter) from Ralph Bedingam of Lenne, one fardel of cloth worth 52.li.7.s.6.d. Alſo, for the ranſome of his ſeruant, 8.li.6.s.8.d. Item, they tooke from Thomas Earle diuers goods, to the value of 24. pounds.

Lenne.

Item, the foreſaid marchants complaine, that certaine malefactors of Wiſmer & Roſtok, with others of the Hans, in the yeere of our Lord 1399. wickedly & vniuſtly tooke one crayer pertayning vnto Iohn Lakinglich of Lenne, laden with diuers goods and marchandiſe pertaining vnto ſundry marchants of Lenne, namely from the forenamed Iohn one fardel of cloth, and one cheſt full of harneis, and other things, to the value of 90. lib. Item, they took out of the foreſaid ſhip from Roger Hood, one fardel of cloth, and one cheſt with diuers goods, to the value of 58. lib. Item, from Iohn Pikeron, one fardell of cloth, and one cheſt with diuers goods, to the value of 440. lib. Item, from Andrew Purſer one fardell of cloth, and one cheſt with diuers commodities therein, to the value of ten pounds.

Lenne.

Item, the aboue-named marchants complaine ſaying, that certaine malefactors of Wiſmer & Roſtok, and others of the Hans, namely, Godekin Mighel, Henric van Hall de Stertebeker, with other of their confederates, in the yeere of our Lord 1399. wickedly and vniuſtly took from Iohn Priour of Lenne, out of the ſhip of Michael van Burgh, namely 160. neſts of maſers, worth 100. lib.13.s.4.d. Item, 30. furres rigges of Kaleber worth 13.s.4.d. apiece, the ſumme totall amounting to 20.li. Item, 20. furres wombys of Kalebre worth &c. Item, one girdle of ſiluer, and one dagger adorned with ſiluer worth 30.s. Item, two coates, and one long iacket, and other goods, to the value of 30.s. Item, he paide for his ranſome 4.lib.13.s.4.d.

Note the ſecret treaſons of the Hans.

Vnto all and ſingular the articles aboue-written, the ambaſſadors of England aforeſaid do further adde, that the doers and authors of the damages, iniuries, and robberies ſet down in the articles aboue written, (of whom ſome are named in particular, and others in general) performed and committed all thoſe outrages, being hired thereunto at the expenſes and charges of the common ſocieties of the cities aforeſaid. And that the inhabitants of euery houſhold in the foreſaide cities (each man according to his ability) wittingly & purpoſely ſet foorth one, two, or more men, for the very ſame expedition, wherein all and ſingular the foreſaid treſpaſſes were committed.

The foreſaid Engliſh ambaſſadors doe exhibite the articles aboue written vnto the procurators of the cities of Wiſmer and Roſtok aforeſaid: leaue and libertie being alwayes reſerued vnto the ſaid ambaſſadors, to enlarge, or to diminiſh, or to expound all, or euery, or any of the ſaid Articles whatſoeuer, ſo often as it ſhall ſeeme expedient vnto them.

Theſe be the grieuances and offences, whereat the marchants of the Hans of Almaine, comming vnto, and reſiding in the Realme of England, doe finde themſelues aggrieued, contrarie to the Articles and priuileges of the Charter graunted vnto them by the worthy Progenitors of the king of England that now is, and alſo by the ſaide ſoueraigne Lord the King ratified, and confirmed.

IMprimis, whereas the foreſaide marchants haue a priuilege graunted vnto them by Charter, that they may, in cities, boroughs, and in other towns and villages throughout the whole realme of England, exerciſe traffique in groſſe, as wel with the natural inhabitants of the kingdome, as with ſtrangers, and priuate perſons: of late, thoſe that are free denizens in the cities, boroughs, and villages within the foreſaid kingdome, do hinder and reſtrain all others that be ſtrangers, foreners, and aliens, that they neither can, nor dare buy and ſel with the marchants of the Hans aforeſaid, to their great hinderance and loſſe.

Item, the foreſaid marchants by vertue of their charter were wont to haue and to hold Innes and manſions, for the repoſing of themſelues and of their goods, whereſoeuer they pleaſed in any cities, boroughs, or villages, throughout the whole kingdome: howbeit of late the foreſaide marchants are not ſuffered to take vp their manſions, contrary to the tenour of their charter.

Item, the foreſaid marchants are priuileged not to vndergoe any other burthens or impoſitions, but onely to pay certaine cuſtoms, as it doeth by their charter manifeſtly appeare. Notwithſtanding at yͤ ſame time when Simon de Moreden was maior of London, the foreſaid marchants were conſtrained, in the ward of Doue-gate at London, to pay fifteenths, tallages, and other ſubſidies contrary to the liberties of their charter. Whereupon the ſaide marchants proſecuted the matter before the Councel of our ſoueraign lord the king, inſomuch that they were releaſed from paying afterward any ſuch tallages, fifteenths, and ſubſidies. Which marchants, a while after, of their owne accord and free will, gaue vnto the gild-hall of London an hundreth markes ſterling, conditionally, that they of the citie aforeſaide ſhould not at any time after exact or demaund of the ſaid marchants, or of their ſucceſſors, any tallages, fifteenths, or ſubſidies, contrary to the tenor of their charter, as by records in the foreſaid gild-hall, it doth more plainly appeare. Howbeit of late the officers of our lord the king, in the foreſaid ward of Doue-gate, conſtrained the marchants aforeſaid to pay tallages, fifteenths, & other ſubſidies, And becauſe the ſaide marchants murmured and refuſed to pay any ſuch contributions, alleaging their priuileges, the foreſaid officers arreſted the goods of thoſe ſaid marchants (which are as yet detained vpon the areſt) notwithſtanding that they were releaſed before the councel of our ſoueraigne lord the king, & alſo that they gaue vnto the ſaid gild-hall one hundreth marks to be releaſed, as it is aforeſaid. And alſo the foreſaid marchants were conſtrained to pay 12.d. in the pound, and of late 6.d. and other ſubſidies, more then their ancient cuſtomes, to the great damage of thoſe marchants.

The ancient cuſtomes of wools.

Item, the foreſaid marchants are priuileged as touching cuſtoms of wols by thẽ bought within the realm of England, yͭ they are not bound to pay, ouer & beſides their ancient cuſtoms, but onely xl.d. more then the homeborn marchants of England were wont to pay. But now yͤ foreſaid marchants are compelled to pay for euery ſack of wool (beſides yͤ ancient cuſtom & the 40.d. aforeſaid) a certain impoſitiõ called Pence for the town of Cales, namely for euery ſack of wool 19.d. more then the marchants of England doe pay, to their great loſſe, & againſt the liberty of their charter.

Pence for the towne of Cales.

Item, the foreſaid marchants are priuileged by their charter, that concerning the quantity of their marchandize brought into the realme of England (in regard whereof they are bound to pay 3.d. for the worth of euery pound of ſiluer) credit is to be giuen vnto them for the letters of their maſters and of their companies, if they were able to ſhew them. And if ſo be they had no letters in this behalfe to ſhew, that then credite ſhould bee giuen vnto themſelues, and that their othe, or the othe of their atturney ſhould be taken, without any other proof, as touching the value of their marchandize ſo brought in, & that thereupon they ſhould be bound to pay cuſtoms, namely the cuſtomes of 3.d. iuſtly for that cauſe to be paid. But nowe the cuſtomers of our ſoueraigne lorde the king put their goods to an higher rate then they ought or were woont to be: and heereupon they compell them to pay cuſtome for their goods, at their pleaſure, ſcanning about their fraight and expenſes particularly diſburſed in regard of the ſaid goods and marchandize, to the great hinderance of the ſaid marchants, and againſt the tenor of their charter.

The great charter of marchants.

Item, the foreſaid marchants by way of pitiful complaint do alleage, that whereas the worthy progenitors of our Lord the king that now is, by vertue of the ſaide great charter, graunted libertie vnto them to pay the cuſtomes of certain clothes, namely of ſkarlet, and cloth died in grayne, A ſpeciall Charter.

The cuſtomers of the pety cuſtome.

and of other clothes of aſſiſe, which were by them to be caried out of the realme of England, euen as by their foreſaid Charter it doeth more plainly appeare: and whereas our ſoueraigne lord the king that now is (ratifying and confirming the ſaide charter, and being willing that they ſhoulde haue more eſpeciall fauour ſhewed vnto them) granted vnto them by their Charter, that the ſaid marchants ſhould be exempted and freed from all cuſtome and impoſition of ſmall clothes, as in pieces and in narrow clothes which were not of aſſiſe, and in ſuch other clothes of like qualitie: yet of late the Cuſtomers of our Lorde the King that nowe is, not allowing their ſaide ſpeciall Charter ſo graunted vnto the marchants aforeſaid, do compel them to pay for ſtraight clothes and for pieces of clothes which are not of aſſiſe, (together with other demands particularly & ſeuerally made) as great cuſtome as if the clothes were full out of aſſiſe. Moreouer alſo of late, the cuſtomers of the ſmal or pety cuſtome & of the ſubſidie doe demand of them cuſtome for kerſey-clothes equal vnto the cuſtome of thoſe clothes, that be of ful aſſiſe, whereas the foreſaid marchants were not wont to pay for thoſe kerſeys by vertue of their Charter, but onely according to the worth of ech pound of ſiluer, as namely for other goods which are of golde weight: to the great hinderance of the foreſaid parties, and againſt the manifeſt graunt of our ſoueraigne Lord the king, as it appeareth in the ſaid ſpeciall Charter.

Item, the ſaid marchants alleage, that they are priuiledged by their Charter, if they pay cuſtome and ſubſidy for their goods in the behalfe of our lord the king, at any port of England where thoſe goods haue arriued, and afterward would tranſport the ſaide goods or any part of them vnto any other port within the realme aforeſaid: that then they ſhould be quite releaſed from paying of any other cuſtome for the ſame goods, if they bring a warrant that they haue paide the ſaide cuſtome, as is aforeſaide. Of late it fortuned, that a certaine man of their ſocietie named Nicholas Croſſehaire, being a marchant of the lande of Pruſſia, immediatly after the concord was concluded betwene the Engliſh and the Pruſſians, brought vnto the towne of Sandwich a ſhippe laden with bow-ſtaues and other marchandize, and there well and truely paide the cuſtome of our lord the king, for all his wares: and ſelling there part of the ſame goods, he afterward tranſported parcel thereof in a ſmall barke vnto London, there to be ſolde, and caried a warrant alſo with him, that he had at Sandwich paid the cuſtome due vnto our lord the king: & yet (the ſaid warrant notwithſtanding) the cuſtomers of the pety cuſtome & ſubſidy of London came & demanded cuſtome of him at another time cōtrary to reaſon, & againſt the tenor of their charter: and the ſaid Nicholas offred pledges vnto them, yea, euen ready money downe into their hands, vntil the queſtion were diſcuſſed and determined, whether he ſhould pay new cuſtome or no: but this they would not doe. Then the ſaid Nicholas brought a brief from our lord the king, to get himſelfe diſcharged from paying the ſaid cuſtome: and for all that, the foreſaid cuſtomers would not as yet haue regard vnto him, but kept the ſaid goods within ſhipboord, vpō the riuer of Thames, for the ſpace of 15. dayes, vntil he had paid another cuſtom, to the great loſſe of the ſaid Nicholas, for that which he ſold firſt at Sandwich to be deliuered at London for ſeuen nobles, he could not afterward haue for it aboue foure nobles, and yet ſo was it ſolde, by reaſon of the harme which his wares had taken by lying ſo long vpon the water, contrary to the tenor of their Charter.

Itē, the ſaid marchants do alleage, that another of their company called Peter Hertſon bought at Briſtow certain clothes, & laded the ſame in a ſhip, to be tranſported for Pruſſia, for the which he truely paide at Briſtow, the cuſtoms & ſubſidies due vnto our ſoueraign lord the king: which ſhip with the foreſaid goods arriuing at London: the cuſtomers of the pety-cuſtome and of the ſubſidie there would not permit the ſaid ſhip with the goods to paſſe vnto the parts aforeſaid, vntil the ſaid Peter had paid another cuſtome for the ſame goods (the warrant, which he brought with him notwithſtanding) to his great hinderance, and contrary to the tenour of their Charter.

The cuſtomers of the ſubſidie.

Itē, pitifully complaining the foreſaid marchants alleage, that wheras euery marchant, bringing wares into the realm, was wont to haue a ſchedule wherein his name was written, for a ſpecification & certificat of the quantity of his goods in the ſaid ſchedule to be found at the arriual of the ſhip, without paying therfore ought at all, of late the cuſtomers of the pety cuſtome do compel thē to pay for ech mans name written a peny, at yͤ arriual of their goods out of euery ſhip wherein the ſaid goods are found, what commodities & marchandize ſoeuer they be: whenas notwithſtanding, if there be a cheſt or any other ſmal matter, there ſhould not therfore be any cuſtome due vnto our lord the king, nor any receiued vnto his Maieſties vſe. In like maner do the cuſtomers of the ſubſidy deale. Wheras alſo the foreſaid marchants were not wont to pay for a cocket for the conueyance & tranſportation of their goods out of the realme (albeit many names were written therein) more then 4. d. of late the cuſtomers of the pety cuſtom do compel them to pay for euery name contained in the ſame cocket, 4. d. and in like ſort do the cuſtomers of the ſaide ſubſidy deale. Which contribution in a yere extendeth it ſelf vnto a great ſumme, to the vnknown preiudice of our lord the king, more then any man could ſuppoſe, (for the cuſtomers enioy their fees and commodities from his Maieſtie that they may doe him faithfull ſeruice) and likewiſe to the great damage of the ſaid marchants.

Itẽ, pitifully complaining the ſaid marchants do alleage that they are conſtrained to pay for ſubſidy, ſometime 12.d. and ſomtime 6.d. in the pound, contrary to the tenor of their charter: and yet notwithſtanding when their marchandize commeth to the wharf, the cuſtomers prolong & delay the time 3. or 4. weeks before they wil take cuſtome for their goods, in the which ſpace other marchants ſel their goods, the cuſtomers not regarding whether the goods aforeſaid take wet or no; to the great damage aſwel of our lord the king, as of the ſaid marchants: becauſe, if they had quicke diſpatch, they might pay cuſtome vnto his Maieſtie oftner then they doe.

Item, the ſaid marchants doe farther alleage, that the cuſtomers of the petie cuſtome, and of the ſubſidie in the port of London haue appointed among themſelues certaine men to ſeale vp the goods of the ſaide marchants, ſo ſoon as they are arriued at the port of ſafetie, vntil the ſaid goods be cuſtomed. By meanes of the which ſealing, the foreſaide parties doe compell the marchants aboue-named, (vpon an vſe and cuſtome whereof themſelues haue bene the authors) to paye a certaine ſumme of money, to the great hinderance of the ſayde marchants, and contrarie to iuſtice and to their charter. Moreouer, the ſaide cuſtomers haue ordained betweene themſelues, that the ſaide marchants ſhall put or make vp no cloth into fardels, to tranſport out of the realme, vnleſſe certaine men appointed by them for the ſame purpoſe bee there preſent, to ſee what maner of clothes they bee, vnder paine of the forfeiture of the ſaide goods. Alſo of late, when the ſayde marchants would haue made vp ſuch fardels, the foreſayde parties aſſigned to be ouerſeers refuſed to come, vnleſſe they might haue for their comming ſome certaine ſumme of money, delaying and procraſtinating from day to day, ſo long as themſelues liſted, to the great loſſe and vndoing of the foreſaide marchants, and contrarie to their liberties: becauſe the foreſaide cuſtomers are bound by their office to doe this, without any contribution therefore to bee paide vnto them by the ſaide marchants: for that they doe enioy from our ſoueraigne Lorde the King their fees and commodities, to the ende that they may ſerue him and euery marchant iuſtly and faithfully, without any contribution by them to be impoſed anewe vpon the ſayde marchants, of cuſtome.

Item, the ſaid marchants doe alleage, that the cuſtomers & bailifs of the town of Southhampton do compel them to pay for euery laſt of herrings, pitch, & ſope aſhes brought thither by thẽ 2.s. more then the kings cuſtome: and for ech hundreth of bowſtaues & boords called Waghenſcot, 2.d. for euery hundreth of boords called Richolt, 4.d. & for al other marchandize brought by the foreſaid marchants vnto the ſame towne: which contributions they neuer paid at any time heeretofore, being greatly to their hinderance, and contrary to the tenour of their Charter.

Item, the foreſaid marchants do alleage, that one of their company, called Albert Redewiſh of Pruſſia, bringing diuers goods & marchandizes vnto Newcaſtle vpon Tine, & there paying the vſual cuſtom of 3.d. in the pound for al his wares, the bailifs of the ſaide towne, againſt all reaſon, exacted 7. pound ſterling at his hands more then the cuſtome: whereupon the foreſaide marchant got a briefe from the kings maieſty, for the recouery of the ſaid 7.li. according to equity & reaſon: howbeit, that at the comming of the ſaid briefe the foreſaid bailifes would do nothing on his behalfe, but would haue ſlaine their foreſaid aſſociate, contrary to their charter and priuiledges.

William Eſturmy knight, & Iohn Kington canon of Lincolne, being by yͤ moſt mighty prince & lord, L. Henry by Gods grace K. of England & France & lord of Ireland, ſufficiently deputed and appointed to parle, treate, & agree wͭ the common ſociety of yͤ marchants of the Hans of Dutchland or Almain, concerning & about the redreſſing & reformation of vniuſt attẽpts happening between our ſaid ſoueraign L. the king his liege people & ſubiects on the one part, & between the cõmon ſociety aforeſaid, the cities, towns, & particular perſons therof on the other part: do (for the behalf of our ſaid ſouraign L. the king, with a mind & intention to haue al & ſingular yͤ things vnderwritten to come to the knowledge of the ſaid common ſociety) intimate, declare, & make known vnto you (hond. ſirs) Henr. Weſthoff citizen & deputy of the city of Lubec, Henry Fredelaw, Ioh. van Berk citizen of Colen, Mainard Buxtehude citizen, & deputy of the city of Hamburgh, M. Simõ Clawſten clerk, ſir Iohn de Aa knight deputie of the citie of Roſtok, Herman Meyer deputy of the citie of Wiſmar, being, as the procurators, meſſengers, & commiſſioners of the foreſaid cities, aſſembled together at the town of Hage in Holland, with yͤ forenamed Will. & Iohn in regard of the foreſaid redres & reformation: that, euen as our ſaid ſoueraign L. the king his meaning is not to diſturb or hinder ſuch priuiledges as haue bin heretofore granted & vouchſafed vnto the cõmon ſociety of the marchãts aforeſaid, by the renoumed kings of England, & the worthy progenitors of our L. the K. that now is, & by himſelf alſo vnder a certain form confirmed: euen ſo he is determined (without yͤ preiudice of forren lawes) vpon iuſt, mature and ſober deliberation, by his royall authoritie to withſtand ſuch priuiledges, as by reaſon of the abuſe thereof; haue bene infinitely preiudiciall vnto himſelfe and his ſubiects.

Inprimis the ſaid ambaſſadours doe affirme as afore, that whereas all and euery the Marchants of the ſaid company, as often as they would, were, both in the Realme of England, and in other territories & dominions ſubiect vnto our ſoueraigne lord the king, admitted and ſuffered (according to the tenor of the forenamed priuiledges granted vnto them) freely, friendly and ſecurely to traffique and conuerſe with any of his Maieſties liege people and ſubiects whatſoeuer, or with other people of whatſoeuer nation liuing in the realme of England, or in the dominions aforeſaid: the ſaid common ſociety of marchants by their publike & deliberate common counſel did appoint & ordain, yͭ no ſociety in any cities, townes, or places, neither yet any particular man of any ſuch ſociety (there being no lawfull or reaſonable cauſe why) ſhoulde in any wiſe admit any marchants of the realm of England reſorting vnto their cities or other places for marchandiſe, to enioy intercourſe of traffike: but that the ſaide Engliſh marchants ſhould bee altogether excluded from all traffike and mutuall conuerſation among them, by denouncing and inflicting grieuous penalties of money as well vpon cities as other places, and vpon particular marchants alſo of the foreſaid ſocietie practiſing the contrary.

Item, that immediatly after, the foreſaid parties enacting and ordaining publiſhed their ſayde ſtatute and ordinance, in all kingdomes, prouinces, partes, cities, and townes, wherin any marchants of the ſaid ſocietie were conuerſant.

Item, that after that publication, the ſtatute and ordinance aforeſaid by euery of the marchants of the forenamed ſociety were inuiolably obſerued.

Item, that the ſaid ſtatute and ordinance hath bene ſo rigorouſly put in execution, that whereas immediatly after certaine Engliſh marchants with their ſhips, mariners, and marchandize beeing in a certaine part of one of the principall cities of the foreſaide ſocietie, vtterly deſtitute of meate, drinke, and money, publikely offred to ſell their wollen clothes of England, onely to prouide themſelues of neceſſary victuals: yet the marchants of the ſaide citie, ſtoutely perſiſting in their ſtatute and ordinance aforeſaid, ſtraightely prohibited the buying of ſuch clothes, vnchriſtianly denying meate and drinke vnto the ſaid Engliſh marchants.

Item, the foreſaid ſociety decreed and ordained, that no marchant of the ſaide company ſhould in any place or countrey whatſoeuer, buy any woollen clothes of the realme or dominion of England (albeit offered by others and not by Engliſh men) or, hauing bought any, ſhould, after the terme prefixed, ſel them, impoſing grieuous pecuniary mulcts, beſides the forfeiture of the clothes ſo bought or ſold, vpon them that would attempt the contrary.

Item, that after the ſaid ſtatute and ordinance, the foreſaide ſocietie decreed, that all marchants of the ſaid companie, hauing among their wares and marchandiſe any woollen clothes made in England, ſhould either ſell the ſaide clothes, or within a ſhort ſpace then limited ſhould, vnder penaltie of forfeiting the ſaid clothes, vtterly renounce the vſe and commoditie thereof: Not withſtāding a grieuous penaltie of money being impoſed vpon the violaters of the ſame ſtatute.

The Hans ſocietie determineth the ouerthrow of Engliſh marchāts.

Item, that the ſtatutes and ordinances aforeſaid might with more ſpeed and celerity be put in execution, the ſaid authors and publiſhers thereof imagining, according to their deſire, that by this meanes an vtter extirpation and ouerthrow of Engliſh marchants might, yea & of neceſſity muſt enſue: vpon their ſerious & long premeditated deliberation, ſtraitely commanded & inioyned, vnder pain of loſing the benefit of all priuileges, wheresoeuer, or by the princes of what lands, or the Magiſtrates of what Cities or townes ſoeuer vouchſafed vnto the ſaid common ſocietie, that not only the aldermen of that ſociety in al places throughout the realme of England, but alſo al other marchants of the ſaid company, after the maner of marchants conuerſing in the ſaide Realme, ſhould, without exception of perſons, vtterly abſtein from all intercourſe of traffike with the marchants of the realme aforeſaid: yea, and that they ſhoulde depart out of the ſaid kingdome within a very ſhort ſpace limited. For the diſpatching of al which premiſſes without delay, it was according to their commandement effectually prouided.

Statutes againſt yͤ Engliſh marchants in Norway and in Swedland.

Item, that the ſociety aforeſaid hath approued diuers very vnreaſonable ſtatutes & ordinances, made & publiſhed by the marchants of the ſame ſociety reſiding in the kingdoms of Norway and Swedland, to the great preiudice of the kingdome of England, and the marchants thereof: and as yet doth couertly and expreſly do approue the ſame, vniuſtly putting them in daily execution.

Item, whereas in the priuileges & indulgences granted by yͤ renoumed princes ſomtimes kings of Englād, yͭ worthy progenitors of our ſoueraign lord the king yͭ now is, vnto the ſociety aforeſaid, it is prouided, yͭ the ſaid marchants ſhal not auow any man which is not of their company, nor ſhal not colour his goods and marchandize vnder their company: whereas alſo in the confirmation of the ſayd priuiledges made by our ſoueraigne lord that nowe is, it is manifeſtly prouided, that the marchants of the Hans towns, vnder the colour of their priuiledges in England, ſhall not vpon paine of the perpetuall fruſtration and reuocation of the foreſayd priuiledges, receiue any ſtranger of any other towne in their liberties, by whom the kings cuſtome may in any ſort be withholden or diminiſhed: & yet the contrary vnto al theſe prouiſoes hath bin euery yere, for theſe 20. yeres or thereabout notoriouſly practiſed and committed, as well ioyntly by the generall counſell, and toleration of the foreſayd ſociety, as alſo ſeuerally by the aduiſe and permiſſion of diuers particular cities of the foreſayd Hans company to the great diminution of his maieſties cuſtome, the eſtimation whereof the foreſayd ambaſſadors are not able at this preſent fully to declare. But that all occaſions of the laſt aboue mentioned diminution may bee preuented for the time to come, the ſayd ambaſſadors doe demand to haue from the foreſayd ſocietie a declaration in writing, what and what maner of territories, cities, townes, villages or companies they be, for which the ſayd ſociety challengeth and pretendeth, that they ought to enioy the priuiledges granted vnto their marchants, as is aboue mentioned.

How many & which be the Hans townes.

Moreouer, it is required by the foreſaid ambaſſadors, if the ſocietie aforeſayd hath not decreed nor ordayned the things aboue written, that the names of the cities and places decreeing and ordaining ſuch ſtatutes & ordinances, may by the ſayd common ſociety either now or at ſome other times and places conuenient for the ſame purpoſe, be expreſſed and ſet downe in writing.

A letter of Henry the fourth king of England &c. vnto Frater Conradus de Iungingen the maſter generall of Pruſsia.

Henrie &c. to the moſt noble and mighty perſonage of ſacred religion Fr: Conradus de Iungingen Maſter general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Marie, our moſt deare friend, greeting, and continual perfection of amity.

When as your meſſengers and ambaſſadors were of late perſonally preſent in Holland, and there expected the arriual of our ambaſſadors vntill the firſt day of the moneth of Nouember laſt expired, that there might bee by way of friendly conference a remedie prouided in regard of certaine iniuries pretended to be offered, by both our ſubiects one againſt another, for the publique commoditie of both parts, we were determined to haue ſent vnto Dordract, at the foreſaid daye, our welbeloued and faithfull knight William Sturmy, and our welbeloued clerke Iohn Kington, vpon our ambaſſage-affayres: hauing as yet in our deſires, for a peaceable ending of the matter, (which, our foreſayd ambaſſadors, by reaſon of the ſhortnes of time, or the finding out of ſome other remedie and happy concluſion of all and ſingular the foreſaid attempts concerning the principall buſines, could by no meanes at that inſtant attaine vnto) that vpon ſome other more conuenient day (to the end your ambaſſadors might not returne home altogether fruſtrate of their expectation) there might be, after the wonted friendly maner, a conferẽce & agreement with your foreſayd ambaſſadors, euen as by other letters of ours directed vnto your ſayd ambaſſadors the ſecond day of the moneth of Nouember aforeſayd wee haue deliuered our mind vnto them. But it fortuned not long before the departure of your ambaſſadors into their owne countrey, that no ſufficient ſhipping could be found wherein our ſayd ambaſſadors might haue ſecure and ſafe paſſage vnto Dordract, or Middleburgh, neither was it thought that they ſhould get any paſſage at all, till the ſhips at Middleborough were returned into our kingdome, by the force whereof they might be the more ſtrongly wafted ouer. And ſo by reaſon of the departure of your ambaſſadours, all matters remaine in ſuſpenſe till ſuch time as the ſayd ambaſſadors ſhall againe meete with ours to adde perfection vnto the buſines as yet imperfect. Wherefore (our friend vnfainedly beloued) deſiring from the bottome of our heart that the integritie of loue, which hath from auncient times taken place betweene our & your ſubiects, may in time to come alſo be kept inuiolable, we haue thought good once again to ſend one of our foreſaid ambaſſadors, namely William Eſturmy knight to Dordract, giuing him charge thither to make haſte, and there to ſtay, till ſome of your meſſengers, at your commandement doe in time conuenient repayre vnto that place, there (by Gods aſſiſtance) to bring the matter vnto an happy concluſion. May it pleaſe you therefore of your vnfayned friendſhip, without all inconuenience of delay, to returne, not vnto vs, but vnto our forenamed knight an anſwere in writing, what your will and determination is. Neither let it ſeeme ſtrange vnto you, that we haue not at this preſent ſent our forenamed Iohn Kington clerke together with the ſayd William: for the cauſe of his abode with vs is, that he may in the meane ſeaſon employ his care and diligence about thoſe matters which muſt be preparatiues for the finall concluſion of the foreſayd buſines. Honorable ſir, and moſt deare friend, we doe moſt heartily wiſh increaſe of proſperity and ioy vnto your perſon. Giuen in our palace of Weſtminſter the 14. day of Feb. in the yeare of our Lord 1407. 1407.

To the right noble and valiant knight Sir VVilliam Sturmy ſent at this preſent by the moſt ſoueraigne King of England &c. as his ambaſſadour vnto Dordract, his moſt ſincere friend.

Honorable ſir, our moſt entier friend, wee receiued the royall letters of the moſt mighty prince and lord, our lord the king of England and France and lord of Ireland, ſent vnto vs vnder the date of the 14. day of February (which we receiued at our caſtle of Marienburgh the 11. of April) containing, amongſt other matters, that his Maieſties purpoſe was once againe to ſende one of his ambaſſadors, namely your ſelfe our very ſincere friend vnto Dordract, giuing you in charge that you would make haſte thither & there ſtay, vntill ſome of our ſubiects might at our commandemēt, in conuenient time repaire vnto the ſame place, there (by Gods aſſiſtance) to bring our matters vnto a happy concluſion. And then he requeſted that wee ſhould without delay write our determination vnto you, as the concluſion of the ſaid letter importeth. Howbeit (our moſt deare friend) the treaties & conferences about the redreſſe or reformation of vniuſt attempts committed by the ſubiects of our ſayd lord the king & our ſubiects, one againſt another, are both on our behalfe, and on the behalfe of the common ſocietie of the Hans marchants, hitherto had, made, and continued common. And ſo our commiſſioners vpon our full and abſolute commandement, ſhal, for the managing of theſe and of other affaires of the foreſaid ſocietie, many waies vrgent and difficult, vpon the feaſt of our Lords Aſcenſion next to come, meet with the ſaid ſocietie at Lubec, there to giue notice what they haue determined to conclude in this preſent buſines & in others for their owne behalfe. For we wil giue our ambaſſadours which are there to appeare, ſtreightly in charge that according to the kings requeſt aforeſayde they doe without delay procure an anſwere to be written vnto your honour concerning the determination of the foreſayd ſocietie. Giuen at the place and vpon the day aboue named, in the yeare of our Lord 1407.

Fr. Wernherus de Tettingen, commander in Elbing, general vice-maſter and lieutenant in the roome of the Maſter generall of the Dutch knights of the Order of S. Marie &c. of late deceaſed.

The letters of Henry the 4. king of England &c. vnto Vlricus de Iungingen Maſter generall of Pruſsia, 1408. wherein he doth ratifie and accept the laſt agreement made at Hage in Holland.

A meeting at Hage the 28. of Auguſt 1407.

Henry &c. vnto the honourable and religious perſonage Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen Maſter generall of the Dutch knights of S. Marie &c. our moſt deare friend, greeting and dayly increaſe of our accuſtomed amity and friendſhip. We doe by theſe preſents giue your honour to vnderſtand, that our faithfull & welbeloued William Eſturmy knight, and Maſter Iohn Kington clerke, our ambaſſadors and meſſengers ſent of late on our behalfe, vnto the preſence of your predeceſſour for the redreſſing of certaine grieuances and damages being contrary to iuſtice offered againſt vs and our liege ſubiects by the people & ſubiects of your predeceſſors, & againſt them alſo by our ſubiects as it is aforeſayd, in friendly maner to be procured, of late returning out of the parts of Alemain made relation vnto vs and to our counſell, that hauing conferred with your forenamed predeceſſour about the foreſayd affayres, the particulars following were at length concluded: namely firſt of all, that at a certaine day and place they ſhould meete in Holland with his ambaſſadors and meſſengers, to hold a friendly conference between them about the redreſſing and reformation of the grieuances and damages aforeſayd: and that they ſhould by the equall waight of diligent examination ponder, & in the balance of iuſtice diſcuſſe & define al & ſingular the foreſaid grieuances & damages inflicted on both parts. Howbeit at length after ſundry prorogations then made & continued on this behalfe, our ambaſſadors & meſſengers aforeſaid vpon the 28. of Auguſt laſt paſt, aſſembling themſelues for our part at the towne of Hage in Holland, the hon. & diſcreete perſonages Arnold Heket burgomaſter of the towne of Dantzik, & Iohn Crolowe, for the behalf of your ſubiects of Pruſſia, and Tidman de Meule, & Iohn Epenſcheid for the behalfe of Liuonia, being aſſembled as meſſengers and commiſſioners about the redreſſe and reformation aforeſayd, did then and there demaund in certaine articles, of our ambaſſadours and meſſengers abouenamed 25034. nobles & half a noble, for the grieuances & damages offered (as it was thē ſaid) to your ſubiects of Pruſſia, and 24082. nobles, 12. s. 8. d. in recompenſe of the damages offered vnto thoſe your ſubiects of Liuonia. And when the ſubſtance of thoſe articles about the grieuances & loſſes aforeſayd was by the ſayd ambaſſadours and meſſengers thoroughly examined and diſcuſſed, by their generall conſent it was finally agreed, that your ſubiects, in conſideration of all and ſingular the foreſayd grieuances and damages offered vnto them by our people, should within three yeares after the feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing, at three equall payments receiue from vs, namely they of Pruſsia, 8957. nobles, and they of Liuonia 22496. nobles, ſixe pence, halfe peny, farthing, and no more, ſo that we our ſelues thought good to condeſcend thereunto. Howbeit, foraſmuch as certaine other articles of your ſubiects of Pruſsia, and alſo certaine articles in the behalfe of our ſubiects containing grieuous complaints in them, being propounded before the ambaſſadors & meſſengers aforeſaid, for the attaining of reformation in regard of the damages & grieuances offered on both parts, could not as thē, for the great obſcurity of diuers of the ſayd articles, and alſo for want of ſufficiēt proofe at the laſt meeting appointed and held by the foreſayd ambaſſadors at the towne of Hage in Holland, ſufficiently to be examined, diſcuſſed, and defined, it was agreed vpon by the ambaſſadors and meſſengers of both partes, that from the 15. day of October then laſt expired vnto the feaſt of Eaſter now next enſuing, and from thenceforth within one whole yere immediatly following, the plaintiffes of both parts should thoroughly declare before our chancelour of England for the time being, the foreſayd obſcurities cōcerning the ſubſtance of their articles, and that they should, for the obtaining of execution, and complement of iuſtice at our ſayd chancelours hands, peremptorily miniſter neceſſary probations, vnder paine of perpetuall excluſion from the petition of thoſe things which are contayned in the articles aboue mentioned.

Prouided alwayes, that if at the laſt it ſhall be by lawfull proofes made manifeſt concerning the ſummes aboue written or any part or parcell thereof, that due ſatiſfaction hath beene made to him or them vnto whom it was due, or that thoſe goods of and for the which complaint hath bene made on the behalfe of your ſubiects haue pertained or doe appertaine vnto others, or any other iuſt, true, and reaſonable cauſe may lawfully bee alleaged, why the payment of all the foreſayd ſummes or any of them ought not to be performed: that then ſo much only is to be cut off or deducted from the ſayd ſummes as ſhall be found to be already payd or to pertaine vnto others, or elſe vpon ſome true, iuſt, and reaſonable cauſe (as is aforeſayd) not to be due. We therefore conſidering that the ſayd friendly conference, and the finall agreement enſuing thereupon are agreeable vnto reaſon and equitie, doe, for our part ratifie and willingly accept the very ſame conference and agreement. And foraſmuch as it hath bene alwayes our deſire, and is as yet our intention, that the league of amity and the integritie of loue, which hath of olde time bene obſerued betweene our and your ſubiects, may in times to come perpetually remaine inuiolable, and that your and our people may hereafter, not onely for the good of our common weale but alſo for the commodity and peace of both parts, according to their woonted maner, aſſemble themſelues and enioy the faithfull and mutuall conuerſation one of another: we will cauſe in our citie of London, with the ſumme of 8957. nobles ſatiſfaction to bee made vnto the Pruſſians, and with the ſumme of 22496. nobles, ſixe pence, halfe peny, farthing, recompenſe to be performed vnto the Liuonians, in regard of the damages and iniuries (which in very deede proceeded not of our conſent) by our ſubiects offered vnto them, as it is aforeſayd, and within three yeares after the feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing the ſayd ſummes of money to bee payed at three payments, and by three equall portions. Conditionally that vnto our ſubiects which be endamaged correſpondent ſatiſfaction be likewiſe on your part within the terme of the foreſayd three yeeres performed, with paying the ſummes of 766. nobles and of 4535. nobles, demaunded on our behalfe, and alſo with the payment of ſuch ſummes as within one yeere immediately enſuing the feaſt of Eaſter aforeſayd, ſhalbe found by ſufficient delarations and proofes to be made on the behalfe of our ſubiects (as is aforeſayd) to be due. Euen as we in like maner will make ſatiſfaction vnto your ſubiects within our citie aforeſayd. Now as touching the requeſt of your ambaſſadors and of the Liuonians, whereby we were required to procure ſome holeſome remedy for the ſoules of certaine drowned perſons, as conſcience and religion ſeemeth to challenge (in regard of whom we are moued with compaſſion, and do for their ſakes heartily condole their miſhaps) you are (our entier friend) of a certaintie to vnderſtand, that after we ſhall be by your letters aduertized of the number, ſtate, and condition of the ſayd parties drowned, we will cauſe ſuffrages of prayers and diuers other holeſome remedies profitable for the ſoules of the deceaſed and acceptable to God and men, religiouſly to be ordained and prouided: vpon condition, that for the ſoules of our drowned countrey men there be the like remedie prouided by you. The almighty grant vnto your ſelfe and vnto your whole Order, that you may proſperouſly triumph ouer the enemies of Chriſt his croſſe. Giuen vnder our priuie ſeale at our palace of Weſtminſter the 26. of March, in the yere of our Lord 1408. and in the ninth yere of our reigne.

The letters of Fr: Vlricus Maſter of Pruſsia directed vnto the king of England, ſignifying that he is contented with the agreements concluded by his meſſengers at Hage.

To the moſt renowmed prince and mighty lord L. Henrie king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, our moſt gracious lord.

VNto your highnes pleaſure at all aſſaies humbly recommending my voluntarie ſeruice &c. Moſt renowmed king, mighty prince, and gracious lord, we receiued of late with great reuerence as it becommeth vs, by our welbeloued Arnold de Daſſel the bearer of of theſe preſents, your Maieſties letters of late directed vnto vs, making mention amongſt other matters of certaine appointments firſt made and concluded betweeen the noble and worthy perſonages William Eſturmy knight, Iohn Kington clerke, and William Brampton citizen of London your ambaſſadours and meſſengers on the one parte, and our honorable and religious brethren, namely Conradus Lichtenſten great cõmander, Warnherus de Tettingen chiefe hoſpitalary & commander in Elbing, and Arnold de Hacken treaſurer, being the procuratours and commiſſioners of Fra. Conradus de Iungingen our laſt predeceſſour of famous memory on the other parte, concerning the redreſſing, reformation, and amendement of vniuſt attempts committed on both ſides, at our caſtle of Marienburgh, and alſo very lately at the towne of Hage in Holland, namely the twenty eight of the moneth Auguſt in the yeare immediately paſt, betweene your foreſayde ambaſſadours William Eſturmy knight, and Iohn Kington clerke, for your part, and our truſty and welbeloued commiſſioners and procurators, namely Arnold Hecht burgomaſter of our citie of Dantzik, and Iohn Crolow citizen of the ſame citie, for our parte. And for our more perfect knowlege in this behalfe, our ſayd commiſſioners made relation vnto vs and vnto our whole counſell, that aſſociating vnto themſelues our meſſengers of Liuonia, namely, Tidman Myeul, and Iohn Epenſheid, together with your foreſaid ambaſſadours and meſſengers, they there finally appoynted and concluded, of and about the aboue mentioned ſummes of money due on both partes, of the which mention is made in your letters aforeſayd. With this ſpeciall prouiſo, that in like manner ſatiſfaction be made in all points, both vnto other of our damnified ſubiects of Pruſſia, namely ſuch whoſe goods or the true value thereof haue bene finally adiudged by the iudges or profeſſors of our lawes, and vnto ſuch who hauing brought their articles of complaints vnto the audience of the moſt dread and mighty prince and lorde, our lord Rupertus king of the Romans alwayes moſt ſoueraigne, were in concluſion to haue the eſtimations of their goods to be adiudged by the ſentence of the ſayd lord, with the aduiſe of two of his counſellers, and alſo vnto other of our ſubiects who haue brought in ſufficient proofe of damages vniuſtly inflicted vpon them by your ſubiects, ouer and beſides the premiſſes. So that in like maner ſatiſfaction be made vnto the common ſocietie of the Hans marchants: and by the arbitrament ſet downe in the conferences had at Marienburgh, of the which it was aboue prouided and enacted on their behalfe, namely if they will reſt contented with our ſubiects in the courſes and meanes then concluded. If not, we intend not at all to adhere vnto them in this behalfe. Afterward our meſſengers aforeſayd, both they of Pruſſia and of Liuonia demanded conuenient, iuſt, and ſpeedy ſatiſfaction, with the payment of all and ſingular the ſummes aboue mentioned, due vnto both parts (ſo farre foorth as equity and reaſon would yeeld vnto, for the recompenſe of the parties iniuried and endamaged on both ſides) to be made within one whole yere accompting from the feaſt of Eaſter now laſt expired vnto the very ſame feaſt next to come in the yere immediatly following, & that in three ſeueral termes of payment, by three portions of the ſaid ſummes equally to be diuided, at the towne of Bruges in Flanders as being a place indifferent for all parties, in maner and forme as it was before at Marienburgh required and ſtoode vpon: namely that reformation, reparation, and amendement of all vniuſt attempts committed on both parts ought to bee performed within one yere. Howbeit contrariwiſe your ambaſſadors aforeſayd decreed that the ſayd ſatiſfaction ſhould be performed vnto the parties iniuried of both parts within three yeeres, beginning to accompt from the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt. And when your ambaſſadours were not contented with the maner of ſatiſfaction ſet downe by our men, nor our commiſſioners were willing in any ſort to conſent vnto that courſe which was thought conuenient by your ambaſſadors, the honorable meſſengers of the ſea-townes of the Hans being there at that time preſent, made a motion that the foreſayd ſatiſfaction might be performed within two yeeres and an halfe, accompting from the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, often before mentioned: yet vnder a cer-a certaine prouocation, namely if both parties ſhould agree vnto that forme of ſatiſfaction, and if they ſhould thinke good finally and concluſiuely to yeeld their conſent vnto it. Which kind of ſatiſfaction alſo conceiued by the meſſengers, your ſayd ambaſſadours without giuing notice therof vnto your royall Maieſtie, refuſed finally to approue; being rather deſirous to make a true & faithfull report of the ſayd forme of ſatiſfaction laſt aboue mentioned vnto your kingly highneſſe, and that in ſuch ſorte, that (as they hoped) effectuall ſatiſfaction and payment of all and ſinguler the ſummes due and to bee due on both partes ſhould more conueniently and ſpeedily bee performed. Whereupon we might be put in good hope, that more ſpeedy and conuenient appointments of termes, for the ſayd ſatiſfaction friendly on both parts to be performed in, would haue proceeded from your bountifull and gracious clemencie. And in very deede (moſt mighty prince) albeit it was neuer the meaning of our foreſayd predeceſſor, ſo farfoorth as theſe affayres concerned him, to protract and delay the execution of the ſayd buſines ſo many and ſuch long diſtances of time, and that for diuers reſpects, both becauſe reſtitution vnto the parties robbed conſiſted herein, and alſo becauſe the ſayd reſtitutions and ſatiſfactions are to be made vnto poore people, widowes, orphanes, and other miſerable creatures, diuerſly and miſerably ſlaine and oppreſſed: notwithſtanding we being moued with hearty & feruent zeale and ſpeciall affection vnto your royall crowne of England, and hauing due regard and conſideration of your moſt excellent Maieſtie, vpon the aduiſe of our honourable brethren our counſellers, doe thankfully receiue, & by the tenour of theſe preſents totally ratifie and approue ſuch ſatiſfactions of the foreſayd ſummes howſoeuer due vnto our ſubiects both Pruſſians and Liuonians, in friendly ſorte to be performed at ſuch times and ſeaſons limited and prefixed by your highnes as are expreſſed in your maieſties letters, and alſo of other ſummes which within one yeare immediately enſuing after the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, by ſufficient proofes to be made on their part before your chancelour at your citie of London ſhall be found due vnto them. Conditionally that without inconuenience of delay and impediment they be performed as they ought to be, according to the premiſſes. In like maner alſo we our ſelues within the termes of payment aboue mentioned will procure ſatiſfaction to be without fayle performed vnto your ſubiects endamaged, with the ſumme of 766. nobles, being in regard of their loſſes, of the which they haue giuen vp ſufficient informations, due vnto them: and with other like ſummes alſo which are by ſufficient proofes, within the yeare aforeſayd, and in maner and forme preſcribed to be exhibited before our treaſurer at our citie of Dantzik. The almighty vouchſafe proſperouſly and long time to preſerue your maieſties royal perſon. Giuen at our caſtle of Marienburgh the 27. of September, in the yeare of our Lord 1408.

Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen maſter generall of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hoſpital of Ieruſalem.

The letters of king Henry the 4. ſent vnto Fr. Vlricus maſter general of Pruſſia, wherein he doth abſolutely approue the foreſaid conference holden at Hage, and treateth about a perpetual league and amitie to be concluded betweene England and Pruſſia.

Henry by the grace of God king of England and France and lord of Ireland, vnto the noble & mighty perſonage of ſacred religion Vlricus de Iungingen maſter generall of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hoſpitall of Ieruſalem, our entirely beloued friend, greeting and increaſe of vnfained friendſhip. After diuers conferences had in ſundry places beyond the ſeas, betweene the ambaſſadours and meſſengers of your late predeceſſor and of your ſelfe alſo, on the one parte, and betweene our eſpeciall ambaſſadors and meſſengers on the other parte, concerning reformations, reparations, & reſtitutions in certaine maner & forme to be performed vnto our ſubiects of both parts, in regard of manifold iniuries practiſed againſt them both, and after that, in the laſt conference holden by the ambaſſadours of vs both at the towne of Hage in Holland, there was a motion made concerning a certaine forme of ſatiſfaction, by way of finall concluſion in that behalfe: but not being as then by our ambaſſadours condeſcended vnto, becauſe they durſt not proceede vnto the ſame concluſion without our priuitie, relation thereof at length being by them made before vs and our counſel: we returned vnto your honour an anſwere in writing by our letters vnder our priuie ſeale, of our full purpoſe and intention (vnto the which letters we doe at this preſent referre our ſelues, as if they were here againe expreſly written) what we thought good to haue done in this behalfe: ſo that wee alſo might by your friendly letters be certaynly informed of your will and expreſſe conſent, being likewiſe conformable vnto your foreſayd intention. Nowe whereas ſince that time we haue of late receiued the certaintie of the matter by your letters written vnto vs from your caſtle of Marienburgh, bearing date the 27. of September laſt paſt, conteyning in effect amongſt other matters, that you being mooued with a feruent zeale and ſpeciall affection (as you write) vnto the royall crowne of our realme, and hauing due regard and conſideration of our royall maieſtie, vpon the aduiſe of your honourable brethren your counſellers, doe with a thankfull mind accept, and by the tenour of the ſaid letters of yours totally approue the concord of a certaine ſatiſfaction to be performed with the payment of certaine ſummes of money howſoeuer due vnto your ſubiects as well of Pruſſia as of Liuonia, expreſſed in our former letters, within the termes prefixed by our conſent and limited in our ſaid letters, and alſo of other ſummes which within one whole yeare immediatly following the feaſt of Eaſter laſt paſt, by ſufficient proofes on their part to bee made before our chauncelour at our citie of London; ſhall be found due vnto them: conditionally, that without inconuenience of delay and impediments, the premiſſes be performed as they ought to be. And that your ſelfe alſo will without fayle, vpon the termes appoynted for the ſaid payments, procure ſatiſfaction to be made accordingly vnto our endamaged ſubiects with the ſummes due vnto them by reaſon of their loſſes, whereof they haue ſufficient information. Wherefore in regard of thoſe your friendly letters, and your courteous anſwere returned by them vnto vs, as is aforeſaid, wee doe yeelde vnto you right vnfained thanks. But becauſe it will vndoubtedly be moſt acceptable and pleaſing both vnto vs and vnto our people, and vnto you and your ſubiects, that the zeale and feruencie of loue which hath from auncient times growen and increaſed betweene our progenitours for them and their ſubiects, and your predeceſſors and their ſubiects, and which by the inſolencie of of certayne lewde perſons, without any conſent of the principall lords, hath often bene violated betweene vs and you and mutually betweene the ſubiects of vs both, may be put in perpetuall vre and obtaine full ſtrength in time to come, ſithens hereupon (by Gods aſſiſtance) it is to be hoped, that vnſpeakeable commodity and quiet will redound vnto both parts: may it ſeeme good vnto your diſcretion, as it ſeemeth expedient vnto vs, that ſome meſſengers of yours ſufficiently authoriſed to parle, agree, and conclude with our deputy, about the mutuall contraction of a perpetuall league and confirmation of friendſhip, may with all conuenient ſpeede be ſent vnto our preſence. At whoſe arriuall, not onely in this buſines ſo profitable and behoouefull, but alſo in certaine other affaires concerning the former treaties and concluſions, they may, yea and of neceſſitie muſt greatly auayle. Wherefore (our entirely beloued friend) euen as vpon confidence of the premiſſes we haue thought good to grant vnto the marchants and ſubiects of our realme full authority to reſort vnto your dominions, ſo we doe in like maner graunt vnto your marchants and ſubiects free licence and liberty with their marchandiſes and goods ſecurely to come into our realmes and dominions, there to ſtay, and at their pleaſures thence to returne home. Moreouer, if Arnold Daſſel, who laſt of all preſented your foreſayd letters vnto vs, ſhal thinke good in the meane ſeaſon to make his abode here in our dominions (as in very deede it is expedient) he may both by ſerious conſideration and deliberate conſulting with our commiſſioners more conueniently and proſperouſly finde out wayes and meanes, for the more ſpeedy expedition of all the premiſſes. Fare ye well in Chriſt. Giuen vnder our priuie ſeale at our palace of Weſtminſter, the ſeuenth of March, in the yere of our lord 1408, according to the computation of the Church of England, and in the tenth yere of our reigne.

A motion for a perpetuall league.

A new concord concluded between king Henry the 4. and Vlricus de Iungingen Maſter generall of Pruſſia, in the yeare of our Lord 1409.

By this indenture or letters indented be it euidently knowen (for the perpetual memory of the matter) vnto all faithfull Chriſtians, that the noble & honourable perſonages Richard Merlowe Maior and citizen of London, Maſter Iohn Kington clerke, and William Askham citizen and Alderman of the ſame citie, the commiſſioners of the moſt ſoueraigne prince and lord, L. Henrie by the grace of God king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, and Tidericus de Longenthorpe knight, Lefardus de Hereford burgomaſter of Elbing, and Iohn Crolowe citizen of the citie of Dantzik, the procurators, commiſſioners, deputies and meſſengers of the right noble and religious perſonage Fr. Vlricus de Iungingen Maſter general of the order of the Dutch knights of S. Maries hoſpital of Ieruſalem, hauing in the names of the ſayd king and Maſter by vertue of the power on both parts committed vnto them, ſufficient authority, haue appointed and with one conſent agreed vpon all and ſingular the things vnderwritten.

Inprimis

1 Imprimis for the conſeruation of mutuall loue and wonted amitie, and for the tranquillitie of ſweete amiable peace, it is decreed and ordained, that all and ſingular the liege people & ſubiects of the Realme of England and the Marchants of the territories & dominions of the ſaid Realme and all other perſons of what ſtate or condition ſoeuer, ſhall and may ſafely and ſecurely as well by land as by water enter into the parts of Pruſſia; and there mutually conuerſe, and freely after the maner of Marchants exerciſe traffique as well with the Pruſſians as with others of what nation or qualitie ſoeuer, there alſo make their abode, and thence vnto their owne homes and dwelling places returne, and depart vnto any place whither and ſo often as they ſhall thinke good, as well by land as by water, with their goods, marchandize, and wares whatſoeuer: faithfully paying in the meane time all rights & cuſtomes due in regard of their ſaid wares and marchandize. Reſerued alwaies vnto the ſaid Maſter and his ſucceſſours all right and remedie ordained, granted, and vouchſafed in certaine obligations by our Lord the king, whereof mention ſhall be made in the articles following.

2 Item it is ordained, that all and ſingular the ſubiects of the ſaid Maſter generall and of his order, of what ſtate and condition ſoeuer, ſhall and may, as well by water as by land enter into the kingdome of England and into the territories and dominions thereof, and there mutually conuerſe, and freely after the maner of Marchants exerciſe traffique as well with all Engliſh people as with others of what nation or qualitie ſoeuer, and there alſo make their abode, and thence returne vnto their owne habitations and dwelling places, and to depart whither they will and as oft as they ſhall thinke good, as well by land as by water, with their goods, marchandize and wares whatſoeuer: truely paying in the meane time all rights and cuſtomes due in regard of their ſaid wares and Marchandize. Reſerued alwayes vnto the ſaid ſoueraigne king, his heires and ſucceſſours, all rights and remedies ordained and graunted vnto them in certaine obligations, by the commiſſioners and procurators of the ſaid Maſter generall aboue-named, and in the name of the ſaid Maſter generall.

3 Item it is with one conſent agreed vpon, promiſed, and graunted that for all and ſingular damages, grieuances, and robberies howſoeuer done and committed before the date of theſe preſents againſt the foreſaid ſoueraigne Prince and his ſubiects whatſoeuer, and all others which at the time of the grieuances, damages, and robberies aforeſaid, were, or at this preſent are the ſaid ſoueraigne king his ſubiects; there are due to be payed vnto the ſaid king or his ſucceſſours by the ſaid Maſter generall or his ſucceſſours, in full ſatiſfaction and recompence of the damages, grieuances, and robberies aboue-written, certaine ſummes of Engliſh money: euen as in the letters obligatorie made by the ſaid Maſter generall his procurators, and meſſengers aboue-named in this behalfe, and ſealed with their ſeales, and deliuered vnto the forenamed procurators and commiſſioners of our ſaid Lord the king it is expreſſed more at large.

4 Item it is couenanted, graunted, and promiſed, that no ſubiect of the ſaid Maſter generall or of his ſucceſſours, by reaſon or occaſion of the damages, grieuances, and robberies aforeſaid, ſhall, by the ſaid ſoueraigne king or his ſucceſſours, or by their authoritie or commandement, or by any other perſon whatſoeuer who in regard of the foreſaid loſſes, grieuances and robberies hath bene moleſted and damnified, or at the procurement or inſtant ſuite of any, be attached, arreſted, impriſoned, or detained; nor that the goods of the ſaid Maſter generall, or of his ſucceſſors, or of any of them, ſhalbe laid hold on, arreſted, or detained.

5 Item it is couenanted and ordained, that if any of the liege people and ſubiects of the ſayde Maſter generall or of his ſucceſſors ſhall, contrary to the forme of the concord and graunt next aboue-written, chance to be moleſted or endamaged: that then the foreſaid ſoueraigne Lord the King and his ſucceſſors the kings of England are bound to make full ſatiſfaction for all ſuch loſſes as the ſubiects of the ſaid Maſter generall or of his ſucceſſours or any of them ſhall for that cauſe haue vniuſtly ſuſtained, vnto the parties endamaged. Which thing, if the foreſaid ſoueraigne Prince, or his ſucceſſours in the Realme of England, being conueniently requeſted by the letters of the ſaid Maſter generall or of his ſucceſſours, ſhall refuſe to doe, that then after the terme of ſixe moneths immediatly following the ſaid deniall or refuſall, it ſhalbe right lawfull for the Maſter generall that now is and for any of his ſucceſſors in time to come (hauing firſt made conuenient proofe that the foreſaid requeſt was by him or them exhibited) to arreſt ſo many goods of the foreſaid king his ſubiects found in the land of Pruſſia, as may ſuffice for the reaſonable ſatiſfaction and recompenſe of any perſon or perſons whatſoeuer vniuſtly moleſted in this behalfe; and alſo to detaine the ſaid goods vnder arreſtes, vntill condigne ſatiſfaction and amends be made vnto the party or parties moleſted.

6 Item by the commiſſioners and procuratours often aboue-named it is couenanted, promiſed, and graunted, that for all and ſingular the damages, moleſtations, and robberies by the foreſayde ſoueraigne king his liege people & ſubiects howſoeuer before the date of theſe preſents committed and offred againſt the ſaid Maſter general or againſt any of his ſubiects whether Pruſſians or Liuonians, and againſt all others who at the time of the damages, grieuances & robberies aforeſaid were, or at this preſent are the ſubiects of the Maſter generall aforeſaid (except notwithſtanding certaine damages & grieuances hereafter to be mentioned, whereof alſo ſome prouiſoes ſhalbe had in the articles following, which damages were before yͤ date of theſe preſents by yͤ ſaid ſoueraigne king his liege people and ſubiects inflicted vpon certaine ſubiects of the foreſaid general Maſter, eſpecially them of Pruſſia which hereafter ſhalbe named) there are certaine ſummes of money due to be payed vnto the ſaid Maſter generall or vnto his ſucceſſors by the ſaid ſoueraigne Prince or his ſucceſſours for the full ſatiſfaction of the foreſaid damages, moleſtations and robberies inflicted vpon the Pruſſians and Liuonians, and the others aboue mentioned, euen as in the letters obligatorie of the ſaid ſoueraigne Lord the king made in this behalfe, being giuen and deliuered vnto the ſaid Maſter generall his procuratours and meſſengers, it is declared more at large.

7 Item, it is couenanted, graunted and promiſed, that none of the liege people or ſubiects of the foreſaid ſoueraigne prince or of his heires ſhall, by reaſon or occaſion of the damages, grieuances, and robberies aforeſaid, by the ſayd Maſter generall or his ſucceſſours or by their authoritie and commandement, or by any other who in reſpect of the ſaid damages, grieuances and robberies aboue mentioned, hath beene moleſted or damnified, or by any of their procurements or inſtant ſuites, ſhalbe attached, arreſted, impriſoned or detained; nor that any goods of the ſubiects of the ſaid ſoueraigne king or his heires or any of them, ſhall bee attached, arreſted, or detained. Reſerued alwayes vnto the forenamed Maſter generall and his ſubiects all right and remedie any way requiſite or competent vnto them by meanes of the obligations aforeſaid.

8 Item it is couenanted and agreed that if any of the liege people or ſubiects of the ſayde ſoueraigne prince or of his heires and ſucceſſours ſhall (contrary to the forme of concord and graunt next aboue-written) chaunce to bee moleſted or endamaged; that then the ſaide Maſter generall and his ſucceſſours, for all loſſes and hinderances which the liege people and ſubiects the foreſayde ſoueraigne prince or of his heires or ſucceſſours, ſhall by that meanes haue vniuſtly ſuſtained, are bound to make full ſatiſfaction vnto the partie endamaged. Which if the Maſter generall aforeſaid or his ſucceſſours being conueniently requeſted by the letters of the ſayde ſoueraigne prince or of his heires, ſhall refuſe to doe; that then, after the ſpace of ſixe monethes next enſuing the time of the foreſayde requeſt, it may bee right lawfull for the forenamed ſoueraigne prince that nowe is, or that then for that time ſhall be (conuenient proofe being firſt brought, that the foreſayd requeſt had conueniently beene exhibited) to arreſt ſo many goods of the ſayde Maſter generall his ſubiects founde in the Realme of England, as may ſuffice for the reaſonable ſatiſfaction and amends of any perſon or perſons vniuſtly moleſted in this behalfe; and alſo to detaine the ſayde goods vnder ſafe cuſtodie, vntill condigne ſatiſfaction and amends be made vnto the partie or parties aggrieued.

9 Item it is couenanted, that beſides the ſummes due vnto the ſayde Maſter generall and his ſucceſſours in the behalfe of his ſubiects both of Pruſſia and of Liuonia (whereof mention is made in the former Articles) there are due to bee payed vnto the ſayde Maſter generall and his ſucceſſours, for ſundry other damages, grieuances, and robberies againſt himſelfe and diuers other of his ſubiects of Pruſsia, namely Matthewe Ludekenſſon, Arnold Aſſhen, Henri Culeman, Iohn Vnkelkop, Iohn Halewater, Egghard Scoffe of Dantzik, and Nicolas Wolmerſtene of Elbing, done and committed by the ſayde ſoueraigne king his liege people and ſubiects vnder-written, euen before the date of theſe preſents, for the full ſatiſfaction of the ſayde damages, grieuances and robberies, certaine ſummes of nobles hereafter following. Namely Inprimis by Tutburie, and Teny of Hull, 82. nobles, which are due vnto yͤ foreſaid Matthew Ludekinſon. Item by Nicholas Scot of Caleis the ſonne of Tutbury, and Hilg of Hull, 256. nobles, which are due vnto the foreſayd Arnold de Aſchen. Item by the inhabitants of Scardeburgh, Blakeney, and Crowmer (who had one Iohn Iolly of Blakeney for their captaine) 156. nobles, which are due vnto Henrie Culeman aforeſayd. Item by the inhabitants of Bayon (Whoſe Capitaine was one Pideuille) 125. nobles which are due vnto the ſaid Iohn Vnkeltop. Item by the inhabitants of Plymmouth and Dertmouth (whoſe Captaines were Henry Pay, and William Gadeling) 600. nobles which are due vnto the foreſayde Iohn Halewater, in reſpect of his goods by them violently taken away. Item 334. nobles to be payed by the ſelfe ſame parties, being due vnto the ſayde Iohn Halewater by reaſon that they detained his ſhip from him three monethes and more, which ſhip was of the burthen of three hundreth tonnes of wine, and had in it all the foreſayde time fiue and fourtie ſeruants maintained at the expenſes of the ſayde Iohn Halewater. Item that Sir

A ſhip of the burthen of 300. Tonnes.

William de Echingham knight, who was Vice-admirall for the ſea, muſt bee ſummoned to alleage a reaſonable cauſe (for that the ſayd Sir William with his ſeruants expelled the ſaid Iohn Halewater out of his ſhip for the ſpace of fifteene dayes together, and tooke of the goods and victuals of the ſaid Iohn to the ſumme of 114. nobles) why he ought not to pay the ſaid ſumme of 114. nobles vnto Iohn Halewater aforeſaid: which if hee ſhall not bee willing nor able to alleage before the firſt of April next enſuing, that then by the kings authoritie hee muſt be compelled to pay vnto the foreſaid Iohn the ſaid 114 nobles. Item by the inhabitants of Caleis (whoſe captaines were Michael Scot, Biſhop, and William Horneby) 1900. nobles, which are due vnto the foreſayde Eggard Scoff, becauſe the ſaide ſoueraigne king hath giuen them in charge by the ſaid Michael Scot and the reſt concerning the payment of the ſumme aforeſaid. Item by Iohn Bilis neere vnto Crowmer, 68. nobles, which are due vnto Nicholas Wolmerſten of Elbing. Which ſummes of nobles muſt by the kings authoritie bee leuied at the hands of his ſubiects aboue-mentioned, betweene the time that nowe is and the feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed virgine which ſhall fall in the yeere of our Lord 1411. effectually to bee deliuered and payed vnto the ſayd Maſter generall or his lawfull procurator, or vnto his ſucceſſours or their lawfull procuratours, at the Citie of London, vpon the feaſt aforeſaid.

Item it is couenanted that beſides the ſummes ſpecified in the foreſayde letters obligatorie made in the behalfe of the ſaid ſoueraigne prince, there are due to be paied vnto one Iohn Marion of Werſingham lately deceaſed being in his life-time the liege ſubiect of the foreſaid ſoueraigne prince 200. nobles of Engliſh money in regard of certaine iniuries and robberies done and committed before the date of theſe preſents againſt the foreſayde Iohn; by one Eghard Scoff ſubiect vnto the ſaid Maſter generall, for the full ſatiſfaction of the ſaide damages and robberies to bee made vnto the ſaid deceaſed Iohn, his wife, children, heires or executors by the ſaid Egghard, his heires, or by the adminiſtrators of his goods at the time and place aboue-mentioned.

Item it is couenanted, confirmed, and promiſed, that for all the iniuries and robberies done and committed againſt one Iohn Dordewant of Elbing, being in his life time ſubiect vnto the ſayd Maſter generall, by the liege people and ſubiects of the ſaid ſoueraigne king the inhabitants of Scardeburgh before the date of theſe preſents; for the full recompenſe of all ſuch iniuries and robberies, there muſt bee payed vnto one Iohn Gruk of Dantzik eight hundred nobles of Engliſh money, vpon the feaſt of Eaſter next following in the Citie of London by them of Scardeburgh being guiltie and culpable in this behalfe; who are by definitiue ſentence condemned vnto the ſaid Iohn in the ſumme of 800. nobles by reaſon of the iniuries and robberies aforeſaid. Except the lawfull expenſes in this behalfe layed out: they are alſo taxed in due time for the iſſue. And therefore the foreſayde condemned parties (whoſe names are in the ſentence againſt them pronounced in this behalfe, more expreſly contained) muſt in the meane ſeaſon by the kings authoritie be compelled and conſtrained really and actually to obey the foreſaid ſentence, namely by deliuering and paying vnto Iohn Gruk the ſumme of 800. nobles at the time and place aboue mentioned, with reaſonable expences, wherein alſo the ſaid parties ſtand condemned, their lawfull taxation being reſerued. 10

Item it is couenanted and granted, that the heires of Lord Henrie de Percy the yonger after they ſhall come vnto lawfull age, and ſhall haue attained vnto the poſſeſſions and goods of their inheritance, muſt be compelled by the kings authoritie (iuſtice going before) to make ſatiſfaction vnto the great procurator of Marienburgh with the ſumme of 838. nobles in lieu of certaine corne and graine which the foreſaid Lord Henrie, in the yeere 1403, bought and receiued of the ſaid great procuratour, for the vſe of the caſtle of Zuchberwik. In teſtimonie and confirmation of all the which premiſſes, the ſaid Tedericus, Lefardus, and Iohn Crolow, of their certaine knowledges haue put their ſeales vnto theſe preſent letters indented, in the preſence of the aboue-named Richard Merlow, Iohn Kington, and William Askam, commiſſioners for the behalfe of England. Giuen at the Citie of London in England the fourth day of December, in the yeere of our Lord 1409.

Nota.

A Charter of King Henry the fourth graunted in the fift yeere of his reigne to the Engliſh Marchants reſident in the partes of Pruſsia, Denmarke, Norway, Sweden and Germanie for the chuſing of Gouernours among themſelues.

HEnry by the grace of God king of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland: to all to whom theſe preſent letters ſhall come, ſendeth greeting. Know ye, that whereas, according as we are informed, through want of good and diſcreete rule and gouernement, ſundry damages, ſtrifes, oppreſſions, and wrongs oftentimes heretofore haue bene moued and committed among the Marchants of our kingdome of England remaining in the parties of Pruſſia, Denmarke, Norway, the Hans ſteeds, and Sweden, and greater hereafter, which God forbid, are feared to be like to fall out, vnleſſe we put to our helping hands for the procuring of better gouernement to be maintained among the ſaid Marchants: wee heartily deſiring to preuent the perils and dangers which are like to fall out in this caſe, and that the ſayde Marchants and others which ſhall trauaile out of our ſaid Realme into the partes aforeſaid may iuſtly and faithfully be ruled and intreated, we will and graunt by the tenour of theſe preſents to the ſaid Marchants, that they may freely and without danger aſſemble and meete together as often and whenſoeuer they pleaſe in ſome conuenient and honeſt place where they ſhall thinke good, and that they may chooſe among themſelues certaine ſufficient and fit perſons for their gouernours in thoſe parts at their good liking. And furthermore we giue and graunt to the ſaid Gouernours which are in ſuch ſort to be choſen by the aforeſaid Marchants, as much as in vs lieth, ſpeciall power and authoritie to rule and gouerne all and ſingular the Engliſh Marchants which hereafter ſhall come or repayre to the parts aforeſaid by themſelues or their ſufficient Deputies, and to miniſter vnto them and euery of them in their cauſes and quarels whatſoeuer, which are ſprung vp or ſhall hereafter fall out among them in the parts aforeſaid full and ſpeedie iuſtice, and to reforme all maner of queſtions, contentions diſcords, and debates moued or to be moued betweene the Engliſh Marchants remayning in thoſe parts, and to ſeeke reformation, to redreſſe, appeaſe, and compound the ſame. And further to redreſſe, reſtore, repayre and ſatiſfie all tranſgreſſions, damages, miſpriſions, outrages, violences, and iniuries done or to be done by the aforeſaid Engliſh Marchants againſt the Marchants of thoſe parts: And to require, demaund and receiue the like reſtitutions, reparations, ſatiſfactions and amends of the Marchants of thoſe parts or of their deputies. And by the common conſent of the aforeſaid Engliſh Marchants to make and eſtabliſh ſtatutes, ordinances, and cuſtomes, as ſhall ſeeme expedient in that behalfe for the better gouernement of the ſtate of the ſaid Engliſh Marchants: and to puniſh with reaſon according to the quantitie of their fault in that behalfe all and ſingular the Engliſh Marchants which ſhall withſtand, reſiſt or diſobey the aforeſaid gouernours ſo to be choſen or their deputies, or any of them; or any of the aforeſaid ſtatutes, ordinances, or cuſtomes. Moreouer we doe ratifie, confirme, and approoue, and as ratified, confirmed, and approoued, wee command firmely and inuiolably there to be obſerued all iuſt, and reaſonable ſtatutes, ordinances, and cuſtomes which ſhalbe made and eſtabliſhed by the ſaid gouernours, ſo to be choſen, in forme aforeſaid, and alſo all iuſt and reaſonable ordinances made & eſtabliſhed by the late gouernours of the aforeſaid Engliſh Marchants with the common conſent of the ſayd Marchants for this their gouernement in the parts aforeſayd, according to the priuileges and authorities now granted vnto them by the Maſter of Pruſſia, or other Lords of the partes aforeſayd, or which ſhall be made and eſtabliſhed by the aforeſayd gouernours now as is mentioned to be choſen according to the aforeſaid priuileges heretofore graunted, or other priuileges hereafter to bee granted to the ſayde Engliſh Marchants by the aforeſayde Maſter and lords of the Countrey. And furthermore by the tenor of theſe preſents wee ſtraitely commaund all and ſingular the aforeſaid Engliſh Marchants, that they attend, aduiſe, obey and aſſiſt, as it becommeth them, the ſayde gouernours ſo to bee choſen, and their deputies in all and ſingular the premiſſes, and other things, which any way may concerne in this behalfe their rule and gouernement. A note touching the mighty ſhips of King Henry the fift, mentioned hereafter in the treatie of keeping the Sea, taken out of a Chronicle in the Trinitie Church of Wincheſter.

A branch of a Statute made in the eight yeere of Henry the ſixt, for the trade to Norwey, Sweueland, Denmarke, and Fynmarke.

ITem becauſe that the kings moſt deare Vncle, the king of Denmarke, Norway & Sweueland, as the ſame our ſoueraigne Lord the king of his intimation hath vnderſtood, conſidering the manifold & great loſſes, perils, hurts and damage which haue late happened aſwell to him and his, as to other forraines and ſtrangers, and alſo friends and ſpeciall ſubiects of our ſaid ſoueraigne Lord the king of his Realme of England, by yͤ going in, entring & paſſage of ſuch forrain & ſtrange perſons into his realme of Norwey & other dominions, ſtreits, territories, iuriſdictions & places ſubdued and ſubiect to him, ſpecially into his Iles of Fynmarke, and elſwhere, aſwell in their perſons as their things and goods: for eſchuing of ſuch loſſes, perils, hurts & damages, and that ſuch like (which God forbid) ſhould not hereafter happen: our ſaid ſoueraigne Lord the king hath ordeined and ſtatuted, that all and ſingular ſtrangers, aſwell Engliſhmen and others willing to apply by Ship and come into his Realme of Norwey and other dominions, ſtreits, territories, iuriſdictions, Iles & places aforeſaid with their ſhips, to the intent to get or haue fiſh or any other Marchandiſes, or goods, ſhall apply and come to his Towne of Northberne, where the ſaid king of Denmarke hath ſpecially ordained and ſtabliſhed his ſtaple for the concourſes of ſtrangers and ſpecially of Engliſhmen, to the exerciſe of ſuch Marchandiſes: granting to the ſaid Engliſhmen that they ſhall there inioy in and by all things the ſame fauour, priuileges and prerogatiues which they of the Hans did enioy. Therefore our ſaid ſoueraigne Lord the king willing the loue, affinitie and amities to be firmely obſerued, which betwixt his ſaid Vncle and his noble progenitors of good memory, their Realmes, lands, dominions, ſtreites, territories, iuriſdictions and their ſaid places, and the ſame our ſoueraigne Lord the king & his noble progenitours of famous memory, his great men, ſubiects, Realmes, lands & dominions hath bene of old times hitherto continued, nor nothing by our ſaid ſoueraigne Lord the king or his people to be attempted or done whereby ſuch amities by reaſon of any diſſenſions, enemities or diſcords might be broken: by the aduiſe of the Lords ſpirituall & temporall & of the cōmons of his ſaid Realme of England, aſſembled in this preſent Parliament, hath ordained, prohibiting that none of his liege people nor ſubiects of his Realme of England by audacitie of their follie preſume to enter the Realmes, lands, dominions, ſtraits, territories, iuriſdictions & places of the ſaid king of Denmarke againſt yͤ ordinance, prohibition & interdictiō of yͤ ſame his Vncle aboue remembred, & in contempt of the ſame, vpō paine of forfeiture of all their moueable goods & impriſonment of their perſons at the kings will.

Another branch of a ſtatute made in the tenth yeere of the reigne of Henry the ſixt concerning the ſtate of the Engliſh Marchants in the dominions of the king of Denmarke.

ITem becauſe that our ſoueraigne Lord the king at the grieuous complaint to him made in this Parliament by the commons of his realme of England being in this Parliament is informed, that many of his faithfull liege people be greatly impoueriſhed, vndone, & in point to be deſtroyed by the king of Denmarke & his lieges, which be of the amitie of the king our ſoueraigne Lord, becauſe that they do daily take of his ſaid faithful ſubiects their goods, ſo that they haue taken of marchants of York and Kingſton vpon Hul goods & marchandiſes to the valour of v.M.li. within a yeere, and of other lieges & marchants of yͤ Realme of England goods & cattals to the valour of xx.M.li. whereof they haue no remedie of the ſaid king of Denmarke, nor of none other, foraſmuch as none of them cōmeth within the Realme of England, nor nothing haue in the ſame Realme of England, & that yͤ goods be taken out of the ſame Realme: The king willing to prouide remedy for his ſaid liege people, hath ordeined & eſtabliſhed, that if yͤ goods of any of yͤ ſaid his lieges be or ſhalbe taken by the ſaid king of Denmarke or any of his ſaid lieges, the keeper of the priuie ſeale for yͤ time being, ſhall haue power to make to yͤ partie grieued letters of requeſt vnder the priuie ſeale, without any other purſuite to be made to any for reſtitution to be had of yͤ goods ſo taken & to be taken. And if reſtitution be not made by ſuch letters, the king our ſoueraigne lord by the aduiſe of his counſel ſhal prouide to the partie grieued his couenable remedy, according as yͤ caſe requireth.

Here beginneth the Prologue of the proceſſe of the Libel of Engliſh policie, exhorting all England to keepe the ſea, and namely the narrowe ſea: ſhewing what profite commeth thereof, and alſo what worſhip and ſaluation to England, and to all Engliſh-men.

Incipit liber de cuſtodia Maris præſertim arcti inter Doueram & Caliſiam.

The true proceſſe of Engliſh policie
Of vtterward to keepe this regne in
Of our England, that no man may deny,
Ner ſay of ſooth but it is one of the beſt,
Is this, that who ſeeth South, North, Eaſt and Weſt,
Cheriſh Marchandiſe, keepe the admiraltie;
That we bee Maſters of the narrowe ſee.

Sigiſmond died 1438. He was here 1416. Videns imperator Sigiſmundus duas villas inter cæteras Angliæ ſcilicet Caliſiam & Doueriam, ponens ſuos duos digitos ſuper duos ſuos oculos, ait regi: Frater, cuſtodite iſtas duas villas ſicut duos veſtros oculos.

For Sigiſmond the great Emperour,
Which yet reigneth, when he was in this land
With king Henry the fift, Prince of honour,
Here much glory, as him thought, he found,
A mightie land which had take in hand
To werre in France, and make mortalitie,
And euer well kept round about the ſee.

And to the king thus hee ſayd: My brother,
(When hee perceiued two Townes Calais and Douer)
Of all your Townes to chuſe of one and other,
To keepe the ſea and ſoone to come ouer
To werre outwards and your regne to recouer:
Keepe theſe two Townes ſure, and your Maieſtie
As your tweyne eyne: ſo keepe the narrowe ſee.

For if this ſea bee kept in time of werre,
Who can heere paſſe without danger and woe?
Who may eſcape, who may miſchiefe differre?
What Marchandie may forby bee agoe?
For needs hem muſt take trewes euery foe:
Flanders and Spaine, and other, truſt to mee,
Or ellis hindred all for this Narrow ſee.

The Noble was coined by Edward the third Anno regni 18. Quatuor conſiderantur in moneta aurea Angliæ, quæ dicitur Nobile: ſcilicet Rex, Nauis, gladius, & Mare: Quæ deſignant poteſtatem Anglicorum ſuper Mare. In quorum opprobrium his diebus Britones minores & Flandrenſes & alij dicunt Anglicis: Tollite de veſtro Nobile nauem & imponite ouem. Intendentes, quod ſicut quondam à tempore Edwardi tertij Anglici erant domini Maris, modo his diebus ſunt vecordes, victi, & ad bellandum & Mare obſeruandum velut oues.

Therefore I caſt mee by a litle writing
To ſhewe at eye this concluſion,
For conſcience and for mine acquiting
Againſt God and ageyne abuſion,
And cowardiſe, and to our enemies confuſion.
For foure things our Noble ſheweth to me,
King, Ship, and Swerd, and power of the ſee.

Where ben our ſhips, where ben our ſwerds become?
Our enemies bed for the ſhip ſet a ſheepe.
Alas our rule halteth, it is benome.
Who dare well ſay that lordſhip ſhould take keepe?
I will aſſay, though mine heart ginne to weepe,
To doe this werke, if wee will euer thee,
For very ſhame to keepe about the ſee.

Shall any Prince, what ſo be his name,
Which hath Nobles moch leche ours,
Bee Lord of ſee: and Flemings to our blame,
Stop vs, take vs, and ſo make fade the flowers
Of Engliſh ſtate, and diſteyne our honours?
For cowardiſe alas it ſhould ſo bee.
Therefore I ginne to write nowe of the ſee.

Of the commodities of Spaine and of Flanders. The firſt Chapter.

Figges, Raiſins,
Wine,
Baſtard,
Dates,
Lycoras,
Ciuil Oyle,
Graynes,
White Paſtel,
Sope,
Waxe,
Iron,
Wadmolle,
Gotefell,
Kidfell,
Saffron, Quickeſiluer.

KNowe well all men that profits in certaine
Commodities called comming out of Spaine
And Marchandie, who ſo will weete what it is,
Bene Figs, Raiſins, wine Baſtard, and Datis,
And Licoris, Siuill oyle, and graine,
White Paſtill Sope, and Waxe is not vayne.
Yron, Wooll, Wadmolle, Gotefell, Kidfell alſo:
For Poynt-makers full needefull bene they twoo:
Saffron, Quickeſiluer, which owne Spaine Marchandy,
Is into Flanders ſhipped full craftily,
Unto Bruges as to her ſtaple fayre:
The Hauen of Scluſe hir Hauen for her repayre
Wich is cleped Swyn tho ſhippes giding:
Where many veſſels and fayre are abiding.
But theſe Marchandes with their ſhippes great,
And ſuch chaffare as they bye and get
By the weyes muſt nede take on hand
By the coaſts to paſſe of our England,
Betwixt Douer and Caleis, this is no doubt.
Who can well els ſuch matter bring about?

And when theſe ſayd Marchants diſcharged bee
Of Marchandie in Flanders neere the ſee,
Then they bee charged againe with Marchandy,
That to Flanders bougeth full richly.
Fine cloth of Ypre that named is better than ours,
Cloth of Curtrike, fine cloth of all colours,
Much Fuſtian, and alſo Linen cloth.
But Flemings, if yee bee not wroth,
The great ſubſtance of your cloth at the full
Yee wot ye make it of our Engliſh wooll.

Flemiſh cloth made of Engliſh Wooll.

Then may it not ſinke in mannis brayne,
But that it muſt this Marchandy of Spaine
Both out and in by our coſtes paſſe:
Hee that ſayd nay in witte was like an aſſe.
Wee ſhould haue peace with the grounds tweyne
Thus if this ſee were kept, I dare well ſayne.
For Spaine and Flanders is as eche other brother,
And nether may well liue without other:
They may not liuen to maintaine their degrees,
Without our Engliſh commodities:

The neceſſarie connection of Spaine and Flanders.

Wolle and Tynne: for the wolle of England
Suſteineth the Commons Flemings I underſtand,
Then if England ſhould her wolle reſtraine
From Flanders, this followeth in certaine,
Flanders of nede muſt with us haue peace,
Or els ſhee is deſtroyed without lees.
Alſo if Flanders thus deſtroyed bee:
Some Marchandy of Spaine will neuer ythee:
For deſtroyed it is, and as in cheeffe
The wolle of Spaine it commeth not to preeffe,
But if it be coſted and menged well
Amongſt the Engliſh wolle the greter delle.
For Spaniſh wooll in Flaunders drayed is,
And euer hath bee, that men haue minde of this:

And yet Wooll is one of the chiefe Marchandy
That longeth to Spaine: who ſo will eſpie,
It is of little value, truſt unto mee,
With Engliſh wooll but if it menged bee,
Thus if the ſea be kept, than herken hether,
If theſe two lands comen not together:
So that the Fleete of Flanders paſſe nought
That in the narrowe ſee it be not brought Into the Rochelle to fetch the fumoſe wine,
Ner into Bytonuſe Bay for ſalt ſo fine,
What is then Spaine? What is Flanders alſo?
As who ſayd, nought, the thrift is agoe.
For the little land of Flanders is
But a ſtaple to other lands ywiſt
And all that groweth in Flanders graine and ſeede
May not a Moneth finde hem meate and brede,
What hath then Flanders, bee Flemings liefe or loth,
But a little Mader and Flemiſh Cloth:
By Drapering of our wooll in ſubſtance
Liuen her commons, this is her gouernance,
Without wich they may not liue at eaſe.
Thus muſt hem ſterue, or wich vs muſt haue peace.

Of the commodities of Portugal.

The ſecond Chapter.

Wine, Oſey, Waxe, Graine, Figs, Reiſins, Hony, Cordeweyne, Dates, Salt, Hides.

The Marchandy alſo of Portugal
By diuers lands turne into ſale.
Portugalers with vs haue trouth in hand:
Whoſe Marchandy commeth much into England.
They ben our friends, with their commodities,
And wee Engliſh paſſen into their countreys.
Her land hath wine, Oſey, Waxe, and Graine,
Figges, Reyſins, Hony and Cordoweyne:
Dates, and Salt, Hides, and ſuch Marchandy:
And if they would to Flanders paſſe for by,
They ſhould not bee ſuffred ones ner twyes,
For ſupporting of our cruell enemies,
That is to ſay Flemings with her gyle:
For changeable they are in little while.
Then I conclude by reaſons many moe,
If we ſuffred neither friend nor foe,
What ſo enemies, and ſo ſupporting
Paſſe for by vs in time of werring,
Seth our friends will not ben in cauſe
Of our hindring, if reſon leue this clauſe:
Then nede from Flanders peace bee to vs ſought,
And other lands ſhould ſeeke peace, dout nought:
For Flanders is Staple, as men tell mee,
To all nations of Chriſtianitie.

Note well.

The commodities of pety Britaine, with her Rouers on the ſea.

The third Chapter.

Furthermore to write I am faine
Somewhat ſpeaking of the little Britayne.
Commoditie thereof there, is and was,

Salt, and wine, creſt cloth and cannas.
And the land of Flaunders ſickerly
Is the ſtaple of their Marchandy.
Wich Marchandie may not paſſe away
But by the coaſt of England, this is no nay.
And of this Britaine, who ſo trueth louis,
Are the greateſt rouers and the greateſt theuis,
That haue bene in the ſea many one yeeres
That our Marchants haue bought full dere.
For they haue tooke notable goods of ours,
On this ſide ſee, theſe falſe pelours
Called of Saincte Malo, and ellis where:
Wich to their Duke none obeyſance will bere:
With ſuch colours wee haue bee hindred ſore.
And fayned peace is called no werre herefore.
Thus they haue bene in diuers coaſts many
Of our England, more then rehearſe can I:
In Norfolke coaſtes, and other places about,
And robbed and brent and ſlaine by many a rowte:
And they haue alſo ranſomed Towne by Towne:
That into the regnes of boſt haue run her ſowne:
Wich hath bin ruth vnto this Realme and ſhame:
They that the ſea ſhould keepe are much to blame.
For Britayne is of eaſie reputation;
And Saincte Malo turneth hem to reprobation.

The Britons great Rouers and Theeues.

A ſtorie of Edward the third his ordinance for Britayne.

Hiſtoria oſtendens quam ordinationem Rex Edwardus tertius fecit contra deprædatores marinos Britanniæ minoris, ad debellandum eos & ſubiugandum Britannos minores.

HEre bring I in a ſtorie to mee lent,
That a good Squire in time of Parliament
Tooke vnto mee well written in a ſcrowe;
That I haue commond both with high and lowe,
Of which all men accorden into one,
That it was done not many yeeres agone.
But when noble King Edward the third
Reigned in grace, right thus it betyd.
For hee had a maner geloſie
To his Marchants and loued them hartily.
He feld the weyes to rule well the ſee,
Whereby Marchants might haue proſperitee.
That for Harflew Houndflew did he maken;
And great werre that time were vndertaken, betwixt the King and the Duke of Britayne:
At laſt to fall to peace both were they fayne:
Vpon the wich made with conuencion
Our Marchants made hem readie bowne
Toward Britayne to loade their Marchandie,
Wening hem friends they went foorth boldly:
But ſoone anon our Marchants were ytake,
And wee ſpedde neuer the better for truce ſake.
They loſt her good, her nauy and ſpending:
But their complaint came vnto the king.
Then wext he wroth, and to the Duke he ſent,
And complained that ſuch harme was hent;
By conuention and peace made ſo refuſed:
Wich Duke ſent againe, and him excuſed,
Rehearſing that the mount of Saincte Michael,

And Sainct Malo would neuer a dell
Be ſubiect vnto his gouernance,
Nor be vnder his obeyſance:
And ſo they did withouten him that deede,
But when the king anon had taken heede:
Hee in his herte ſet a iudgement,
Without calling of any Parliament,
Or greate tarry to take long aduiſe
To fortifie anon he did deuiſe
Of Engliſh Townes three, that is to ſay,
Dertmouth, Plymouth, the third it is Fowey:
And gaue hem helpe and notable puiſance
With inſiſtence ſet them in gouernance
Vpon pety Bretayne for to werre.
Thoſe good ſea men would no more differre,
But bete hem home and made they might not rowte,
Tooke priſoners, and made them for to lowte.
And efte the Duke, an enſample wiſe,
Wrote to the king as he firſt did deuiſe,
Him excuſing: But our men wood
With great power paſſed ouer the floode
And werred foorth into the Dukes londe,
And had ny deſtroyed free and bond.
But than the Duke knewe that the townes three Should haue loſt all his natiue Countrie,
He vndertooke by ſuretie true not falſe,
For mount Michael and Saincte Malo als,
And other parties of the litle Brytaine,
Which to obey, as ſayd was, were not fayne.
The Duke hymſelfe for all did vndertake:
With all his herte a full peace did hee make:
So that in all the life time of the king,
Marchants had peace withouten werring:

Statutum Regis Edwardi tertij pro Lombardis.

He made a ſtatute for Lombards in this land,
That they ſhould in noe wiſe take on hande
Here to inhabite, here to chardge and diſchardge
But fortie dayes, no more time had they large.
This good king by witte of ſuch appreiſſe Kept his Marchants and the ſea from miſchiefe.

Of the commodities of Scotland and draping of her wolles in Flanders. The fourth Chapiter.

MOreouer of Scotland the commodities
Are Felles, Hides, and of Wooll the Fleeſe.
And all theſe muſt paſſe by vs away
Into Flanders by England, ſooth to ſay.
And all her woolle was draped for to ſell
In the Townes of Poperinge and of Bell;
Which my Lord of Gloceſter with ire
For her falſhed ſet vpon a fire.
And yet they of Bell and Poperinge
Could neuer drape her wooll for any thing,
But if they had Engliſh wooll withall.
Our goodly wooll which is ſo generall
Needefull to them in Spaine and Scotland als,
And other coſtes, this ſentence is not falſe:
Yee worthy Marchants I doe it vpon you,

Anno Domini 1436. Hen. 6. 14.

I haue this learned ye wot well where and howe:
Ye wotte the Staple of that Marchandie,
Of this Scotland is Flaunders ſekerly.
And the Scots bene charged knowen at the eye,
Out of Flanders with little Mercerie,
And great plentie of Haberdaſhers Ware,
And halfe her ſhippes with cart wheeles bare,
And with Barrowes are laden as in ſubſtance:
Thus moſt rude ware are in her cheueſance,
So they may not forbeare this Flemiſh land.
Therefore if wee would manly take in hand,
To keepe this Sea from Flanders and from Spaine,
And from Scotland, like as from pety Britaine,
Wee ſhould right ſoone haue peace for all her boſts,
For they muſt needes paſſe by our Engliſh coſts.

Of the commodities of Pruce, and High Dutch men, and Eaſterlings. The fifth Chapitle.

Nowe goe foorth to the commodities,
That commeth from Pruce in two maner degrees.
For two maner people haue ſuch vſe,
That is to ſay, High Duch men of Pruſe,
And Eſterlings, which might not be forborne,
Out of Flanders, but it were verely lorne.
For they bring in the ſubſtance of the Beere,
That they drinken feele too good chepe, not dere.
Yee haue heard that two Flemings togider
Will vndertake or they goe any whither,
Or they riſe once to drinke a Ferkin full,
Of good Beerekin: ſo ſore they hall and pull,
Vnder the board they piſſen as they ſit:
This commeth of couenant of a worthie wit.
Without Caleis in their Butter they cakked
When they fled home, and when they leyſure lacked
To holde their ſiege, they went like as a Doe:
Well was that Fleming that might truſſe, and goe.
For feare they turned backe and hyed faſt,
My Lord of Glocester made hem ſo agaſt
With his comming, and ſought hem in her land,
And brent and ſlowe as he had take on hand:
So that our enemies durſt not bide, nor ſtere,
They fled to mewe, they durſt no more appeare,
Rebuked ſore for euer ſo ſhamefully,
Vnto her vtter euerlaſting villanie.

Nowe Beere and Bakon bene fro Pruſe ybrought
Into Flanders, as loued and farre yſought:
Oſmond, Copper, Bow-ſtaues, Steele, and Were,
Peltreware and grey Pitch, Terre, Board, and flexe:
And Colleyne threed, Fuſtian and Canuas,
Card, Bukeram: of olde time thus it was.
But the Flemings among theſe things dere,
In common louen beſt Bakon and Beere.
Alſo Pruſe men maken her aduenture
Of Plate of ſiluer of wedges good and ſure
In great plentie which they bring and bye,
Out of the lands of Beame and Hungarie:
Which is increaſe full great vnto their land,
And they bene laden, I vnderſtand,

Pitch, Tarre, Board, Flexe, Collein threed, Fuſtian, Canuas, Cardes, Bukeram, Siluer-plate, Wedges of ſiluer and Mettall.

With wollen cloth all maner of colours
By dyers crafted full diuers, that ben ours.
And they aduenture full greatly vnto the Bay,
For ſalt that is needefull withouten nay.
Thus if they would not our friends bee,
We might lightly ſtoppe hem in the ſee:
They ſhould not paſſe our ſtreemes withouten leue,
It would not be, but if we ſhould hem greue.

Of the commodities of the Genuoys and her great Caracks. Chap. 6.

The Genuois comen in ſundry wiſes
Into this land with diuers marchandiſes
In great Caracks, arrayed withouten lacke
With cloth of gold, ſilke, and pepper blacke
Or, Woad. They bring with them, and of crood great plentee,
Woll Oyle, Woad aſhen, by veſſel in the ſee,
Cotton, Rochalum, and good gold of Genne.
And then be charged with wolle againe I wenne,
And wollen cloth of ours of colours all.
And they aduenture, as ofte it doth befall,
Into Flanders with ſuch things as they bye,
That is their chefe ſtaple ſekerly:
And if they would be our full enemies,
They ſhould not paſſe our ſtremes with marchandiſe.

The comodities and nicetees of the Venetians and Florentines, with their Gallees. Chap. 7.

The great Galees of Venice and Florence
Be well laden with things of complacence,
All ſpicery and of groſſers ware:
With ſweete wines all maner of chaffare,
Apes, and Iapes, and marmuſets tayled,
Niſles and trifles that little haue auayled:
And things with which they fetely blere our eye:
With things not induring that we bye.
For much of this chaffare that is waſtable
Might be forborne for dere and deceiuable,
And that I wene as for infirmities
In our England are ſuch commodities
Withouten helpe of any other lond
Which by witte and practiſe both yfound:
That all humors might be voyded ſure,
Which that we gleder with our English cure:
That we ſhould haue no neede of Scamonie,
Turbit, enforbe, correct Diagredie,
Rubarbe, Sene, and yet they ben to needefull,
But I know things al ſo ſpeedefull,
That growen here, as thoſe things ſayd,
Let of this matter no man be diſmayde;
But that a man may voyde infirmitie
Without degrees fet fro beyond the ſea.
And yet they ſhould except be any thing
It were but ſugre, truſt to my ſaying:
He that truſteth not to my ſaying and ſentence,
Let him better ſearch experience,
In this matter I will not ferther preaſe,
Who ſo not beleeueth, let him leaue and ceaſe.

Thus theſe galeys for this licking ware,
And eating ware, bare hence our beſt chaffare:
Cloth, woll, and tinne, which as I ſayd before,
Out of this lond worſt might be forbore,
For ech other land of neceſſitie
Haue great neede to buy ſome of them three:
And we receiue of hem into this coſte
Ware and chaffare that lightly wilbe loſte,
And would Ieſus, that our Lordis wold
Conſider this well both yong and old:
Namely old that haue experience,
That might the yong exhorte to prudence;
What harme, what hurt, and what hinderance
Is done to vs, vnto our great grieuance,
Of ſuch lands, and of ſuch nations:
As experte men know by probations,
By writings as diſcouered our counſailes,
And falſe colour alwaies the countertailes
Of our enimies; that doth vs hindering
Vnto our goods, our Relme, and to the king:
As wiſe men haue ſhewed well at eye;
And all this is couloured by marchandye.

An example of deceite.

ALſo they bere the gold out of this land,
And ſucke the thrift away out of our hand:
As the Waſpe ſouketh honie fro the bee,
So miniſheth our commoditee.
Now wol ye here how they in Cotteſwold
Were wont to borrow or they ſhold be ſold
Her woll good as for yere and yere.
Of cloth and tinne they did in like manere:
And in her galies ſhip this marchandie:
Then ſoone at Venice of them men woll it bye.
Then vtterne there the chaffare by the peiſe,
And lightly als there they make her reiſe,
And when the goods beene at Venice ſold,
Then to carie her change they this money haue,
They will it profer, their ſubtiltie to ſaue,
To Engliſh marchants to yeue it out by eſchange
To be payed againe they make not ſtrange,
At the receiuing and ſight of a letter,
Here in England, ſeeming for the better,
by foure pence leſſe in the noble round:
That is twelue pence in the golden pound.
And if wee wol haue of payment
A full moneth, than muſt him needes aſſent
To eight pence loſſe, that is ſhillings twaine
In the Engliſh pound; as eft ſoone againe,
For two moneths twelue pence muſt he pay.
In the Engliſh pound what is that to ſay,
But ſhillings three? So that in pound fell
For hurt and harme hard is with hem to dwell.
And when Engliſh marchants haue content
This eſchange in England of aſſent,
That theſe ſayd Venecians haue in woone
And Florentines to bere her gold ſoone
Ouer the ſee into Flanders againe:
And thus they liue in Flanders, ſooth to ſaine,
And in London with ſuch cheuiſance,
That men call vſury, to our loſſe and hinderance.

Another example of deceite.

NOw leſten well how they made vs a valeys
When they borowed at the town of Calcis
As they were wont, their woll that was hem lent,
For yere and yere they ſhould make payment.
And ſometime als two yere and two yeare.
Or, loue.
This was fayre ‖ loue: but yet will ye heare,
How they to Bruges would her woll carie,
And for hem take payment withouten tarie,
And ſell it faſt for ready money in hand,
For fifty pounds of money of loſſe they wold not wond
In a thouſand pound, and liue thereby
Till the day of payment eaſily,
Come againe in exchange : making
Full like vſury, as men make vndertaking.
Than whan this payment of a thouſand pound
Was well content, they ſhould haue chaffare ſound
If they wold fro the Staple full,
Receiue againe three thouſand pound in woll.
In Cotteſwold alſo they ride about,
And all England, and buy withouten doubte
What them liſt with freedome and franchiſe,
More then we Engliſh may gitten many wiſe.
But would God that without lenger delayes
Theſe galees were vnfraught in fortie dayes,
And in fortie dayes charged againe,
And that they might be put to certaine
To goe to oſte, as we there with hem doe.
It were expedient that they did right ſoe,
As we doe there. If the king would it:
Ah what worſhip wold fall to Engliſh wit:
What profite alſo to our marchandie
Which wold of nede be cheriſhed hertilie:
Note diligently
For I would witte, why now our nauie fayleth,
When manie a foe vs at our doore aſſayleth.
Now in theſe dayes, that if there come a nede,
A woful complaint of lacke of nauie if need come.
What nauie ſhould we haue it is to drede.
In Denmarke were full noble conquerours
In time paſt, full worthy warriours:
A ſtorie of deſtruction of Denmarke for deſtruction of their marchants.
Which when they had their marchants deſtroyed,
To pouerty they fell, thus were they noyed:
And ſo they ſtand at miſchiefe at this day.
This learned I late well writon, this no nay.
Therefore beware, I can no better will,
If grace it woll, of other mennis perill.
For if marchants were cheriſhed to her ſpeede,
We were not likely to fayle in any neede,
If they be rich, then in proſperitee
Shalbe our londe, lords, and commontee,
And in worſhip. Now thinke I on the ſonne
The prayſe of Richard of Whitingdon marchant.
Of marchandy Richard of Whitingdon;
That load ſterre, and chiefe choſen floure:
What hath by him our England of honour,
And what profite hath bin of his riches,
And yet laſteth dayly in worthines:
That pen and paper may not me ſuffice
Him to deſcribe: ſo high he was of price

Aboue marchants, that ſet him one of the beſt:
I can no more, but God haue him in reſt.

Now the principal matter.

What reaſon is it that we ſhould goe to oſte
In their countries, & in this Engliſh coſte
They ſhould not ſo: but haue more liberty
Then we our ſelues now alſo motte I thee.
I would to gifts men ſhould take no heede
That letteth our thing publicke for to ſpeede.
For this we ſee well euery day at eye,
Gifts and feſts ſtopen our policie.
Now ſee that fooles ben either they or wee:
But euer we haue the worſe in this countree.
Therefore let hem vnto oſte go here,
Or be we free with hem in like manere
In their countrees: and if it will not bee,
Compell them vnto oſte, and yee ſhall ſee
Moch auantage, and moch profite ariſe,
Moch more then I can write in any wiſe.

Of our charge and diſcharge at her marts.

COnceiue wel here, that Engliſhmen at martes
Be diſcharged, for all her craftes and artes,
In Brabant of her marchandy
In fourteene dayes, and ageine haſtily
In the ſame dayes fourteene acharged eft.
And if they bide lenger all is bereft,
Anon they ſhould forfeit her goods all,
Or marchandy: it ſhould no better fall.
And we to martis in Brabant charged beene
With Engliſh cloth full good and fayre to ſeene:
We ben againe charged with mercerie,
Haburdaſher ware, and with groſſerie:
To which marts, that Engliſh men call fayres,
Ech nation oft maketh her repayres:
Engliſh, and French, Lombards, Ieunoyes,
Catalones, thedre they take her wayes:
Scots, Spaniards, Iriſhmen there abides,
With great plenty bringing of ſale hides.
And I here ſay that we in Brabant bye,
Flanders and Zeland more of marchandy
In common vſe then done all other nations:
This haue I heard of marchants relations:
And if the Engliſh ben not in the marts
They ben feeble, and as nought bene her parts.
For they bye more, and fro purſe put out
More marchandie then all the other rowte.
Kept then the ſee, ſhippes ſhould not bring ne fetch,
And then the carreys wold not thider ſtretch:
And ſo thoſe marts wold full euill thee,
If we manly kept about the ſee.

Of the commodities of Brabant and Zeland and Henauld and marchandy carried by land to the martes. Cap. 8.

YEt marchandy of Brabant and Zeland
Madre, Woad — The Madre and Woad, that dyers take on hand

To

Garlicke, Onions, ſaltfiſh.

To dyen with, Garlike and Onions,
And ſaltfiſhe als for huſband and commons.
But they of Holland at Caleis byen our felles,
And wolles our, that Engliſhmen hem ſelles.
And the chaffare that Engliſhmen doe byen
In the marts, that noe man may denien,
Is not made in Brabant that cuntree:
It commeth from out of Henauld, not by ſee,
But al by land, by carts, and from France,
Bourgoyne, Colein, Cameret in ſubſtance,
Therefore at marts if there be a reſtraint,
Men ſeyne plainely that liſt no fables paynt,
If Engliſhmen be withdrawen away,
Is great rebuke and loſſe to her affray:
As though we ſent into the land of France
Ten thouſand people, men of good puiſſance,
To werre vnto her hindring multifarie,
So ben our Engliſh marchants neceſſarie.
If it be thus aſſay, and we ſhall witten
Of men experte, by whom I haue this written.
For ſayd is that this carted marchandy
Draweth in value as much verily,
As all the goods that come in ſhippes thider,
Which Engliſhmen bye moſt and bring it hither.
For her marts ben febel, ſhame to ſay,
But Engliſhmen thider dreſſe her way.

What our marchants bye in that coſte more then all other.

A conclusion of this depending of keeping of the ſea.

Than I conclude, if neuer ſo much by land
Were by carres brought vnto their hand,
If well the ſea were kept in gouernance
They ſhould by ſea haue no deliuerance.
Wee ſhould hem ſtop, and we ſhould hem deſtroy,
As priſoners we ſhould hem bring to annoy.
And ſo we ſhould of our cruell enimies
Make our friends for feare of marchandies,
If they were not ſuffered for to paſſe
Into Flanders. But we be frayle as glaſſe
And alſo brittle, not thought neuer abiding;
But when grace ſhineth ſoone are we ſliding;
We will it not receiue in any wiſe:
That maken luſt, enuie, and couetiſe:
Expone me this; and yee ſhall ſooth it find,
Bere it away, and keepe it in your mind.
Then ſhuld worſhip vnto our Noble bee
In feate and forme to lord and Maieſtie:
Liche as the ſeale the greateſt of this land
On the one ſide hath, as I vnderſtand,
A prince riding with his ſwerd ydraw,
In the other ſide ſitting, ſoth it is in ſaw,
Betokening good rule and puniſhing
In very deede of England by the king.
And it is ſo, God bleſſed mought he bee.
So in likewiſe I would were on the ſee
By the Noble, that ſwerde ſhould haue power,
And the ſhips on the ſea about vs here.
What needeth a garland which is made of Iuie
Shewe a tauerne wineleſſe, alſo thriue I:

If men were wiſe, the Frenchmen and Fleming
Shuld bere no ſtate in ſea by werring.

Of Hankin lions.

Then Hankin lyons ſhuld not be ſo bold
To ſtoppe wine, and ſhippes for to hold Vnto our ſhame. He had be beten thence.
Alas, alas, why did we this offence,
Fully to ſhend the old Engliſh fames;
And the profits of England, and their names:
Why is this power called of couetiſe;
With falſe colours caſt beforn our eyes:
That if good men called werriours
Would take in hand for the commons ſuccours,
To purge the ſea vnto our great auayle,
And winne hem goods, and haue vp the ſayle,
And on our enimies their liues to impart,
So that they might their priſes well departe,
As reſon wold, iuſtice and equitie;
To make this land haue lordſhip of the ſea.

Lombards are cauſe enough to hurt this land, although there were none other cauſe.

Then ſhall Lombards and other fained friends
Make her chalenges by colour falſe offends,
And ſay their chaffare in the ſhippes is,
And chalenge al. Looke if this be amiſſe.

Falſe colouring of goods by Lombards.

For thus may al that men haue bought to ſore,
Ben ſoone excuſed, and ſaued by falſe colour:
Beware yee men that bere the great in hand

Alas for bribes & gift of good, feaſts & other means, that ſtoppen our policie.
This is the very ſtate of our time.

That they deſtroy the policie of this land,
By gifte and good, and the fine golden clothis,
And ſilke, and other: ſay yee not this ſoth is?
But if we had very experience
That they take meede with priuie violence,
Carpets, and things of price and pleaſance,
Whereby ſtopped ſhould be good gouernance:
And if it were as yee ſay to mee,
Than wold I ſay, alas cupiditie,
That they that haue her liues put in drede,
Shalbe ſoone out of winning, all for meed,
And loſe her coſtes, and brought to pouerty,
That they ſhall neuer haue luſt to goe to ſea.

An exhortation to make an ordinance againſt colour of maintainers and excuſers of folkes goods.

It is a maruellous thing that ſo great a ſicknes and hurt of yͤ land may haue no remedie of ſo many as take thẽſelues wiſe men of gouernance.

FOr this colour that muſt be ſayd alofte
And be declared of the great full ofte,
That our ſeamen wol by many wiſe
Spoile our friends in ſteede of our enimies:
For which colour and Lombards maintenance,
The king it needes to make an ordinance
With his Counſayle that may not fayle, I trowe,
That friends ſhould from enimies be knowe,
Our enimies taken and our friends ſpared:
The remedy of hem muſt be declared.
Thus may the ſea be kept in no ſell,
For if ought be ſpoken, wot yee well,
We haue the ſtrokes, and enemies haue the winning:
But mayntainers are parteners of the ſinning.
We liue in luſt and bide in couetiſe:
This is our rule to maintaine marchandiſe,
And policie that wee haue on the ſea.
And, but God helpe, it will no other bee.

Of the commodities of Ireland, and policie and keeping thereof, and conquering of wild Iriſh: with an incident of Wales. Chap. 9.

I Caſt to ſpeake of Ireland but a litle:
Commodities of it I will entitle,
Hides, and fiſh, Salmon, Hake, Herringe,
Iriſh wooll, and linen cloth, faldinge,
And marterns goode ben her marchandiſe,
Hertes Hides, and other of * Venerie.

* Or, hunting.

Skinnes of Otter, Squirell and Iriſh hare,
Of ſheepe, lambe, and Foxe, is her chaffare,
Felles of Kiddes, and Conies great plentie.
So that if Ireland helpe vs to keepe the ſea,
Becauſe the King cleped is Rex Angliæ,
And is Dominus alſo Hyberniæ,
Old poſſeſſed by Progenitours:
The Iriſh men haue cauſe like to ours
Our land and hers together to defend,
That no enemie ſhould hurt ne offend,
Ireland ne vs: but as one commontie
Should helpe well to keepe about the ſea:
For they haue hauens great, and goodly bayes,
Sure, wyde and deepe, of good aſſayes,
At Waterford, and coſtes many one.
And as men ſayne in England be there none
Better hauens, ſhips in to ride,
No more ſure for enemies to abide.
Why ſpeake I thus ſo much of Ireland?
For all ſo much as I can vnderſtand,
It is fertile for things that there doe growe
And multiplien, loke who luſt to knowe,
So large, ſo good, and ſo commodious,
That to declare is ſtrange and maruailous.

Mynes of ſiluer and gold in Ireland.

For of ſiluer and golde there is the oore,
Among the wilde Iriſh though they be poore.
For they are rude and can thereon no ſkill:
So that if we had their peace and good will
To myne and fine, and metal for to pure,
In wilde Iriſh might we finde the cure,
As in London ſaith a Iuellere,
Which brought from thence golde oore to vs here,
Whereof was fyned mettal good and clene,
As they touch, no better could be ſeene.
Nowe here beware and heartily take intent,
As yee will anſwere at laſt iudgement,
That for ſlought and for racheſhede
Yee remember with all your might to hede
To keepe Ireland that it be not loſt.
For it is a boteraſſe and a poſt,
Vnder England, and Wales another:
God forbid, but ech were others brother,
Of one ligeance due vnto the king.
But I haue pittie in good faith of this thing
That I ſhall ſay with auiſement:
I am aferde that Ireland will be ſhent:
It muſt awey, it wol bee loſt from vs,
But if thou helpe, thou Ieſu gracious,
And giue vs grace al ſlought to leue beſide,

For much thing in my herte is hide,
Which in another treatiſe I caſte to write
Made al onely for that ſoile and ſite,
Of fertile Ireland, wich might not be forborne,
But if England were nigh as goode as gone.
God forbid that a wild Iriſh wirlinge
Should be choſen for to bee their kinge,
After her conqueſte for our laſt puiſſance,
And hinder vs by other lands alliance.
Wiſe men ſeyn, wich felin not, ne douten,
That wild Iriſh ſo much of ground haue gotten
There vpon vs, as likeneſſe may be Like as England to ſherris two or three
Of this our land is made comparable:
So wild Iriſh haue wonne on vs vnable
Yet to defend, and of none power,
That our ground is there a litle corner,
To all Ireland in true compariſon.
It needeth no more this matter to expon.
Which if it bee loſt, as Chriſt Ieſu forbed,
Farewel Wales, then England commeth to dred,

This is now to be greatly feared.

For aliance of Scotland and of Spaine,
And other moe, as the pety Bretaine,
And ſo haue enemies enuiron round about.
I beſeech God, that ſome prayers deuout
Mutt let the ſaid apparance probable
Thus diſpoſed without feyned fable.
But all onely for perill that I ſee
Thus imminent, it's likely for to bee.
And well I wotte, that from hence to Rome,
And, as men ſay, in all Chriſtendome,
Is no ground ne land to Ireland liche,
So large, ſo good, ſo plenteous, ſo riche,
That to this worde Dominus doe long.
Then mee ſemeth that right were and no wrong,
To get the lande: and it were piteous
To vs to leſe this high name Dominus.
And all this word Dominus of name
Shuld haue the ground obeyſant wilde and tame,
That name and people togidre might accord
Al the ground ſubiect to the Lord.
And that it is poſſible to bee ſubiect,
Unto the king wel ſhal it bee detect,
In the litle booke that I of ſpake,
I trowe reſon al this wol vndertake.
And I knowe wel howe it ſtante,
Alas fortune beginneth ſo to ſcant,
Or ellis grace, that deade is gouernance.
For ſo miniſheth parties of our puiſſance,
In that land that wee leſe euery yere,
More ground and more, as well as yee may here.

This Lorde was the Earle of Ormond that told to me this matter, that he would vndertake it, in pain of loſſe of al his liuelihood. But this proffer could not be admitted. Ergo malè.

I herd a man ſpeake to mee full late.
Which was a lord of full great eſtate;
Than expenſe of one yere done in France
Werred on men well willed of puiſſance
This ſaid ground of Ireland to conquere.
And yet becauſe England might not forbere
Theſe ſaid expenſes gadred in one yeere,
But in three yeeres or foure gadred vp here,

Might winne Ireland to a ſmall conqueſte,
In one ſole yeere to ſet vs all at reſte.
And how ſoone wolde this be paied ageyne:
Which were it worth yeerely, if wee not feyne:
I wol declare, who ſo luſte to looke,
I trowe full plainely in my litle booke.
But couetiſe, and ſingularitie
Of owne profite, enuie, crueltie,
Hath doon vs harme, and doe vs euery day,
And muſters made that ſhame is to ſay:
Our money ſpent al to litle auaile,
And our enimies ſo greatly doone preuaile,
That what harme may fall and ouerthwerte
I may vnneth write more for ſore of herte.

An exhortation to the keeping of Wales.

BEware of Wales, Chriſt Ieſu muſt vs keepe,
That it make not our childers childe to weepe,
Ne vs alſo, ſo if it goe his way,
By vnwarenes: ſeth that many a day
Men haue bee ferde of her rebellion,
By great tokens and oſtentation:
Seche the meanes with a diſcrete auiſe,
And helpe that they rudely not ariſe
For to rebell, that Chriſt it forbede.
Looke wel aboute, for God wote yee haue neede,
Vnfainingly, vnfeyning and vnfeynt,
That conſcience for ſlought you not atteynt:
Kepe well that grounde, for harme that may ben vſed,
Or afore God muſte yee ben accuſed.

Of the commodious Stockfiſh of Iſland, and keeping of the Sea, namely the Narrow ſea, with an incident of the keeping of Caleis. Chap. 10.

The trade of Briſtow to Iſland.

OF Iſland to write is litle neede,
Saue of Stock-fiſh: Yet forſooth in deed
Out of Briſtowe, and coſtes many one,
Men haue practiſed by nedle and by ſtone
Thider wardes within a litle while,
Within twelue yere, and without perill
Gon and come, as men were wont of old
Of Scarborough vnto the coſtes cold.
And nowe ſo fele ſhippes this yeere there ware,
That moch loſſe for vnfreyght they bare:
Iſland might not make hem to bee fraught
Vnto the Hawys: thus much harme they caught.
Then here I ende of the commodites
For which neede is well to kepe the ſeas:
Eſte and Weſte, South and North they bee,
And chiefly kepe the ſharpe narrow ſee,
Betweene Douer and Caleis; and as thus that foes paſſe none without good will of vs:
And they abide our danger in the length,
What for our coſtis and Caleis in our ſtrength.

The old trade of Scarborough to Iſland and the North.

An exhortation for the ſure keeping of Caleis.

ANd for the loue of God, and of his bliſſe
Cheriſh yee Caleis better then it is.

See well thereto, and heare the grete complaint
That true men tellen, that woll no lies paint,
And as yee know that writing commeth from thence:
Doe not to England for ſlought ſo great offence,
But that redreſſed it bee for any thing:
Leſte a ſong of ſorrow that wee ſing.
For litle wenith the foole who ſo might cheſe
What harme it were good Caleis for to leſe:
What wo it were for all this Engliſh ground.

The ioy of Sigiſmond the Emperour that Caleis was Engliſh.

Which wel conceiued the Emperour Sigiſmound,
That of all ioyes made it one of the moſte,
That Caleis was ſubiect vnto Engliſh coſte.
Him thought it was a iewel moſt of all,
And ſo the ſame in Latine did it call.
And if yee wol more of Caleis heare and knowe,
I caſt to write within a litle ſcrowe,
Like as I haue done before by and by
In other parteis of our policie.
Loke how hard it was at the firſt to get;
And by my counſell lightly doe not it let.
For if wee leſe it with ſhame of face
Wilfully, it is for lacke of grace.
Howe was Harflew cried vpon, and Rone,
That they were likely for ſlought to be gone;
Howe was it warned and cried on in England,
I make record with this pen in my hand.
It was warened plainely in Normandie,
And in England, and I thereon did crie.
The world was defrauded, it betyde right ſo,

Harflew was loſt in the yere 1449 in the 27. of Henry the ſixth.

Farewell *Harflew: lewdly it was a go.
Nowe ware Caleis, I can ſay no better:
My ſoule diſcharge I by this preſent letter.

After the Chapitles of commodities of diuers lands, ſheweth the concluſion of keeping of the ſea enuiron, by a ſtorie of King Edgar and two incidents of King Edward the third, and King Henrie the fifth. Chap. 11.

NOwe ſee we well then that this round ſee
To our Noble by pariformitee
Vnder the ſhip ſhewed there the ſayle,
And our king with royal apparayle,
With ſwerd drawen bright and extent
For to chaſtiſe enimies violent;
Should be lord of the ſea about,
To keepe enimies from within and without;
To behold through Chriſtianitee
Maſter and lord enuiron of the ſee:
All liuing men ſuch a prince to dreed,
Of ſuch a a regne to bee aferd indeed.
Thus proue I well that it was thus of old;
Which by a * Chronicle anon ſhalbe told,
Right curious: but I will interprete
It into Engliſh, as I did it gete:
Of king Edgar: O moſt maruellous
Prince liuing, wittie, and chiualrous:
So good that none of his predeceſſours
Was to him liche in prudence and honours.

*Dicit Chronica, quod iſte Edgarus cunctis prædeceſſoribus ſuis fælicior, nulli ſanctitate inferior, omnibus morum ſuauitate præſtantior fuerit. Fuit ipſe Anglis non minus memorabilis, quàm Cyrus Perſis, Carolus Francis, Romulus verò Romanis.

Hee was fortunate and more gracious
Then other before, and more glorious:
He was beneth no man in holines:
Hee paſſed all in vertuous ſweetnes.
Of English kings was none ſo commendable:
To English men no leſſe memorable,
Then Cyrus was to Perſe by puiſſance,
And as great Charles was to them of France,
And as to the Romanes was great Romulus,
So was to England this worthy Edgarus.
I may not write more of his worthines
For lacke of time, ne of his holines:
But to my matter I him exemplifie,
Of conditions tweyne and of his policie:
Within his land was one, this is no doubt,
And another in the ſee without;
That in time of Winter and of werre,
When boyſtrous windes put ſee men into fere;
Within his land about by all prouinces
Hee paſſed through, perceiuing his princes,
Lords, and others of the communitee,
Who was oppreſſour, and who to pouertee
Was drawen and brought, and who was clene in life,
And was by miſchiefe and by ſtrife
With ouer leuing and extortion:
And good and badde of eche condition
Hee aſpied: and his miniſters als,
Who did trought, and which of hem was fals:
Howe the right and lawes of the land
Were execute, and who durſt take in hand
To diſobey his ſtatutes and decrees,
If they were well kept in all countrees:
Of theſe he made ſubtile inueſtigation
Of his owne eſpie, and other mens relation.
Among other was his great buſines,
Well to ben ware, that great men of riches,
And men of might in citie nor in towne
Should to the poore doe non oppreſſion.
Thus was hee wont in this Winter tide
On ſuch enforchiſe buſily to abide.
This was his labour for the publike thing.
Thus was hee occupied: a paſſing holy King.
Nowe to purpoſe, in the Sommer faire
Of luſty ſeaſon, whan clered was the aire,
He had redie ſhippes made before
Great and huge, not fewe but many a ſtore:
Full three thouſand and ſixe hundred alſo
Stately inough on our ſea to goe.
The Chronicles ſay, theſe ſhippes were full boyſteous:
Such things long to kings victorious.
In Sommer tide would hee haue in wonne
And in cuſtome to be ful redie ſoone,
With multitude of men of good array
And inſtruments of werre of beſt aſſay.
Who could hem well in any wiſe deſcriue:
It were not light for eny man aliue.
Thus he and his would enter ſhippes great
Habiliments hauing and the fleete
Of See werres, that ioyfull was to ſee

Dick Chronica, preparauerat naues robuſtiſſimas numero tria millia ſexcenta: in quibus redeunte æſtate omnem inſulam ad terrorem extraneorū, & ad ſuorum exercitationem cum maximo apparatu circumnauigare conſueuerat.

Such a nauie and Lord of Maieſtee,
There preſent in perſon hem among
To ſaile and rowe enuiron all along,
So regal liche about the Engliſh iſle;
To all ſtrangers terrours and perile.
Whoſe fame went about in all the world ſtout;
Unto great fere of all that be without,
And exerciſe to Knights and his meynee
To him longing of his natall cuntree.
For courage of nede muſt haue exerciſe,
Thus occupied for eſchewin of vice.
This knew the king that policie eſpied;
Winter and Somer he was thus occupied.
Thus conclude I by authoritee
Of Chronike, that enuiron the ſee
Should bene our ſubiects vnto the King,
And hee bee Lord thereof for eny thing:
For great worſhip and for profite alſo
To defend his land fro euery foo.

Dicit Chronica &c, vt non minus quantam ei etiam in hac vita bonorum operum mercedem donauerit: cum aliquando ad maximam eius feſtiuitatem, reges, comites, multarumq; prouinciarum protectores conueniſſent, &c.

That worthy king I leue, Edgar by name,
And all the Chronike of his worthy fame:
Saffe onely this I may not paſſe away,
A worde of mightie ſtrength till that I ſay,
That graunted him God ſuch worſhip here,
For his merites, hee was without pere,
That ſometime at his great feſtiuitee
Kings, and Erles of many a countree,
And princes fele were there preſent,
And many Lords came thider by aſſent,
To his worſhip: but in a certaine day
Hee bad ſhippes to bee redie of aray:
For to viſit Saint Iohns Church hee liſt
Rowing vnto the good holie Baptiſt,
Hee aſſigned to Erles, Lords, and knights
Many ſhips right goodly to ſights:
And for himſelfe and eight kings mo
Subiect to him hee made kepe one of tho,
A good ſhippe, and entrede into it
With eight kings, and downe did they ſit;
And eche of them an ore tooke in hand,
At ore hales, as I vnderſtand,
And he himſelfe at the ſhippe behinde
As ſteris man it became of kinde.
Such another rowing I dare well ſay,
Was not ſeene of Princes many a day.
Lo than how hee in waters got the price,
In lande, in ſee, that I may not ſuffice
To tell, O right, O magnanimitee,
That king Edgar had vpon the ſee.

An incident of the Lord of the ſea King Edward the third.

Of king Edward I paſſe and his prowes
On lande, on ſea yee knowe his worthines:
The ſiege of Caleis, ye know well all the matter
Round about by land, and by the water,
Howe it laſted not yeeres many agoe,
After the battell of Creeye was ydoe:

Caleis was yelded to ẏ Engliſh 1347.

Howe it was cloſed enuiron about,
Olde men ſawe it, which liuen, this is no doubt,
Old Knightes ſay that the Duke of Burgoyn,
Late rebuked for all his golden coyne;
Of ship on ſee made no beſieging there,
For want of ſhippes that durſt not come for feare.
It was nothing beſieged by the ſee:
Thus call they it no ſiege for honeſtie.
Gonnes aſſailed, but aſſault was there none,
No ſiege, but fuge: well was he that might be gone:
This maner carping haue knightes ferre in age,
Expert through age of this maner language.
But king Edward made a ſiege royall,
And wanne the towne: and in eſpeciall
The ſea was kept, and thereof he was Lord.
Thus made he Nobles coyned of record;
In whoſe time was no nauie on the ſee
That might withſtand his maieſtie.
Battell of Scluſe yee may rede euery day,
Howe it was done I leue and goe my way:
It was ſo late done that yee it knowe,
In compariſon within a litle throwe:
For which to God giue we honour and glorie;
For Lord of ſee the king was with victorie.

King Edward had 700 Engliſh ſhips, and 14151. Engliſh mariners before Calcis.

The battell of Scluſe by ſea.

Another incident of keeping of the ſee, in the time of the marueilous werriour and victorious Prince, King Henrie the fifth, and of his great ſhippes.

And if I ſhould conclude all by the King
Henrie the fift, what was his purpoſing,
Whan at Hampton he made the great dromons,
Which paſſed other great ſhips of all the commons;
The Trinitie, the Grace de Dieu, the holy Ghoſt,
And other moe, which as nowe bee loſt.
What hope ye was the kings great intent
Of thoo ſhippes, and what in minde hee meant?
It was not ellis, but that hee caſt to bee
Lorde round about enuiron of the ſee.
And when Harflew had her ſiege about,
There came caracks horrible great and ſtoute
In the narrow ſee willing to abide,
To ſtoppe vs there with multitude of pride.
My Lord of Bedford came on and had the cure,
Deſtroyed they were by that diſcomfiture.
This was after the king Harflew had wonne,
Whan our enemies to ſiege had begonne;
That all was ſlaine or take, by true relation,
To his worſhippe, and of his Engliſh nation.
There was preſent the kings chamberlaine
At both battailes; which knoweth this in certaine;
He can it tell otherwiſe then I:
Aſke him, and witte; I paſſe foorth haſtily.
What had this king of his magnificence,
Of great courage, of wiſedome, and prudence?
Prouiſion, forewitte, audacitee,
Of fortitude, iuſtice, and agilitee,
Diſcretion, ſubtile auiſedneſſe,

The great ſhips of Henry the fift, made at Hampton.

Great caracks of Genua taken by the Duke of Bedford.

1416.

The French nauie thus ouerthrowen was of fiue hundred ſaile.

Attemperance, Nobleſſe, and worthineſſe:
Science, proweſſe, deuotion, equitie,
Of moſt eſtate, with his magnanimitie
Liche to Edgar, and the ſaide Edward,
As much of both liche hem as in regard.
Where was on liue a man more victorious,
And in ſo ſhort time prince ſo maruellous?
By land and ſea, ſo well he him acquitte,
To ſpeake of him I ſtony in my witte.
Thus here I leaue the king with his nobleſſe,
Henry the fift, with whom all my proceſſe
Of this true booke of pure policie
Of ſea keeping, entending victorie
I leaue endly: for about in the ſee
No Prince was of better ſtrenuitee.
And if he had to this time liued here,
He had bene Prince named withouten pere:

The Trinitie, the Grace de Dieu, the holy Ghoſt.

His great ſhips ſhould haue ben put in preeſe,
Unto the ende that he ment of in cheeſe.
For doubt it not but that he would haue bee
Lord and maſter about the round ſee:
And kept it ſure to ſtoppe our enemies hence,
And wonne vs good, and wiſely brought it thence:
That no paſſage ſhould be without danger,
And his licence on ſee to moue and ſterre.

Of vnitie, ſhewing of our keeping of the ſee: with an endly or finall proceſſe of peace by authoritie. Chap. 12.

NOw than for loue of Chriſt, and of his ioy,
Bring it England out of trouble and noy:
Take heart and witte, and ſet a gouernance,
Set many wits withouten variance,

Exhortatio generalis in cuſtodiam totius Angliæ, per diligentiam cuſtodiæ circuitus maris circa littora eiuſdem quæ debet eſſe per vnanimitatẽ Conſiliariorum regis, & hominum bonæ voluntatis.

To one accord and vnanimitee,
Put to good will for to keepe the ſee,
First for worſhip and profite alſo,
And to rebuke of eche euill willed foe.
Thus ſhall worſhip and riches to vs long.
Than to the Noble ſhall we doe no wrong,
To beare that coyne in figure and in deede,
To our courage, and to our enemies dreede:
For which they muſt dreſſe hem to peace in haſte,
Or ellis their thrift to ſtanden, and to waſte.
As this proceſſe hath proued by and by
All by reaſon and expert policy;
And by ſtories which proued well this parte:
Or ellis I will my life put in ieoparte,
But many londs would ſeche her peace for nede,
The ſee wel kept: it muſt bee don for drede.
Thus muſt Flanders for nede haue vnitee
And peace with vs: it will non other bee,
Within ſhort while: and ambaſſadours
Would bene here ſoone to treate for their ſuccours.

Tres ſunt cauſæ prædictæ cuſtodiæ: ſcilicet, honor, commodum regni, & oppreſſio inimicis.

This vnitee is to God pleaſance:
And peace after the werres variance.
The ende of battaile is peace ſikerly,
And power cauſeth peace finally.
Kept than the ſea about in ſpeciall,

Which of England is the towne wall,
As though England were likened to a citie,
And the wall enuiron were the ſee.
Kepe then the ſea that is the wall of England:
And than is England kept by Goddes hande;
That as for any thing that is without,
England were at eaſe withouten doubt.
And thus ſhould euery lond one with another
Entercommon, as brother with his brother,
And liue togither werreleſſe in vnitie,
Without rancour in very charitie,
In reſt and peace, to Chriſtes great pleaſance,
Without ſtrife, debate and variance.
Which peace men ſhould enſerche with buſineſſe,
And knit it ſadly holding in holineſſe.
The Apoſtle ſeith, if ye liſt to ſee,

Ephes.4. Solliciti ſitis ſeruare vnitatem ſpiritus in vinculo pacis.

Bee yee buſie for to keepe vnitee
Of the ſpirit in the bond of peace.
Which is needful to all withouten leſe.
The Prophet biddeth vs peace for to enquire
To purſue it, this is holy deſire.
Our Lord Ieſu ſaith, Bleſſed motte they bee
That maken peace; that is tranquillitee.

Matth.5. Beati pacifici, quoniam filij Dei vocabuntur.

For peace makers, as Matthew writeth aright,
Should be called the ſonnes of God almight.
God giue vs grace, the weyes for to keepe
Of his precepts, and ſlugly not to ſleepe
In ſhame of ſinne: that our verry foo
Might be to vs conuerts, and turned ſo.

Cum placuerint Domino: viæ hominis, eius inimicos ad pacem conuertet.

For in the Prouerbs is a text to this purpoſe
Plaine inough without any gloſe:
When mens weyes pleaſe vnto our Lord,
It ſhall conuert and bring to accord
Mans enemies vnto peace verray,
In vnitie, to liue to Goddis pay,
With vnitie, peace, reſt and charitie.
Hee that was here cladde in humanitie,
That came from heauen, and ſtyed vp with our nature,
Or hee aſcended, he yaue to vs cure,
And left with vs peace, agayne ſtriffe and debate,
More giue vs peace, ſo well irradicate
Here in this world: that after all this feſte
Wee may haue peace in the land of beheſte,

Vrbs beata Ieruſalem dicta pacis viſio.

Ieruſalem, which of peace is the ſight,
With his brightnes of eternall light,
There gloriſied in reſt with his tuition,
The Deitie to ſee with full fruition:
Hee ſecond perſon in diuineneſſe is,
Who vs aſſume, and bring vs to the bliſs. Amen.

Here endeth the true proceſſe of the Libel of English policie, exhorting all England to keepe the ſea enuiron: ſhewing what profit and ſaluation, with worſhip commeth thereof to the reigne of England.

Go furth Libelle, and meekely ſhewe thy face;
Appearing euer with humble countenance:
And pray my Lords to take in grace,

In oppoſaile and cheriſhing the auance,
To hardines if that not variance
Thou haſt fro trought by full experience
Authors and reaſons: if ought faile in ſubſtance
Remit to hem that yafe thee this ſcience;
That ſeth it is ſoth in verray fayth,
That the wiſe Lord Baron of Hungerford
Hath thee ouerſeene, and verely he ſaith
That thou art true, and thus hee doeth record,
Next the Goſpel: God wotte it was his worde,
When hee thee redde all ouer in a night.
Goe forth trew booke, and Chriſt defend thy right.

The wiſe lord of Hungerfords iudgement of this booke.

Explicit libellus de Politia conſeruatiua maris.

A large Charter granted by K. Edward the 4. in the ſecond yere of his reigne, to the marchants of England reſident eſpecially in the Netherland, for their chuſing of a maſter and gouernor among themſelues, which gouernement was firſt appointed vnto one William Obray: with expreſſe mention, what authoritie he ſhould haue.

EDward by the grace of God king of France, & of England, & lord of Ireland, to al thoſe which ſhal ſee or heare theſe letters, ſendeth greeting, & good wil. Know ye, that whereas we haue vnderſtood, as well by the report of our louing and faithfull Counſellors, as by the common complaint and report of all men, that many vexations, griefs, debates, diſcords, annoyes, diſſentions, & damages, haue heretofore bene done, moued, committed, and happened, and do daily fal out and happen among the common marchants & mariners, our ſubiects of our realmes of France & England, & our lordſhips of Ireland and Wales, & of other our dominions, ſeigneuries, and territories, becauſe that good diſcretion and authority hath not bin obſerued among our ſaide ſubiects, which abide, frequent, conuerſe, remain, inhabit, & paſſe, aſwel by ſea as by land, into yͤ parts of Brabant, Flanders, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and diuers other countreis & ſeigneuries belonging aſwell to the high and mighty prince, our moſt deere and louing couſin yͤ Duke of Burgoine, of Brabant, earle of Flanders, &c. as being in the obedience & dominion of other lords, which are in friendſhip, alliance, & good wil with vs: and that it is to be doubted that through the ſaide inconuenience and occaſion, many diſcommodities may enſue & fal out in time to come (which God forbid) vnles we ſhould prouide conuenient remedie in this behalfe for our ſubiects aforeſaid: wherefore we deſiring moſt effectually and heartily to auoide the miſchiefe of the ſaide inconueniences & to prouide conuenient remedy for the ſame, to the end that the ſaid common marchants and mariners and others our ſubiects of our ſaid realms & dominions, which at this preſent & hereafter ſhal haunt and frequent yͤ ſaid countreis, may be iuſtly & lawfully ruled, gouerned, and intreated by right & equity in the countreis aforeſaid, and that equity, reaſon, & iuſtice may be miniſtred vnto them and euery of them, according as the caſes ſhal require, we being wel aſſured and hauing ful confidence, in the diſcretion, faithfulnes, wiſdome, experience, & good diligence of our moſt deare & welbeloued ſubiect Will. Obray our ſeruant, & in regard of the good, faithfull, and acceptable ſeruices, which he hath done vs in our realm & among our ſubiects in times paſt, & hoping that he wil do alſo hereafter, we haue made, ordained, conſtituted, committed, and eſtabliſhed, and by the tenour of theſe preſents, of our ſpecial grace, ful power, & authority royall, we ordaine, appoint, commit, and eſtabliſh, (during our pleaſure) to be gouernor, iudge, warden of iuſtice, and the appurtenances & appendances therof, which we haue or may haue ouer our ſaid common ſubiects the marchants trauailing hereafter as wel by ſea as by land, and abiding in the ſaid countries of Brabant, Flanders, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and other countreis beyond the ſea, as is aforeſaide, together with the wages, rights, profits, and emoluments heretofore accuſtomed, & as the ſaid Will. Obray at other times hath had and receiued of our ſaid ſubiects, when he had, vſed, and exerciſed the ſaid office of gouernor, & alſo with other ſuch rights and profits, as hereafter ſhal more plainly be declared. And furthermore for our parts we haue giuen him, and by theſe preſents do giue him, as much as in vs lieth, during our pleaſure, ful power, authority, and ſpecial commandement, to gouerne, rule, and cauſe to be gouerned and ruled with good iuſtice by himſelfe, or by his ſufficient lieuetenants or deputies, all and euery our foreſaid ſubiects the common marchants & mariners comming, remaining, frequenting, paſſing, & repairing from henceforth into the ſaid countreis of Brabant, Flanders, ders, Henault, Holland, Zeland, and other countreyes beyond the ſea, as it is ſaid, and to keep and cauſe to be kept, to exerciſe and maintein, for vs and in our place, the ſaid office of gouernour, and to doe all ſuch things which a faithfull gouernour ought to do, and to take knowledge and adminiſtration of the cauſes of the ſaid common marchants and mariners, our ſubiects, and of euery of them, and of their cauſes and quarels moued, or hereafter to be moued in the countreis aforeſaid, or within the limits & borders therof, and to doe them full & ſpeedy iuſtice. And to reforme, cauſe reformation, gouerne, appeaſe, and pacifie all contentions, diſcords, queſtions, or debates betweene thoſe our ſaid ſubiects moued, or to moued: and to right, redreſſe, repaire, reſtore, and amend all tranſgreſſions, domages, enterpriſes, outrages, violences and iniuries committed, or to be cōmitted: and like wiſe to require, to aſke, demand, and receiue, reſtitutions, reparations, reſtaurations, and amends of our ſaid ſubiects the common marchants & mariners, or of their factors in the cōtreis aforeſaid. And that, whenſoeuer and as often as it ſhal pleaſe the ſaid gouernor or his deputies, they may in ſome conuenient and honeſt place within the ſaid countreis make or cauſe to be made, ſomon, and hold in our name iuriſdictions, courts, and aſſemblies: and in our ſaid name take adminiſtration and knowledge of cauſes, as it is aforeſaide, and to hold and keepe pleas, for and in our behalfe, and to make agreements, mediatours, and vmpires, to iudge, to make decrees, and to miniſter iuſtice, to ordaine, appoint, cenſure, and conſtraine our ſaide ſubiects to ſweare and take all kind of oathes, which order of iuſtice and cuſtome require and afforde, and to enioy our authoritie, and to vſe, execute and accompliſh, by way of equitie and iuſtice, and to doe, or cauſe to be done all execution and exerciſe of law and iuſtice; and to ordain, appoint, & eſtabliſh ſixe ſergeants or vnder, to doe the executions & arreſts of our ſaid court, by the commandement of the ſaid gouernour or of his deputies, or at the requeſt of the partie or otherwiſe, according as the caſe ſhall require by their aduiſe, and to diſcharge and diſplace the ſaid ſergeants, as ſhall ſeeme good vnto him, as often and whenſoeuer as it ſhall pleaſe him, and change them, and appoint and ſet others in their roomes, and to require returne and anſwere of the court, whenſoeuer need ſhal be, of all cauſes, quarels, and buſineſſes in regard of the ſaid office belonging vnto vs and to our ſaid ſubiects the common marchants and mariners at all times, and as often as the caſe ſhall permit and require: and generally and ſpecially to doe as much for vs and in our ſtead, in the caſes before mentioned, and which hereafter ſhalbe declared, as we could doe or cauſe to be done, could ſay or require, if we were there preſent in our owne perſon. Moreouer wee will, and by the tenour of theſe preſents wee giue and graunt vnto the ſaide gouernour, and to our ſaide ſubiects the common marchants and mariners, that as oft and whenſoeuer it pleaſe them, they may meet and aſſemble in ſome honeſt and conuenient place, and by the conſent of the ſaide gouernour to chooſe and appoynt among them at their pleaſure, freely and without danger, certaine ſufficient and fit perſons to the number of twelue or vnder, which we wil haue to be named Iuſticers, vnto the which Iuſticers ſo elected by the ſaide gouernour and our ſaide ſubiects, as it is ſaid, and to euerie of them, we giue and graunt eſpeciall power and authoritie to ſitte and aſſiſt in court, with the ſaid gouernour or his lieutenants, for their aide and aſſiſtance, and to heare the griefs, complaints, and demands of our ſaid ſubiects their ſuites, pleas, and the ſtate of their cauſes and quarels whatſoeuer moued or to be moued vnto the ende of their cauſe, and at the requeſt of the ſaide gouernour, his lieutenants, or any of them, to ſay, propound, and plainely to expreſſe and declare their opinions, according to right and conſcience, vpon the cauſes brought before them and by the parties vttered and declared, and well, lawfully, and faithfully to counſell and aduiſe the ſaide gouernour or his lieutenants, to order and cenſure, iudge and determine, and ende the ſame iuſtly and equally, according as the caſe ſhall permit and require. And furthermore we wil, that all iuſt and reaſonable ſtatutes, lawes, ordinances, decrees, and conſtitutions made and eſtabliſhed, or to be made and eſtabliſhed, in the countreys aforeſaide, by the conſent of the ſaid gouernour, and of the ſaie Iuſticers, ſhalbe corrected, amended, and made, as they ſhall ſee to bee expedient in this behalfe, for the better gouernment of the eſtate of the common marchants and mariners our ſaide ſubiects, and ſhalbe held as ratified, firme, acceptable and approued; and from henceforth we accept, admit, allow and approue them for ratified and confirmed, there to be firmely and inuiolably obſerued, kept and obeyed. And alſo, of our farther fauour and grace wee will and we grant, that by the conſent of our ſaid gouernour, our ſaid ſubiects the common marchants and mariners may make and ſet downe in the ſaid countreis, by their common conſent, as often as they ſhall thinke good for their better gouernment and eſtate, ſuch iuſt and reaſonable lawes, ſtatutes, ordinances, decrees, conſtitutions, and cuſtomes, as they ſhal thinke expedient in this behalfe: which we cōmand to be kept as ratified, confirmed, allowed, & approued, auailable, and eſtabliſhed. Prouided alwaies, that they do not nor ſeeke any thing preiudicial to this preſent power and authoritie giuen and graunted by vs to the ſaide gouernour, in any poynt or article herein compriſed, by any meanes or way whatſoeuer: in which caſe if they ſhoulde doe any thing, or ought ſhould happen, we will that it ſhal take no place, force, vigour, ſtrength, nor vertue: neither that it ſhalbe of any effect, but it ſhalbe aboliſhed, diſanulled, and vtterly fruſtrate; and as aboliſhed, diſanulled, and vtterly fruſtrated, from this time forward, wee holde and take it, and will hereafter hold and take the ſame. And ſo to doe, and put in execution in our name, we haue and doe giue full and abſolute power, & ſpeciall authority to our ſaid ſeruant William Obray, & to his ſaid lieutenants. And likewiſe, to the end that yͤ courſe of marchandiſe may be kept in good eſtate, and that by order of iuſtice a firme and conſtant rule may be ſet downe among thoſe our ſaid ſubiects and marchants, we haue ordained and do ordaine, haue conſented & doe conſent, and by theſe preſents haue giuen & do giue ful power & eſpeciall authority to our ſaid ſeruant Will. Obray gouernour aforeſaid, that at al time and times when he ſhal think good, he may ordaine, elect, chuſe, and appoint, in the countreis aforeſaid, ſuch miniſters, officers, and ſeruitours as hereafter ſhalbe named, and ſuch others as he ſhal think neceſſary, and to diſcharge them, and to change them, & ſet others in their roomes, at his good will and pleaſure, vnto ſuch a number as he ſhall thinke good and reaſonable for the time being to be employed: as namely correctors or brokers as many as he ſhal thinke good, to make and to witnes the bargaines which are made or to be made, betweene our ſaid ſubiects and others with whom they ſhal haue to do or to deale in the foreſaid countreis: and alſo as many alnagers to alner and meaſure al kinds of marchandiſes which they ſhal buy or ſel by the yard: and alſo as many weighers to weigh the marchandiſe which ſhalbe ſold or bought by weight: and alſo ſo many folders to fold their clothes, and ſo many packers to pack their packs, and to make their fardels, maunds, and baſkets, and other things needefull for the defence & preſeruation of their marchandize. Al which miniſters, officers, and ſeruitors, ſo choſen, elected, charged, admitted, and eſtabliſhed by the ſaide gouernour, as is ſaide, may take their wages for their paines & attendances vpon the ſaid marchants, according to the cuſtome of the ſaid countreis, and as they haue bene accuſtomed to take of the ſaid marchants before theſe preſents by vs giuen and graunted. And hereupon we haue giuen and doe giue expreſſe charge and commandement by vs and in our names to all our ſaid ſubiects common marchants and mariners, and to euery of them which ſhall frequent, come, remaine, paſſe, repaire, or inhabite within the countreis aforeſaid, that they ſhall not make contract or bargaine, ſell or buy, nor ſhall not cauſe any contract or bargaine to be made, nor in the ſaid countreis ſell or buy any maner of wares, goods, or marchandiſes, ſecretely nor openly, by way of fraude, barat, or deceite whatſoeuer, with any perſon or perſons, of what eſtate, countrey, or condition ſoeuer they be, without he hath ſome of the ſaid brokers at the bargain making, to preſent, report, and to teſtifie the ſaid contracts or bargains before the ſaid gouernor or others, if need require, and ſtrife or contention ſhould grow therof betweene them: nor to packe or cauſe to be packed any goods or marchandiſes belonging vnto them, in packs, bales, or fardels, coffers, cheſts, maunds, dryfats, or rowles, without hauing ſome deputy preſent thereat: nor to take or cauſe to be taken or ſet on worke in the ſaid countreis, any other brokers, alnagers, weighers, folders, or packers, then the aforeſaid ſo choſen, admitted, eſtabliſhed, and ordained by the ſaide gouernor, & hereto authorized in our name, as it is ſaid, vnder paine of falling into, and incurring of our diſpleaſure, and of forfeiture, and confiſcation of all ſuch goods, wares, and marchandiſes, which ſhalbe found to haue paſſed by other hands or order, then that or thoſe which are before mentioned: the fourth part of which forfeitures and confiſcations ſhall be imployed to the repairing and maintenance of two chappels founded to the honour of Saint Thomas of Canterburie by our ſaide ſubiects, in the townes of Bruges in Flanders, and of Middleborough in Zeland; the other fourth part to vs, & our vſe; the third fourth part to our ſaid couſin of Burgundie, or the natural Lord of the countrey wherein the ſaide goods ſhall be found; and the fourth fourth part to him or them, which ſhall diſcouer, detect, or finde out the ſaide fraude. And alſo that none of our ſaid ſubiects ſhall vnlade or cauſe to be vnladen, vnder any colour nor otherwiſe, nor vnpacke, in the countreis aboueſaide, no kind of wares, goods, nor marchandiſes whatſoeuer, which they ſhall bring or cauſe to bee brought into the countreyes aforeſaide, comming out of our countreyes, dominions, or obeyſance, without firſt and beforehand they make the gouernour or his deputies acquainted with their arriuall, and craue leaue, and deliuer, ſhewe, and declare their cockets, that it may duely appeare, that the ſaide goods and marchandiſes haue truly and lawfully payde vnto vs our rights and cuſtomes, and not to vnpacke them but in the preſence of the ſaide gouernour, his lieuetenants or deputies, vpon paine of forfaiture, and confiſcation of the ſaide goods, in maner and forme before declared in the foreſaide article. And if it bee found by the viſitation of the ſaide gouernor, his lieuetenants or deputies, that any goods, wares, or marchandiſes whatſoeuer be arriued and diſcharged in the countreis aforeſaid, belonging to our ſaide ſubiectes, not lawfully cuſtomed and acquited towarde vs of our right and cuſtome, for which they cannot nor are not able to make any due proofe of our letters of coquet, as is metioned, or if they finde any other fraud: we will, we ordaine, and we grant, that the sayd gouernour, his lieutenants or deputies may seaze vpon the sayd goods on our behalfe, and may confiſcate and forfeit the ſame, diſtributing the ſame into foure parts in maner aforeſayd. And alſo wee will, that euery one of the ſayd packes, fardels, baſkets, maunds, cofers, tunnes, bales, roules, and other furnitures and geare, wherein the ſayd marchandiſes ſhalbe packed, to be ſent out of the ſaid countreis, ſhall not be laden vpon ſhips, carts, nor horſes, to come into our dominion, without being firſt ſealed with a ſeale ordayned by vs and giuen by the ſayd gouernour, vpon paine to be forfayted, applyed, and confiſcated to vs and into our hand, if they be found vnſigned and not ſealed with the ſeale. And for euery piece of marchandiſe which ſhall be ſealed with the ſayd ſeale, they ſhall pay to the ſayd ſealer two pence of groſſe money of Flanders, which ſhall goe to the profite of the ſayd gouernour. And forasmuch as according to right and conſcience, we ought not to vſe the labour, trauels, nor ſeruice of any man, without waging, paying, and fully contenting him according to reaſon and equity, eſpecially when we doe appoint any perſon or perſons to doe or cauſe to be done ſo great trauels, labours, buſines, and executions, as theſe which are contayned in this preſent charter, aſwell for the benefit and profit of vs and our ſelues, as for the holeſome, perfect, & good gouernment of our ſayd ſubiects: we by the good aduiſe and deliberation of the ſayd lords of our priuie counſell, haue granted and giuen, and as before, doe grant and giue, of our ſayd grace, to the ſayd William Obray our ſayd ſeruant and gouernour abouenamed, during our pleaſure, for part of his wages and fee of the ſayd office, one pennie of our money of England of the value of a liuer of groſſe money of Flanders, vpon al and ſinguler the goods, wares and marchandiſes of our ſayd ſubiects frequenting the ſayd countreis, to be leuyed, gathered, receiued, and payed vnto the ſayd William Obray or to his deputies, vpon the ſayd wares and marchandiſes belonging vnto our ſayd ſaid ſubiects buying and ſelling, or which they ſhall cauſe to ſell, buy, put away, trucke or exchange in the countreys abouesaid, aſwell of the goods and marchandiſes which they ſhall bring or cauſe to be brought into the ſayd countries, as of all other goods which they ſhall lade and carie, or cauſe to bee caried and conueyed out of thoſe countreis into our dominion or elſewhere into any other part whatſoeuer. And to cauſe the ſame to be gathered, receiued, leauied and payed, we haue giuen, and by theſe preſents doe giue full power and ſpeciall authoritie vnto the ſayd William Obray, and to his lieutenants and deputies aforeſayd, to leauy, gather, and cauſe to bee leauied and receiued the ſayd money, in forme and maner aboue mentioned, to his profite and vſe, during our pleaſure: and to enioy and vſe the ſame as his proper goods, without any contradiction, conſtraining and arreſting if neede bee, as well on land, as on the water, our ſaid ſubiects, their ſayd goods, and euery of them, by way of law and iuſtice, and to cauſe them to yeelde and pay the ſayd money, vpon the ſaid goods and marchandiſes, as is aforeſayd. For ſuch is our pleaſure, and ſo will we haue it done without contradiction or impeachment to him and his, during our pleaſure. And alſo we will that the ſayd William Obray, ouer and aboue that which is ſayd, ſhall take, gather, and receiue of our ſayd ſubiects from henceforth yearely, during our pleaſure, all ſuch and like wages and profits, as he had and receiued of our ſayd ſubiects, in the yeare 1458. when hee held and exerciſed the ſaid office of gouernour, without diminiſhing or rebating any thing thereof, notwithſtanding this preſent augmentation made, increaſed, and done vnto him, of our grace and fauour: and that hee ſhall gather, take, and receiue the ſame in ſuch forme and manner, as the other money aboue mentioned is to be gathered. And to the ende that the ſayd William Obray may haue and take poſſeſſion, ſeaſon, and enterance of the ſaid office of gouernour in our name we haue and doe place him, by the deliuery of theſe preſents, in poſſeſſion, ſeaſon, and entrance of the ſaid office, and of the rights, profits, ſtipends, wages, and moneis aforeſayd, to begin to exerciſe the ſayd office of gouernour in our name, the firſt day of May next enſuing after the date of theſe preſents, for the ſayd William Obray to hold and exerciſe, practiſe and vſe the ſame, during our pleaſure, with the ſayd wages, moneys, rights, and profites aboue mentioned, without any contradiction or impeachment. And all and ſingular our ſubiects the common marchants and mariners, which ſhall be contrary, rebellious, and diſobedient to the ſaid gouernour ſo ordayned by vs, to his ſaid lieutenants, to the ſayd iuſticers ſo choſen, or to any of them, or to any of the ſtatutes, lawes, decrees, ſentences, ordinances, and cuſtomes, offices, gifts, and grants aboueſayd, let them grieuouſly be puniſhed by the ſayd gouernour or his lieutenants, in this behalfe, according to the quantity of their offences, and the exigencie of the caſes. We doe ſommon, commaund, ſtraitly and expreſly enioine by theſe preſents all and euery our ſaide ſubiects, that vnto the ſayd gouernour ſo by vs ordained, to his lieutenants, attorneis, or deputies, and alſo to the ſaid iuſticers, officers, and miniſters, in all and euerie the things aforeſaid, and others any waie concerning in this behalfe our ſaid ordinances, their gouernmẽt and rule, the circumſtances and dependances theron that they giue their attendance, counſayle, comfort, obedience, and ayde, diligently without fault or difficulty, ſurely, ſafely, fully and peaceably: without doing, inferring, or inflicting, or ſuffering to be done, inferred, or inflicted to them or any of them in body or goods, any diſturbance or impeachment, in any maner whatſoeuer: but rather if any thing bee done vnto them contrary and to the preiudice of theſe preſents, they ſhall remoue and cauſe the ſame to be remooued, and that which ſhall be hindered they ſhall ſet at free deliuerance, vpon payne to fall into and to incurre our high diſpleaſure. For ſuch is our pleaſure and ſo will wee haue it, notwithſtanding anie letters falſely crept in, obtayned, or to be obtayned contrary hereunto. And you our ſubiects, the common marchants and mariners, ſo behaue your ſelues, that you may receiue commendation of vs for your good obedience, knowing that ſuch as ſhall be found doing or to haue done the contrary, we will ſee them ſo puniſhed without redemption, that they ſhall bee an example to all rebellious perſons. We pray and moſt inſtantly require in the ayde of equitie, all others our friends, allies, and well-willers, aſwell princes and potentates, as their iuſticers, officers, lieutenants, deputies, commiſſaries, and ſubiects, and euery of them, in regard of equitie; that they would vouchſafe, and that it would pleaſe them to giue, doe, and lend comfort, ayde, aſſiſtance, and priſons if neede require, to our ſayd gouernour, his lieutenants, commiſſaries, deputies, iuſticers, & others our officers and miniſters aforeſayd: and herein wee pray them on our behalfe, and in our owne name. And it may pleaſe them herein to doe ſo much, that we may haue occaſion to thanke them, and to accompt our ſelues beholding for the ſame: and as they would that we ſhould do for them in the like matter, or in a greater: which we will willingly doe, if we be required thereunto by them. In witneſſe whereof we haue cauſed theſe our letters to bee made patents. Witnes our ſelues at Weſtminſter, the ſixteenth of April, in the ſecond yere our reigne.

A declaration of the Indies and lands diſcouered, and ſubdued vnto the Emperour, and the king of Portingal: And alſo of other partes of the Indies and rich countries to be diſcouered, which the worſhipfull M. Robert Thorne merchant of London (who dwelt long in the citie of Siuil in Spaine) exhorted king Henrie the eight to take in hand.

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE,

Experience prooueth that naturally all princes bee deſirous to extend and enlarge their dominions and kingdomes. Wherefore it is not to be marueiled, to ſee them euery day procure the ſame, not regarding any coſt, perill, and labour, that may thereby chance, but rather it is to be marueiled, if there be any prince content to liue quiet with his owne dominions. For ſurely the people would thinke he lacketh the noble courage and ſpirit of all other.

The world knoweth that the deſires of Princes haue bene ſo feruent to obtaine their purpoſe, that they haue aduentured and prooued things to mans coniecture impoſſible, the which they haue made poſſible, and alſo things difficult haue made facill: and thus to obtaine their purpoſe, haue in maner turned vp and downe the whole world ſo many times, that the people inhabiting in the fartheſt region of the Occident haue purſued with great diſtreſſe, labours and perils, to penetrate and enter into the fartheſt regions of the Orient: and in like wiſe thoſe people of the ſaid parts of the Orient haue had no leſſe labour and deſire to enter and penetrate into the fartheſt land of the Occident, and ſo following their purchaſe haue not ceaſed vntill they could paſſe no farther by reaſon of the great ſeas.

This naturall inclination is cauſe, that ſcarſely it may be ſaid, there is any kingdome ſtable, nor king quiet, but that his owne imagination, or other princes his neighbours doe trouble him. God and nature hath prouided to your Grace, and to your gracious progenitors, this Realme of England, and ſet it in ſo fruitfull a place, and within ſuch limites, that it ſhould ſeeme to be a place quiet and aparted from all the foreſayd deſire. One ſpeciall cauſe is, for that it is compaſſed with the Sea: by reaſon thereof it ſeemes, this notwithſtanding, their deſires and noble courages haue beene moſt commonly like vnto others: and with marueilous great labours, coſtes and perils, they haue traueiled and paſſed the Seas, making warre, not onely with Kings and dominions nigh neighbours, but alſo with them of farre countries, and ſo haue woonne and conquered many rich and fayre dominions, and amplified this your Graces Realme with great victory and glory. And alſo now of late your Grace hauing like courage and deſire, and not without iuſt cauſe, to enlarge this your kingdome, and demaund your limits and tribute of the French king, which at that preſent ye reſtrained, your Grace in perſon paſſed with a great power into France, putting your Graces perſon to great paine and labour, and without doubt victoriouſly you had conquered the ſayd Realme of France, as ye began, if your aduerſary had not reconciled himſelfe, and knowledged your Graces right and title: and ſo promiſed truly to pay the tribute then due, & fulfill your requeſt in all things, and alſo deſired your Grace for peace, the which of your clemencie you could not refuſe.

Now I conſidering this your noble courage and deſire, and alſo perceiuing that your Grace may at your pleaſure, to your greater glory, by a godly meane, with little coſt, perill, or labour to your Grace or any of your ſubiects, amplifie and inrich this your ſayd Realme, I know it is my bounden duety to manifeſt this ſecret vnto your Grace, which hitherto, as I ſuppoſe, hath beene hid: which is, that with a ſmall number of ſhips there may bee diſcouered diuers New lands and kingdomes, in the which without doubt your Grace ſhall winne perpetuall glory, and your ſubiects infinite profite. To which places there is left one way to diſcouer, which is into the North: for that of the foure partes of the worlde, it ſeemeth three parts are diſcouered by other Princes. For out of Spaine they haue diſcouered all the Indies and Seas Occidentall, and out of Portingall all the Indies and Seas Orientall: ſo that by this part of the Orient & Occident, they haue compaſſed the world. For the one of them departing toward the Orient, and the other toward the Occident, met againe in the courſe or way of the middeſt of the day, and ſo then was diſcouered a great part of the ſame Seas and coaſtes by the Spaniards. So that now reſt to be diſcouered the ſayd North parts, the which it ſeemeth to mee, is onely your charge and duety. Becauſe the ſituation of this your Realme is thereunto neereſt and apteſt of all other: and alſo for that you haue already taken it in hand. And in mine opinion it will not ſeeme well to leaue ſo great and profitable an enterpriſe, ſeeing it may ſo eaſily and with ſo little coſt, labour, and danger, be followed and obtayned: though heretofore your Grace hath made thereof a proofe, & found not the commodity thereby as you truſted, at this time it ſhall be no impediment. For there may be now prouided remedies for things, then lacked, and the inconueniences and lets remooued, that then were cauſe that your Graces deſire tooke no full effect, which is, the courſes to be changed, & followed the foreſaid new courſes. And concerning the mariners, ſhippes, and prouiſion, an order may be deuiſed and taken meete and conuenient, much better then hitherto. By reaſon whereof, and by Gods grace, no doubt your purpoſe ſhall take effect. Surely the coſt herein will be nothing, in compariſon to the great profit. The labour is much leſſe, yea nothing at all, where ſo great honour and glory is hoped for: and conſidering well the courſes, truely the danger & way is ſhorter to vs, then to Spaine or Portingall, as by euident reaſons appeareth.

A ſecrete.

The diſcouery of the North.

By Sebaſtian Cabot and ſir Thomas Pert in the eight yere of his reigne. And this is the voyage ſpoken of by Gonſaluo Ouiedo, that came to S. Domingo.

And now to declare ſomething of the commoditie and vtilitie of this Nauigation and diſcouerie: it is very cleere and certaine, that the Seas that commonly men ſay, without great danger, difficulty and perill, yea rather it is impoſſible to paſſe, that thoſe ſame Seas be nauigable and without anie ſuch danger, but that ſhippes may paſſe and haue in them perpetuall cleereneſſe of the day without any darkeneſſe of the night: which thing is a great commoditie for the nauigants, to ſee at all times round about them, as well the ſafegards as dangers, and how great difference it is betweene the commoditie and perils of other which leeſe the moſt part of euery foure and twentie houres the ſaid light, and goe in darkeneſſe groping their way, I thinke there is none ſo ignorant but perceiueth this more plainely, then it can be expreſſed. Yea what a vantage ſhal your Graces ſubiects haue alſo by this light to diſcouer the ſtrange landes, countries, and coaſtes? For if they that be diſcouered, to ſaile by them in darkeneſſe is with great danger, much more then the coaſtes not diſcouered be dangerous to trauell by night or in darkeneſſe. Yet theſe dangers or darkeneſſe hath not letted the Spanyards and Portingals and other, to diſcouer many vnknowen Realmes to their great perill. Which conſidered (and that your Graces ſubiects may haue the ſame light) it will ſeeme your Graces ſubiects to be without actiuitie or courage, in leauing to doe this glorious and noble enterpriſe. For they being paſt this litle way which they named ſo dangerous, (which may be two or three leagues before they come to the Pole, and as much more after they paſſe the Pole) it is cleere, that from thence foorth the ſeas and landes are as temperate as in theſe partes, and that then it may be at the will and pleaſure of the mariners, to chooſe whether they will ſayle by the coaſtes, that be colde, temperate or hote. For they being paſt the Pole, it is plaine, they may decline to what part they liſt.

Note.

Nauigation vnder the Pole

If they will goe toward the Orient, they ſhall inioy the regions of all the Tartarians that extend toward the midday, and from thence they may goe and proceede to the land of the Chinas, and from thence to the land of Cathaio Orientall, which is of all the maine land moſt Orientall that can be reckoned from our habitation. And if from thence they doe continue their nauigation, following the coaſts that returne toward the Occident, they ſhall fall in with Malaca, and ſo with all the

the Indies which we call Orientall, and following the way, may returne hither by the Cape of Buona Speranſa: and thus they ſhall compaſſe the whole worlde. And if they will take their courſe after they be paſt the Pole, toward the Occident, they ſhall goe in the backe ſide of the new found land, which of late was diſcouered by your Graces ſubiects, vntill they come to the backe ſide and South Seas of the Indies Occidentall. And ſo continuing their voyage they may returne thorow the ſtreight of Magellan to this countrey, and ſo they compaſſe alſo the world by that way: and if they goe this third way, and after they be paſt the Pole, goe right toward the Pole Antarctike, and then decline toward the lands and Iſlands ſituated between the Tropikes, and vnder the Equinoctiall, without doubt they ſhall finde there the richeſt landes and Iſlands of the world of golde, precious ſtones, balmes, ſpices, and other thinges that we here eſteeme moſt: which come out of ſtrange countries, and may returne the ſame way.

New found land diſcouered by ẏ Engliſh.

By this it appeareth, your Grace hath not onely a great aduantage of the riches, but alſo your ſubiects ſhall not trauell halfe of the way that other doe, which goe round about as aforeſayd.

The booke made by the right worſhipful M. Robert Thorne in the yeere 1527. in Siuil, to Doctour Ley, Lord ambaſſadour for king Henry the eight, to Charles the Emperour, being an information of the parts of the world, diſcouered by him and the king of Portingal: and alſo of the way to the Moluccaes by the North.

RIght noble and reuerend in &c. I haue receiued your letters, and haue procured and ſent to know of your ſeruant, who, your Lordſhip wrote, ſhould be ſicke in Merchena. I cannot there or els where heare of him, without he be returned to you, or gone to S. Lucar, and ſhipt. I cannot iudge but that of ſome contagious ſickneſſe hee died, ſo that the owner of the houſe for defaming his houſe would bury him ſecretly, and not be knowen of it. For ſuch things haue often times happened in this countrey.

Alſo to write vnto your Lordſhippe of the new trade of Spicery of the Emperour, there is no doubt but that the Iſlands are fertile of Cloues, Nutmegs, Mace, and Cinnamom: and that the ſaid Iſlands, with other there about, abound with golde, Rubies, Diamondes, Balaſſes, Granates, Iacincts, and other ſtones & pearles, as all other lands, that are vnder and neere the Equinoctiall. For we ſee, where nature giueth any thing, ſhe is no nigard. For as with vs and other, that are aparted from the ſaid Equinoctiall, our mettals be Lead, Tinne, and Iron, ſo theirs be Gold, Siluer, and Copper. And as our fruits and graines bee Apples, Nuts, and Corne, ſo theirs be Dates, Nutmegs, Pepper, Cloues, and other Spices. And as we haue Ieat, Amber, Criſtall, Iaſper, and other like ſtones, ſo haue they Rubies, Diamonds, Balaſſes, Saphyres, Iacincts, and other like. And though ſome ſay that of ſuch precious mettals, graines, or kind of ſpices, and precious ſtones, the abundance and quantity is nothing ſo great, as our mettals, fruits or ſtones aboue rehearſed: yet if it be well conſidered, how the quantitie of the earth vnder the Equinoctiall to both the Tropicall lines, (in which ſpace is found the ſayd Golde, ſpices and precious ſtones) is as much in quantity, as almoſt all the earth from the Tropickes to both the Poles; it cannot be denied but there is more quantity of the ſayd mettals, fruites, ſpices, and precious ſtones, then there is of the other mettals and other things before rehearſed. And I ſee that the preciouſnes of theſe things is meaſured after the diſtance that is between vs, and the things that we haue appetite vnto. For in this nauigation of the Spicerie was diſcouered, that theſe Iſlands nothing ſet by golde, but ſet more by a knife and a nayle of iron, then by his quantitie of Golde: and with reaſon, as the thing more neceſſary for mans ſeruice. And I doubt not but to them ſhould be as precious our corne and ſeedes, if they might haue them, as to vs their ſpices: & likewiſe the pieces of glaſſe that here we haue counterfeited are as precious to them, as to vs their ſtones: which by experience is ſeene daylie by them that haue trade thither. This of the riches of thoſe countries is ſufficient.

Doctor Leys letters.

Touching that your Lordſhip wrote, whether it may bee profitable to the Emperor or no? it may be without doubt of great profite: if, as the king of Portingal doth, he would become a merchant, and prouide ſhippes and their lading, and trade thither alone, and defend the trade of theſe Iſlands for himſelfe. But other greater buſineſſe withholdeth him from this. But ſtill, as now it is begunne to be occupied, it would come to much. For the ſhippes comming in ſafetie, there would thither many euery yere, of which to the Emperour is due of all the wares and iewels that come from thence the fift part for his cuſtome cleare without any coſt. And beſides this hee putteth in euery flote a certaine quantitie of money, of which hee enioyeth of the gaines pound and pounds like as other aduenturers doe. In a fleete of three ſhippes and a Carauel that went from this citie armed by the marchants of it, which departed in Aprill laſt paſt, I and my partener haue one thouſand foure hundred duckets that we employed in the ſayd fleete, principally for that two Engliſh men, friends of mine, which are ſomewhat learned in Coſmographie, ſhould goe in the ſame ſhippes, to bring me certaine relation of the ſituation of the countrey, and to be expert in the nauigation of thoſe ſeas, and there to haue informations of many other things, and aduiſe that I deſire to knowe eſpecially. Seeing in theſe quarters are ſhippes, and mariners of that countrey, and cardes by which they ſaile, though much vnlike ours, that they ſhould procure to haue the ſaid cards, and learne how they vnderſtand them, and eſpecially to know what nauigation they haue for thoſe Iſlands Northwards, and Northeaſtward.

This was the fleete wherein Cabot diſcouered the riuer of Plate, 1526.

For if from the ſayd Iſlands the ſea did extend, without interpoſition of land, to ſaile from the North point to the Northeaſt poynt one thouſand ſeuen hundred or one thouſand eight hundred leagues, they ſhould come to the New found Iſlands that we diſcouered, and ſo we ſhould be neerer to the ſayd Spicerie by almoſt two thouſand leagues then the Emperour, or the king of Portingal are. And to aduiſe your Lordſhip whether of theſe Spiceries of the king of Portingal or the Emperours is neerer, and alſo of the titles that either of them hath, and howe our New found lands are parted from it, (for that by writing without ſome demonſtration, it were hard to giue any declaration of it) I haue cauſed that your Lordſhip ſhall receiue herewith a little Mappe or Carde of the world: the which, I feare me, ſhall put your Lordſhip to more labour to vnderſtand, then me to make it, onely for that it is made in ſo litle roome that it cannot be but obſcurely ſet out, that is deſired to be ſeene in it, and alſo for that I am in this ſcience little expert: Yet to remedy in part this difficulty, it is neceſſary to declare to your Lordſhip my intent, with which I truſt you ſhall perceiue in this Card part of your deſire, if, for that I cannot expreſſe mine intent, with my declaration I doe not make it more obſcure.

Note.

The Newe found Iſlands diſcouered by the Engliſh.

A Mappe of the world.

Firſt, your Lordſhip knoweth that the Coſmographers haue diuided the earth by 360 degrees in latitude, and as many in longitude, vnder the which is comprehended all the roundnes of the earth: the latitude being diuided into foure quarters, ninetie degrees amount to euery quarter, which they meaſure by the altitude of the Poles, that is the North and South ſtarres, being from the line Equinoctiall till they come right vnder the North ſtarre the ſaid ninetie degrees: and as much from the ſayd line Equinoctiall to the South ſtarre be other ninety degrees. And as much more is alſo from either of the ſayd ſtarres agayne to the Equinoctiall. Which imagined to bee round, is ſoone perceiued thus, 360 degrees of latitude to be conſumed in the ſaid foure quarters of ninetie degrees a quarter: ſo that this latitude is the meaſure of the worlde from North to South, and from South to North. And the longitude, in which are alſo counted other 360, is counted from Weſt to Eaſt, or from Eaſt to Weſt, as in the Card is ſet.

The ſayd latitude your Lordſhip may ſee marked and diuided in the ende of this Card on the left hand: ſo that if you would know in what degrees of latitude any region or coaſt ſtandeth, take a compaſſe, and ſet the one foot of the ſame in the Equinoctial line right againſt the ſaid region, & apply the other foote of the compaſſe to the ſaid region or coaſt, & then ſet the ſayd compaſſe at the end of the Card, where the degrees are diuided. And the one foote of the compaſſe ſtanding in the line Equinoctial, the other will ſhew in the ſcale the degrees of altitude or latitude that the ſaid region is in. Alſo the longitude of the world I haue ſet out in the nether part of the Card, conteining alſo 360 degrees: which begin to be counted after Ptoleme and other Coſmographers from an headland called Capo Verde, which is ouer againſt a little croſſe made in the part Occidental, where the diuiſion of the degrees beginneth, and endeth in the ſame Capo Verde.

To know the latitudes.

Now to know in what longitude any land is, your Lordſhip muſt take a ruler or a compaſſe, and ſet the one foot of the compaſſe vpon the land or coaſt whoſe longitude you would know, and extend the other foot of the compaſſe to the next part of one of the tranſuerſall lines in the Oriental or Occidental part: which done, ſet the one foot of the compaſſe in the ſaid tranſuerſal line at the end of the nether ſcale, the ſcale of longitude, and the other foot ſheweth the degree of longitude that the region is in. And your Lordſhip muſt vnderſtand that this Card, though little, conteineth the vniuerſall whole world betwixt two collaterall lines, the one in the Occidentall part deſcendeth perpendicular vpon the 175 degree, & the other in the Orientall on the 170 degree, whoſe diſtance meaſureth the ſcale of longitude. And that which is without the two ſaid tranſuerſall lines, is onely to ſhew how the Orientall part is ioined with the Occident, and Occident with the Orient. For that that is ſet without the line in the Oriental part, is the ſame that is ſet within the other line in the Occidentall part: and that that is ſet without the line in the Occidentall part, is the ſame that is ſet within the line in the Orientall part, to ſhew that though this figure of the world in plaine or flatte ſeemeth to haue an end, yet one imagining that this ſayd Card were ſet vpon a round thing, where the endes ſhould touch by the lines, it would plainely appeare howe the Orient part ioyneth with the Occident, as there without the lines it is deſcribed and figured.

To know the longitudes.

And for more declaration of the ſaid Card, your Lordſhip ſhall vnderſtand, that beginning on the part Occidental within the line, the firſt land that is ſet out, is the maine land and Iſlands of the Indies of the Emperour. Which maine land or coaſt goeth Northward, and finiſheth in the land that we found, which is called here Terra de Labrador. So that it appeareth the ſayd land that we found, and the Indies to be all one maine land.

Now called the ſtraight of Magelane.

The ſayd coaſt from the ſayd Indies Southward, as by the Card your Lordſhippe may ſee, commeth to a certaine ſtraight Sea, called Eſtrecho de todos Santos: by which ſtraight Sea the Spaniards goe to the Spiceries, as I ſhall declare more at large: the which ſtraight Sea is right againſt three hundred fifteene degrees of longitude, and is of latitude or altitude from the Equinoctiall three and fifty degrees. The firſt land from the ſayd beginning of the Card toward the Orient are certaine Iſlands of the Canaries, and Iſlandes of Capo verde. But the firſt maine land next to the line Equinoctial is the ſayd Capo verde, and from thence Northward by the ſtraight of this ſea of Italie. And ſo followeth Spayne, France, Flanders, Almaine, Denmarke, and Norway, which is the higheſt parte toward the North. And ouer againſt Flanders are our Iſlands of England and Ireland. Of the landes and coaſtes within the ſtreights I haue ſet out onely the Regions, diuiding them by lines of their limits, by which plainely I thinke your Lordſhip may ſee, in what ſituation euerie region is, and of what highneſſe, and with what regions it is ioyned. I doe thinke few are left out of all Europe. In the parts of Aſia and Affrica I could not ſo wel make the ſayd diuiſiōs: for that they be not ſo wel knowen, nor need not ſo much. This I write becauſe in the ſaid Card be made the ſaid lines & ſtrikes, that your Lordſhip ſhould vnderſtand wherefore they doe ſerue. Alſo returning to the foreſaid Capo verde, the coaſt goeth Southward to a Cape called Capo de buona ſperanſa: which is right ouer againſt the 60. & 65. degree of longitude. And by this Cape go the Portingals to their Spicerie. For from this Cape toward the Orient, is the land of Calicut, as your Lordſhip may ſee in the headland ouer againſt the 130. degree. Frō the ſayd Cape of Buona ſperanſa the coaſt returneth toward the line Equinoctial, and paſſing forth, entreth the red ſea, & returning out, entreth again into the gulfe of Perſia, and returneth toward the Equinoctiall line, till that it commeth to the headland called Calicut aforeſayd, and from thence the coaſt making a gulfe, where is the riuer of Ganges, returneth toward the line to a headland called Malaca, where is the principall Spicerie: & from this Cape returneth and maketh a great gulfe, and after the coaſt goeth right toward the Orient, and ouer againſt this laſt gulfe and coaſt be many Iſlands, which be Iſlandes of the Spiceries of the Emperour. Vpon which the Portingals and he be at variance.

Note.

The ſayd coaſt goeth toward the Orient, and endeth right againſt the 155. degrees, and after returneth toward the Occident Northward: which coaſt not yet plainely knowen, I may ioine to the New found lande found by vs, that I ſpake of before. So that I finiſh with this briefe declaration of the Card aforeſayd. Well I know I ſhould alſo haue declared how the coaſts within the ſtraightes of the Sea of Italie runne. It is playne that paſſing the ſtreightes on the North ſide of that Sea after the coaſt of Granado, and with that which pertaines to Spaine, is the coaſt of that which France hath in Italie. And then followeth in one piece all Italie, which land hath an arme of the Sea, with a gulfe which is called Mare Adriaticum. And in the bottome of this gulfe is the citie of Venice. And on the other part of the ſayd gulfe is Sclauonia, and next Grecia, then the ſtreits of Conſtantinople, and then the ſea called Euxinus, which is within the ſayd ſtreightes: and comming out of the ſayd ſtreightes, followeth Turcia maior (though now on both ſides it is called Turcia.) And ſo the coaſt runneth Southward to Syria, and ouer againſt the ſayd Turcia are the Iſlands of Rhodes, Candie, and Cyprus. And ouer againſt Italie are the Iſlands of Sicilia and Sardinia. And ouer againſt Spaine is Maiorca and Minorca. In the ende of the gulfe of Syria is Iudea. And from thence returneth the coaſt toward the Occident, till it commeth to the ſtreightes where we began, which all is the coaſt of Affrike and Barbarie. Alſo your Lordſhip ſhall vnderſtand that the coaſtes of the Sea throughout all the world, I haue coloured with yellow, for that it may appeare that all that is within the line coloured yellow, is to be imagined to be maine land or Iſlands: and all without the line ſo coloured to bee Sea: whereby it is eaſie and light to know it. Albeit in this little roome any other deſcription would rather haue made it obſcure then cleere. And the ſayd coaſts of the Sea are all ſet iuſtly after the maner and forme as they lie, as the nauigation approoueth them throughout all the Card, ſaue onely the coaſtes and Iſles of the Spicerie of the Emperour which is from ouer againſt the 160, to the 215. degrees of longitude. For theſe coaſtes and ſituations of the Iſlands, euery of the Coſmographers and pilots of Portingal & Spayne do ſet after their purpoſe. The Spaniards more towards the Orient, becauſe they ſhould appeare to appertaine to the Emperour: & the Portingals more toward the Occident, for that they ſhould fal within their iuriſdiction. So that the pilots and nauigants thither, which in ſuch caſes ſhould declare the truth, by their induſtrie do ſet them falſly euery one to fauour his prince. And for this cauſe can be no certaine ſituation of that coaſt and Iſlands, till this difference betwixt them be verified. Now to come to the purpoſe of your Lordſhips demaund touching the difference betweene the Emperour and the king of Portingal, to vnderſtand it better, I muſt declare the beginning of this diſcouerie. Though peraduenture your Lordſhip may ſay that in that I haue written nought of purpoſe, I fall in the prouerbe, A gemino ouo bellum: But your Lordſhip commanded me to be large, and I take licence to be prolixious, and ſhalbe peraduenture tedious, but your Lordſhip knoweth that Nihil ignorantia verboſius.

Doctor Leys demaund.

In the yeere 1484 the king of Portingal minded to arme certaine Caruels to diſcouer this Spicerie. Then foraſmuch as he feared that being diſcouered, euery other prince woulde ſende and trade thither, ſo that the coſt and perill of diſcouering ſhould be his, and the profite common: wherefore firſt hee gaue knowledge of this his minde to all princes Chriſtened, ſaying that hee would ſeeke amongſt the infidels newe poſſeſſions of regions, and therefore would make a certaine armie: and that if any of them would helpe in the coſt of the ſayd armie, he ſhould enioy his part of the profite or honour that ſhould come of it. And as then this diſcouering was holden for a ſtrange thing and vncertaine. Nowe they ſay, that all the Princes of Chriſtendome anſwered, that they would be no part of ſuch an armie, nor yet of the profit that might come of it. After the which he gaue knowledge to the Pope of his purpoſe, and of the anſwere of all the Princes, deſiring him that ſeeing that none would helpe in the coſts, that he would iudge all that ſhould bee found and diſcouered to be of his iuriſdiction, and commaunding that none other princes ſhould intermeddle therewith. The Pope ſayd not as Chriſt ſaith, Quis me conſtituit iudicem inter vos? He did not refuſe, but making himſelfe as Lord and Iudge of all, not onely granted that all that ſhould be diſcouered from Orient to Occident, ſhould be the kings of Portingal, but alſo, that vpon great cenſures no other Prince ſhould diſcouer but he. And if they did, all to bee the kings of Portingal. So he armed a fleete, and in the yeere 1497 were diſcouered the Iſlands of Calicut, from whence is brought all the ſpice he hath.

The Pope reprehended.

After this in the yere 1492 the king of Spaine willing to diſcouer lands toward the Occident without making any ſuch diligence, or taking licence of the king of Portingal, armed certaine Caruels, and then diſcouered this India Occidentall, eſpecially two Iſlands of the ſayd India, that in this Card I ſet forth, naming the one la Dominica, and the other Cuba, and brought certaine golde from thence. Of the which when the king of Portingal had knowledge, he ſent to the king of Spaine, requiring him to giue him the ſayd Iſlands. For that by the ſentence of the Pope all that ſhould be diſcouered was his, and that hee ſhould not proceede further in the diſcouerie without his licence. And at the ſame time it ſeemeth that out of Caſtil into Portingal had gone for feare of burning infinite number of Iewes that were expelled out of Spaine, for that they would not turne to be Chriſtians, and carried with them infinite number of golde and ſiluer. So that it ſeemeth that the king of Spaine anſwered, that it was reaſon that the king of Portingal aſked, and that to be obedient to that which the Pope had decreed, he would giue him the ſayd Iſlands of the Indies. Nowe for as much as it was decreed betwixt the ſayde kings, that none ſhould receiue the others ſubiects fugitiues, nor their goods, therfore the king of Portingal ſhould pay and returne to the king of Spaine a million of golde or more, that the Iewes had caryed out of Spaine to Portingal, & that in ſo doing he would giue theſe Iſlands, and deſiſt from any more diſcouering. And not fulfilling this, he would not onely not giue theſe Iſlands, but procure to diſcouer more where him thought beſt. It ſeemeth that the king of Portingal would not, or could not with his eaſe pay this money. And ſo not paying, that he could not let the king of Spaine to diſcouer: ſo that he enterpriſed not toward the Orient where he had begun & found the Spicerie. And conſented to the king of Spaine, that touching this diſcouering they ſhould diuide the worlde betweene them two. And that all that ſhould be diſcouered from Cape Verde, where this Card beginneth to be counted in the degrees of longitude, to 180 of the ſayd ſcale of longitude, which is halfe the world toward the Orient, & finiſheth in this Card right ouer againſt a litle croſſe made at the ſaid 180 degrees, to be the king of Portingals. And all the land from the ſaid Croſſe towarde the Occident, vntill it ioyneth with the other Croſſe in the Orient, which conteineth the other hundreth and eightie degrees, that is the other halfe of the worlde, to be the king of Spaines. So that from the land ouer againſt the ſaid hundreth & eightie degrees vntill it finiſh in the three hundred and ſixtie on both the ends of the Card, is the iuriſdiction of the king of Spaine. So after this maner they diuided the world betweene them.

Now for that theſe Iſlands of Spicery fall neere the terme and limites betweene theſe princes (for as by the ſayd Card you may ſee they begin from one hundred and ſixtie degrees of longitude, and ende in 215) it ſeemeth all that falleth from 160 to 180 degrees, ſhould be of Portingal: and all the reſt of Spaine. And for that their Coſmographers and Pilots coulde not agree in the ſituation of the ſayde Iſlandes (for the Portingals ſet them all within their 180 degrees, and the Spaniards ſet them all without:) and for that in meaſuring, all the Coſmographers of both partes, or what other that euer haue bene cannot giue certaine order to meaſure the longitude of the worlde, as they doe of the latitude; for that there is no ſtarre fixed from Eaſt to Weſt, as are the ſtarres of the Poles from North to South, but all mooueth with the mouing diuine: no maner can bee founde howe certainely it may bee meaſured, but by coniectures, as the Nauigants haue eſteemed the way they haue gone. But it is manifeſt that Spaine had the ſituation of al the landes from Cape Verde, toward the Orient of yͤ Portingals to their 180 degrees. And in all their Cardes they neuer hitherto ſet the ſaide Iſlands within their limitation of the ſayd 180 degrees, (though they knewe very well of the Iſlands,) till now that the Spaniards diſcouered them. And it is knowen that the king of Portingal had trade to theſe Iſlands afore, but would neuer ſuffer Portingal to go thither from Calicut: for ſo much as he knew that it fell out of his dominion: leaſt by going thither there might come ſome knowledge of thoſe other Iſlands of the king of Spaine, but bought the cloues of Marchants of that countrey, that brought them to Calicut, much deerer then they would haue coſt, if he had ſent for them, thinking after this maner it would abide alwayes ſecret. And now that it is diſcouered he ſeides and keepes the Spaniards from the trade all that he can.

The longitudes hard to be found out.

Alſo it ſhould ſeeme that when this foreſaid conſent of the diuiſion of the worlde was agreed of betweene them, the king of Portingal had already diſcouered certaine Iſlandes that lie ouer againſt Cape Verde, and alſo certaine part of the maine land of India toward the South, from whence he ſette Braſill, and called it the land of Braſil. So for that all ſhould come in his terme and limites, hee tooke three hundred and ſeuentie leagues beyond Cape Verde: and after this, his 180 degrees, being his part of the worlde, ſhould begin in the Carde right ouer againſt the 340 degrees, where I haue made a little compaſſe with a croſſe, and ſhould finiſh at the 160 degree, where alſo I haue made another little marke. And after this computation without any controuerſie, the Iſlands of the ſpicery fal out of the Portingals domination. So that nowe the Spaniards ſay to the Portingals, that if they would beginne their 180 degrees from the ſayde Cape Verde, to the intent they ſhould extende more toward the Orient, and ſo to touch thoſe Iſlandes of the Spicerie of the Emperour, which is al that is betweene the two croſſes made in this Card, that then the Iſlands of Cape Verde and the lande of Braſil that the Portingals nowe obtaine, is out of the ſayd limitation, and that they are of the Emperours. Or if their 180 degrees they count from the 370 leagues beyond the ſaid Cape Verde, to include in it the ſaid Iſlands and lands of Braſil, then plainely appeareth the ſaid 180 degrees ſhould finiſh long before they come to theſe Iſlands of the Spicerie of the Emperour: As by this Carde your Lordſhip may ſee. For their limits ſhould begin at the 340 degrees of this Carde, and ende at the 160 degrees, where I haue made two little markes of the compaſſe with croſſes in them.

So that plainely it ſhould appeare by reaſon, that the Portingals ſhould leaue theſe Iſlands of Cape Verde and land of Braſil, if they would haue part of the Spicerie of the Emperours: or els holding theſe, they haue no part there. To this the Portingals ſay, that they will beginne their 180 degrees from the ſelfe ſame Cape Verde: for that it may extende ſo much more toward the Orient, and touch theſe Iſlandes of the Emperours: and would winne theſe Iſlandes of Cape Verde and land of Braſil neuertheleſſe, as a thing that they poſſeſſed before the conſent of this limitation was made.

So none can verely tell which hath the beſt reaſon. They be not yet agreed, Quare ſub Iudice lis eſt.

But without doubt (by all coniectures of reaſon) the ſayd Iſlands fall all without the limitation of Portingal, and pertaine to Spaine, as it appeareth by the moſt part of all the Cardes made by the Portingals, ſaue thoſe which they haue falſified of late purpoſely.

New found land diſcouered by the Engliſhmen.

But now touching that your Lordſhip wrote, whether that which we diſcouered toucheth any thing the foreſayd coaſtes: once it appeareth plainely, that the Newefound land that we diſcouered, is all a maine land with the Indies Occidentall, from whence the Emperour hath all the gold and pearles: and ſo continueth of coaſt more then 5000 leagues of length, as by this Carde appeareth. For from the ſaid New lands it proceedeth toward the Occident to the Indies, and from the Indies returneth toward the Orient, and after turneth Southward vp till it come to the Straits of Todos Santos, which I reckon to be more then 5000 leagues.

So that to the Indias it ſhould ſeeme that we haue ſome title, at leaſt that for our diſcouering we might trade thither as other doe. But all this is nothing neere the Spicerie.

Note.

Now then if from the ſayd New found lands the Sea be nauigable, there is no doubt, but ſayling Northward and paſſing the Pole, deſcending to the Equinoctial line, we ſhall hit theſe Iſlands, and it ſhould be a much ſhorter way, then either the Spaniards or the Portingals haue. For we be diſtant from the Pole but thirty and nine degrees, and from the Pole to the Equinoctiall be ninetie, the which added together, bee an hundred twenty and nine degrees, leagues 2489, and miles 7440: Where we ſhould find theſe Iſlands. And the Nauigation of the Spaniards to the Spicerie is, as by this Carde you may ſee, from Spaine to the Iſlandes of Canarie, and from theſe Iſlandes they runne ouer the line Equinoctiall Southwarde to the Cape of the maine land of the Indians, called the Cape of Saint Auguſtine, and from this Cape Southwards to the ſtraites of Todos Santos, in the which nauigation to the ſaid ſtraites is 1700. or 1800 leagues; and from theſe Straites being paſt them, they returne towarde the line Equinoctiall to the Iſlands of Spicerie, which are diſtant from the ſaide Straites 4200, or 4300. leagues.

To ſaile by the Pole.

Or the ſtraites of Magelane.

The nauigation of the Portingals to the ſaid Iſlandes is departing from Portingal Southward towarde the Cape Verde, and from thence to another Cape paſſing the line Equinoctial called Capo de bona ſperanſa, and from Portingal to the Cape is 1800 leagues, and from this Cape to the Iſlands of Spicerie of the Emperour is 2500. leagues.

So that this nauigation amounteth all to 4300. leagues. So that (as afore is ſayd,) if betweene our New found lands or Norway, or Iſland, the ſeas toward the North be nauigable, we ſhould goe to theſe Iſlands a ſhorter way by more then 2000. leagues.

And though we went not to the ſayd Iſlandes, for that they are the Emperours or kings of Portingal, wee ſhoulde by the way and comming once to the line Equinoctiall, finde landes no leſſe riche of golde and Spicerie, as all other landes are vnder the ſayd line Equinoctiall: and alſo ſhould, if we may paſſe vnder the North, enioy the nauigation of all Tartarie. Which ſhould be no leſſe profitable to our commodities of cloth, then theſe Spiceries to the Emperour, and king of Portingal.

Note

Benefite to England.

But it is a generall opinion of all Coſmographers, that paſſing the ſeuenth clime, the ſea is all ice, and the colde ſo much that none can ſuffer it. And hitherto they had all the like opinion, that vnder the line Equinoctiall for much heate the land was vnhabitable.

Obiection.

Yet ſince (by experience is proued) no land ſo much habitable nor more temperate. And to conclude, I thinke the ſame ſhould be found vnder the North, if it were experimented. For as all iudge, Nihil fit vacuum in rerum natura: So I iudge, there is no land vnhabitable, nor Sea innauigable. If I ſhould write the reaſon that preſenteth this vnto me, I ſhould be too prolixe, and it ſeemeth not requiſite for this preſent matter. God knoweth that though by it I ſhould haue no great intereſt, yet I haue had and ſtill haue no litle mind of this buſineſſe: So that if I had facultie to my will, it ſhould be the firſt thing that I woulde vnderſtand, euen to attempt, if our Seas Northward be nauigable to the Pole, or no. I reaſon, that as ſome ſickeneſſes are hereditarious, and come from the father to the ſonne, ſo this inclination or deſire of this diſcouerie I inherited of my father, which with another marchant of Briſtow named Hugh Eliot, were the diſcouerers of the New found lands, of the which there is no doubt, (as nowe plainely appeareth) if the mariners would then haue bene ruled, and followed their Pilots minde, the lands of the Weſt Indies (from whence all the gold commeth) had bene ours. For all is one coaſt, as by the Carde appeareth, and is aforeſayd.

Anſwere.

A true opiniō.

A voyage of diſcouery by the Pole.
M. Thorne and M. Eliot diſcouerers of New found land.
The cauſe why the Weſt Indies were not ours: which alſo Sebaſtian Gabot writeth in an Epiſtle to Bapiſta Ramuſius.

Alſo in this Carde by the coaſtes where you ſee C. your Lordſhip ſhall vnderſtand it is ſet for Cape or headland, where I. for Iland, where P. for Port, where R. for Riuer. Alſo in all this little Carde I thinke nothing be erred touching the ſituation of the land, ſaue onely in theſe Ilands of Spicerie: which, for that (as afore is ſayd) euery one ſetteth them after his minde, there can be no certification how they ſtand. I doe not denie, that there lacke many things, that a conſummate Carde ſhould haue, or that a right good demonſtration deſireth. For there ſhould be expreſſed all the mountaines and Riuers that are principall of name in the earth, with the names of Portes of the ſea, the names of all principall cities, which all I might haue ſet, but not in this Carde, for the litle ſpace would not conſent.

Your Lordſhip may ſee that ſetting onely the names almoſt of euery Region, and yet not of all, the roome is occupied. Many Iſlands are alſo left out, for the ſaid lack of roome, the names almoſt of all Portes put to ſilence, with the roſes of the windes or poines of the compaſſe: For that this is not for Pilots to ſayle by, but a ſummary declaration of that which your Lordſhip commaunded. And if by this your Lordſhip cannot wel perceiue the meaning of this Card, of the which I would not marueile, by reaſon of the rude compoſition of it, will it pleaſe your Lordſhip to aduiſe mee to make a bigger and a better Mappe, or els that I may cauſe one to be made. For I know my ſelfe in this and all other nothing perfect, but Licet ſemper diſcens, nunquam tamen ad perfectam ſcientiam perueniens. Alſo I know, to ſet the forme Sphericall of the world in Plano after the true rule of Coſmographie, it would haue bene made otherwiſe then this is: howbeit the demonſtration ſhould not haue bene ſo plaine.

And alſo theſe degrees of longitude, that I ſet in the lower part of this card, ſhould haue bin ſet along by the line Equinoctiall, & ſo then muſt be imagined. For the degrees of longitude neere either of the poles are nothing equall in bigneſſe to them in the Equinoctiall. But theſe are ſet ſo, for that ſetting them a long the Equinoctial, it would haue made obſcure a great part of the map. Many other curioſities may be required, which for the nonce I did not ſet downe, as well for that the intent I had principally was to ſatiſfie your doubt touching the ſpicerie, as for that I lack leaſure and time. I truſt your Lordſhip correcting that which is erred, will accept my good will, which is to doe any thing that I may in your Lordſhips ſeruice. But from henceforth I knowe your Lordſhip will rather commaund me to keepe ſilence, then to be large, when you ſhall be wearied with the reading of this diſcourſe. Ieſus proſper your eſtate and health.

Your Lordſhips
Robert Thorne 1527.

ALſo this Carde and that which I write touching the variance betweene the Emperour and the king of Portingall, is not to be ſhewed or communicated there with many of that court. For though there is nothing in it preiudiciall to the Emperour, yet it may be a cauſe of paine to the maker: as well for that none may make theſe Cardes, but certaine appointed and allowed for maſters, as for that peraduenture it would not ſound well to them, that a ſtranger ſhould know or diſcouer their ſecretes: and would appeare worſt of all, if they vnderſtand that I write touching the ſhort way to the ſpicerie by our Seas. Though peraduenture of troth it is not to be looked to, as a thing that by all opinions is vnpoſſible, and I thinke neuer will come to effect: and therefore neither here nor elſe where is it to be ſpoken of. For to moue it amongſt wiſe men, it ſhould bee had in deriſion. And therefore to none I would haue written nor ſpoken of ſuch things, but to your Lordſhip, to whom boldly I commit in this all my fooliſh fantaſie as to my ſelf. But if it pleaſe God that into England I may come with your Lordſhip, I will ſhew ſome coniectures of reaſon, though againſt the generall opinion of Coſmographers, by which ſhall appeare this that I ſay not to lacke ſome foundation. And till that time I beſeeche your Lordſhip let it be put to ſilence: and in the meane ſeaſon it may pleaſe God to ſend our two Engliſhmen, that are gone to the Spicerie, which may alſo bring more plaine declaration of that which in this caſe might be deſired.

Alſo I knowe I needed not to haue beene ſo prolixe in the declaration of this Carde to your Lordſhip, if the ſayd Carde had bene very well made after the rules of Coſmographie. For your Lordſhip would ſoone vnderſtand it better then I, or any other that could haue made it: and ſo it ſhould appeare that I ſhewed Delphinū natare. But for that I haue made it after my rude maner, it is neceſſary that I be the declarer or gloſer of mine own worke, or els your Lordſhip ſhould haue had much labour to vnderſtand it, which now with it alſo cannot be excuſed, it is ſo groſſely done. But I knew you looked for no curious things of mee, and therefore I truſt your Lordſhip will accept this, and hold me for excuſed. In other mens letters that they write they craue pardon that at this preſent they write no larger: but I muſt finiſh, aſking pardon that at this preſent I write ſo largely. Ieſus preſerue your Lordſhip with augmentation of dignities.

A briefe Treatiſe of the great Duke of Moſcouia his genealogie, being taken out of the Moſcouites manuſcript Chronicles written by a Polacke.

IT hath almoſt euer bene the cuſtome of nations, in ſearching out the infancie and firſt beginnings of their eſtate, to aſcribe the ſame vnto ſuch authors as liued among men in great honour and endued mankinde with ſome one or other excellent benefite. Nowe, this inbred deſire of all nations to blaze and ſet foorth their owne petigree hath ſo much preuayled with the greater part, that leauing the vndoubted trueth, they haue betaken themſelues vnto meere fables and fictions. Yea and the Chronicles of many nations written in diuers and ſundrie ages doe teſtifie the ſame. Euen ſo the Grecians boaſted that they were either Autocthones, that is earthbredde, or els lineally deſcended from the Gods. And the Romans affirme that Mars was father vnto their firſt founder Romulus. Right well therefore and iudicially ſayth Titus Liuius: Neither meane I to auouch (quoth he) ne to diſable or confute thoſe thinges which before the building and foundation of the Citie haue beene reported, being more adorned and fraught with Poeticall fables then with incorrupt and ſacred monuments of trueth: antiquitie is to be pardoned in this behalfe, namely in ioyning together matters hiſtoricall and poeticall, to make the beginnings of cities to ſeeme the more honourable. For ſith antiquity it ſelfe is accompted ſuch a notable argument of true nobilitie, euen priuate men in all ages haue contended thereabout. Wherefore citizens of Rome being deſirous to make demonſtration of their Gentrie, vſe to haue their aunceſtours armes painted along the walles of their houſes: in which regarde they were ſo puffed vp, that oftentimes they would arrogantly diſdaine thoſe men, which by their owne vertue had attained vnto honour. In like ſorte Poets, when the originall of their worthines and braue champions was either vtterly vnknowen or ſomewhat obſcure, would ofte referre it vnto their Gods themſelues. So in theſe our dayes (to lette paſſe others) the Turkiſh Emperour with greet preſumption boaſteth himſelfe to bee deſcended of the Troian blood. Likewiſe the great duke of Moſcouie, to make himſelfe and his predeceſſours ſeeme the more ſoueraigne, deriueth the beginnings of his parentage from the Romane Emperours, yea euen from Auguſtus Cæſar. Albeit therefore no man is ſo fonde as to accept of this report for trueth, yet will wee briefly ſet downe what the Moſcouites haue written in their Chronicles as touching this matter.

Auguſtus (beleeue it who liſteth) had certaine brethren or kinſfolkes which were appoynted gouernours ouer diuers prouinces. Amongſt the reſt one Pruſſus (of whome Pruſſia was named) had his place of gouernment aſſigned vnto him vpon the ſhore of the eaſtern or Baltick ſea, and vpon the famous riuer of Wixel. This mans graund children or nephewes of the fourth generation were Rurek, Sinaus, and Truuor, who likewiſe inhabited in the very ſame places. Whereas therefore at the very ſame time the Ruſſians or the Moſcouites without any ciuill regiment poſſeſſed large and ſpacious territories towards the north, the foreſayd three brethren, vpon the perſwaſion of one Goſtomiſlius the chiefe citizen of Nouogrod, in the yeare ſince the worldes creation (according to the computation of the Greekes) 6370, which was in the yeare of our Lord 572, were ſent for, to beare rule. And ſo ioyning their kinſman Olechus vnto them, and diuiding theſe huge countreys among themſelues, they laboured to reduce the barbarous and ſauage people vnto a ciuill kinde of life.

Ruſſia became ciuill in yͤ yere of our Lord 572.

Sinaus and Truuor deceaſing without iſſue, Rurek ſucceeded and lefte a ſonne behinde him named Igor; who not being of ſufficient yeres to beare rule, was committed vnto the protection of his kinſman Olechus. The ſayde Igor begate of Olha daughter vnto a citizen of Pleſco (who, after her huſbande was ſlaine by his enemies, taking her iourney to Conſtantinople, was there baptized by the name of Helena) a ſonne called Stoſlaus, who fought many battels with the neighbour countreys. Howbeit at length Stoſlaus was ſlayne by his foe, who making a drinking cup of his ſkull, engraued therupon in golden letters this ſentence: Seeking after other mens, he loſt his owne. He left behind him three ſonnes, namely Teropolchus, Olega, and Vulodimir. The which Vulodimir hauing ſlaine his two brethren, became ſole gouernour of Ruſsia, or (as the Moſcouites call it) Roſſeia, his owne ſelfe. This man beginning at length to loath and miſlike the ethnik religion, and the multitude of falſe gods, applyed his minde vnto the religion of Chriſt, and hauing taken to wife Anna ſiſter vnto Baſilius and Conſtantinus Emperours of Conſtantinople, was together with his whole nation, in the yeare of Chriſt 988. baptized, and imbraced the Chriſtian religion, with the rites and ceremonies of the Greeke Church, and his name being changed, he was called Baſilius.

Howbeit Zonaras reporteth that before the time of Vulodimir, Baſilius Emperour of Conſtantinople ſent a biſhop vnto the Ruſſians, by whoſe meanes they were conuerted vnto the Chriſtian faith. He reporteth moreouer that they would not be perſwaded vnleſſe they might ſee a miracle: whereupon the ſaid biſhop hauing made his prayers vnto almighty God, threwe the booke of the Euangeliſts into the fire, which remained there vnconſumed. And that by this miracle they were mooued to giue credite vnto the doctrine of Chirſt, and to conforme themſelues thereunto.

The ſonnes of Vulodimir were Vuiſeſlaus, Iſoſlaus, Iaroſlaus, Suatopolcus, Boriſſus, Glebus, Stoſlaus, Vulzeuolodus, Staniſlaus, Sudiſlaus, and Podius who died in his childhood. Amongſt the reſidue all Ruſsia was diuided by their father, who not being contented with their portions, but inuading each other, were moſt of them ſlaine by their mutuall contentions. Boriſſus and Glebus in regard of their holy conuerſation were regiſtred for Saints, whoſe feaſts are euery yeere celebrated with great ſolemnitie vpon the twelfth of Nouember.

At length Iaroſlaus only got the Soueraigne authoritie into his owne hands, and left behind him foure ſonnes, Vvlodimir, Iſoſlauus, Weceſlauus, and Vuſzeuolodus.

Kiow. The foreſaid Vulodimir ſonne of Iaroſlaus kept his reſidence at the ancient citie of Kiow ſtanding vpon the riuer of Boriſthenes, and after diuers conflicts with his kinſmen, hauing ſubdued all the prouinces vnto himſelfe, was called Monomachos, that is, the onely champoin. This man (for I thinke it not amiſſe to report thoſe things which their owne Manuſcript Chronicles make mention of) waged warre againſt Conſtantine the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and when he had waſted & ouerrun Thracia, being returned home with great and rich ſpoyles, and making preparation for new wars, Conſtantine ſent Neophytus the Metropolitane of Epheſus and two Biſhops, with the gouernour of Antiochia, and Euſtaphius the Abbat of Ieruſalem, to preſent rich and magnificent gifts vnto him; as namely, part of the croſſe of our Sauiour Chriſt, a crowne of gold, a drinking cup curiouſly made of Sardonyx ſtone, a cloake ſet all ouer with precious ſtones, and a golden chaine; commaunded them to ſalute him by the name of Czar (which name, as it may be prooued by many arguments, ſignifieth a king, and not an Emperour) and concluded a moſt inuiolable league of amity and friendſhip with him.

The foreſayd Vulodimir begate Vuſzeuolodus the ſecond. This Vuſzeuolodus lefte eight ſonnes behind him, Miſciſlaus, Iſoſlaus, Stoſlaus, Teropolcus, Weceſlaus, Romanus, Georgius, and Andrew. The ſonnes of George were Roſeſlaus, Andrew, Baſilius, and Demetrius.

1237. Demetrius begat George, who in the yere 1237. was ſlaine by one Bathy a Tartarian duke, which Bathy waſted Moſcouia, and ſubdued the ſame vnto himſelfe. Since which time the Ruſſians were tributary to the Tartars, and were gouerned by ſuch dukes as they pleaſed to ſet ouer them. Howbeit the Tartars ſo greatly abuſed that authoritie, that when they ſent their ambaſſadours vnto the prince of Moſcouie, he was conſtrained to goe forth and meete with them, and (as Herbortus Fulſtinius in his Polonian hiſtorie reporteth) to offer them a baſon full of mares milk, and if they had ſpilt any whit thereof vpon their horſes maines, to licke it off with his toung, and hauing conducted them into his princely court, to ſtand bareheaded before them while they ſate downe, and with all reuerence to giue eare and attendance vnto them. But by what meanes they ſhooke off at the length this yoake of ſeruitude, I will forthwith declare.

About the ſame time almoſt all Polonia, and the dukedome of Sileſia were ouerrun by the Tartars with fire and ſword. Who hauing burnt Preſla the chiefe citie of Sileſia, & being come before the citie of Legnitz, they fought there a moſt cruel and bloody field, wherin was ſlain duke Henrie himſelfe being ſonne vnto the moſt holy and deuout lady Heduice, with many others, whoſe monuments and graues be as yet extant in ſundry places, and with an infinite multitude of common ſouldiers, inſomuch that the Tartars filled nine great ſackes with the eares of them which they had ſlaine. The Tartars to the end they might obtaine the victorie, preſented vnto the view of our ſouldiers the portrature of a mans head placed by arte magique vpon a banner, wherein the letter X. was painted, which being ſhaken and mooued vp and downe breathed foorth a moſt loathſome ſtench, & ſtrooke ſuch a terrour into the hearts of our men, that being as it were aſtoniſhed with the ſnaky viſage of Meduſa, they were vtterly daunted and diſmayed.

From thence Bathy and his company with the ſame bloodthirſtie intent marched into Hungarie, and had almoſt ſlaine king Bela the fourth, who together with his ſonne eſcaping by flight did ſcarcely ridde themſelues out of the enemies hand. And when the whole world almoſt was exceedingly terrified at the cruell inuaſions of this moſt barbarous nation, at length Pope Innocentius the fourth ſending ambaſſadours vnto Bathy obtained peace for fiue yeeres: but to forſake his heatheniſh ſuperſtitions and to become a Chriſtian, hee would by no meanes bee perſwaded. For he was by the inſtigation of the Saracens infected with deuiliſh opinions of Mahomet, as being more agreeable vnto his barbarous rudenes, which euen vnto this day the Tartars do maintaine, like as the prophane Turkes alſo.

These ambaſſadours were Iohan.de Plano Carpini & Frier Benedict a Poloniam.

This Bathy had a ſonne called Tamerlan, whome the Moſcouites call Temirkutla, who likewiſe, as it is recorded in hiſtories, attained vnto great renoume. For he caried about with him in a cage Baiazet the Turkiſh Emperour being fettered in golden chaines, and made him a laughing ſtocke vnto all men.

Let vs now returne vnto the Ruſſians. George being ſlaine, Iaroſlaus his brother ſucceeded in his roome, and left behinde him three ſonnes, Theodorus, Alexander and Andreas, Daniel the ſonne of Alexander firſt eſtabliſhed his royall ſeate in the citie of Moſco, and magnificently building the caſtle which before time had bene obſcure, he tooke vpon him the title of the great Duke of Ruſſia. He had fiue ſonnes, namely, George, Alexander, Boriſſus, Ophonias, and Iohn. This Iohn ſucceeded his father, and becauſe he continually caried a ſcrippe about with him to beſtow almes, he was ſirnamed Kaleta, which word ſignifieth a ſcrippe. His ſonnes were, Simeon, Iohn, and Andrew. He gaue vnto his ſonne Simeon the prouinces of Vvlodimiria and Moſcouia: which Simeon deceaſing without iſſue his brother Iohn ſucceeded, who begate a ſonne called Demetrius. This Demerius had ſeuen ſonnes, namely Daniel, Baſilius, George, Andrew, Peter, Iohn, & Conſtantine. Baſilius reigned after his fathers death. This mã diſinheriting his ſonne which was called after his owne name, becauſe he ſuſpected his mother of adulterie, at his death ſurrendred his Dukedome vnto his brother George, who kept his nephewe a long time in priſon. Howbeit at his death, though himſelfe had two ſonnes namely Andrew and Demetrius, yet being ſtricken perhaps with remorſe of conſcience, he beſtowed the Dukedome vpon his nephew Baſilius. Againſt whom his two couſins bearing a grudge waged warre, and at length hauing taken him by a wyly ſtratageme they put out his eyes. Notwithſtanding the Boiarens (for ſo the Moſcouites call their nobles) continued their duetifull alleageance vnto this their blinde Duke, whom for his blindnes they called Cziemnox, that is to ſay, darke or darkened. He left a ſonne behinde him called Iuan Vaſilowich who brought the Ruſſian common wealth, being before his time but obſcure, vnto great excellencie and renowme. Who that he might the better get all the ſuperiority into his owne hands put to death ſo many ſonnes and nephewes of the former Dukes as he could lay hold on, and began to take vpon him the title of the great Duke of Vvlodimiria, Moſcouia, and Nouogardia, and to call himſelfe the Monarch or Czar of all Ruſſia. He brought vnder his ſubiection two principall cities, namely Pleſco being the only walled citie in all Moſcouie, and Mouogrod, both of them being in regard of traffike moſt riche and flouriſhing cities, and hauing bin ſubiect vnto the Lithuanians for the ſpace of 50. yeeres before. The treaſure of Nouogrod was ſo exceeding, that the great Duke is reported to haue carried home from thence 300. carts laden with gold and ſiluer.

The citie of Moſco firſt made the ſeate of the great Duke.

Iuan Vaſilowich.

The name of the Moſcouites firſt aduanced.

He alſo was the firſt man that waged warre againſt the Polonians and the Liuonians: againſt Polonia he pretended a quarell, alleaging that his daughter Helena (whome hee had married vnto Alexander the great Duke of Lithuania, which was afterward king of Polonia) was euil intreated, and was withdrawen from the Greekiſh religion vnto the ceremonies of the Church of Rome. But againſt the Liuonians for none other cauſe, but onely for an incredible deſire of enlarging his dominions. Howbeit what impulſiue cauſes of litle or no moment happened in the mean ſeaſon, we will in another place more plainely declare. Notwithſtanding he was very often and in diuers battels vanquiſhed by Plettebergius the great maſter of the Dutch knights: but it is not to the purpoſe to ſtand any longer vpon this diſcourſe.

He was married firſt vnto Marie the Duke of Tyuersky his daughter, and of her hee begate Iohn, vnto whom in his life time he ſurrendred his Dukedome, and married him vnto the daughter of Stephan the Palatine of Moldauia: which Iohn, after he had begotten his ſonne Demetrius, deceaſed before his father.

Afterward Iuan Vaſilowich aforeſaide married a wife called Sophia being daughter vnto Thomas Palælogus, which is reported to haue had her dowry out of the Popes treaſury, becauſe the Moſcouite had promiſed to conforme himſelfe vnto the Romiſh Church. This Sophia being a woman of a princely and aſpiring minde, and often complaining that ſhe was married vnto the

Tartars

The yoke of the Tartars ſhaken off.

Tartars vaſſal, at length by her inſtant intreatie and continual perſwaſions, and by a notable ſtratageme ſhe caſt off that ſlauiſh yoke very much vnbeſeeming ſo mighty a prince. For whereas the Tartarian Duke had his procuratours and agents in the Moſcouites court, who dwelt in their owne houſes built within the very caſtle of Moſco, and were eye witneſſes of all affaires which were there performed: Sophia ſaid ſhe was admoniſhed from heauen to builde a Temple in the ſelfe ſame place where the Tartars houſe ſtoode, and to conſecrate it vnto Saint Nicholas. Being therfore deliuered of a ſonne ſhe inuited the Tartarian Duke vnto the ſolemne baptizing of him, and beeing come, ſhee requeſted him to giue her his houſe, and obtained it at his hands. Which houſe being razed and thoſe Tartarian eſpials beeing excluded, the Tartars at length were quite bereaued and vtterly diſpoſſeſſed of their authoritie which they had exerciſed ouer the Ruſſians for many yeres, and could neuer yet recouer it; albeit they haue giuen ſundry attempts. Of his wife Sophia he begate ſixe children, namely, a daughter called Helena, & fiue ſonnes, that is to ſay, Gabriel, Demetrius, George, Simeon, and Andrew.

The Dukedome of right appertayned vnto Demetrius the ſonne of Iohn, which was the ſonne of Vaſilowich by his firſt marriage. Howbeit Sophia preuailed ſo with her husband, that neglecting his graund-childe Demetrius, hee beſtowed his Dukedome vpon Gabriel his ſonne.

Andrew the younger had a ſonne called Vvlodimir, of whom Mary was borne, which in the yeere of Chriſt 1573. was maried vnto Magnus the Duke of Holſt.

Baſilius.

Gabriel hauing obtained the great dukedome of Ruſſia, changed his name calling himſelfe Baſilius, and applied his minde to the atchieuing of high and great enterprizes. For hee reduced a great part of the dukedome of Moſcouie, which Vitoldus the great Duke of Lithuania helde in poſſeſſion, vnder his owne iuriſdiction, and wonne vpon the riuer of Boriſthenes (which the Ruſſians call Neiper) many cities and eſpecially Smolenſco, in the yeere of our Lord 1514. Hauing diuorced his firſt wife, hee begate of Helena daughter vnto Duke Glinskie, Iuan Vaſilowich, which now this preſent 1580. reigneth as great Duke. Hee was borne in the yeere of our Lorde 1528, the 25. of Auguſt, ſixe houres after the riſing of the ſonne. The great dukedome of Ruſſia fell vnto the ſaid Iuan Vaſilowich in the fifth yeere of his age, hauing his vncle George for his great protector: being 25. yeeres of age, and being of a ſtrong body and of a couragious mind he ſubdued the Tartars of Cazan and Aſtracan vpon the riuer of Volgha, carrying their Dukes and chieftaines into captiuitie.

Iuan Vaſilowich.

But by what wayes and meanes (after the league which by the intercceſſion of the moſt ſacred Roman Emperour, continued from the yeere 1503. for the ſpace of fifty yeeres, was expired) hauing renewed warres againſt Liuonia, hee brought that moſt flouriſhing prouince into extreame miſerie, vſing for the ſame purpoſe a new pretenſe, and alleadging that it belonged vnto him by right of inheritance, I tremble to recount: and it requireth a large hiſtorie, which perhaps in time and place conuenient ſome more learned then my ſelfe will take vpon them to addreſſe.

He is exceedingly addicted vnto piety and deuotion, and doth oftentimes obſerue very ſtrict faſtings and abſtinence with his monks: and wheras the Ruſſes in doing reuerence & adoration vnto God doe beate their foreheads againſt the ground, this Iuan Vaſilowich with performing of the ſame ceremonie cauſeth his forehead to be ful of boines and ſwellings, and ſometimes to be black and blew, and very often to bleed. He is much delighted with building of Churches & ſpareth no coſt for that purpoſe. Whether therfore by nature, or (which hee pretendeth to be the cauſe) by reaſon of his ſubiects malice & treacherie, he be ſo addicted vnto all rigour and cruelty, I dare not determine, eſpecially ſithens he hath not an illiberal or miſhapen countenance, as Attila is reported to haue had. Of his firſt wife which was ſiſter vnto Mikita Romanowich, beeing nowe great ſteward of his houſhold, he begate two ſonnes, namely Iuan and Theodore. And albeit he was fiue times married, yet had he not one childe more.

Whereas this Iuan Vaſilowich vpon certaine friuolous reaſons calleth himſelfe the naturall lord of Liuonia, I thought it not amiſſe to adde an Epiſtle hereunto, which was written by a certaine honourable man concerning the ſame matter.

S. All wee which inhabite this Prouince with all ſeemely reuerence and ſubmiſſion of mind, do offer moſt humble thanks vnto the Emperors moſt ſacred and peereleſſe maieſty our moſt gracious lord, in that according to his fatherly affection which he beareth towards all Chriſtendome, and for the good & commodity of this our diſtreſſed and afflicted countrey, which theſe many yeres hath bin in ſtead of a bulwarke againſt the inuaſion of barbarous nations, he hath ſent his ambaſſadors vnto the great duke of Moſcouia. In regard of which his fatherly loue and great benefite vouchſafed on vs, wee are ready when occaſion ſhall ſerue, to aduenture our liues and goods: praying in the meane ſeaſon vnto Almightie God, who is the onely eſtabliſher and confounder of common wealths, to bring this excellent worke, the foundation whereof is already laide vnto a proſperous concluſion. But as touching the title which the Moſcouite maketh to this prouince, to ſay the very trueth, we greatly wondred and were aſtoniſhed at the declaration thereof. For it is moſt apparant, not onely out of all ancient and credible hiſtories, but euen from the experience and ſtate of theſe regions, that the ſaid title and allegations are fabulous and famed. For out of all auncient monuments, by what names ſoeuer they bee called (whereof there are diuers extant among vs) it cannot be proued by any mention, nor yet by any likelihoode or coniecture, that thoſe things which the Moſcouite affirmeth concerning the people which were gouernors of theſe regions in times paſt, and concerning the right and title of his anceſtors vnto this prouince, are grounded vpon truth.

For it is not vnknowen by what meanes this prouince, partly through the induſtry of marchants, and partly by the benefite of nauigation, was firſt diſcouered: neither is it vnknowen howe the inhabitants thereof beeing wholly addicted vnto heatheniſh ſuperſtitions and idolatrie, were by the croiſed knights (who drew other knights profeſſing the ſame order in Pruſſia to aide and accompanie them in this their enterpriſe) and that with great labour and difficultie, conuerted vnto the Chriſtian faith: when as at the ſame time the Liuonians had no knowledge at all of the iuriſdiction, religion, maners, or language of Moſcouie: who had not onely no conuerſation nor dealings with the Moſcouites, but were eſtranged alſo from all other nations whatſoeuer: for leading a miſerable, poore, barbarous, and heatheniſh life, in ſauage maner among wilde beaſtes, and in the deſert and ſolitary woods, they were vtterly ignorant of God and deſtitute of ciuil magiſtrates. Howbeit this kind of gouernment was peculiar vnto them, namely that all of one familie and ſociety vſed a kinde of reuerence vnto their elders more then to any other, whom alſo, that their authoritie might be the greater, they called by the name of kings, and (albeit one of their families conſiſted of a 100. perſons) they obeyed them in al reſpects, and after their rude and barbarous maner did them loyal ſeruice. At the very ſame time the Moſcouites had receiued the religion, and the Eccleſiaſticall ceremonies of the Greeke and Eaſterne Church, which religion they publiſhed and diſperſed throughout all prouinces ſubiect to their dominion, vſing their owne proper letters and characters for the ſame purpoſe. Of all which things the Liuonians which very barbarouſly inhabited a lande beeing enuironed with Ruſſia, Lithuania, Samogitia, Pruſſia, and the Balthic ſea, neuer heard any report at all. It is moreouer to be noted that neuer at any time heretofore either within the earth, or in other places of Liuonia, there haue bene found any monuments at all of the antiquitie or letters of the Ruſſes: which verily muſt needs haue come to paſſe, if the Moſcouites, Ruſſes, or any other nations which vſe the foreſaid particulars, had borne rule and authority ouer the Liuonians: yea there had beene left ſome remainder and token, either of their religion and diuine worſhip, or of their lawes and cuſtomes, or at the leaſt of their maners, language, and letters. This indeed we can in no wiſe deny, that euen in Liuonia it ſelfe, there haue bin in times paſt and at this preſent are many and diuers languages ſpoken by the people. Howbeit no one language of them all hath any affinity either with the Moſcouian tongue, or with the tongues of any other nations. But whereas the Moſcouite pretendeth that there hath bin vſually paide a penſion or tribute vnto himſelfe and his predeceſſours out of the whole prouince, it is as incredible as the former.

The commodities of traffike and of nauigation.

About the beginning of this tragicall warre, the Moſcouite, to cloke his tyranny and ambition vnder ſome faire pretenſe, amongſt other of his demaunds, made mention alſo of a tribute which ſhould be due vnto him out of the biſhop of Dorpat his iuriſdiction, whereof notwithſtanding hee could neither bring any iuſt account, nor affirm any certainty: howbeit there is no man liuing to be found which either can tell of his owne remembrance, or from the relation of others, that any ſuch tribute was euer paid vnto the Moſcouite. What time therefore he referred al this negotiation vnto the maſter of the Liuonian order, and commanded him to get what knowledge hee could therof from the men of Dorpat, & vrged the tribute, ſaying if it were worth but one haire, that he would not remitte: at length it was found recorded in the ancient Chronicles of Dorpat, that beyond the memory of man, when the territory of Pleſco contained nothing but woods and forreſts for wilde beaſtes, that the peſaunts of the liberty of Dorpat called Neuhus, by the conſent of the Ruſſian borderers, enioyed Bee-hiues in the ſaid woods, and paid euery yeere in lieu thereof vnto the Ruſſian gouernours, ſixe ſhillings of Liuonian coine. But ſo ſoone as the Ruſſians had felled the woods and had built townes and villages in their place, the ſaide penſion ceaſed together with the trees which were cut downe. Wherefore the ſaide ſixe ſhillings were neuer ſince that time either demanded by the Ruſſes or paid by the Liuonians. Theſe things which I knew concerning the cauſes of the Liuonian warres I thought good to ſignifie vnto you. Giuen the 22, of May, in the yeere of our Lord 1576.

Ordinan-

Ordinances, inſtructions, and aduertiſements of and for the direction *of the intended voyage for Cathay, compiled, made, and deliue*red by the right worſhipfull M. Sebaſtian Cabota Eſquier, gouernour of the myſterie and companie of the Marchants aduenturers for the diſcouerie of Regions, Dominions, Iſlands and places vnknowen, the 9. day of May, in the yere of our Lord God 1553. and in the 7. yeere of the reigne of our moſt dread ſoueraigne Lord Edward the 6. by the grace of God, king of England, Fraunce and Ireland, defender of the faith, and of the Church of England and Ireland, in earth ſupreame head.

FIrſt the Captaine general, with the pilot maior, the maſters, marchants & other officers, to be ſo knit and accorded in vnitie, loue, conformitie, and obedience in euery degree on all ſides, that no diſſention, variance, or contention may riſe or ſpring betwixt them and the mariners of this companie, to the damage or hinderance of the voyage: for that diſſention (by many experiences) hath ouerthrown many notable intended and likely enterpriſes and exploits.

2 Item, for as much as euery perſon hath giuen an othe to be true, faithfull, and loial ſubiects, and liege men to the kings moſt excellent Maieſtie, his heires and ſucceſſors, and for the obſeruation of all lawes & ſtatutes, made for the preſeruation of his moſt excellent Maieſtie, & his crown Imperiall of his realmes of England and Ireland, and to ſerue his grace, the Realme, and this preſent voyage truely, and not to giue vp, intermit, or leaue off the ſaid voyage and enterpriſe vntill it ſhalbe accompliſhed, ſo farre forth as poſſibilitie and life of man may ſerue or extend: Therfore it behoueth euery perſon in his degree, as well for conſcience, as for dueties ſake to remember his ſaid charge, and the accompliſhment thereof.

3 Item, where furthermore euery mariner or paſſenger in his ſhip, hath giuen like othe to bee obedient to the Captaine generall, and to euery Captaine and maſter in his ſhip, for the obſeruation of theſe preſent orders contained in this booke, and all other which hereafter ſhalbe made by the 12. counſailers in this preſent book named, or the moſt part of them, for the better conduction, and preſeruation of the fleete, and atchieuing of the voyage, and to be prompt, ready and obedient in all acts and feates of honeſty, reaſon, and duetie to be miniſtred, ſhewed & executed, in aduancement and preferment of the voyage and exploit: therfore it is conuenient that this preſent booke ſhall once euery weeke (by the diſcretion of the Captaine) be read to the ſaid companie, to the intent that euery man may the better remember his othe, conſcience, duetie and charge.

4 Item, euery perſon by vertue of his othe, to doe effectually & with good wil (as farre forth as him ſhall complie) all, and euery ſuch act and acts, deede and deeds, as ſhalbe to him or them from time to time commanded, committed and enioyned (during the voyage) by the Captain generall, with the aſſent of the Counſell and aſſiſtants, as well in and during the whole Nauigation and voyage, as alſo in diſcouering and landing, as caſes and occaſions ſhall require.

5 Item, all courſes in Nauigation to be ſet and kept, by the aduice of the Captaine, Pilot maior, maſters, & maſters mates, with the aſſents of the counſailers and the moſt number of them, and in voyces vniformely agreeing in one to preuaile, and take place, ſo that the Captaine generall, ſhall in all counſailes and aſſemblies haue a double voyce.

6 Item, that the fleete ſhal keep together, and not ſeparate themſelues aſunder, as much as by winde & weather may be done or permitted, & that the Captaines, Pilots & maſters ſhall ſpeedily come aboord the Admiral, when and as often as he ſhall ſeeme to haue iuſt cauſe to aſſemble them for counſaile or conſultation to be had concerning the affaires of the fleete and voyage.

7 Item, that the marchants, and other ſkilful perſons in writing, ſhal daily write, deſcribe, and put in memorie the Nauigation of euery day and night, with the points, and obſeruation of the lands, tides, elements, altitude of the ſunne, courſe of the moon and ſtarres, and the ſame ſo noted by the order of the Maſter and pilot of euery ſhip to be put in writing, the captaine generall aſſembling the maſters together once euery weeke (if winde and weather ſhal ſerue) to conferre all the obſeruations, and notes of the ſaid ſhips, to the intent it may appeare wherein the notes do agree, and wherein they diſſent, and vpon good debatement, deliberation, and concluſion determined, to put the ſame into a common leger, to remain of record for the company: the like order to be kept in proportioning of the Cardes, Aſtrolabes, and other inſtruments prepared for the voyage, at the charge of the companie.

8 Item, that all enterpriſes and exploits of diſcouering or landing to ſearch Iles, regions, and ſuch like, to be ſearched, attempted, and enterpriſed by good deliberation, and common aſſent, determined aduiſedly. And that in all enterpriſes, notable ambaſſages, ſuites, requeſts, or preſentment of giftes, or preſents to Princes, to be done and executed by the captaine generall in perſon, or by ſuch other, as he by common aſſent ſhall appoint or aſſigne to doe or cauſe to be done in the ſame.

9 Item, the ſteward and cooke of euery ſhip, and their aſſociats, to giue and render to the captaine and other head officers of their ſhippe weekely (or oftner) if it ſhall ſeeme requiſite, a iuſt or plaine and perfect accompt of expenſes of the victuals, as wel fleſh, fiſh, biſket, meate, or bread, as alſo of beere, wine, oyle, or vineger, and all other kinde of victualling vnder their charge, and they, and euery of them ſo to order and diſpende the ſame, that no waſte or vnprofitable exceſſe be made otherwiſe then reaſon and neceſſitie ſhall commaund.

10 Item, when any inferiour or meane officer of what degree or condition he ſhalbe, ſhalbe tried vntrue, remiſſe, negligent, or vnprofitable in or about his office in the voyage, or not to vſe himſelfe in his charge accordingly, then euery ſuch officer to be puniſhed or remoued at the diſcretion of the captaine and aſſiſtants, or the moſt part of them, and the perſon ſo remoued not to be reputed, accepted, or taken from the time of his remoue, any more for an officer, but to remaine in ſuch condition and place, as hee ſhall be aſſigned vnto, and none of the companie, to reſiſt ſuch chaſtiſement or worthie puniſhment, as ſhalbe miniſtred vnto him moderately, according to the fault or deſert of his offence, after the lawes and common cuſtomes of the ſeas, in ſuch caſes heretofore vſed and obſerued.

11 Item, if any Mariner or officer inferiour ſhalbe found by his labour not meete nor worthie the place that he is preſently ſhipped for, ſuch perſon may bee vnſhipped and put on lande at any place within the kings Maieſties realme & dominion, and one other perſon more able and worthy to be put in his place, at the diſcretion of the captaine and maſters, & order to be taken that the partie diſmiſſed ſhalbe allowed proportionably the value of that he ſhall haue deſerued to the time of his diſmiſſion or diſcharge, & he to giue order with ſureties, pawn, or other aſſurance, to repay the ouerplus of that he ſhall haue receiued, which he ſhall not haue deſerued, & ſuch wages to be made with the partie newly placed as ſhalbe thought reaſonable, and he to haue the furniture of al ſuch neceſſaries as were prepared for the partie diſmiſſed, according to right and conſcience.

12 Item, that no blaſpheming of God, or deteſtable ſwearing be vſed in any ſhip, nor communication of ribaldrie, filthy tales, or vngodly talke to be ſuffred in the company of any ſhip, neither dicing, carding, tabling, nor other diueliſh games to be frequented, whereby enſueth not onely pouertie to the players, but alſo ſtrife, variance, brauling, fighting, and oftentimes murther to the vtter deſtruction of the parties, and prouoking of Gods moſt iuſt wrath, and ſworde of vengeance. Theſe and all ſuch like peſtilences, and contagions of vices, and ſinnes to bee eſchewed, and the offenders once moniſhed, and not reforming, to bee puniſhed at the diſcretion of the captaine and maſter, as appertaineth.

13 Item, that morning and euening prayer, with other common ſeruices appointed by the kings Maieſtie, and lawes of this Realme to be read and ſaide in euery ſhip daily by the miniſter in the Admirall, and the marchant or ſome other perſon learned in other ſhips, and the Bible or paraphraſes to be read deuoutly and Chriſtianly to Gods honour, and for his grace to be obtained, and had by humble and heartie praier of the Nauigants accordingly.

14 Item, that euery officer is to be charged by Inuentorie with the particulars of his charge, and to render a perfect accompt of the diffraying of the ſame together with modeſt & temperate diſpending of powder, ſhot, and vſe of all kinde of artillery, which is not to be miſuſed, but diligently to be preſerued for the neceſſary defence of the fleete and voyage, together with due keeping of all inſtruments of your Nauigation, and other requiſites.

15 Item, no liquor to be ſpilt on the ballaſt, nor filthines to be left within bord: the cook room, and all other places to be kept cleane for the better health of the companie, the gromals & pages to bee brought vp according to the laudable order and vſe of the Sea, as well in learning of Nauigation, as in exerciſing of that which to them appertaineth.

16 Item, the liueries in apparel giuen to the mariners be to be kept by the marchants, and not to be worne, but by the order of the captaine, when he ſhall ſee cauſe to muſter or ſhewe them in good aray, for the aduancement and honour of the voyage, and the liueries to bee redeliuered to the keeping of the marchants, vntill it ſhal be thought conuenient for euery perſon to haue the ful vſe of his garment.

17 Item, when any mariner or any other paſſenger ſhal haue neede of any neceſſarie furniture of apparell for his body, and conſeruation of his health, the ſame ſhall bee deliuered him by the Marchant, at the aſſignement of the captaine and Maſter of that ſhippe, wherein ſuch needie perſon ſhall be, at ſuch reaſonable price as the ſame coſt, without any gaine to be exacted by the marchants, the value therof to be entred by the marchant in his booke, and the ſame to be diſcounted off the parties wages, that ſo ſhal receiue, and weare the ſame.

18 Item the ſicke, diſeaſed, weake, and viſited perſon within boord, to be tendred, relieued, comforted, and holpen in the time of his infirmitie, and euery maner of perſon, without reſpect, to beare anothers burden, and no man to refuſe ſuch labour as ſhall be put to him, for the moſt benefite, and publike wealth of the voyage, and enterpriſe, to be atchieued exactly.

19 Item if any perſon ſhal fortune to die, or miſcarry in the voyage, ſuch apparell, and other goods, as he ſhall haue at the time of his death, is to be kept by the order of the captaine and Maſter of the ſhippe, and an inuentorie to be made of it, and conſerued to the vſe of his wife, and children, or otherwiſe according to his mind, and wil, and the day of his death to be entred in the Marchants and Stewards bookes: to the intent it may be knowen what wages he ſhall haue deſerued to his death, and what ſhall reſt due to him.

20 Item, that the Marchants appointed for this preſent voyage, ſhall not make any ſhew or ſale of any kind of marchandizes, or open their commodities to any forrein princes, or any of their ſubiects, without the conſent, priuitie, or agreement of the Captaines, the cape Marchants and the aſſiſtants, or foure of them, whereof the captaine generall, the Pilot Maior, and cape marchant to be three, and euery of the pettie marchants to ſhewe his reckoning to the cape marchant, when they, or any of them ſhall be required: and no commutation or trucke to be made by any of the petie marchants, without the aſſent aboueſaid: and all wares, and commodities trucked, bought or giuen to the companie, by way of marchandiſe, trucke, or any other reſpect, to be booked by the marchants, and to be wel ordred, packed, and conſerued in one maſſe entirely, and not to be broken or altered, vntil the ſhippes ſhall returne to the right diſcharges, and inuentorie of al goods, wares, and marchandiſes ſo trucked, bought, or otherwiſe diſpended, to be preſented to the Gouernor, Conſuls, and Aſſiſtants in London, in good order, to the intent the Kings Maieſtie may be truly anſwered of that which to his grace by his grant of corporation is limited, according to our moſt bound duties, and the whole companie alſo to haue that which by right vnto them appertaineth, and no embezelment ſhall be vſed, but the truth of the whole voyage to bee opened, to the common wealth and benefite of the whole companie, and myſterie, as appertaineth, without guile, fraude, or male engine.

King Edwards corporation.

21 Item, no particular perſon, to hinder or preiudicate the common ſtocke of the company, in ſale or preferment of his own proper wares, and things, and no particular emergent or purchaſe to be employed to any ſeuerall profite, vntill the common ſtocke of the companie ſhall be furniſhed, and no perſon to hinder the common benefite in ſuch purchaſes or contingents, as ſhal fortune to any one of them, by his owne proper policie, induſtrie, or chance, nor no contention to riſe in that behalfe, by any occaſion of iewel, ſtone, pearles, precious mettals, or other things of the region, where it ſhall chance the ſame to riſe, or to be found, bought, trucked, permuted, or giuen: but euery perſon to be bounden in ſuch caſe, and vpon ſuch occaſion, by order, and direction, as the generall captaine, and the Councell ſhall eſtabliſh and determine, to whoſe order and diſcretion the ſame is left: for that of things vncertaine, no certaine rules may or can be giuen.

22 Item not to diſcloſe to any nation the ſtate of our religion, but to paſſe it ouer in ſilence, without any declaration of it, ſeeming to beare with ſuch lawes, and rites, as the place hath, where you ſhall arriue.

23 Item for as much as our people, and ſhippes may appeare vnto them ſtrange and wonderous, and theirs alſo to ours: it is to be conſidered, how they may be vſed, learning much of their natures and diſpoſitions, by ſome one ſuch perſon, as you may firſt either allure, or take to be brought aboord your ſhips, and there to learne as you may, without violence or force, and no woman to be tempted, or intreated to incontinencie, or diſhoneſtie.

24 Item the perſon ſo taken, to be well entertained, vſed, and apparelled, to be ſet on land, to the intent that he or ſhe may allure other to draw nigh to ſhewe the commodities: and if the perſon taken may be made drunke with your beere, or wine, you ſhal know the ſecrets of his heart.

25 Item our people may not paſſe further into a land, then that they may be able to recouer their pinneſſes, or ſhips, & not to credit the faire words of the ſtrange people, which be many times tried ſubtile, and falſe, nor to be drawen into perill of loſſe, for the deſire of golde, ſiluer, or riches, and eſteeme your owne commodities aboue al other, and in countenance ſhew not much to deſire the forren commodities: neuertheleſſe take them as for friendſhip, or by way of permutation.

26 Item euery nation and region is to be conſidered aduiſedly, & not to prouoke them by any diſdaine, laughing, contempt, or ſuch like, but to vſe them with prudent circumſpection, with al gentlenes, and curteſie, and not to tary long in one place, vntill you ſhall haue attained the moſt worthy place ẏ may be found, in ſuch ſort, as you may returne wᵗ victuals ſufficient proſperouſly.

27 Item the names of the people of euery Iſland, are to be taken in writing, with the commodities, and incommodities of the ſame, their natures, qualities, and diſpoſitions, the ſite of the ſame, and what things they are moſt deſirous of, & what commodities they wil moſt willingly depart with, & what mettals they haue in hils, mountaines, ſtreames, or riuers, in, or vnder the earth.

28 Item if people ſhal appeare gathering of ſtones, gold, mettall, or other like, on the ſand, your pinneſſes may drawe nigh, marking what things they gather, vſing or playing vpon the drumme, or ſuch other inſtruments, as may allure them to harkening, to fantaſie, or deſire to ſee, and heare your inſtruments and voyces, but keepe you out of danger, and ſhewe to them no poynt or ſigne of rigour and hoſtilitie.

29 Item if you ſhall be inuited into any Lords or Rulers houſe, to dinner, or other parliance, goe in ſuch order of ſtrength, that you may be ſtronger then they, and be warie of woods and ambuſhes, and that your weapons be not out of your poſſeſſions.

30 Item if you ſhall ſee them weare Lyons or Beares ſkinnes, hauing long bowes, and arrowes, be not afraid of that ſight: for ſuch be worne oftentimes more to feare ſtrangers, then for any other cauſe.

31 Item there are people that can ſwimme in the ſea, hauens, & riuers, naked, hauing bowes and ſhafts, coueting to drawe nigh your ſhips, which if they ſhal finde not wel watched, or warded, they wil aſſault, deſirous of the bodies of men, which they couet for meate: if you reſiſt them, they diue, and ſo will flee, and therefore diligent watch is to be kept both day & night, in ſome Iſlands.

32 Item if occaſion ſhal ſerue, that you may giue aduertiſements of your proceedings in ſuch things as may correſpond to the expectation of the company, and likelihood of ſucceſſe in the voyage, paſſing ſuch dangers of the ſeas, perils of ice, intollerable colds, and other impediments, which by ſundry authors & writers, haue miniſtred matter of ſuſpition in ſome heads, that this voyage could not ſuccede for the extremitie of the North pole, lacke of paſſage, & ſuch like, which haue cauſed wauering minds, and doubtfull heads, not onely to withdraw themſelues from the aduenture of this voyage, but alſo diſſwaded others from the ſame, the certaintie whereof, when you ſhall haue tried by experience, (moſt certaine Maſter of all worldly knowledge) then for declaration of the trueth, which you ſhall haue experted, you may by common aſſent of counſell, ſende either by land, or otherwaies, ſuch two or one perſon, to bring the ſame by credite, as you ſhal think may paſſe in ſafetie: which ſending is not to be done, but vpon vrgent cauſes, in likely ſucceſſe of the voyage, in finding of paſſage, in towardlines of beneficiall traffike, or ſuch other like, whereby the company being aduertiſed of your eſtates and proceedings, may further prouide, foreſee, and determine that which may ſeeme moſt good and beneficiall for the publike wealth of the ſame: either prouiding before hand ſuch things, as ſhall bee requiſite for the continuance of the voyage, or elſe otherwiſe to diſpoſe as occaſion ſhall ſerue: in which things your wiſedomes and diſcretions are to be vſed, and ſhewed, and the contents of this capitule, by you much to be pondred, for that you be not ignorant, how many perſons, as well the kings Maieſtie, the Lords of his honorable Counſel, this whole companie, as alſo your wiues, children, kinſfolkes, allies, friends and familiars, be repleniſhed in their hearts with ardent deſire to learne and know your eſtates, conditions, and welfares, and in what likelihood you be in, to obtain this notable enterpriſe, which is hoped no leſſe to ſucceed to you, then the Orient or Occident Indias haue to the high benefite of the Emperour, and kings of Portingal, whoſe ſubiects induſtries, and trauailes by ſea, haue inriched them, by thoſe lands and Iſlands, which were to all Coſmographers, and other writers both vnknowne, and alſo by appearances of reaſon voide of experience thought and reputed vnhabitable for extremities of heates, and colds, and yet indeed tried moſt rich, peopled, temperate, and ſo commodious, as all Europe hath not the like.

Reaſon voide of experience.

33 Item no conſpiracies, partakings, factions, falſe tales, vntrue reports, which be the very ſeedes, and fruits of contention, diſcord, & confuſion, by euill tongues to be ſuffered, but the ſame, & all other vngodlines to be chaſtened charitably with brotherly loue, and alwaies obedience to be vſed and practiſed by al perſons in their degrees, not only for duetie and conſcience ſake towards God, vnder whoſe mercifull hand nauigants aboue all other creatures naturally bee moſt nigh, and vicine, but alſo for prudent and worldly pollicie, and publike weale, conſidering and alwaies hauing preſent in your mindes that you be all one moſt royall kings ſubiects, and naturals, with daily remembrance of the great importance of the voyage, the honour, glorie, praiſe, and benefite that depend of, and vpon the ſame, toward the common wealth of this noble Realme, the aduancement of you the trauailers therein, your wiues, and children, and ſo to endeuour your ſelues as that you may ſatiſfie the expectation of them, who at their great coſts, charges, and expenſes haue ſo furniſhed you in good ſort, and plentie of all neceſſaries, as the like was neuer in any realme ſeene, vſed, or knowen requiſite and needful for ſuch an exploit, which is moſt likely to be atchieued, and brought to good effect, if euery perſon in his vocation ſhall endeuour himſelfe according to his charge, and moſt bounden duetie: praying the liuing God, to giue you his grace, to accompliſh your charge to his glorie, whoſe merciful hand ſhal proſper your voyage, and preſerue you from all dangers.

In witnes whereof I Sebaſtian Gabota, Gouernour aforeſaide, to theſe preſent ordinances, haue ſubſcribed my name, and put my ſeale, the day and yeere aboue written.

Exemplar Epiſtolæ ſeu literarum Miſsiuarum, quas illuſtriſsimus *Princeps Eduardus ejus nominis Sextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hi*berniæ Rex, miſit ad Principes Septentrionalem, ac Orientalem mundi plagam inhabitantes iuxta mare glaciale, nec non Indiam Orientalem; Anno Domini 1553 Regni ſui anno ſeptimo, & vltimo.

EDuardus ſextus, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, &c. Omnibus Regibus & principibus ac dominis, & cunctis Iudicibus terræ, & Ducibus eius, quibuſcunque eſt excellens aliqua dignitas in ea, cunctis in locis quæ ſunt ſub vniuerſo cœlo: Pax, tranquillitas, & honor vobis, terris, & regionibus veſtris quæ imperio veſtro ſubiacent, cuiq; veſtrum quemadmodum conuenit ei. Propterea quòd indidit Deus Opt. Max. hominibus præ cunctis alijs viuentibus, cor & deſiderium tale, vt appetat quiſque cum alijs ſocietatem inire, amare, & viciſſim amari, beneficijs afficere, & mutua accipere beneficia ſtudeat, ideò cuique pro facultate ſua hoc deſiderium in omnibus quidem hominibus beneficijs fouere & conſeruare conuenit, in illis autem maximè, qui hoc deſiderio adducti, à remotis etiam regionibus ad eos veniunt. Quo enim longius iter eius rei gratia ingreſſi ſunt, eò ardentius in eis hoc deſiderium fuiſſe declararunt. Inſuper etiam ad hoc, nos patrum maiorumq; noſtrorum exempla inuitant, qui ſemper humaniſſimè ſuſceperunt & benigniſſimè tractauerunt illos, qui tum à locis propinquis, tum à remotis, eos amicè adibant, eorum ſe protectioni commendantes. Quod ſi omnibus id præſtare æquum eſt, certè mercatoribus imprimis præſtari debet, qui per vniuerſum orbem diſcurrunt, mare circumluſtrantes & aridam, vt res bonas & vtiles, quę Dei beneficio in regione eorum inueniuntur, ad remotiſſimas regiones & regna adferant, atque inde viciſſim referant, quòd ſuæ regioni vtile ibi repererint: vt & populi ad quos eunt, non deſtituantur commodis quæ non profert illis terra eorum, & ipſi ſint participes rerum quibus illi abundant. Nam Deus cœli & terræ, humano generi maximè conſulens, noluit vt omnia in quauis regione inuenirentur, quò regio ope alterius regionis indigeret, & gens ab alia gente commodum aliquod expectaret, ac ita ſtabiliretur amicitia inter omnes, ſinguliq; omnibus benefacere quærerent. Hoc itaque ineundæ ac ſtabiliendæ amicitiæ deſiderio moti viri quidam regni noſtri, iter in remotas maritimas regiones inſtituerunt, vt inter noſtros & illos populos, viam mercibus inferendis & efferendis aperirent, noſq; rogauerunt vt id illis concederemus. Qui petitioni illorum annuentes, conceſſimus viro honorabili & forti, Hugoni Wilibeo, & alijs qui cum eo ſunt ſeruis noſtris fidis & charis, vt pro ſua voluntate, in regiones eis prius incognitas eant, quæſituri ea quibus nos caremus, & adducant illis ex noſtris terris id quo illi carent. Atque ita illis & nobis commodum inde accedat, ſitq; amicitia perpetua, & fœdus indiſſolubile inter illos & nos, dum permittent illi nos accipere de rebus, quibus ſuperabundant in regnis nis ſuis, & nos concedemus illis ex regnis noſtris res, quibus deſtituuntur. Rogamus itaque vos Reges & Principes, & omnes quibus aliqua eſt poteſtas in terra, vt viris iſtis noſtris, tranſitum permittatis per regiones veſtras. Non enim tangent quicquam ex rebus veſtris inuitis vobis. Cogitate quòd homines & ipſi ſunt. Et ſi qua re caruerint, oramus pro veſtra beneficentia, eam vos illis tribuatis, accipientes viciſſim ab eis quod poterunt rependere vobis. Ita vos gerite erga eos, quemadmodum cuperetis vt nos, & ſubditi noſtri, nos gereremus erga ſeruos veſtros, ſi quando tranſierint per regiones noſtras. Atque promittimus vobis per Deum omnium quæ cœlo, terra & mari continentur, perq; vitam noſtram, & tranquillitatem regnorum noſtrorum, nos pari benignitate ſeruos veſtros accepturos, ſi ad regna noſtra aliquando venerint. Atque à nobis & ſubditis noſtris, ac ſi nati fuiſſent in regnis noſtris ita benignè tractabuntur, vt rependamus vobis benignitatem, quam noſtris exhibueritis. Poſtquam vos Reges, Principes, &c. rogauimus, vt humanitate & beneficentia omni proſequamini ſeruos noſtros nobis charos, oramus omnipotentem Deum noſtrum, vt vobis diuturnam vitam largiatur, & pacem quæ nullam habeat finem. Scriptum Londini, quæ ciuitas eſt primaria regni noſtri, Anno 5515. à creato mundo, menſe Iiar, 14. die menſis, anno ſeptimo regni noſtri,

The copie of the letters miſſiue, which the right noble Prince Edward the ſixt ſent to the Kings, Princes, and other Potentates, inhabiting the Northeaſt partes of the worlde, toward the mighty Empire of Cathay, at ſuch time as Sir Hugh Willoughby knight, and Richard Chancelor, with their company, attempted their voyage thither in the yeere of Chriſt 1553. and the ſeuenth and laſt yeere of his raigne.

Edward the ſixt, by the grace of God, King of England, France, and Ireland, &c. To all Kings, Princes, Rulers, Iudges, and Gouernours of the earth, and all other hauing any excellent dignitie on the ſame, in all places vnder the vniuerſall heauen: peace, tranquillitie, and honour be vnto you, and your lands and regions, which are vnder your dominions, and to euery of you, as is conuenient.

Foraſmuch as the great and Almightie God hath giuen vnto mankinde, aboue all other liuing creatures, ſuch an heart and deſire, that euery man deſireth to ioine friendſhip with other, to loue, and be loued, alſo to giue and receiue mutuall benefites: it is therefore the duety of all men, according to their power, to maintaine and increaſe this deſire in euery man, with well deſeruing to all men, and eſpecially to ſhew this good affection to ſuch, as being moued with this deſire, come vnto them from farre countreis. For how much the longer voyage they haue attempted for this intent, ſo much the more doe they thereby declare that this deſire hath bene ardent in them. Furthermore alſo, the examples of our fathers and predeceſſors doe inuite vs hereunto, foraſmuch as they haue euer gently and louingly intreated ſuch as of friendly mind came to them, aſwell from Countries neare hand, as farre remote, commending themſelues to their protection. And if it be right and equity to ſhew ſuch humanitie toward all men, doubtleſſe the ſame ought chiefly to be ſhewed to marchants, who wandering about the world, ſearch both the land and the ſea, to carry ſuch good and profitable things, as are found in their Countries, to remote regions and kingdomes, and againe to bring from the ſame, ſuch things as they find there commodious for their owne Countries: both aſwell that the people, to whom they goe, may not be deſtitute of ſuch commodities as their Countries bring not foorth to them, as that alſo they may be partakers of ſuch things, whereof they abound. For the God of heauen and earth greatly prouiding for mankinde, would not that all things ſhould be found in one region, to the ende that one ſhould haue neede of another, that by this meanes friendſhip might be eſtabliſhed among all men, , and euery one ſeeke to gratifie all. For the eſtabliſhing and furtherance of which vniuerſall amitie, certaine men of our Realme, mooued hereunto by the ſaid deſire, haue inſtituted and taken vpon them a voyage by ſea into farre Countreis, to the intent that betweene our people and them, a way may bee opened to bring in, and cary out marchandizes, deſiring vs to further their enterpriſe. Who aſſenting to their petition, haue licenſed the right valiant and worthy Sir Hugh Willoughby, knight, and other our truſty and faithfull ſeruants, which are with him, according to their deſire, to goe to countreis to them heeretofore vnknowen, aſwell to ſeeke ſuch things as we lacke, as alſo to cary vnto them from our regions, ſuch things as they lacke. So that hereby not onely commoditie may enſue both to them and vs, but alſo an indiſſoluble and perpetuall league of friendſhip be eſtabliſhed betweene vs both, while they permit vs to take of their things, ſuch whereof they haue abundance in their regions, and we againe grant them ſuch things of ours, whereof they are deſtitute We therfore deſire you kings & princes, and al other, to whom there is any power on the earth, to permit vnto theſe our ſeruants free paſſage by your regions and dominions: for they ſhall not touch any thing of yours vnwilling vnto you. Conſider you that they alſo are men. If therefore they ſhall ſtand in neede of any thing, we deſire you of all humanitie, and for the nobilitie which is in you, to ayde and helpe them with ſuch things as they lacke, receiuing againe of them ſuch things as they ſhall bee able to giue you in recompenſe. Shew your ſelues ſo towards them, as you would that we and our ſubiects ſhould ſhewe our ſelues towards your ſeruants, if at any time they ſhall paſſe by our regions.

Thus doing, we promiſe you by the God of all things that are contained in heauen, earth, and the Sea, and by the life and tranquillitie of our kingdomes, that we will with like humanitie accept your ſeruants, if at any time they ſhall come to our kingdomes, where they ſhall as friendly and gently bee entertained, as if they were borne in our Dominions, that wee may hereby recompence the fauour and benignitie which you haue ſhewed to our men. Thus after we haue deſired you Kings and princes, &c. with all humanity and fauour, to entertaine our welbeloued ſeruants, we will pray our Almighty God, to graunt you long life, and peace, which neuer ſhall haue ende. Written in London, which is the chiefe Citie of our kingdome, in the yeere from the creation of the world, 5515. in the moneth of Iiar, the fourteenth day of the moneth, and ſeuenth yeere of our reigne.

The Iuramentum, or othe, miniſtred to the Captaine.

YOu ſhall ſweare to be a faithfull, true, and loyal ſubiect in all points, and duties, that to a ſubiect appertaineth, to our ſoueraigne Lord the kings Maieſtie, his heires, and ſucceſſors: and that you ſhall wel and truely to the vttermoſt of your capacitie, wit, & knowledge, ſerue this preſent voiage, committed to your charge, and not to giue vp, nor ſooner intermit the ſame, vntil you ſhall haue atchieued the ſame, ſo farre foorth, as you may without danger of your life, and loſſe of the fleete: you ſhall giue good, true, and faithful counſell to the ſaid ſocietie, and to ſuch as ſhal haue the charge with or vnder you, and not to diſcloſe the ſecrets, or priuities of the ſame to any perſon by any maner of meane, to the preiudice, hurt, or damage of it. You ſhal miniſter iuſtice to all men vnder your charge, without reſpect of perſon, or any affection, that might moue you to decline from the true miniſtration of iuſtice. And further, you ſhal obſerue, and cauſe to be obſerued, as much as in you lieth, all and ſingular rules, articles, prouiſions hitherto made, or hereafter to be made for the preſeruation or ſafeconduct of the fleete and voyage, and benefit of the company. You ſhall not permit nor ſuffer the ſtocke or goods of the company to be waſted, imbezled, or conſumed, but ſhall conſerue the ſame whole and entire, without diminiſhment, vntill you ſhall haue deliuered, or cauſe to be deliuered the ſame, to the vſe of the companie. And finally you ſhal vſe your ſelfe in all points, ſorts, and conditions, as to a faithfull captaine, and brother of this companie ſhall belong and appertaine: So helpe you God, &c.

The othe miniſtred to the Maiſter of the ſhip, &c.

YOu ſhall ſweare by the holy contents in that booke, that you according and to the uttermoſt of your knowledge, and good vnderſtanding in mariners ſcience and craft, ſhall in your vocation doe your beſt to conduct the good ſhippe called the N. &c. whereof you nowe are Maiſter vnder God, both vnto and from the portes of your diſcouerie, and ſo vſe your indeuour and faithfull diligence, in charging, diſcharging, lading againe, and roomaging of the ſame ſhippe, as may be moſt for the benefite and profite of this right worſhipfull fellowſhip: and you ſhall not priuately bargein, buy, ſell, exchange, barter, or diſtribute any goods, wares, merchandize, or things whatſoeuer (neceſſary tackles and victuals for the ſhippe onely excepted) to or for your owne lucre, gaine or profit, neither to nor for the priuate lucre, gaine, or profit of any other perſon or perſons whatſoeuer. And further, If you ſhall know any boatſwaine, mariner, or any other perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, to buy, ſell, barter, trucke, or exchange any goods, wares, marchandizes, or things for priuate account, reckoning, or behalfe, you ſhall doe your beſt to withſtand and let the ſame: and if you cannot commodiouſly ſo doe, that then before the diſcharge of ſuch goods bought for priuat account, you ſhal giue knowledge therof to the cape marchant of this ſaid fellowſhip for the time being. And you ſhal not receiue nor take, nor ſuffer to be receiued or taken into your ſaid ſhip during this voyage any maner perſon or perſons whatſoeuer, going or returning, but onely thoſe mariners which without fraud or guile ſhall be hired to be of your company, and to ſerue in mariners craft and ſcience onely: So helpe you God, &c.

Theſe foreſaid ſhippes being fully furniſhed with their pinneſſes and boates, well appointed with al maner of artillerie, and other things neceſſary for their defence with al the men aforeſaid, departed from Ratcliffe, and valed vnto Detford, the 10. day of May, 1553.

The 11. day about two of the clocke, we departed from Detford, paſſing by Greenwich, ſaluting the kings Maieſty then being there, ſhooting off our ordinance, & ſo valed vnto Blackwall, and there remained vntil the 17. day, and that day in the morning we went from Blackwall, and came to Woolwich by nine of the clocke, and there remained one tide, and ſo the ſame night vnto Heyreth.

The 18. day from Heyreth vnto Grauesend, and there remained vntil the twentieth day: that day being Saterday, from Grauesend vnto Tilberie Hope, remaining there vntill the two and

May. twentieth day.

The 22. day from Tilbery Hope to Hollie hauen.

The 23. day from Hollie Hauen, till we came againſt Lee, and there remained that night, by reaſon that the winde was contrary to vs.

The 24. day the winde being in the Southweſt in the morning, we ſailed along the coaſt ouer the Spits, vntill we came againſt S. Oſyth, about ſixe of the clocke at night, and there came to anker, and abode there all that night.

The 25. day about tenne of the clocke we departed from S. Oſyth, and ſo ſailed forward vnto the Naſe, and there abode that night for winde and tide.

The 26. day at fiue of the clock in the morning, we weyed our anker, and ſailed ouer the Naſe, the winde being at the Southweſt, vntill wee came to Orwell wands, and there came to an anker, and abode there vntill the 28. day.

The ſame day being Trinitie Sunday about 7. of of the clocke before noone we weyed our ankers, and ſailed til we came athwart Walſurſye, and there came to an anker.

The 29. day from thence to Holmehead, where we ſtayed that day, where we conſulted which way, and what courſes were beſt to be holden for the diſcouerie of our voyage, and there agreed.

The 30. day of May at fiue of the clocke in the morning wee ſet ſaile, and came againſt Yermouth about three leagues into the ſea, riding there at anker all that night.

The laſt of May into the Sea ſixe leagues Northeaſt, and there taried that night, where the winde blew very ſore.

June. The firſt of June the winde being at North contrary to vs, wee came backe againe to Orwell, and remained there vntill the 15. day, tarying for the winde, for all this time the winde was contrary to our purpoſe.

The 15 day being at Orwel in the latitude of 52 degrees, in the morning wee weyed our ankers, and went forth into the wands about two miles from the towne, and lay there that night.

The 16 day at eight of the clocke we ſet forward, and ſayled vntill we came athwart Alburrough, and there ſtayed that night.

The 17 day about fiue of the clocke before noone we went backe vnto Orfordneſſe, and there remained vntill the 19 day.

The 19 day at eight of the clocke in the morning we went backe to Orwel, and abode there three dayes tarying for the winde.

The 23 day of Iune the wind being faire in the Southweſt we hailed into the ſeas to Orfordneſſe, and from thence into the ſeas ten leagues Northeaſt: then being paſt the ſands, we changed our courſe ſixe leagues Northnortheaſt: about midnight we changed our courſe againe, and went due North, continuing in the ſame vnto the 27 day.

The 27 day about ſeuen of the clocke Northnorthweſt 42 leagues to the ende to fall with Shotland: then the wind veared to the Weſt, ſo that we could lie but North and by Weſt, continuing in the ſame courſe 40 leagues, whereby we could not fetch Shotland: then we ſayled North 16 leagues by eſtimation, after that North and by Weſt, & Northnorthweſt, then Southeaſt, with diuers other courſes, trauerſing and tracing the ſeas, by reaſon of ſundry and manifolde contrary windes, vntill the 14 day of Iuly: and then the ſunne entring into Leo, we diſcouered land Eaſtward of vs, vnto the which we ſayled that night as much as we might: and after wee went on ſhore with our Pinneſſe, & found little houſes to the number of 30, where we knew that it was inhabited, but the people were fled away, as we iudged, for feare of vs.

Iuly.

The land was all full of little Iſlands, and that innumerable, which were called (as we learned afterwards) Ægeland and Halgeland, which lieth from Orfordneſſe North and by Eaſt, being in the latitude of 66 degrees. The diſtance betweene Orfordneſſe and Ægeland 250 leagues. Then we ſailed from thence 12 leagues Northweſt, and found many other Iſlandes, and there came to anker the 19 day, and manned our Pinneſſe, and went on ſhore to the Iſlands, and found people mowing and making of hay, which came to the ſhore and welcomed vs. In which place were an innumerable ſort of Iſlands, which were called the Iſles of Roſt, being vnder the dominion of the king of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66 degrees, and 30 minutes. The winde being contrary, we remayned there three dayes, & there was an innumerable ſort of foules of diuers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

In this land dwelt Other as it ſeemeth.

Roſt Iſlands.

The 22 day the winde comming fayre, we departed from Roſt, ſailing Northnortheaſt, keeping the ſea vntill the 27 day, and then we drew neere vnto the land, which was ſtill Eaſt of vs: then went foorth our Pinneſſe to ſeeke harborow, & found many good harbours, of the which we entred into one with our ſhippes, which was called Stanſew, and the land being Iſlands, were called Lewfoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being alſo vnder the king of Denmarke: but we could not learne how farre it was from the maine land: and we remained there vntil the 30 day, being in latitude 68 degrees, and from the foreſaid Roſt about 30 leagues Northnortheaſt.

Stanſew harbor.

Lofoot.

The 30 day of Iuly about noone we weyed our ankers, and went into the Seas, and ſayled along theſe Iſlands Northnortheaſt, keeping the land ſtill in ſight vntill the ſecond day of Auguſt: then hailing in cloſe aboord the land, to the entent to knowe what land it was, there came a ſkiffe of the Iſland aboord of vs, of whom we aſked many queſtions, who ſhewed vnto vs, that the Iſland was called Seynam, which is the latitude of ſeuenty degrees, and from Stanſew thirtie leagues, being alſo vnder the king of Denmarke, and that there was no merchandiſe there, but onely dryed fiſh, and traine oyle. Then we being purpoſed to goe vnto Finmarke, inquired of him, if we might haue a pilot to bring vs vnto Finmarke, & he ſaid, that if we could beare in, we ſhould haue a good harbour, and on the next day a pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the Wardhouſe, which is the ſtrongeſt holde in Finmarke, and moſt reſorted to by report. But when wee would haue entred into an harbour, the land being very high on euery ſide, there came ſuch flawes of winde and terrible whirlewinds, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were conſtrained to take the ſea agayne, our Pinneſſe being vnſhipt: we ſailed North and by Eaſt, the wind increaſing ſo ſore that we were not able to beare any ſaile, but tooke them in, and lay a drift, to the end to let the ſtorme ouerpaſſe. And that night by violence of winde, and thickeneſſe of miſts, we were not able to keepe together within ſight, and then about midnight we loſt our pinneſſe, which was a diſcomfort vnto vs. Aſſoone as it was day, and the fogge ouerpaſt, we looked about, and at the laſt we deſcried one of our ſhippes to Leeward of vs: then we ſpyed an hullocke of our foreſaile, and bare roome with her, which was the Confidence, but the Edward we could not ſee. Then the flaw ſomething abating, we and the Confidence hoyſed vp our ſailes the fourth day, ſayling Northeaſt and by North, to the end to fall with the Wardhouſe, as we did conſult to doe before, in caſe we ſhould part company. Thus running Northeaſt and by North, and Northeaſt fiftie leagues, then we ſounded, and had 160 fadomes, whereby we thought to be farre from land, and perceiued that the land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherfore we changed our courſe the ſixt day, and ſailed Southeaſt and by South eight and fortie leagues, thinking thereby to find the Wardhouſe.

Auguſt.

Seynam in 70 degrees.

The eight day much winde riſing at the Weſtnorthweſt, we not knowing how the coaſt lay, ſtrook our ſayles, and lay a drift, where we ſounded and found 160 fadomes as afore.

The ninth day, the wind vearing to the South Southeaſt, we ſailed Northeaſt 25 leagues.

The tenth day we ſounded, and could get no ground, neither yet could ſee any land, wherat we wondered: then the wind comming at the Northeaſt, we ran Southeaſt about 48 leagues.

The 11 day, the wind being at South, we ſounded, and found 40 fadoms, and faire ſand.

The 12 day the winde being at South and by Eaſt, we lay with our ſaile Eaſt, and Eaſt and by North 30 leagues.

Willoughbies land, in 72 degrees.

The 14 day early in the morning, we deſcried land, which land we bare with all, hoiſing out our boat to diſcouer what land it might be: but the boat could not come to land the water was ſo ſhoale, where was very much ice alſo, but there was no ſimilitude of habitation, and this land lyeth from Seynam Eaſt and by North 160 leagues, being in latitude 72 degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward the 15, 16 and 17 day.

The 18 day, the winde comming at the Northeaſt, and the Confidence being troubled with bilge water, and ſtocked, we thought it good to ſeeke harbour for her redreſſe: then we bare roome the 18 day Southſoutheaſt, about 70 leagues.

The 21 day we ſounded, and found 10 fadome, after that we ſounded againe, and found but 7 fadome, ſo ſhoalder and ſhoalder water, and yet could ſee no land, where we marueiled greatly: to auoide this danger, we bare roomer into the ſea all that night Northweſt and by Weſt.

The next day we ſounded, and had 20. fadoms, then ſhaped our courſe, and ran Weſt Southweſt vntill the 23. day: then we deſcried Low land, vnto which we bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs vnhabitable. Then wee plyed Weſtward along by that lande, which lyeth Weſt Southweſt, and Eaſt Northeaſt, and much winde blowing at the Weſt, we haled into the ſea North and by Eaſt 30. leagues. Then the winde comming about at the Northeaſt, we ſailed Weſt Northweſt: after that, the winde bearing to the Northweſt, we lay with our ſailes Weſt ſouthweſt, about 14. leagues, and then deſcried land, and bare in with it, being the 28. day, finding ſhoale water, and bare in till we came to 3. fadome, then perceiuing it to be ſhoale water, and alſo ſeeing drie ſands, we haled out againe Northeaſt along that land vntil we came to the point therof. That land turning to the Weſtwarde, we ran along 16. leagues Northweſt: then comming into a faire bay, we went on land with our boat, which place was vnhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had bin there, by croſſes, and other ſignes: from thence we went all along the coaſt Weſtward.

September.

The fourth day of September we loſt ſight of land, by reaſon of contrary winds, and the eight day we deſcried land againe. Within two dayes after we loſt the ſight of it: then running Weſt and by South about 30. leagues, we gat the ſight of land againe, and bare in with it vntill night: then perceiuing it to be a lee ſhore, we gat vs into the ſea, to the end to haue ſea roome.

The 12. of September we hailed to ſhoareward againe, hauing then indifferent winde and weather: then being neere vnto the ſhoare, and the tide almoſt ſpent, wee ranne to an anker in 30. fadoms water.

The 13. day we came along the coaſt, which lay Northweſt and by Weſt, and Southeaſt and by Eaſt.

The 14. day we came to an anker within two leagues of the ſhoare, hauing 60. fadoms.

In this hauen they died.

Or, Ellons.

There we went a ſhore with our boat, & found two or three good harboroughs, the land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we ſee none. The 15 day we ran ſtill along the coaſt vntill the 17 day: then the winde being contrary vnto vs, we thought it beſt to returne vnto the harbor which we had found before, and ſo we bare roomer with the ſame, howbeit we could not accõpliſh our deſire that day. The next day being the 18 of September, we entred into the hauen, and there came to an anker at 6 fadoms. This hauen runneth into the maine, about two leagues, and is in bredth halfe a league, wherein were very many ſeale fiſhes, & other great fiſhes, and vpon the maine we ſaw beares, great deere, foxes, with diuers ſtrange beaſts, as Jguloines, and ſuch other which were to vs vnknowen, and alſo wonderfull. Thus remaining in this hauen the ſpace of a weeke, ſeeing the yeare farre ſpent, & alſo very euill wether, as froſt, ſnow, and haile, as though it had beene the deepe of winter, we thought beſt to winter there. Wherefore we ſent out three men Southſouthweſt, to ſearch if they could find people, who went three dayes iourney, but could finde none: after that, we ſent other three Weſtward foure daies iourney, which alſo returned without finding any people. Then ſent we three men Southeaſt three dayes iourney, who in like ſorte returned without finding of people, or any ſimilitude of habitation.

Here endeth Sir Hugh Willoughbie his note, which was written with his owne hand.

These two notes following were written vpon the outſide of this Pamphlet, or Booke.

1 The proceedings of Sir Hugh Willoughbie after he was ſeparated from the Edward Bonauenture.

2 Our ſhippe being at an anker in the harbour called Sterfier in the Iſland Lofoote.

The riuer or hauen wherein Sir Hugh Willoughbie with the companie of his two ſhips periſhed for cold, is called Arzina in Lapland, neere vnto Kegor. But it appeareth by a Will found in the ſhip that Sir Hugh Willoughbie and moſt of the company were aliue in Ianuary 1554.

The booke of the great and mighty Emperor of Ruſsia, and Duke of Moſcouia, *and of the dominions orders and commo*dities thereunto belonging: drawen by Richard Chancelour.

Forasmuch as it is meete and neceſſary for all thoſe that minde to take in hande the trauell into farre or ſtrange countreys, to endeuour themſelues not onely to vnderſtande the orders, commodities, and fruitfulneſſe thereof, but alſo to applie them to the ſetting forth of the ſame, whereby it may incourage others to the like trauaile: therefore haue I nowe thought good to make a briefe rehearſall of the orders of this my trauaile in Ruſsia and Moſcouia, and other countreys thereunto adioyning: becauſe it was my chaunce to fall with the North partes of Ruſsia before I came towards Moſcouia, I will partly declare my knowledge therein. Ruſsia is very plentifull both of land and people, and alſo welthy for ſuch commodities as they haue. They be very great fiſhers for Salmons and ſmall Coddes: they haue much oyle which wee call treine oyle, the moſt whereof is made by a riuer called ‖ Duina. They make it in other places, but not ſo much as there. They haue alſo a great trade in ſeething of ſalte water. To the North parte of that countrey are the places where they haue their Furres, as Sables, marterns, greeſſe Beuers, Foxes white, blacke, and redde, Minkes, Ermines, Miniuer, and Harts. There are alſo a fiſhes teeth, which fiſh is called a Morſſe. The takers thereof dwell in a place called Poſteſora, which bring them vpon Hartes to Lampas to ſell, and from Lampas carie them to a place called Colmogro, where the hie market is holden on Saint Nicholas day. To the Weſt of Colmogro there is a place called Gratanoue, in our language Nouogorode, where much fine Flaxe and Hempe groweth, and alſo much waxe and honie. The Dutch marchants haue a Staplehouſe there. There is alſo great ſtore of hides, and at a place called Pleſco: and thereabout is great ſtore of Flaxe, Hempe, Waxe, Honie; and that towne is from Colmogro 120 miles.

‖ Duyna

Note.

There is a place called Vologda; the commodities whereof are Tallowe, Waxe, and Flaxe: but not ſo great plentie as is in Gratanoue. From Vologda to Colmogro there runneth a riuer called Duyna, and from thence it falleth into the ſea. Colmogro ſerueth Gratanoue, Vologda and the Moſco with all the countrey thereabout with ſalte and ſaltfiſh. From Vologda to Ieraſlaue is two hundreth miles: which towne is very great. The commodities thereof are hides, and tallowe, and corne in great plenty, and ſome Waxe, but not ſo plentifull as in other places.

The Moſco is from Ieraſlaue two hundreth miles. The countrey betwixt them is very well replenished with ſmall Villages, which are ſo well filled with people, that it is wonder to ſee them: the ground is well ſtored with corne which they carie to the citie of Moſco in ſuch abundance that it is wonder to ſee it. You ſhall meete in a morning ſeuen or eight hundred ſleds comming or going thither, that carrie corne, and ſome carie fiſh. You ſhall haue ſome that carie corne to the Moſco, and ſome that fetch corne from thence, that at the leaſt dwell a thouſand miles off: and all their cariage is on ſleds. Thoſe which come ſo farre dwell in the North partes of the Dukes dominions, where the cold will ſuffer no corne to grow, it is ſo extreme. They bring thither fiſhes, furres, and beaſtes ſkinnes. In thoſe partes they haue but ſmall ſtore of cattell.

The Moſco it ſelfe is great: I take the whole towne to bee greater then London with the ſuburbes: but it is very rude, and ſtandeth without all order. Their houſes are all of timber very dangerous for fire. There is a faire Caſtle, the walles whereof are of bricke, and very high: they ſay they are eighteene foote thicke, but I doe not beleeue it, it doth not ſo ſeeme, notwithſtanding I doe not certainely know it: for no ſtranger may come to viewe it. The one ſide is ditched, and on the other ſide runneth a riuer called Moſcua which runneth into Tartarie and ſo into the ſea called Mare Caſpium: and on the North ſide there is a baſe towne, the which hath alſo a bricke wall about it, and ſo it ioyneth with the Caſtle wall. The Emperour lieth in the caſtle, wherein are nine fayre Churches, and therin are religious men. Alſo there is a Metropolitane with diuers Biſhops. I will not ſtande in deſcription of their buildinges nor of the ſtrength thereof becauſe we haue better in all points in England. They be well furniſhed with ordinance of all ſortes.

The Emperours or Dukes houſe neither in building nor in the outward ſhew, nor yet within the houſe is ſo ſumptuous as I haue ſeene. It is very lowe built in eight ſquare, much like the olde building of England, with ſmall windowes, and ſo in other poynts.

Now to declare my comming before his Maieſtie: After I had remained twelue daies, the Secretary which hath the hearing of ſtrangers did ſend for me, aduertiſing me that the Dukes pleaſure was to haue me to come before his Ma. with the kings my maſters letters: whereof I was right glad, and ſo I gaue mine attendance. And when the Duke was in his place appointed, the interpretour came for me into the vtter chamber, where ſate one hundred or moe gentlemen, all in cloth of golde very ſumptuous, and from thence I came into the Counſaile chamber, where ſate the Duke himſelfe with his nobles, which were a faire company: they ſate round about the chamber on high, yet ſo that he himſelfe ſate much higher then any of his nobles in a chaire gilt, and in a long garment of beaten golde, with an emperial crowne vpon his head, and a ſtaffe of Criſtall and golde in his right hand, and his other hand halfe leaning on his chaire. The Chancelour ſtoode vp with the Secretary before the Duke. After my dutie done and my letter deliuered, he bade me welcome, & enquired of me the health of the King my maſter, and I anſwered that he was in good health at my departure from his court, and that my truſt was that he was now in the ſame. Upon the which he bade me to dinner. The Chancelour preſented my preſent vnto his Grace bareheaded (for before they were all couered) and when his Grace had receiued my letter, I was required to depart: for I had charge not to ſpeake to the Duke, but when he ſpake to me. So I departed vnto the Secretaries chamber, where I remayned two houres, and then I was ſent for againe vnto another palace which is called the golden palace, but I ſaw no cauſe why it ſhould be ſo called; for I haue ſeene many fayrer then it in all poynts: and ſo I came into the hall, which was ſmall and not great as is the Kings Maieſties of England, and the table was couered with a tablecloth; and the Marſhall ſate at the ende of the table with a little white rod in his hand, which boorde was full of veſſell of golde: and on the other ſide of the hall did ſtand a faire cupborde of plate. From thence I came into the dining chamber, where the Duke himſelfe ſate at his table without cloth of eſtate, in a gowne of ſiluer, with a crowne emperiall vpon his head, he ſate in a chaire ſomewhat hie: There ſate none neare him by a great way. There were long tables ſet round about the chamber, which were full ſet with ſuch as the Duke had at dinner: they were all in white. Alſo the places where the tables ſtoode were higher by two ſteppes then the reſt of the houſe. In the middeſt of the chamber ſtoode a table or cupbord to ſet plate on; which ſtoode full of cuppes of golde: and amongſt all the reſt there ſtoode foure maruellous great pottes or crudences as they call them, of golde and ſiluer: I thinke they were a good yarde and a halfe hie. By the cupborde ſtoode two gentlemen with napkins on their ſhoulders, and in their handes each of them had a cuppe of gold ſet with pearles and precious ſtones, which were the Dukes owne drinking cups: when he was diſpoſed, he drunke them off at a draught. And for his ſeruice at meate it came in without order, yet it was very rich ſeruice: for all were ſerued in gold, not onely he himſelfe, but alſo all the reſt of vs, and it was very maſſie: the cups alſo were of golde and very maſſie. The number that dined there that day was two hundred perſons, and all were ſerued in golden veſſell. The gentlemen that waited were all in cloth of gold, and they ſerued him with their caps on their heads. Before the ſeruice came in, the Duke ſent to euery man a great ſhiuer of bread, and the bearer called the party ſo ſent to by his name aloude, and ſayd, Iohn Baſiliuich Emperour of Ruſſia and great Duke of Moſcouia doth reward thee with bread: then muſt all men ſtand vp, and doe at all times when thoſe wordes are ſpoken. And then laſt of all he giueth the Marſhall bread, whereof he eateth before the Dukes Grace, and ſo doth reuerence and departeth. Then commeth the Dukes ſeruice of the Swannes all in pieces, and euery one in a ſeuerall diſh: the which the Duke ſendeth as he did the bread, and the bearer ſayth the ſame wordes as he ſayd before. And as I ſayd before, the ſeruice of his meate is in no order, but commeth in diſh by diſh: and then after that the Duke ſendeth drinke, with the like ſaying as before is tolde. Alſo before dinner hee changed his crowne, and in dinner time two crownes; ſo that I ſaw three ſeuerall crownes vpon his head in one day. And thus when his ſeruice was all come in hee gaue to euery one of his gentlemen waiters meate with his owne hand, & ſo likewiſe drinke. His intent thereby is, as I haue heard, that euery man ſhall know perfectly his ſeruants. Thus when dinner is done hee calleth his nobles before him name by name, that it is wonder to heare howe he could name them, hauing ſo many as he hath. Thus when dinner was done I departed to my lodging, which was an hower within night. I will leaue this, and ſpeake no more of him nor his houſhold: but I will ſomewhat declare of his land and people, with their nature and power in the warrs. This Duke is Lord and Emperour of many countreis, & his power is marueilous great. For he is able to bring into the field two or three hundred thouſand men: he neuer goeth into the field himſelfe with vnder two hundred thouſand men: And when he goeth himſelfe he furniſheth his borders all with men of warre, which are no ſmall number. He leaueth on the borders of Liefland fortie thouſand men, and vpon the borders of Letto 60 thouſand men, and toward the Nagayan Tartars ſixtie thouſand, which is wonder to heare of: yet doeth hee neuer take to his warres neither husbandman nor marchant. All his men are horſemen: he vſeth no footmen, but ſuch as goe with the ordinance and labourers, which are thirtie thouſand. The horſemen are all archers, with ſuch bowes as the Turkes haue, and they ride ſhort as doe the Turkes. Their armour is a coate of plate, with a ſkull on their heads. Some of their coates are couered with veluet or cloth of gold: their deſire is to be ſumptuous in the field, and eſpecially the nobles and gentlemen: as I haue heard their trimming is very coſtly, and partly I haue ſeene it, or elſe I would ſcarcely haue beleeued it: but the Duke himſelfe is richly attired aboue all meaſure: his pauilion is couered either with cloth of gold or ſiluer, and ſo ſet with ſtones that it is wonderfull to ſee it. I haue ſeene the Kings Maieſties of England and the French Kings pauilions, which are fayre, yet not like vnto his. And when they bee ſent into farre or ſtrange countreys, or that ſtrangers come to them, they be very gorgious. Els the Duke himſelfe goeth but meanly in apparell: and when he goeth betwixt one place and another hee is but reaſonably apparelled ouer other times. In the while that I was in Moſco the Duke ſent two ambaſſadours to the King of Poleland, which had at the leſt fiue hundred horſes; their ſumptuouſnes was aboue meaſure, not onely in themſelues, but alſo in their horſes, as veluet, cloth of golde, and cloth of ſiluer ſet with pearles and not ſcant. What ſhall I farther ſay? I neuer heard of nor [illegible] men ſo ſumptuous: but it is no dayly guiſe, for when they haue not occaſion, as I ſayd before, all their doing is but meane. And now to the effect of their warres: They are men without al order in the field. For they runne hurling on heapes, and for the moſt part they neuer giue battell to their enemies: but that which they doe, they doe it all by ſtelth. But I beleeue they be ſuch men for hard liuing as are not vnder the ſun: for no cold will hurt them. Yea and though they lie in the field two moneths, at ſuch time as it ſhall freeſe more then a yard thicke, the common ſouldier hath neither tent nor any thing elſe ouer his head: the moſt defence they haue againſt the wether is a felte, which is ſet againſt the winde and weather, and when Snowe commeth hee doth caſt it off, and maketh him a fire, and laieth him downe thereby. Thus doe the moſt of all his men, except they bee gentlemen which haue other prouiſion of their owne. Their lying in the fielde is not ſo ſtrange as in their hardnes: for euery man muſt carie & make prouiſion for himſelfe & his horſe for a moneth or two, which is very wonderful. For he himſelfe ſhal liue vpon water & otemeale mingled together cold, and drinke water thereto: his horſe ſhal eat green wood, & ſuch like baggage, & ſhal ſtand open in the cold field without couert, & yet wil he labour & ſerue him right wel. I pray you amongſt all our boaſting warriors how many ſhould we find to endure the field with thē but one moneth. I know no ſuch region about vs that beareth that name for man & beaſt. Now what might be made of theſe men if they were trained & broken to order and knowledge of ciuill wars? If this Prince had within his countreys ſuch men as could make thē to vnderſtand ỹ things aforeſaid, I do beleeue that 2 of the beſt or greateſt princes in Chriſtendome were not wel able to match with him, cōſidering the greatnes of his power & the hardnes of his people & ſtraite liuing both of people and horſe, and the ſmall charges which his warres ſtand him in: for he giueth no wages, except to ſtrangers. They haue a yeerely ſtipend & not much. As for his own countrey men euery one ſerueth of his owne proper coſtes and charges, ſauing that he giueth to his Harcubuſiers certaine allowance for powder & ſhot: or elſe no man in all his countrey hath one pennie wages. But if any man hath done very good ſeruice he giueth him a ferme or a piece of lande; for the which hee is bound at all times to bee readie with ſo many men as the Duke ſhall appoynt: who conſidereth in his mind what that lande or ferme is well able to finde: and ſo many ſhall he bee bound to furniſh at all and euery ſuch time as warres are holden in any of the Dukes dominions. For there is no man of liuing, but hee is bound likewiſe, whether the Duke call for either ſouldier or labourer, to furniſh them with all ſuch neceſſaries as to them belong.

Alſo, if any gentleman or man of liuing do die without iſſue male, immediatly after his death the Duke entreth his land, notwithſtanding he haue neuer ſo many daughters, and peraduenture giueth it foorthwith to another man, except a ſmall portion that he ſpareth to marrie the daughters withall. Alſo if there be a rich man, a fermour, or man of liuing, which is ſtriken in age or by chance is maimed, and be not able to doe the Duke ſeruice, ſome other gentleman that is not able to liue and more able to doe ſeruice, will come to the Duke and complayne, ſaying, your Grace hath ſuch an one, which is vnmeete to doe ſeruice to your Highnes, who hath great abundance of welth, and likewiſe your Grace hath many gentlemen which are poore and lacke liuing, and we that lacke are well able to doe good ſeruice, your Grace might doe well to looke vpon him, and make him to helpe thoſe that want. Immediatly the Duke ſendeth forth to inquire of his wealth: and if it be ſo proued, he ſhall be called before the Duke, and it ſhall bee ſayd vnto him, friend, you haue too much liuing, and are vnſeruiceable to your prince, leſſe will ſerue you, and the reſt will ſerue other men that are more able to ſerue. Whereupon immediatly his liuing ſhal be taken away from him, ſauing a little to find himſelfe and his wife on, and he may not once repine thereat: but for anſwere he will ſay, that he hath nothing, but it is Gods and the Dukes Graces, and cannot ſay, as we the common people in England ſay, if wee haue any thing; that it is Gods and our owne. Men may ſay, that theſe men are in wonderfull great awe, and obedience, that thus one muſt giue and grant his goods which he hath bene ſcraping and ſcratching for all his life to be at his Princes pleaſure and commandement. Oh that our ſturdie rebels were had in the like ſubiection to knowe their duety towarde their Princes. They may not ſay as ſome ſnudges in England ſay, I would find the Queene a man to ſerue in my place, or make his friends tarrie at home if money haue the vpper hand. No, no, it is not ſo in this countrey: for hee ſhall make humble ſute to ſerue the Duke. And whom he ſendeth moſt to the warres he thinketh he is moſt in his fauour: and yet as I before haue ſayde, hee giueth no wages. If they knewe their ſtrength no man were able to make match with them: nor they that dwel neere them ſhould haue any reſt of them. But I thinke it is not Gods will: For I may compare them to a young horſe that knoweth not his ſtrength, whome a little childe ruleth and guideth with a bridle, for all his great ſtrength: for if hee did, neither childe nor man could rule him. Their warres are holden againſt the Crimme Tartarians and the Nagaians.

I will ſtand no longer in the rehearſall of their power and warres. For it were too tedious to the reader. But I will in part declare their lawes, and puniſhments, and the execution of iuſtice. And firſt I will begin with the commons of the countrey, which the gentlemen haue rule on: And that is, that euery gentleman hath rule and iuſtice vpon his owne tenants. And if it ſo fall out that two gentlemens ſeruants or tenants doe diſagree, the two gentlemen examine the matter, and haue the parties before them, and ſoe giue the ſentence. And yet cannot they make the ende betwixt them of the controuerſie, but either of the gentlemen muſt bring his ſeruant or tenant before the high iudge or iuſtice of that countrey, and there preſent them, and declare the matter and caſe. The plaintiſe ſayth, I require the law; which is graunted: then commeth an officer and arreſteth the party defendant, and vſeth him contrarie to the lawes of England. For when they attach any man they beate him about the legges, vntill ſuch time as he findeth ſureties to anſwere the matter: And if not, his handes and necke are bound together, and he is led about the towne and beaten about the legges, with other extreme puniſhments till he come to his anſwere: And the Iuſtice demaundeth if it be for debt, and ſayth: Oweſt thou this man any ſuch debt? He will perhaps ſay nay. Then ſayth the Iudge: art thou able to denie it? Let vs heare how? By othe ſayth the defendant. Then he commandeth to leaue beating him till further triall be had.

Their order in one point is commendable. They haue no man of Lawe to pleade their cauſes in any court: but euery man pleadeth his owne cauſe, and giueth bill and anſwere in writing: contrarie to the order in England. The complaint is in maner of a ſupplication, & made to the Dukes Grace, and deliuered him into his owne hand, requiring to haue iuſtice as in his complaint is alleaged.

The duke giueth ſentence himſelfe vpon all matters in the Law. Which is very cōmendable, that ſuch a Prince wil take paines to ſee miniſtration of iuſtice. Yet notwithſtanding it is wonderfully abuſed: and thereby the Duke is much deceiued. But if it fall out that the officers be eſpied in cloking the trueth, they haue moſt condigne puniſhment. And if the plaintife can nothing prooue, then the defendant muſt take his oth vpon the crucifixe whether he bee in the right or no. Then is demanded if the plaintife be any thing able further to make proofe: if hee bee not; then ſometimes he will ſay, I am able to prooue it by my body and hands, or by my champions body, ſo requiring the Campe. After the other hath his othe, it is graunted aſwell to the one as to the other. So when they goe to the field, they ſweare vpon the Crucifixe, that they bee both in the right, and that the one ſhall make the other to confeſſe the trueth before they depart foorth of the field: and ſo they goe both to the battell armed with ſuch weapons as they vſe in that countrey: they fight all on foote, & ſeldome the parties themſelues do fight, except they be Gentlemen. for they ſtand much vpon their reputation, for they wil not fight, but with ſuch as are come of as good an houſe as themſelues. So that if either partie require the combate, it is granted vnto them, and no champion is to ſerue in their roome: wherein is no deceit: but otherwiſe by champions there is. For although they take great othes vpon them to doe the battell truely, yet is the contrary often ſeene: becauſe the common champions haue none other liuing. And aſſoone as the one party hath gotten the victorie, hee demandeth the debt, and the other is carried to priſon, and there is ſhamefully vſed till he take order. There is alſo another order in the lawe, that the plaintiffe may ſweare in ſome cauſes of debt. And if the partie defendant be poore, he ſhalbe ſet vnder the Crucifixe, and the partie plaintife muſt ſweare ouer his head, and when hee hath taken his othe, the Duke taketh the partie defendant home to his houſe, and vſeth him as his bond-man, and putteth him to labour, or letteth him for hier to any ſuch as neede him, vntill ſuch time as his friends make prouiſion for his redemption: or elſe hee remaineth in bondage all the dayes of his life. Againe there are many that will ſell themſelues to Gentlemen or Marchants to bee their bondmen, to haue during their life meate, drinke and cloth, and at their comming to haue a piece of mony. yea and ſome will ſell their wiues and children to bee bawdes and drudges to the byer. Alſo they haue a Lawe for Fellons and pickers contrary to the Lawes of England. For by their law they can hang no man for his firſt offence; but may keepe him long in priſon, and oftentimes beate him with whips and other puniſhment: and there he ſhall remaine vntill his friends be able to bayle him. If he be a picker or a cut-purſe, as there be very many, the ſecond time he is taken, he hath a piece of his Noſe cut off, and is burned in the forehead, and kept in priſon till hee finde ſureties for his good behauiour. And if he be taken the third time, he is hanged. And at the firſt time he is extremely puniſhed and not releaſed, except hee haue very good friends, or that ſome Gentleman require to haue him to the warres: And in ſo doing, he ſhall enter into great bonds for him: by which meanes the countrey is brought into good quietneſſe. But they be naturally giuen to great deceit, except extreme beating did bridle them. They be naturally giuen to hard liuing aſwell in fare as in lodging. I heard a Ruſſian ſay, that is was a great deale merrier liuing in priſon then foorth, but for the great beating. For they haue meate and drinke without any labour, and get the charitie of well diſpoſed people: But being at libertie they get nothing. The poore is very innumerable, and liue moſt miſerably: for I haue ſeene them eate the pickle of Hearring and other ſtinking fiſh: nor the fiſh cannot be ſo ſtinking nor rotten, but they will eate it and praiſe it to be more wholeſome then other fiſh or freſh meate. In mine opinion there be no ſuch people vnder the ſunne for their hardneſſe of liuing. Well, I will leaue them in this poynt, and will in part declare their Religion. They doe obſerue the lawe of the Greekes with ſuch exceſſe of ſuperſtition, as the like hath not bene heard of. They haue no grauen images in their Churches, but all painted, to the intent they will not breake the commandement: but to their painted images they vſe ſuch idolatrie, that the like was neuer heard of in England. They will neither worſhip nor honour any image that is made forth of their owne countrey. For their owne images (ſay they) haue pictures to declare what they be, and howe they be of God, and ſo be not ours: They ſay, Looke how the Painter or Caruer hath made them, ſo we doe worſhip them, and they worſhip none before they be Chriſtened. They ſay we be but halfe Chriſtians: becauſe we obſerue not part of the olde law with the Turks. Therefore they call themſelues more holy then vs. They haue none other learning but their mother tongue, nor will ſuffer no other in their countrey among them. All their ſeruice in Churches is in their mother tongue. They haue the olde and newe Teſtament, which are daily read among them: and yet their ſuperſtition is no leſſe. For when the Prieſts doe reade, they haue ſuch tricks in their reading, that no man can vnderſtand them, nor no man giueth eare to them. For all the while the Prieſt readeth, the people ſit downe and one talke with another. But when the Prieſt is at ſeruice no man ſitteth, but gagle and ducke like ſo many Geeſe. And as for their prayers they haue but litle ſkill, but vſe to ſay As bodi pomele: As much to ſay, Lord haue mercy vpon me. For the tenth man within the land cannot ſay the Pater noſter. And as for the Creede, no man may be ſo bolde as to meddle therewith but in the Church: for they ſay it ſhoulde not bee ſpoken of, but in the Churches. Speake to them of the Cōmandements, and they wil ſay they were giuen to Moſes in the law, which Chriſt hath nowe abrogated by his precious death and paſſion: therefore, (ſay they) we obſerue little or none thereof. And I doe beleeue them. For if they were examined of their Lawe and Commaundements together, they ſhoulde agree but in fewe poynts. They haue the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in both kindes, and more ceremonies then wee haue. They preſent them in a diſh in both kindes together, and carrie them rounde about the Church vpon the Prieſtes head, and ſo doe miniſter at all ſuch times as any ſhall require. They bee great offerers of Candles, and ſometimes of money, which wee call in England, Soule penſe, with more ceremonies then I am able to declare. They haue foure Lents in the yeere, whereof our Lent is the greateſt. Looke as we doe begin on the Wedneſday, ſo they doe on the Munday before: And the weeke before that they call The Butter weeke: And in that weeke they eate nothing but Butter and milke. Howbeit I beleeue there bee in no other countrey the like people for drunkenneſſe. The next Lent is called Saint Peters Lent, and beginneth alwayes the Munday next after Trinitie ſunday, and endeth on Saint Peters euen. If they ſhould breake that faſt, their beliefe is, that they ſhould not come in at heauen gates. And when any of them die, they haue a teſtimoniall with them in the Coffin, that when the ſoule commeth to heauen gates it may deliuer the ſame to Saint Peter, which declareth that the partie is a true and holy Ruſsian. The third Lent beginneth fifteene dayes before the later Lady day, and endeth on our Lady Eeuen. The fourth Lent beginneth on Saint Martins day, and endeth on Chriſtmas Eeuen: which Lent is faſted for Saint Philip, Saint Peter, Saint Nicholas, and Saint Clement. For they foure be the principall and greateſt Saints in that countrey. In theſe Lents they eate neither Butter, Egges, Milke, nor Cheeſe; but they are very ſtraitely kept with Fiſh, Cabbages, and Rootes. And out of their Lents, they obſerue truely the Wedneſdayes and Fridayes throughout the yeere: and on the Saturday they doe eate fleſh. Furthermore they haue a great number of Religious men: which are blacke Monks, and they eate no fleſh throughout the yeere, but fiſh, milke and Butter. By their order they ſhould eate no freſh-fiſh, and in their Lents they eate nothing but Coleworts, Cabbages; ſalt Cowcumbers, with other rootes, as Radiſh and ſuch like. Their drinke is like our peny Ale, and is called Quaſſ. They haue ſeruice daily in their Churches; and vſe to goe to ſeruice two houres before day, and that is ended by day light. At nine of the clocke they goe to Maſſe: that ended, to dinner: and after that to ſeruice againe: and then to ſupper. You ſhall vnderſtand that at euery dinner and ſupper they haue declared the expoſition of the Goſpel that day: but howe they wreſt and twine the Scripture and that together by report it is wonderfull. As for whoredome and drunkenneſſe there be none ſuch liuing: and for extortion, they be the moſt abhominable vnder the ſunne. Nowe iudge of their holineſſe. They haue twiſe as much lands as the Duke himſelfe hath: but yet hee is reaſonable euen with them, as thus: When they take bribes of any of the poore and ſimple, he hath it by an order. When the Abbot of any of of their houſes dieth, then the Duke hath all his goods moueable and vnmoueable: ſo that the ſucceſſour buieth all at the Dukes hands: and by this meane they be the beſt Fermers the Duke hath. Thus with their Religion I make an ende, truſting hereafter to know it better.

To the right worſhipfull and my ſingular good Vncle, Maſter Chriſtopher Frothingham, giue theſe.

Sir, Reade and correct;
For great is the defect.

The Teſtimonie of M. Richard Eden in his Decades, concerning the Booke following.

AND whereas (ſaith he) I haue before made mention howe Moſcouie was in our time diſcouered by Richard Chanceler in his voyage toward Cathay, by the direction and information of M. Sebaſtian Cabota, who long before had this ſecret in his minde: I ſhall not neede here to deſcribe that voyage, forſmuch as the ſame is largely and faithfully written in the Latine tongue, by that learned yong man Clement Adams, ſchoolemaſter to the Queenes henſhmen, as he receiued it at the mouth of the ſaid Richard Chanceler.

The newe Nauigation and diſcouerie of the kingdome of Moſcouia, by the Northeaſt, in the yeere 1553: Enterpriſed by Sir Hugh Willoughbie knight, and perfourmed by Richard Chancelor Pilot maior of the voyage: Written in Latine by Clement Adams.

Vpon what occaſions, and by whom this voyage was ſet out, and of the diſcouerie of Moſcouie by the North.

At what time our Marchants perceiued the commodities and wares of England to bee in ſmall requeſt with the countreys and people about vs, and neere vnto vs, and that thoſe Marchandizes which ſtrangers in the time and memorie of our aunceſters did earneſtly ſeeke and deſire, were nowe neglected, and the price thereof abated, although by vs carried to their owne portes, and all forreine Marchandiſes in great accompt, and their priſes wonderfully raiſed: certaine graue Citizens of London, and men of great wiſedome, and carefull for the good of their Countrey, began to thinke with themſelues, howe this miſchiefe might bee remedied. Neither was a remedie (as it then appeared) wanting to their deſires, for the auoyding of ſo great an inconuenience: for ſeeing that the wealth of the Spaniards and Portingales, by the diſcouerie and ſearch of newe trades and Countreys was maruellouſly increaſed, ſuppoſing the ſame to be a courſe and meane for them alſo to obteine the like, they thereupon reſolued vpon a newe and ſtrange Nauigation. And whereas at the ſame time one Sebaſtian Cabota, a man in thoſe dayes very renowmed, happened to bee in London, they began firſt of all to deale and conſult diligently with him, and after much ſpeech and conference together, it was at laſt concluded that three ſhippes ſhould bee prepared and furniſhed out, for the ſearch and diſcouerie of the Northerne part of the world, to open a way and paſſage to our men for trauaile to newe and vnknowen kingdomes.

3. Ships furniſhed for the diſcouerie.

And whereas many things ſeemed neceſſary to bee regarded in this ſo hard and difficult a matter, they firſt make choyſe of certaine graue and wiſe perſons in maner of a Senate or companie, which ſhould lay their heads together, and giue their iudgements, and prouide things requiſite and profitable for all occaſions: by this companie it was thought expedient, that a certaine ſumme of money ſhould publiquely bee collected to ſerue for the furniſhing of ſo many ſhippes. And leſt any priuate man ſhould bee too much oppreſſed and charged, a courſe was taken, that euery man willing to be of the ſocietie, ſhould diſburſe the portion of twentie and fiue pounds a piece: ſo that in ſhort time by this meanes the ſumme of ſixe thouſand pounds being gathered, the three ſhippes were bought, the moſt part whereof they prouided to be newly built and trimmed. But in this action, I wote not whether I may more admire the care of the Marchants, or the diligence of the Shipwrights: for the Marchants, they get very ſtrong and well ſeaſoned plankes for the building, the Shippewrights, they with daily trauaile, and their greateſt ſkill doe fitte them for the diſpatch of the ſhippes: they calke them, pitch them, and among the reſt, they make one moſt ſtanch and firme, by an excellent and ingenious inuention. For they had heard that in certaine parts of the Ocean, a kinde of wormes is bredde, which many times pearceth and eateth through the ſtrongeſt oake that is: and therfore that the Mariners, and the reſt to bee imployed in this voyage might bee free and ſafe from this danger, they couer a piece of the keele of the ſhippe with thinne ſheetes of leade: and hauing thus built the ſhips, and furniſhed them with armour and artillerie, then followed a ſecond care no leſſe troubleſome and neceſſarie then the former, namely, the prouiſion of victuals, which was to be made according to the time and length of the voyage. And whereas they afore determined to haue the Eaſt part of the world ſayled vnto, and yet that the ſea towards the ſame was not open, except they kept the Northren tract, whereas yet it was doubtfull whether there were any paſſage yea or no, they reſolued to victuall the ſhips for eighteene moneths, which they did for this reaſon. For our men being to paſſe that huge and colde part of the world, they wiſely foreſeeing it, allowe them ſixe moneths victuall to ſaile to the place, ſo much more to remaine there if the extremitie of the winter hindered their returne, and ſo much more alſo for the time of their comming home.

Prouiſion of victuals for 18. moneths.

Choiſe of Captaines and Pilots.

Sir Hugh Willoughbie.

Nowe this prouiſion being made and caried aboord, with armour and munition of all ſorts, ſufficient Captaines and gouernours of ſo great an enterpriſe were as yet wanting: to which office and place, although many men, (and ſome voyde of experience) offered themſelues, yet one Sir Hugh Willoughbie a moſt valiant Gentleman, and well borne, very earneſtly requeſted to haue that care and charge committed vnto him: of whom before all others, both by reaſon of his goodly perſonage (for he was of a tall ſtature) as alſo for his ſingular ſkill in the ſeruices of warre, the company of the Marchants made greateſt accompt: ſo that at the laſt they concluded and made choyce of him for the Generall of this voyage, and appoynted to him the Admirall, with authoritie and commaund ouer all the reſt. And for the gouernement of other ſhips although diuers men ſeemed willing, and made offers of themſelues thereunto, yet by a common conſent one Richard Chanceler, a man of great eſtimation for many good partes of wit in him, was elected, in whom alone great hope for the performance of this buſineſſe reſted. This man was brought vp by one maſter Henry Sidney, a noble yong Gentleman and very much beloued of King Edward, who at this time comming to the place where the Marchants were gathered together, beganne a very eloquent ſpeech or Oration, and ſpake to them after this maner following.

Maſter Henry Sidney his Oration.

My very worſhipfull friends, I cannot but greatly commend your preſent godly and vertuous intention, in the ſerious enterpriſing (for the ſingular loue you beare to your Countrey) a matter, which (I hope) will prooue profitable for this nation, and honourable to this our land. Which intention of yours wee alſo of the Nobilitie are ready to our power to helpe and further: neither doe wee holde any thing ſo deare and precious vnto vs, which wee will not willingly forgoe, and lay out in ſo commendable a cauſe. But principally I reioyce in my ſelfe, that I haue nouriſhed and maintained that witte, which is like by ſome meanes and in ſome meaſure, to profite and ſteede you in this worthy action. But yet I would not haue you ignorant of this one thing, that I doe now part with Chanceler, not becauſe I make little reckoning of the man, or that his maintenance is burdenous and chargeable vnto mee, but that you might conceiue and vnderſtand my good will and promptitude for the furtherance of this buſineſſe, and that the authoritie and eſtimation which hee deſerueth may be giuen him. You know the man by report, I by experience, you by wordes, I by deedes, you by ſpeech and companie, but I by the daily triall of his life haue a full and perfect knowledge of him. And you are alſo to remember, into howe many perils for your ſakes, and his countreys loue, he is nowe to runne: whereof it is requiſite that wee be not vnmindefull, if it pleaſe God to ſend him good ſucceſſe. Wee commit a little money to the chaunce and hazard of Fortune: He commits his life (a thing to a man of all things moſt deare) to the raging Sea, and the vncertainties of many dangers. We ſhall here liue and reſt at home quietly with our friends, and acquaintance: but hee in the meane time labouring to keepe the ignorant and vnruly Mariners in good order and obedience, with howe many cares ſhall hee trouble and vexe himſelfe? with how many troubles ſhall he breake himſelfe? and howe many diſquietings ſhall hee bee forced to ſuſtaine? We ſhall keepe our owne coaſtes and countrey: Hee ſhall ſeeke ſtrange and vnknowen kingdomes. He ſhall commit his ſafetie to barbarous and cruell people, and ſhall hazard his life amongſt the monſtrous and terrible beaſtes of the Sea. Wherefore in reſpect of the greatneſſe of the dangers, and the excellencie of his charge, you are to fauour and loue the man thus departing from vs: and if it fall ſo happily out that hee returne againe, it is your part and duetie alſo, liberally to reward him.

After that this noble yong Gentleman had deliuered this or ſome ſuch like ſpeech, much more eloquently then I can poſſiblie report it, the companie then preſent beganne one to looke vpon another, one to queſtion and conferre with another: and ſome (to whom the vertue and ſufficiencie of the man was knowen) began ſecretly to reioyce with themſelues, and to conceiue a ſpeciall hope, that the man would prooue in time very rare and excellent, and that his vertues already appearing and ſhining to the world would growe to the great honour and aduancement of this kingdome.

After all this, the companie growing to ſome ſilence, it ſeemed good to them that were of greateſt grauity amongſt them, to inquire, ſearch and ſeeke what might be learned & knowen, concerning the Eaſterly part or tract of the world. For which cauſe two Tartarians, which were then of the kings Stable, were ſent for, & an interpreter was gotten to be preſent, by whom they were demaunded touching their Countrey and the maners of their nation: But they were able to anſwere nothing to the purpoſe: being in deede more acquainted (as one there merily and openly ſaid) to toſſe pottes, then to learne the ſtates and diſpoſitions of people. But after much adoe and many things paſſed about this matter, they grewe at laſt to this iſſue, to ſet downe and appoynt a time for the departure of the ſhippes: becauſe diuers were of opinion, that a great part of the beſt time of the yeere was already ſpent, and if the delay grewe longer, the way would bee ſtopt and bard by the force of the Ice, and the colde climate: and therefore it was thought beſt by the opinion of them all, that by the twentieth day of May, the Captaines and Mariners ſhould take ſhipping, and depart from Radcliffe vpon the ebbe, if it pleaſed God. They hauing ſaluted their acquaintance, one his wife, another his children, another his kinſfolkes, and another his friends deerer then his kinſfolkes, were preſent and ready at the day appoynted: and hauing wayed ancre, they departed with the turning of the water, and ſailing eaſily, came firſt to Greenewich. The greater ſhippes are towed downe with boates, and oares, and the mariners being all apparelled in Watchet or ſkie coloured cloth, rowed amaine, and made way with diligence. And being come neere to Greenewich, (where the Court then lay) preſently vpon the newes therof, the Courtiers came running out, and the common people flockt together, ſtanding very thicke vpon the ſhoare: the priuie Counſel, they lookt out at the windowes of the Court, and the reſt ranne vp to the toppes of the towers: the ſhippes hereupon diſcharge their Ordinance, and ſhoot off their pieces after the maner of warre, and of the ſea, inſomuch that the tops of the hilles ſounded therewith, the valleys and the waters gaue an Eccho, and the Mariners, they ſhouted in ſuch ſort, that the ſkie rang againe with the noyſe thereof. One ſtoode in the poope of the ſhip, and by his geſture bids farewell to his friendes in the beſt maner hee could. Another walkes vpon the hatches, another climbes the ſhrowds, another ſtands vpon the maine yard, and another in the top of the ſhippe. To be ſhort, it was a very triumph (after a ſort) in all reſpects to the beholders. But (alas) the good King Edward (in reſpect of whom principally all this was prepared) hee onely by reaſon of his ſickeneſſe was abſent from this ſhewe, and not long after the departure of theſe ſhips, the lamentable and moſt ſorowfull accident of his death followed.

They departed from Ratcliffe the 20. of May 1553.

But to proceede in the matter.

The ſhippes going downe with the tyde came at laſt to Woolwich, where they ſtayed and caſt ancre, with purpoſe to depart therehence againe, as ſoone as the turning of the water, and a better winde ſhould drawe them to ſet ſaile. After this they departed and came to Harwich, in which porte they ſtayed long, not without great loſſe and conſuming of time: yet at the laſt with a good winde they hoyſed vp ſaile, and committed themſelues to the ſea, giuing their laſt adieu to their natiue Countrey, which they knewe not whether they ſhould euer returne to ſee againe or not. Many of them looked oftentimes backe, and could not refraine from teares, conſidering into what hazards they were to fall, and what vncertainties of the ſea they were to make triall of.

Amongſt the reſt, Richard Chanceler the Captaine of the Edward Bonauenture, was not a little grieued with the feare of wanting victuals, part whereof was found to be corrupt and putrified at Harwich, and the hoggeſheads of wine alſo leaked, and were not ſtanch: his naturall and fatherly affection alſo ſomewhat troubled him, for he left behinde him his two little ſonnes, which were in the caſe of Orphanes if he ſpedde not well: the eſtate alſo of his companie moued him to care, being in the former reſpects after a ſort vnhappie, and were to abide with himſelfe euery good or badde accident: but in the meane time while his minde was thus tormented with the multiplicitie of ſorowes and cares, after many dayes ſayling, they kenned land afarre off, whereunto the Pilots directed the ſhips: and being come to it, they land, and finde it to be Roſt Iſland, where they ſtayed certaine dayes, and afterwards ſet ſaile againe, and proceeding towards the North, they eſpied certaine other Iſlands, which were called the Croſſe of Iſlands. From which places when they were a litle departed, Sir Hugh Willoughby the General, a man of good foreſight and prouidence in all his actions, erected and ſet out his flagge, by which hee called together the chiefeſt men of the other ſhippes, that by the helpe and aſſiſtance of their counſels, the order of the gouernement, and conduction of the ſhippes in the whole voyage might bee the better: who being come together accordingly, they conclude and agree, that if any great tempeſt ſhould ariſe at any time, and happen to diſperſe and ſcatter them, euery ſhippe ſhould indeuour his beſt to goe to Wardhouſe, a hauen or caſtell of ſome name in the kingdome of Norway, and that they that arriued there firſt in ſafetie ſhould ſtay and expect the comming of the reſt.

The very ſame day in the afternoone, about foure of the clocke, ſo great a tempeſt ſuddenly aroſe, and the Seas were ſo outragious, that the ſhips could not keepe their intended courſe, but ſome were perforce driuen one way, and ſome another way, to their great perill and hazard: The generall with his lowdeſt voyce cried out to Richard Chanceler, and earneſtly requeſted him not to goe farre from him: but hee neither would nor could keepe companie with him, if he ſailed ſtill ſo faſt: for the Admirall was of better ſaile then his ſhippe. But the ſaid Admirall (I knowe not by what meanes) bearing all his ſailes, was caried away with ſo great force and ſwiftneſſe, that not long after hee was quite out of ſight, and the third ſhip alſo with the ſame ſtorme and like rage was diſperſed and loſt vs.

The ſhippe boate of the Admirall (ſtriking againſt the ſhippe,) was ouerwhelmed in the ſight and viewe of the Mariners of the Bonauenture: and as for them that are already returned and arriued, they know nothing of the reſt of the ſhips what was become of them.

They returne the next yeere not knowing what was become of the other 2. ſhips.

But if it be ſo, that any miſerable miſhap haue ouertaken them, If the rage and furie of the Sea haue deuoured thoſe good men, or if as yet they liue, and wander vp and downe in ſtrange Countreys, I muſt needs ſay they were men worthy of better fortune, and if they be liuing, let vs wiſh them ſafetie and a good returne: but if the crueltie of death hath taken holde of them, God ſend them a Chriſtian graue and Sepulchre.

Nowe Richard Chanceler with his ſhippe and company being thus left alone, and become very penſiue, heauie, and ſorowfull, by this diſperſion of the Fleete, hee (according to the order before taken,) ſhapeth his courſe for Wardhouſe in Norway, there to expect and abide the arriuall of the reſt of the ſhippes. And being come thither, and hauing ſtayed there the ſpace of 7. dayes, and looked in vaine for their comming, hee determined at length to proceede alone in the purpoſed voyage. And as hee was preparing himſelfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in company and ſpeech with certaine Scottiſhmen: who hauing vnderſtanding of his intention, and wiſhing well to his actions, beganne earneſtly to diſſwade him from the further proſecution of the diſcouerie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and omitted no reaſon that might ſerue to that purpoſe. But hee holding nothing ſo ignominious and reprochfull, as inconſtancie and leuitie of minde, and perſwading himſelfe that a man of valour coulde not commit a more diſhonourable part then for feare of danger to auoyde and ſhunne great attempts, was nothing at all changed or diſcouraged with the ſpeeches and words of the Scots, remaining ſtedfaſt and immutable in his firſt reſolution: determining either to bring that to paſſe which was intended, or els to die the death.

And as for them which were with Maſter Chanceler in his ſhippe, although they had great cauſe of diſcomfort by the loſſe of their companie (whom the foreſaid tempeſt had ſeparated from them,) and were not a little troubled with cogitations and perturbations of minde, in reſpect of their doubtfull courſe: yet notwithſtanding, they were of ſuch conſent and agreement of minde with Maſter Chanceler, that they were reſolute, and prepared vnder his direction and gouernment, to make proofe and triall of all aduentures, without all feare or miſtruſt of future dangers. Which conſtancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increaſe their Captaines carefulneſſe: for hee being ſwallowed vp with like good will and loue towards them, feared leſt through any errour of his, the ſafetie of the companie ſhould bee indangered. To conclude, when they ſawe their deſire and hope of the arriuall of the reſt of the ſhippes to be euery day more and more fruſtrated, they prouided to ſea againe, and Maſter Chanceler held on his courſe towards that vnknowen part of the world, and ſailed ſo farre, that hee came at laſt to the place where hee found no night at all, but a continuall light and brightneſſe of the Sunne ſhining clearely vpon the huge and mightie Sea. And hauing the benefite of this perpetuall light for certaine dayes, at the length it pleaſed God to bring them into a certaine great Bay, which was of one hundreth miles or thereabout ouer. Whereinto they entred, and ſomewhat farre within it caſt ancre, and looking euery way about them, it happened that they eſpied a farre off a certaine fiſher boate, which Maſter Chanceler, accompanied with a fewe of his men, went towards to common with the fiſhermen that were in it, and to knowe of them what Countrey it was, and what people, and of what maner of liuing they were: but they being amazed with the ſtrange greatneſſe of his ſhippe, (for in thoſe partes before that time they had neuer ſeene the like) beganne preſently to auoyde and to flee: but hee ſtill following them at laſt ouertooke them, and being come to them, they (being in great feare, as men halfe dead) proſtrated themſelues before him, offering to kiſſe his feete: but hee (according to his great and ſingular courteſie,) looked pleaſantly vpon them, comforting them by ſignes and geſtures, refuſing thoſe dueties and reuerences of theirs, and taking them vp in all louing ſort from the ground. And it is ſtrange to conſider howe much fauour afterwards in that place, this humanitie of his did purchaſe to himſelfe. For they being diſmiſſed ſpread by and by a report abroad of the arriuall of a ſtrange nation, of a ſingular gentleneſſe and courteſie: whereupon the common people came together offering to theſe newe-come gheſts victuals freely, and not refuſing to traffique with them, except they had bene bound by a certaine religious vſe and cuſtome, not to buy any forreine commodities, without the knowledge and conſent of the king.

The diſcouerie of Ruſsia.

By this time our men had learned that this Countrey was called Ruſsia, or Moſcouie, and that Iuan Vaſiliwich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and gouerned farre and wide in thoſe places. And the barbarous Ruſſes asked likewiſe of our men whence they were, and what they came for: whereunto anſwere was made, that they were Engliſhmen ſent into thoſe coaſtes, from the moſt excellent King Edward the ſixt, hauing from him in commandement certaine things to deliuer to their King, and ſeeking nothing els but his amitie and friendſhip, and traffique with his people, whereby they doubted not, but that great commoditie and profit would grow to the ſubiects of both kingdomes.

The Barbarians heard theſe things very gladly, and promiſed their aide and furtherance to acquaint their king out of hand with ſo honeſt and a reaſonable requeſt.

In the meane time Maſter Chanceler intreated victuals for his money of the gouernour of that place (who together with others came aboord him) and required hoſtages of them likewiſe for the more aſſurance of ſafetie to himſelfe and his company. To whom the Gouernours anſwered, that they knewe not in that caſe the will of their king, but yet were willing in ſuch things as they might lawfully doe, to pleaſure him: which was as then to afoord him the benefit of victuals.

Nowe while theſe things were a doing, they ſecretly ſent a meſſenger vnto the Emperour, to certifie him of the arriuall of a ſtrange nation, and withall to knowe his pleaſure concerning them. Which meſſage was very welcome vnto him, inſomuch that voluntarily hee inuited them to come to his Court. But if by reaſon of the tediouſneſſe of ſo long a iourney, they thought it not beſt ſo to doe, then hee granted libertie to his ſubiects to bargaine, and to traffique with them: and further promiſed, that if it would pleaſe them to come to him, hee himſelfe would beare the whole charges of poſte horſes. In the meane time the gouernours of the place differred the matter from day to day, pretending diuers excuſes, and ſaying one while that the conſent of all the gouernours, and another while, that the great and waightie affaires of the kingdome compelled them to differ their anſwere: and this they did of purpoſe, ſo long to protract the time, vntill the meſſenger (ſent before to the king) did returne with relation of his will and pleaſure.

But Maſter Chanceler, (ſeeing himſelfe held in this ſuſpenſe with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him, they poſted the matter off ſo often,) was very inſtant with them to performe their promiſe: Which if they would not doe, hee tolde them that hee would depart and proceede in his voyage. So that the Moſcouites (although as yet they knew not the minde of their king) yet fearing the departure in deede of our men who had ſuch wares and commodities as they greatly deſired, they at laſt reſolued to furniſh our people with all things neceſſarie, and to conduct them by land to the preſence of their king. And ſo Maſter Chanceler beganne his iourney, which was very long and moſt troubleſome, wherein hee had the vſe of certaine ſleds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are caried themſelues vpon ſleds, and all their carriages are in the ſame ſort, the people almoſt not knowing any other maner of carriage, the cauſe whereof is the exceeding hardneſſe of the ground congealed in the winter time by the force of the colde, which in thoſe places is very extreme and horrible, whereof hereafter we will ſay ſomething.

But nowe they hauing paſſed the greater part of their iourney, mette at laſt with the Sleddeman (of whom I ſpake before) ſent to the king ſecretly from the Iuſtices or gouernours, who by ſome ill happe had loſt his way, and had gone to the Sea ſide, which is neere to the Countrey of the Tartars, thinking there to haue found our ſhip. But hauing long erred and wandered out of his way, at the laſt in his direct returne, hee met (as hee was comming) our Captaine on the way. To whom hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courteſie and in the moſt louing maner that could be: wherein expreſſe commandement was giuen, that poſt horſes ſhould bee gotten for him and the reſt of his company without any money. Which thing was of all the Ruſſes in the reſt of their iourney ſo willingly done, that they began to quarrell, yea, and to fight alſo in ſtriuing and contending which of them ſhould put their poſt horſes to the ſledde: ſo that after much adoe and great paines taken in this long and wearie iourney, (for they had trauailed very neere fifteene hundred miles) Maſter Chanceler came at laſt to Moſco the chiefe citie of the kingdome, and the ſeate of the king: of which citie, and of the Emperour himſelfe, and of the principall cities of Moſcouie, wee will ſpeake immediatly more at large in this diſcourſe.

The Emperours courteous letters to M. Chanceler.

Of Moſcouie, which is alſo called Ruſsia.

Moſcouie, which hath the name alſo of Ruſſia the white, is a very large and ſpacious Countrey, euery way bounded with diuers nations. Towards the South and the Eaſt, it is compaſſed with Tartaria: the Northren ſide of it ſtretcheth to the Scytian Ocean: vpon the Weſt part border the Lappians, a rude and ſauage nation, liuing in woods, whoſe language is not knowen to any other people: next vnto theſe, more towards the South, is Swecia, then Finlandia, then Liuonia, and laſt of all Lituania. This Countrey of Moſcouie, hath alſo very many and great riuers in it, and is marſh ground in many places: and as for the riuers, the greateſt and moſt famous amongſt all the reſt, is that, which the Ruſſes in their owne tongue call Volga, but others know it by the name of Rha. Next vnto it in fame is Tanais, which they call Don, and the third Boriſthenes which at this day they call Neper. Two of theſe, to wit, Rha, and Boriſthenes yſſuing both out of one fountaine, runne very farre through the land: Rha receiuing many other pleaſant riuers into it, & running from the very head or ſpring of it towards the Eaſt, after many crooked turnings and windings, diſchargeth it ſelfe, and all the other waters and riuers that fall into it by diuers paſſages into the Caſpian Sea. Tanais ſpringing from a fountaine of great name in thoſe partes, and growing great neere to his head, ſpreds it ſelfe at length very largely, and makes a great lake: and then growing narrowe againe, doth ſo runne for certaine miles, vntill it fall into another lake, which they call Iuan: and therehence fetching a very crooked courſe, comes very neere to the riuer Volga: but diſdaining as it were the company of any other riuer, doth there turne it ſelfe againe from Volga, and runnes toward the South, and fals at laſt into the Lake of Mœotis. Boriſthenes, which comes from the ſame head that Rha doth, (as wee ſayde before) carieth both it ſelfe, and other waters that are neere vnto it, towards the South, not refuſing the mixture of other ſmall riuers: and running by many great and large Countreys fals at laſt into Pontus Euxinus. Beſides theſe riuers, are alſo in Moſcouie certaine lakes, and pooles, the lakes breede fiſh by the celeſtiall influence: and amongſt them all, the chiefeſt and moſt principall is called Bealozera, which is very famous by reaſon of a very ſtrong towre built in it, wherein the kings of Moſcouie reſerue and repoſe their treaſure in all time of warre and danger.

The mightie lake of Bealozera.

Touching the Riphean mountaines, whereupon the ſnow lieth continually, and where hence in times paſt it was thought that Tanais the riuer did ſpring, and that the reſt of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and inuented of olde, were there to be ſeene: our men which lately came from thence, neither ſawe them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remained there for the ſpace of three moneths, and had gotten in that time ſome intelligence of the language of Moſcouie. The whole Countrey is plaine and champion, and few hils in it: and towards the North it hath very large & ſpacious woods, wherein is great ſtore of Firre trees, a wood very neceſſarie, and fit for the building of houſes: there are alſo wilde beaſtes bred in thoſe woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Wolues, and another kinde of beaſt vnknowen to vs, but called by them Roſſomakka: and the nature of the ſame is very rare and wonderfull: for when it is great with yong, and ready to bring foorth, it ſeeketh out ſome narrow place betweene two ſtakes, and ſo going through them, preſſeth it ſelfe, and by that meanes is eaſed of her burden, which otherwiſe could not be done. They hunt their buffes for the moſt part a horſebacke, but their Beares a foot, with wooden forkes. The north parts of the Countrey are reported to be ſo cold, that the very ice or water which diſtilleth out of the moiſt wood which they lay vpon the fire is preſently congealed and frozen: the diuerſitie growing ſuddenly to be ſo great, that in one and the ſelfe ſame firebrand, a man ſhall ſee both fire and ice. When the winter doth once begin there it doth ſtill more & more increaſe by a perpetuitie of cold: neither doth that colde ſlake, vntill the force of the Sunne beames doth diſſolue the cold, and make glad the earth, returning to it againe. Our mariners which we left in the ſhip in the meane time to keepe it, in their going vp onely from their cabbins to the hatches, had their breath oftentimes ſo ſuddenly taken away, that they eftſoones fell downe as men very neere dead, ſo great is the ſharpeneſſe of that colde climate: but as for the South parts of the Countrey, they are ſomewhat more temperate.

The ſharpnes of the winter in Moſcouie.

Of Moſco the chiefe Citie of the kingdome, and of the Emperour thereof.

IT remaineth that a larger diſcourſe be made of Moſco, the principall Citie of that Countrey, and of the Prince alſo, as before we haue promiſed. The Empire and gouernment of the king is very large, and his wealth at this time exceeding great. And becauſe the citie of Moſco is the chiefeſt of al the reſt, it ſeemeth of it ſelfe to challenge the firſt place in this diſcourſe. Our men ſay, that in bigneſſe it is as great as the Citie of London, with the ſuburbes thereof. There are many and great buildings in it, but for beautie and faireneſſe, nothing comparable to ours. There are many Townes and Villages alſo, but built out of order, and with no handſomneſſe: their ſtreetes and wayes are not paued with ſtone as ours are: the walles of their houſes are of wood: the roofes for the moſt part are couered with ſhingle boords. There is hard by the Citie a very faire Caſtle, ſtrong, and furniſhed with artillerie, whereunto the Citie is ioyned directly towards the North, with a bricke wall: the walles alſo of the Caſtle are built with bricke, and are in breadth or thickeneſſe eighteene foote. This Caſtle hath on the one ſide a drie ditch, on the other ſide the riuer Moſcua, whereby it is made almoſt inexpugnable. The ſame Moſcua trending towards the Eaſt doth admit into it the companie of the riuer Occa.

In the Caſtle aforeſaide, there are in number nine Churches, or Chappels, not altogether vnhanſome, which are vſed and kept by certaine religious men, ouer whom there is after a ſort, a Patriarke, or Gouernour, and with him other reuerend Fathers, all which for the greater part, dwell within the Caſtle. As for the kings Court and Palace, it is not of the neateſt, onely in forme it is foure ſquare, and of lowe building, much ſurpaſſed and excelled by the beautie and elegancie of the houſes of the kings of England. The windowes are very narrowly built, and ſome of them by glaſſe, ſome other by lettiſſes admit the light: and whereas the Palaces of our Princes are decked, and adorned with hangings of cloth of gold, there is none ſuch there: they build and ioyne to all their wals benches, and that not onely in the Court of the Emperour, but in all priuate mens houſes.

Nowe after that they had remained about twelue dayes in the Citie, there was then a Meſſenger ſent vnto them, to bring them to the Kings houſe: and they being after a ſort wearied with their long ſtay, were very ready, and willing ſo to doe: and being entred within the gates of the Court, there ſate a very honorable companie of Courtiers, to the number of one hundred, all apparelled in cloth of golde, downe to their ankles: and there-hence being conducted into the chamber of preſence, our men beganne to wonder at the Maieſtie of the Emperour: his ſeate was aloft, in a very royall throne, hauing on his head a Diademe, or Crowne of golde, apparelled with a robe all of Goldſmiths worke, and in his hand hee held a Scepter garniſhed, and beſet with precious ſtones: and beſides all other notes and apparances of honour, there was a Maieſtie in his countenance proportionable with the excellencie of his eſtate: on the one ſide of him ſtood his chiefe Secretarie, on the other ſide, the great Commander of ſilence, both of them arayed alſo in cloth of gold: and then there ſate the Counſel of one hundred and fiftie in number, all in like ſort arayed, and of great ſtate. This ſo honorable an aſſemblie, ſo great a Maieſtie of the Emperour, and of the place might very well haue amazed our men, and haue daſht them out of countenance: but notwithſtanding Maſter Chanceler being therewithall nothing diſmaied ſaluted, and did his duetie to the Emperour, after the maner of England, and withall, deliuered vnto him the letters of our king, Edward the ſixt. The Emperour hauing taken, & read the letters, began a litle to queſtion with them, and to aſke them of the welfare of our king: whereunto our men anſwered him directly, & in few words: hereupon our men preſented ſome thing to the Emperour, by the chiefe Secretary, which at the deliuery of it, put of his hat, being before all the time couered: and ſo the Emperour hauing inuited them to dinner, diſmiſſed them from his preſence: and going into the chamber of him that was Maſter of the Requeſts to the Emperour, & hauing ſtayed there the ſpace of two howres, at the laſt, the Meſſenger commeth, and calleth them to dinner: they goe, and being conducted into the golden Court, (for ſo they call it, although not very faire) they finde the Emperour ſitting vpon an high and ſtately ſeate, apparelled with a robe of ſiluer, and with another Diademe on his head: our men being placed ouer againſt him, ſit downe: in the middes of the roome ſtoode a mightie Cupboord vpon a ſquare foote, whereupon ſtoode alſo a round boord, in manner of a Diamond, broade beneath, and towardes the toppe narrowe, and euery ſteppe roſe vp more narrowe then another. Vpon this Cupboorde was placed the Emperours plate, which was ſo much, that the very Cupboord it ſelfe was ſcant able to ſuſtaine the waight of it: the better part of all the veſſels, and goblets, was made of very fine gold: and amongſt the reſt, there were foure pots of very large bigneſſe, which did adorne the reſt of the plate in great meaſure: for they were ſo high, that they thought them at the leaſt fiue foote long. There were alſo vpon this Cupbord certaine ſiluer caſkes, not much differing from the quantitie of our Fyrkins, wherein was reſerued the Emperours drinke: on each ſide of the Hall ſtood foure Tables, each of them layde and couered with very cleane table clothes, whereunto the company aſcended by three ſteps or degrees: all which were filled with the aſſemblie preſent: the gheſts were all apparelled with linnen without, and with rich ſkinnes within, and ſo did notably ſet out this royall feaſt. The Emperour, when hee takes any bread or knife in his hand, doth firſt of all croſſe himſelfe vpon his forehead: they that are in ſpeciall fauour with the Emperour ſit vpon the ſame bench with him, but ſomewhat farre from him: and before the comming in of the meate, the Emperour himſelfe, according to an ancient cuſtome of the kings of Moſcouy, doth firſt beſtow a piece of bread vpon euery one of his gheſts, with a loud pronunciation of his title, and honour, in this manner: The great Duke of Moſcouie, and chiefe Emperour of Ruſſia, Iohn Baſiliwich (& then the officer nameth the gheſt) doth giue thee bread. Whereupon al the gheſts riſe vp, and by & by ſit downe againe. This done, the Gentleman Vſher of the Hall comes in, with a notable company of ſeruants, carying the diſhes, and hauing done his reuerence to the Emperour, puts a yong Swanne in a golden platter vpon the table, and immediatly takes it thence againe, deliuering it to the Caruer, and ſeuen other of his fellowes, to be cut vp: which being perfourmed, the meate is then diſtributed to the gheſts, with the like pompe, and ceremonies. In the meane time, the Gentleman Vſher receiues his bread, and taſteth to the Emperour, and afterward, hauing done his reuerence, he departeth. Touching the reſt of the diſhes, becauſe they were brought in out of order, our men can report no certaintie: but this is true, that all the furniture of diſhes, and drinking veſſels, which were then for the vſe of a hundred gheſts, was all of pure golde, and the tables were ſo laden with veſſels of gold, that there was no roome for ſome to ſtand vpon them.

We may not forget, that there were 140. ſeruitors arayed in cloth of gold, that in the dinner time, changed thriſe their habit and apparell, which ſeruitors are in like ſort ſerued with bread from the Emperour, as the reſt of the gheſts. Laſt of all, dinner being ended, and candles brought in, (for by this time night was come) the Emperour calleth all his gheſts and Noble men by their names, in ſuch ſort, that it ſeemes miraculous, that a Prince, otherwiſe occupied in great matters of eſtate, ſhould ſo well remember ſo many and ſundry particular names. The Ruſſes tolde our men, that the reaſon thereof, as alſo of the beſtowing of bread in that maner, was to the ende that the Emperour might keepe the knowledge of his owne houſhold: and withal, that ſuch as are vnder his diſpleaſure, might by this meanes be knowen.

Of the diſcipline of warre among the Ruſſes.

Whenſoeuer the iniures of their neighbours doe call the King foorth to battell, hee neuer armeth a leſſe number againſt the enemie, then 300. thouſand ſoldiers, 100. thouſand whereof hee carieth out into the field with him, and leaueth the reſt in gariſon in ſome fit places, for the better ſafetie of his Empire. He preſſeth no huſbandman, nor Marchant: for the Countrey is ſo populous, that theſe being left at home, the youth of the Realme is ſufficient for all his wars. As many as goe out to warfare doe prouide all things of their owne coſt: they fight not on foote, but altogether on horſebacke: their armour is a coate of maile, & a helmet: the coate of maile without is gilded, or els adorned with ſilke, although it pertaine to a commom ſoldier: they haue a great pride in ſhewing their wealth: they vſe bowes, and arrowes, as the Turks do: they cary lances alſo into the field. They ride with a ſhort ſtirrop, after the maner of the Turks: They are a kinde of people moſt ſparing in diet, and moſt patient in extremitie of cold, aboue all others. For when the ground is couered with ſnowe, and is growen terrible and hard with the froſt, this Ruſſe hangs vp his mantle, or ſouldiers coate, againſt that part from whence the winde and Snowe driues, and ſo making a little fire, lieth downe with his backe towards the weather: this mantle of his ſerues him for his bed, wall, houſe and all: his drinke is colde water of the riuer, mingled with oatemeale, and this is all his good cheere, and he thinketh himſelfe well, and daintily fedde therewith, and ſo ſitteth downe by his fire, and vpon the hard ground, roſteth as it were his wearie ſides thus daintily ſtuffed: the hard ground is his feather bed, & ſome blocke or ſtone his pillow: and as for his horſe, he is as it were a chamberfellow with his maſter, faring both alike. How iuſtly may this barbarous, and rude Ruſſe condemne the daintineſſe and niceneſſe of our Captaines, who liuing in a ſoile & aire much more temeprate, yet commonly vſe furred boots, and clokes? But thus much of the furniture of their common ſouldiers. But thoſe that are of higher degrees come into the field a little better prouided. As for the furniture of the Emperour himſelfe, it is then aboue all other times, moſt notable. The couerings of his tent for the moſt part, are all of gold, adorned with ſtones of great price, and with the curious workemanſhip of plumaſiers. As often as they are to ſkirmiſh with the enemie, they goe forth without any order at all: they make no wings, nor militarie diuiſions of their men, as we doe, but lying for the moſt part, in ambuſh, doe ſuddenly ſet vpon the enemie. Their horſes can well abſtaine two whole daies from any meate. They feede vpon the barkes of trees, and the moſt tender branches, in all the time of warre. And this ſcant and miſerable maner of liuing, both the horſe and his Maſter can well endure, ſometimes for the ſpace of two moneths, luſtie, and in good ſtate of body. If any man behaue himſelfe valiantly in the fielde, to the contentation of the Emperour, he beſtoweth vpon him in recompenſe of his ſeruice, ſome farme, or ſo much ground as he and his may liue vpon, which notwithſtanding after his death, returneth againe to the Emperour, if he die without a male iſſue. For although his daughters be neuer ſo many, yet no part of that inheritance comes to them, except peraduenture the Emperour of his goodneſſe, giue ſome portion of the land amongſt them, to beſtowe them withall. As for the man, whoſoeuer he be, that is in this ſort rewarded by the Emperours liberalitie, hee is bound in a great ſumme, to maintaine ſo many ſouldiers for the warre, when need ſhall require, as that land, in the opinion of the Emperour, is able to maintaine. And all thoſe, to whom any land fals by inheritance, are in no better condition: for if they die without any male iſſue, all their lands fall into the hands of the Emperour. And moreouer, if there be any rich man amongſt them, who in his owne perſon is vnfit for the warres, and yet hath ſuch wealth, that thereby many Noble men and warriours might be maintained, if any of the Courtiers preſent his name to the Emperour, the vnhappy man is by and by ſent for, and in that inſtant, depriued of all his riches, which with great paines and trauell all his life time he had gotten together: except perhaps ſome ſmall portion thereof be left him, to maintaine his wife, children and familie. But all this is done of all the people ſo willingly at the Emperours commandement, that a man would thinke, they rather make reſtitution of other mens goods, then giue that which is their owne to other men. Nowe the Emperour hauing taken theſe goods into his hands, beſtoweth them among his Courtiers, according to their deſerts: and the oftener that a man is ſent to the warres, the more fauour he thinketh is borne to him by the Emperour, although he goe vpon his owne charge, as I ſaid before. So great is the obedience of all men generally to their Prince.

Of the Ambaſſadors of the Emperour of Moſcouie.

The Moſcouite, with no leſſe pompe, and magnificence, then that which we haue ſpoken of, ſends his Ambaſſadors to forren Princes, in the affaires of eſtate. For while our men were abiding in the Citie of Moſco, there were two Ambaſſadors ſent to the King of Poland, accompanied with 500. notable horſes, and the greater part of the men were arayed in cloth of gold, and of ſilke, and the worſt apparell was of garments of blewe colour, to ſpeake nothing of the trappings of the horſes, which were adorned with gold and ſiluer, and very curiouſly embrodered: they had alſo with them one hundred white and faire ſpare horſes, to vſe them at ſuch times, as any wearineſſe came vpon them. But now the time requireth me to ſpeake briefly of other Cities of the Moſcouites, and of the wares and commodities that the Countrey yeeldeth.

Nouogorode.

Next vnto Moſco, the Citie of Nouogorode is reputed the chiefeſt of Ruſſia: for although it be in Maieſtie inferior to it, yet in greatneſſe it goeth beyond it. It is the cheifeſt and greateſt Marte Towne of all Moſcouie: and albeit the Emperours ſeate is not there, but at Moſco, yet the commodiouſneſſe of the riuer, falling into that gulfe, which is called Sinus Finnicus, whereby it is well frequented by Marchants, makes it more famous then Moſco it ſelfe. This towne excels all the reſt in the commodities of flaxe and hempe: it yeeldes alſo hides, honie, and waxe. The Flemings there ſometimes had a houſe of Marchandize, but by reaſon that they vſed the like ill dealing there, which they did with vs, they loſt their priuileges, a reſtitution whereof they earneſtly ſued for at the time that our men were there. But thoſe Flemings hearing of the arriuall of our men in thoſe parts, wrote their letters to the Emperour againſt them, accuſing them for pirats and rouers, wiſhing him to detaine, and impriſon them. Which things when they were knowen of our men, they conceiued feare, that they ſhould neuer haue returned home. But the Emperour beleeuing rather the Kings letters, which our men brought, then the lying and falſe ſuggeſtions of the Flemings, vſed no ill intreatie towards them.

The knauery of the Flemings againſt our men.

Yeraſlaue.

Yeraſlaue alſo is a Towne of ſome good fame, for the commodities of hides, tallow, and corne, which it yeeldes in great abundance. Cakes of waxe are there alſo to bee ſolde, although other places haue greater ſtore: this Yeraſlaue is diſtant from Moſco, about two hundred miles: and betwixt them are many populous villages. Their fields yeeld ſuch ſtore of corne, that in conuaying it towards Moſco, ſometimes in a forenoone, a man ſhall ſee ſeuen hundred or eight hundred ſleds, going and comming, laden with corne and ſalt fiſh: the people come a thouſand miles to Moſco, to buy that corne, and then cary it away vpon ſleds: and theſe are thoſe people that dwell in the North parts, where the colde is ſo terrible, that no corne doth growe there, or if it ſpring vp, it neuer comes to ripeneſſe. The commodities that they bring with them, are ſaltfiſh, ſkinnes, and hides.

Vologda.

Vologda being from Moſco, 550. miles yeeldes the commodities of Hempe and Flaxe alſo: although the greateſt ſtore of Flaxe is ſolde at Nouogrode.

Pleſco.

The Towne of Pleſco, is frequented of Marchants for the good ſtore of Honie and Waxe that it yeeldeth.

Colmagro.

The North parts of Ruſſia yeelde very rare and precious ſkinnes: and amongſt the reſt, thoſe principally, which we call Sables, worne about the neckes of our Noble women and Ladies: it hath alſo Martins ſkinnes, white, blacke, and red Foxe ſkinnes, ſkinnes of Hares, and Ermyns, and others, which they call and terme barbarouſly, as Beuers, Minxes, and Minuers. The ſea adioyning, breedes a certaine beaſt, which they call the Mors, which ſeeketh his foode vpon the rockes, climing vp with the helpe of his teeth. The Ruſſes vſe to take them, for the great vertue that is in their teeth, whereof they make as great accompt, as we doe of the Elephants tooth. Theſe commodities they cary vpon Deeres backes to the towne of Lampas: and from thence to Colmagro, and there in the winter time, are kept great Faires for the ſale of them. This Citie of Colmagro, ſerues all the Countrey about it with ſalt, and ſalt fiſh. The Ruſſians alſo of the North parts, ſend thither oyle, which they call traine, which they make in a riuer called ‖ Vna, although it be alſo made elſe-where: and here they vſe to boile the water of the ſea, whereof they make very great ſtore of ſalt.

‖ Or, Dwina.

Of controuerſies in Lawe, and how they are ended.

Hauing hitherto ſpoken ſo much of the chiefeſt Cities of Ruſſia, as the matter required: it remaineth that we ſpeake ſomewhat of the lawes, that the Moſcouits doe vſe, as farre forth as the ſame are come to our knowledge. If any controuerſie ariſe among them, they firſt make their Landlords Iudges in the matter, and if they cannot end it, then they preferre it to the Magiſtrate. The plaintif craueth of the ſaid Magiſtrate, that he may haue leaue to enter law againſt his aduerſarie: and hauing obtained it, the officer fetcheth the defendant, and beateth him on the legges, till he bring forth a ſuretie for him: but if he be not of ſuch credite, as to procure a ſurety, then are his hands by an officer tied to his necke, and he is beaten all the way, till he come before the Iudge. The Iudge then aſketh him (as for example in the matter of debt) whether he oweth any thing to the plaintife. If he denies it, then ſaith the Iudge, How canſt thou deny it? the defendant anſwereth, By an othe: thereupon the officer is commaunded to ceaſe from beating of him, vntill the matter be further tried. They haue no Lawyers, but euery man is his owne Aduocate, and both the complaint of the accuſer, and the anſwere of the defendant, are in maner of petition deliuered to the Emperour, intreating iuſtice at his hands. The Emperour himſelfe heareth euery great controuerſie, and vpon the hearing of it, giueth iudgement, and that with great equitie, which I take to be a thing worthy of ſpeciall commendation, in the Maieſtie of a Prince. But although he doe this with a good purpoſe of mind, yet the corrupt Magiſtrates do wonderfully peruert the ſame: but if the Emperour take them in any fault, he doeth puniſh them moſt ſeuerely. Now at the laſt, when ech partie hath defended his cauſe with his beſt reaſons, the Iudge demandeth of the accuſer, whether he hath any more to ſay for himſelfe: he anſwereth, that he will trie the matter in fight by his Champion, or elſe intreateth, that in fight betwixt themſelues the matter may be ended: which being graunted, they both fight it out: or if both of them, or either of them ſeeme vnfit for that kinde of triall, then they haue publike Champions to be hired, which liue by ending of quarrels. Theſe Champions are armed with yron axes, and ſpeares, and fight on foote, and he whoſe Champion is ouercome, is by and by taken, and impriſoned, and terribly handled, vntill he agree with his aduerſarie. But if either of them be of any good calling, and degree, and doe challenge one another to fight, the Iudge granteth it: in which caſe they may not vſe publike Champions. And he that is of any good birth, doth contemne the other, if he be baſely borne, and wil not fight with him. If a poore man happen to grow in debt, his Creditor takes him, & maketh him pay the debt, in working either to himſelfe, or to ſome other man, whoſe wages he taketh vp. And there are ſome among them, that vſe willingly to make themſelues, their wiues, and children, bondſlaues vnto rich men, to haue a little money at the firſt into their hands, and ſo for euer after content themſelues with meate and drinke: ſo little accompt doe they make of libertie.

Of puniſhments vpon theeues.

If any man be taken vpon committing of theft, he is impriſoned, and often beaten, but not hanged for the firſt offence, as the manner is with vs: and this they call the lawe of mercie. He that offendeth the ſecond time hath his noſe cut off, and is burnt in the forehead with a hot yron. The third time, he is hanged. There are many cutpurſes among them, and if the rigour of the Prince did not cut them off, they could not be auoyded.

Of their religion.

They maintaine the opinions of the Greeke Church: they ſuffer no grauen images of ſaints in their Churches, but their pictures painted in tables they haue in great abundance, which they do adore and offer vnto, and burne waxe candles before them, and caſt holy water vpon them, without other honour. They ſay that our images which are ſet vp in Churches, and carued, haue no diuinitie in them. In their priuate houſes they haue images for their houſhold ſaints, and for the moſt part, they are put in the darkeſt place of the houſe: hee that comes into his neighbours houſe doth firſt ſalute his ſaints, although he ſee them not. If any forme or ſtoole ſtand in his way, hee oftentimes beateth his browe vpon the ſame, and often ducking downe with his head, and body, worſhippeth the chiefe Image. The habite, and attire of the Prieſts, and of the Lay men, doth nothing at all differ: as for marriage, it is forbidden to no man: onely this is receiued and held amongſt them for a rule, and cuſtome, that if a Prieſts wife doe die, he may not marry againe, nor take a ſecond wife: and therefore they of ſecular Prieſts, as they call them, are made Monkes, to whom then chaſtitie for euer is commanded. Their diuine ſeruice is all done and ſaid in their owne language, that euery man may vnderſtand it: they receiue the Lords Supper with leauened bread, and after the conſecration, they carry it about the Church in a ſaucer, and prohibite no man from receiuing and taking of it, that is willing ſo to doe. They vſe both the Olde and the Newe Teſtament, and read both in their owne language, but ſo confuſedly, that they themſelues that doe reade, vnderſtand not what themſelues doe ſay: and while any part of either Teſtament is read, there is libertie giuen by cuſtome to prattle, talke, and make a noiſe: but in the time of the reſt of the ſeruice they vſe very great ſilence and reuerence, and behaue themſelues very modeſtly, and in good ſort. As touching the Lords praier, the tenth man amongſt them knowes it not: and for the articles of our faith, and the ten commandements, no man, or at the leaſt very fewe of them doe either know them or can ſay them: their opinion is, that ſuch ſecrete and holy things as they are ſhould not raſhly and imprudently be communicated with the common people. They holde for a Maxime amongſt them, that the olde Lawe, and the commandements alſo are aboliſhed by the death and blood of Chriſt: all ſtudies and letters of humanitie they vtterly refuſe: concerning the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrew tongues, they are altogether ignorant in them.

Euery yeere they celebrate foure ſeuerall faſtes, which they call according to the names of the Saints: the firſt beginnes with them, at the time that our Lent beginnes. The ſecond is called amongſt them the faſt of S.Peter. The third is taken from the day of the Virgin Marie. And the fourth and laſt begins vpon S.Philips day. But as we begin our Lent vpon Wedneſday, ſo they begin theirs vpon the Sunday. Vpon the Saturday they eate fleſh: whenſoeuer any of thoſe faſting feaſtes doe drawe neere, looke what weeke doth immediatly goe before them, the ſame weeke they liue altogether vpon white meates, and in their common language they call thoſe weekes, the faſt of Butter.

In the time of their faſts, the neighbours euery where goe from one to another, and viſite one another, and kiſſe one another with kiſſes of peace, in token of their mutuall loue and Chriſtian concord: and then alſo they doe more often then at any other time goe to the holy Communion. When ſeuen dayes are paſt, from the beginning of the faſt, then they doe often either goe to their Churches, or keepe themſelues at home, and vſe often prayer: and for that ſeuennight they eate nothing but hearbes: but after that ſeuennights faſt is once paſt, then they returne to their old intemperancie of drinking, for they are notable toſpots. As for the keeping of their faſting dayes, they doe it very ſtreightly, neither doe they eate any thing beſides hearbes, and ſalt fiſh, as long as thoſe faſting dayes doe endure: but vpon euery Wedneſday and Friday, in euery weeke throughout the yeere, they faſt.

There are very many Monaſteries of the order of S. Benedict, amongſt them, to which many great liuings, for their maintenance, doe belong: for the Friers and the Monkes doe at the leaſt poſſeſſe the third part of the liuings, throughout the whole Moſcouite Empire. To thoſe Monkes that are of this order, there is amongſt them a perpetuall prohibition, that they may eate no fleſh: and therefore their meate is onely ſalt fiſh, milke, and butter: neither is it permitted them by the lawes, and cuſtomes of their religion, to eate any freſh fiſh at all: and at thoſe foure faſting times, whereof we ſpake before, they eate no fiſh at all: onely they liue with hearbes, and cucumbers, which they doe continually for that purpoſe cauſe and take order to grow and ſpring, for their vſe and diet.

As for their drinke, it is very weake, and ſmall. For the diſcharge of their office, they do euery day ſay ſeruice, and that early in the mornings before day: and they doe in ſuch ſort, and with ſuch obſeruation begin their ſeruice, that they will be ſure to make an ende of it, before day: and about nine of the clocke in the morning they celebrate the Communion. When they haue ſo done, they goe to dinner, and after dinner they goe againe to ſeruice, and the like alſo after ſupper: and in the meane time while they are at dinner there is ſome expoſition or interpretation of the Goſpel vſed.

Note.

Whenſoeuer any Abbot of any monaſterie dieth, the Emperour taketh all his houſholde ſtuffe, beaſtes, flockes of ſheepe, golde, ſiluer, and all that he hath: or els hee that is to ſucceede him in his place and dignitie doth redeeme all thoſe things, and buyeth them of the Emperour for money.

Their churches are built of timber, and the towers of their churches for the moſt part are couered with ſhingle boordes. At the doores of their churches, they vſually build ſome entrance or porch as we doe, and in their churchyardes they erect a certaine houſe of wood, wherein they ſet vp their bels, wherein ſometimes they haue but one, in ſome two, and in ſome alſo three.

There is one vſe and cuſtome amongſt them, which is ſtrange and rare, but yet it is very ridiculous, and that is this: when any man dyeth amongſt them, they take the dead body and put it in a coffine or cheſt, and in the hand of the corps they put a litle ſcroule, & in the ſame there are theſe wordes written, that the ſame man died a Ruſſe of Ruſſes, hauing receiued the faith, and died in the ſame. This writing or letter they ſay they ſend to S. Peter, who receiuing it (as they affirme) reades it, and by and by admits him into heauen, and that his glory and place is higher and greater then the glory of the Chriſtians of the Latine church, reputing themſelues to be followers of a more ſincere faith and religion then they: they hold opinion that we are but halfe Chriſtians, and themſelues onely to be the true and perfect church: theſe are the fooliſh and childiſh dotages of ſuch ignorant Babarians.

Of the Moſcouites that are Idolaters, dwelling neere to Tartaria.

Aurea vetula, or Zelotibaba,

There is a certaine part of Moſcouie bordering vpon the countreys of the Tartars, wherein thoſe Moſcouites that dwell are very great idolaters: they haue one famous idole amongſt them, which they call the Golden old wife: & they haue a cuſtome that whenſoeuer any plague or any calamitie doth afflict the countrey, as hunger, warre, or ſuch like, then they goe to conſult with their idol, which they do after this maner: they fall down proſtrate before the idol, & pray vnto it, & put in the preſence of the ſame, a cymbal: & about the ſame certaine perſons ſtand, which are choſen amongſt them by lot: vpon their cymball they place a ſiluer doue, and ſound the cymball, and to whomſoeuer of thoſe lotted perſons that doue goeth, he is taken, and by and by ſlaine: and immediately, I know not by what illuſions of the deuill, or idols, he is againe reſtored to life, & then doth reueale and deliuer the cauſes of the preſent calamitie. And by this meanes knowing how to pacifie the idole, they are deliuered from the imminent danger.

Of the forme of their priuate houſes, and of the apparell of the people.

The common houſes of the countrey are euery where built of beames of Firre tree: the lower beames doe ſo receiue the round holowneſſe of the vppermoſt, that by the meanes of the building thereupon, they reſiſt, and expell all winds that blow, and where the timber is ioined together, there they ſtop the chinks with moſſe. The forme & faſhion of their houſes in al places is foure ſquare, with ſtreit and narrow windowes, whereby with a tranſparent caſement made or couered with ſkinne like to parchment, they receiue the light. The roofes of their houſes are made of boords couered without with yͤ barke of trees: within their houſes they haue benches or griezes hard by their wals, which commonly they ſleepe vpon, for the common people knowe not the vſe of beds: they haue ſtooues wherein in the morning they make a fire, and the ſame fire doth either moderately warme, or make very hote the whole houſe.

The apparell of the people for the moſt part is made of wooll, their caps are picked like vnto a rike or diamond, broad beneath, and ſharpe vpward. In the maner of making whereof, there is a ſigne and repreſentation of nobilitie: for the loftier or higher their caps are, the greater is their birth ſuppoſed to be, and the greater reuerence is giuen them by the common people.

The Concluſion to Queene Marie.

These are the things moſt excellent Queene, which your Subiects newly returned from Ruſſia haue brought home concerning the ſtate of that countrey: wherfore if your maieſtie ſhall be fauourable, and grant a continuance of the trauell, there is no doubt but that the honour and renowme of your name will be ſpred amongſt thoſe nations, whereunto three onely noble perſonages from the verie creation haue had acceſſe, to whom no man hath bene comparable.

The copie of the Duke of Moſcouie and Emperour of Ruſsia his letters, ſent to King Edward the ſixt, by the hands of Richard Chancelour.

The Almighty power of God, and the incomprehenſible holy Trinitie, rightfull Chriſtian beliefe, &c. We great Duke Iuan Vaſiliuich, by the grace of God great lord and Emperor of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodemer, Moſco, and Nouograd, King of Kazan, King of Aſtracan, lord of Pleſko, and great duke of Smolenſko, of Twerria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, lord and great duke of Nouograd in the Low countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskoy, Roſtoue, Yaruſlaueley, Bealozera, Lieſland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenſa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North parts, and lord of many other countries, greeting. Before all, right great and worthy of honour Edward King of England &c. according to our moſt hearty and good zeale, with good intent and friendly deſire, & according to our holy Chriſtian faith, & great gouernance, & being in the light of great vnderſtãding, our anſwere by this our honourable writing vnto your kingly gouernance, at the requeſt of your faithfull ſeruant Richard Chancelour, with his company, as they ſhall let you wiſely know, is this. In the ſtrength of the twentieth yeere of our gouernance, be it knowen, that at our ſea coaſtes arriued a ſhippe, with one Richard, and his companie, and ſayd, that hee was deſirous to come into our dominions, and according to his requeſt, hath ſeene our Maieſtie, and ‖ our eyes: and hath declared vnto vs your Maieſties deſire, as that we ſhould grant vnto your ſubiects, to goe and come, and in our dominions, and among our ſubiects, to frequent free Marts, with all ſortes of marchandizes, and vpon the ſame to haue wares for their returne. And they haue alſo deliuered vs your letters, which declare the ſame requeſt. And hereupon we haue giuen order, that whereſoeuer your faithful ſeruant Hugh Willoughbie land or touch in our dominions, to be wel entertained, who as yet is not arriued, as your ſeruant Richard can declare.

Iuan Vaſiliuich, that is to ſay, Iohn the ſonne of Baſilius.

‖That is, come into our preſence.

And we with Chriſtian beliefe and faithfulnes, and according to your honourable requeſt, and my honourable commandement will not leaue it vndone: and are furthermore willing that you ſend vnto vs your ſhips and veſſels, when and as often as they may haue paſſage, with good aſſurance on our part to ſee them harmeleſſe. And if you ſend one of your maieſties counſel to treate with vs whereby your countrey marchants may with all kinds of wares, and where they will make their market in our dominions, they ſhall haue their free Marte with all free liberties through my whole dominions with all kinde of wares to come and goe at their pleaſure, without any let, damage or impediment, according to this our letter, our word and our ſeale which we haue commaunded to be vnder ſealed. Written in our dominion, in our citie and our palace in the caſtle of Moſco, in the yeare 7060, the ſecond moneth of February.

This letter was written in the Moſcouian tongue, in letters much like to the Greeke letters, very faire written in paper, with a broad ſeale hanging at the ſame, ſealed in paper vpon waxe. This ſeale was much like ẏ broad ſeale of England, hauing on the one ſide the image of a man on horſeback in complete harneſſe fighting with a dragon. Under this letter was another paper written in the Dutch tongue, which was the interpretation of the other written in the Moſcouian letters. These letters were ſent the next yere after the date of king Edwards letters, 1554.

The coines, weights and meaſures vſed in Ruſſia, written by Iohn Haſſe, in the yere, 1554.

Foraſmuch as it is moſt neceſſary for al marchants which ſeeke to haue traffique in any ſtrange regions, firſt to acquaint thẽſelues with the coines of thoſe lands with which they do intend to ioyne in traffique, and how they are called from the valuation of the higheſt piece to the loweſt, and in what ſort they make their paiments, as alſo what their common weighes and meaſures be: for theſe cauſes I haue thought good to write ſome thing thereof according to mine owne knowledge and experience, to the end that the marchants of that new aduenture may the better vnderſtand how the wealth of that new frequented trade will ariſe.

No coines of gold in Ruſſia, but all of ſiluer

Firſt, it is to be noted that the Emperour of Ruſſia hath no other coines then ſiluer in all his land, which goeth for paiment amongſt merchants, yet notwithſtanding there is a coine of copper, which ſerueth for the reliefe of the poore in Moſco, & no where els, and that is but only for quaſſe, water and fruit, as nuts, apples, and ſuch other like. The name of which money is called Pole or Poles, of which Poles there goe to the leaſt of the ſiluer coines, 18. But I will not ſtand vpon this, becauſe it is no currant money among merchants.

Of ſiluer coines there be three ſortes of pieces: the leaſt is a Poledenga, the ſecond a Denga, the third, Nowgrote, which is as much to ſay in Engliſh as halfepenie, penie, and twopence, and for other valued money then this, there is none: there are oftentimes there coines of gold, but they come out of forrein countreys, whereof there is no ordinarie valuation, but they paſſe according to the agreement of merchants.

Their order in ſumming of money is this: as we ſay in England, halfpenie, penie, ſhilling and pound, ſo ſay they Poledenga, Denga, Altine and Rubble: There goeth two Poledengas to a Denga, ſix Dengaes to an Altine, and 23 Altines, and two Dengaes to a Rubble.

The weights in Ruſſia.

Concerning the weights of Ruſſia they are theſe: There are two ſorts of pounds in vſe amõgſt them, the one great, yͤ other ſmall: the great pound is iuſt two ſmall pounds: they call the great weight by the name of Beaſemar, and the ſmal they call the Skalla weight: with this ſmal weight they weigh their ſiluer coines, of the which the Emperor hath commanded to put to euery ſmall pound three Rubbles of ſiluer, and with the ſame weight they weigh all Grocerie wares, and almoſt al other wares which come into the land, except thoſe which they weigh by the Pode, as hops ſalt, iron, lead, tinne & batrie with diuers others, notwithſtanding they vſe to weigh batrie more often by the ſmall weight then by the great.

Whenſoeuer you find the prices of your wares rated by the Pode, conſider that to be the great weight, and the pound to be the ſmall. Alſo they diuide the ſmall pound into 48 parts, and they call the eight and fortieth part a Slotnike, by the which Slotnike the retailers ſell their wares out of their ſhops, as Goldſmiths, Grocers, Silkeſellers and ſuch other like as we doe vſe to retaile by the ounce: and as for their great weight which they cal the Beaſemar, they ſel by pode, or ſhippond. The pode doth containe of the great weight, 40 pounds, and of the ſmal 80: there goe 10, podes to a ſhippond.

Yet you muſt conſider that their great weight is not full with ours: for I take not their great pound to be full 13 ounces, but aboue 12 I thinke it be. But for your iuſt proofe, weigh 6 Rubbles of Ruſſia money with our pound weight, and then ſhal you ſee what it lacketh: for 6 Rubbles of Ruſſia is by the Emperors ſtanderd, the great pound: ſo that I thinke it the next way to know the iuſt waight, as well of the great pound as of the ſmall.

The weight of Wardhouſe.

There is another weight needfull to be knowen, which is the weight of Wardhouſe, for ſo much as they weigh all their drie fiſh by weight, which weight is the Beaſemar, as they of Ruſſia doe vſe, notwithſtanding there is another ſorte in it: the names of thoſe weights are theſe: the marke pound, the great pound, the weie, and the ſhippond. The marke pound is to be vnderſtood as our pound, and their great pound is 24 of their marke pound: the weie is 3 great pound, and 8 weie is a ſhippound.

The Ruſſia meaſures.

Now concerning their meaſures. As they haue two ſortes of weighes, ſo they haue alſo two ſortes of meaſures: wherewith they meaſure cloth both linnen and wollen: they cal the one an Areſhine, and the other a Locut: the Areſhine I take to bee as much as the Flanders ell, and their Locut halfe an Engliſh yard: with their Areſhine they may mete all ſuch ſorts of clothes as come into the land, and with the Locut all ſuch cloth both linnen and wollen, as they make themſelues. And whereas we vſe to giue yard and inch, or yard and handfull, they do giue nothing but bare meaſure.

¶ They haue alſo a meaſure wherewith they doe mete their corne, which they cal a Setforth, and the halfe of that an Oſmine: this Setforth I take take to bee three buſhels of London meaſure. And as for their drinke meaſure, they call it a Spanne, which is much like a bucket, and of that I neuer ſaw any true rate, but that ſome was greater then other ſome. And as for the meaſures of Wardhouſe wherewith they mete their cloth, there is no difference betweẽ that and the meaſure of Danske, which is halfe an Engliſh ell.

The meaſure of Wardhouſe in cloth, is the meaſure of Danske.

Cõcerning the tolles & cuſtoms of Ruſſia, it was reported to me in Moſcouia, that the Turkes and Armenians pay the tenth penie cuſtome of all the wares they bring into the Emperors land, and aboue that they pay for all ſuch goods as they weigh at the Emperours beame, two pence of the Rubble, which yͤ buyer or ſeller muſt make report to of the Maſter of the beame: they alſo pay a certaine horſe toll, which is in diuers places of his Realme foure pence of a horſe.

The Turkes and Arinenians pay cuſtome.

The Emperors beame.

The Dutch nation are free of this: notwithſtanding for certaine offences, they had loſt their priuiledges which they haue recouered this Summer to their great charge. It was reported to me by a Iuſtice of that countrey, that they paied for it thirtie thouſand Rubbles, and alſo that Rye, Dorpte and Reuel haue yeelded themſelues vnder the gouernment of the Emperour of Ruſſia: whether this was a bragge of the Ruſſes or not, I know not, but thus he ſayd, and in deed whiles we were there, there came a great Ambaſſadour out of Liefland, for the aſſurance of their priuiledges.

The Dutch nation loſt their priuiledges, & renued them with a great ſumme.

To ſpeake ſomewhat of the commodities of this countrey, it is to be vnderſtood, that there is a certaine place foure ſcore miles from the Sea called Colmogro: to which place there reſort all the ſortes of Wares that are in the North parts, as Oyles, Salt, Stockfiſh, Salmon, Fethers and Furres: their Salt they make of ſaltwater by the ſea ſide: their Oyles they make of Seales, whereof they haue great ſtore which is brought out of the Bay where our ſhippes came in: they make it in the Spring of the yeere, and bring it to Colmogro to ſell, and the merchants there carie it to Nouogrode, and ſo ſell it to the Dutch nation. Their Stockefiſh and Salmon commeth from a place called Mallums, not farre from Wardhouſe: their Salmon and their Salt they carrie to Moſco, and their drie fiſhe they carrie to Nouogrode, and ſell it there to the Lieflanders.

The commodities of Ruſſia.

The Furres and Fethers which come to Colmogro, as Sables, Beauers, Minkes, Armine, Lettis, Graies, Woolueringꝭ, and white Foxes, with Deere ſkinnes, they are brought thither, by the men of Penninge, Lampas, and Powſtezer, which fetch them from the Samoedes that are counted ſauage people: and the merchants that bring theſe Furres doe vſe to trucke with the merchants of Colmogro for Cloth, Tinne, Battrie, & ſuch other like, and the merchants of Colmogro carie them to Nouogrode, Vologda, or Moſco, & ſell them there. The Fethers which come from Penning they doe little eſteeme.

If our merchants do deſire to know the meeteſt place of Ruſſia for the ſtanding houſe, in mine opinion I take it to be Vologda, which is a great towne ſtanding in the heart of Ruſſia, with many great and good towns about it. There is great plentie of corne, victuals, and of all ſuch wares as are raiſed in Ruſland, but ſpecially, flaxe, hempe, tallow and bacon: there is alſo great ſtore of waxe, but it commeth from the Mosko.

The towne of Vologda is meeteſt for our marchants, becauſe it lieth amongeſt all the beſt towns of Ruſſia, and there is no towne in Ruſſia but trades with it: alſo the water is a great commoditie to it. If they plant themſelues in Moſco or Nouogrode, their charge will be great and wonderfull, but not ſo in Vologda: for all things will there be had better cheape by the one half. And for their vent, I know no place ſo meet. It is likely that ſome will thinke yͤ Mosko to be the meeteſt by the reaſon of the court, but by that reaſon I take it to be worſe: for the charge there would be ſo great by trauers and expenſes, that the moitie of the profite would bee wholly conſumed, which in the other place will bee ſaued. And yet notwithſtanding our marchants may bee there in the Winter to ſerue the Emperour and his court. The Emperour is a great marchant himſelfe of waxe and ſables, which with good foreſight may bee procured to their hands: as for other commodities there are litle or none in Moſcouia, beſides thoſe aboue rehearſed: if there bee other, it is brought thither by the Turkes, who will be daintie to buy our clothes conſidering the charges of cariage ouer land.

Vologda and the ſtate thereof.

The Emperor of Moſcouie is a marchant himſelfe.

Our marchants may doe well to prouide for the Ruſſes ſuch wares as the Dutch nation doeth ſerue them of, as Flanders and Holland clothes, which I beleeue, they ſhal ſerue better and with leſſe charge then they of Rye or Dorpe, or Reuel: for it is no ſmal aduenture to bring their clothes out of Flanders to either of theſe places, and their charge not litle to cary them ouer lande to Nouogrode, which is from Rye nine hundred Ruſſian miles.

This Nouogrode is a place wel furniſhed with flaxe, Waxe, Hides, tallow and many other things: the beſt flaxe in Ruſſia is brought thither and there ſold by the hundred bundles, which is done alſo at Vologda, and they that bring the flaxe to Nouogrode, dwell as neere Vologda, as Nouogrode, and when they heare of the vtterance which they may haue with our nation, they will as willingly come to them as goe to other.

Two ſorts of flaxe.

They haue in Ruſſia two ſorts of flaxe, the one is called great flaxe, and the other ſmall: that which they call great flaxe is better by foure rubbles in 100. bundels then the ſmall: It is much longer then the other, and cleaner without wood: and whereas of the ſmall flaxe there goe 27. or 28 bundles to a ſhippound, there goeth not of the greater ſort aboue 22. or 24 at the moſt. There are many other trifles in Ruſſia, as ſope, mats, &c. but I thinke there will bee no great account made of them.

The letters of king Philip and Queene Marie to Iuan Vaſiliuich the Emperour of Ruſſia written the firſt of April 1555 and in the ſecond voyage.

Philip and Marie by the grace of God, King and Queene of England, France, Naples, Ieruſalem, and Ireland, defenders of the faith. Princes of Spaine and Sicilie, Archdukes of Auſtrich, Dukes of Burgundie, Millaine, and Brabant, Counties of Haſpurge, Flanders, and Tiroll: To the right High, right Mightie, and right excellent Prince, garniſhed with all gifts of nature, by Gods grace Iohn Vaſiliuich Emperour of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodemer, Moſco, and Nouogrod, King of Cazan, King of Aſtracan, Lord of Pleſco, and great Duke of Smolenſko, of Tueria, Ioughoria, Permia, Vadska, Bulghoria, and others, Lorde and great Duke of Nouogrod of the lowe Countrey, of Chernigo, Rezan, Polotskay, Roſtoue, Yeraſlaue, Bealozera, Liefland, Oudoria, Obdoria, and Condenſa, Commander of all Siberia, and of the North partes, and lord of many other countreys, greeting. Whereas by the conſent and licence of our moſt deare and entirely beloued late brother, King Edward the ſixt, whoſe ſoule God pardon, ſundrie of our ſubiects marchants of the citie of London within this our realme of England did at their owne proper coſts and aduenture furniſh three ſhippes to diſcouer, ſerch, and find lands, Iſlands, regions, and territories before this aduenture not knowen, ne commonly haunted and frequented by ſeas. The one of the which three ſhippes, named the Edward Bonauenture, (whereof our right welbeloued Richard Chancelour was then gouernour and great Captaine) chanced by the grace of God, and the good conduct of the ſayd Chancelour to arriue and winter in the North part of your Empire of Ruſſia. Foraſmuch as we be credibly informed by the report of our truſtie and welbeloued ſubiect, that your Maieſtie did not onely call him and certaine of his company to your emperiall preſence and ſpeech, entertayned and banqueted them with all humanitie and gentlenes: but alſo being thereunto requeſted partly by the letters of our ſaid brother, & partly by requeſt of the ſayd Richard Chancelour, haue by your letters patents vnder your ſeale among other things granted: That all ſuch marchants as ſhall come forth of anie of our realms of England or Ireland with al maner of wares, if they wil trauel or occupie within your dominions, The ſame marchants with their marchandiſes in al your lordſhip may freely, & at their libertie trauaile out and in without hinderance or any maner of loſſe: And of your farther ample goodneſſe haue promiſed that our ambaſſadours, if wee ſend any, ſhall with free good will paſſe to and from you without any hinderance or loſſe, with ſuch meſſage as ſhall come vnto you, and to returne the ſame to our kingdomes well anſwered, as by the ſame your letters, written in your lordly Palace and Caſtle of Moſco in the yeere 7063 the moneth of Februarie more at large appeareth. Like as wee cannot but much commend your princely fauour and goodneſſe, and in like manner thanke you for the aboundant grace, extended to the ſayd Richard Chancelour, and others our ſubiects marchants: Euen ſo theſe are to pray and requeſt you to continue the ſame beneuolence toward them, and other our marchants and ſubiects, which doe or hereafter ſhall reſort to your countrey: And for the more aſſurance and incouragement to trade and exerciſe the feate of marchandiſe with your ſubiects and all other marchants within your dominions, that it may pleaſe you at this our contemplation to aſſigne and authoriſe ſuch Commiſſaries as you ſhall thinke meete to trade and conferre with our welbeloued ſubiects and marchants, the ſayd Richard Chancelour, George Killingworth, & Richard Graie, bearers of theſe our letters: who are by vs authoriſed for that purpoſe: and to confirme and graunt ſuch other liberties and priuiledges vnto the Gouernour, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants, and Communaltie of the fellowſhip of the ſaide Marchants, as the ſaid bearers in their name propone and require by you to be granted for their ſafe conduct, good gouernment, and order to bee erected and continued among them in your ſaide dominions; And this with ſuch your clemencie and expedition, as wee, vpon the next arriuall of the ſaide Richard Chancelour may bee enformed of your gracious diſpoſition and anſwere. Which your beneuolences ſo to bee extended, wee bee minded to requite towards any your ſubiects Marchants, that ſhal frequent this our realme at your contemplation therefore to be made. Thus right high, right Excellent, and right mightie, Almightie God the Father, the Sonne and the holy Ghoſt haue you in his bleſſed keeping. Giuen vnder our ſeale at our Palace of Weſtminſter, the firſt of April, in the yere from the bleſſed incarnation of our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, 1555. and in the firſt and ſecond yeeres of our reignes.

Articles conceiued and determined for the Commiſſion of the Merchants of this company reſiant in Ruſsia, and at the VVarhouſe, for the ſecond voyage, 1555. the firſt of May, as followeth.

FIrſt, the Gouernour, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants and whole company aſſembled this day in open court, committeth and authorizeth Richard Gray and George Killingworth, iointly and ſeuerally to be Agents, Factors, and Atturneis generall and ſpeciall, for the whole body of this companie, to buy, ſel, trucke, change and permute al, and euery kind and kindes of wares, marchandizes and goods to the ſaid company appertaining, now laden & ſhipped in the good ſhip called the Edward Bonauenture, appointed for Ruſſia, the ſame to vtter and ſell to the beſt commoditie, profit and aduantage of the ſaid corporation, be it for ready money, wares & marchandiſes, or truck, preſently, or for time, as occaſion & benefit of the company ſhal require: and all ſuch wares as they or either of them ſhal buy, trucke, or prouide, or cauſe to be bought for the company to lade thē homeward in good order and condition, as by prudent courſe of marchandiſes, ſhall, and ought to appertaine, which article extendeth alſo to Iohn Brooke for the Wardhouſe, as in the 17. and 18. articles of this commiſſion appeareth.

2 Item, it is alſo committed, as aboue, to the ſaid Agents, to binde & charge the ſaid company by debt for wares vpon credit, as good opportunitie and occaſion ſhal ſerue, with power to charge and bind the ſaid company, and their ſucceſſors, for the paiments of ſuch things as ſhalbe taken vp for credite, and the ſaid Agents to be relieued ab opere ſatis dandi.

3 Item full authoritie and power is committed to the ſaid firſt named factors, together with Richard Chancelor grand Pilot of this fleete, to repaire to the Emperors court, there to preſent the king and Queenes Maieſties letters, written in Greeke, Poliſh, and Italian, and to giue and exhibite the marchants preſents at ſuch time and place as ſhalbe thought moſt expedient, they, or one of them to demand, and humbly deſire of yͤ Emperour ſuch further grants and priuiledges to be made to this companie, as may be beneficiall for the ſame, to continue in traffike with his ſubiects, according to ſuch inſtructions as bee in this behalfe deuiſed and deliuered to the Agents whereunto relation is to be had, and ſome one of theſe perſons to attend vpon the court for the obtaining of the ſame, as to their diſcretions ſhalbe thought good.

4 Item, that all the ſaide Agents doe well conſider, ponder and weigh ſuch articles as bee deliuered to them to know the natures, diſpoſitions, lawes, cuſtomes, maners and behauiours of the people of the countreis where they ſhal traffike, as well of the Nobilitie as of the Lawyers, Marchants, Mariners and common people, and to note diligently the ſubtilties of their bargaining, buying and ſelling, making as fewe debtes as poſſiblie may bee, and to bee circumſpect, that no lawe neither of religion nor poſitiue bee broken or tranſgreſſed by them or any miniſter vnder them, ne yet by any mariner or other perſon of our nation, and to foreſee that all tolles, cuſtomes, and ſuch other rites be ſo duely paid, that no forfeiture or confiſcation may enſue to our goods either outward or inward, and that al things paſſe with quiet, without breach of the publike peace or common tranquillitie of any of the places where they ſhall arriue or traffique.

5 Item, that prouiſion bee made in Moſco or elſwhere, in one or mo good townes, where good trade ſhall be found for a houſe or houſes for the Agents, and companie to inhabite and dwell at your accuſtomed diets, with warehouſes, ſellers, and other houſes of offices requiſite, and that none of the inferiour miniſters of what place or vocation ſoeuer he be, doe lie out of the houſe of the Agents without licence to be giuen, and that euery inferiour officer ſhalbe obedient to the orders, rules and gouernments of the ſaid Agents, and in caſe any diſobient perſon ſhall be found among any of them, then ſuch perſon to be puniſhed for his miſbehauiour, at the diſcretion of the ſaid Agents, or of one of them in the abſence of the other.

6 Item, if any perſon of the ſaid miniſters ſhall be of ſuch pride or obſtinacie, that after one or two honeſt admonitions, hee will not bee reformed nor reconciled from his faultes, then the ſaide Agents to diſplace euery ſuch perſon from the place or roume to him heere committed, and ſome other diſcreete perſon to occupie the ſame, as to the ſaide Agents by their diſcretions ſhal ſeeme meete.

7 Item, if any perſon ſhall bee found ſo arrogant, that he will not be ordered nor reformed by the ſaid Agents or by one of them in the abſence of the other, then the ſayde perſon to bee deliuered to the Iuſtice of the countrey, to receiue ſuch puniſhment, as the lawes of the countrey doe require.

8 Item, that the ſaide Agents and factours ſhall daily one houre in the morning conferre and conſult together what ſhall bee moſt conuenient and beneficiall for the companie, and ſuch orders as they ſhall determine, to bee written by the Secretarie of the companie in a booke to bee prouided for that purpoſe, and no inferiour perſon to infringe or breake any ſuch order or deuiſe, but to obſerue the ſame exactly, vpon ſuch reaſonable paine as the Agents ſhall put him to by diſcretion.

9 Item, that the ſaid Agents ſhall in the ende of euerie weeke, or oftener as occaſion ſhall require, peruſe, ſee and trie, not onely the Caſhers, bookes, reckonings and accounts, firming the ſame with their handes, but alſo ſhall receiue and take weekly the account of euery other officer, as well of the Vendes, as of the emptions, and alſo of the ſtate of the houſhold expenſes, making thereof a perfect declaration as ſhall appertaine, the ſame accounts alſo to bee firmed by the ſaide Agents hands.

10 Item, that no inferiour miniſter ſhall take vpon him to make any bargaine or ſale of any wares, marchandiſes or goods, but by the Commiſſion and Warrantiſe of the ſayde Agents vnder their handes, and hee not to tranſgreſſe his Commiſſion by any way, pretenſe or colour.

11 Item, that euery inferiour miniſter, that is to vnderſtand, all Clerks and yong merchants being at the order of the ſaide Agents, ſhall ride, goe, ſaile and trauaile to all ſuch place, and places, as they or hee ſhall be appointed vnto by the ſaide Agents, and effectually to follow and do all that which to him or them ſhall be committed, well and truely to the moſt benefite of the company, according to the charge to him or them committed, euen as by their othes, dueties and bondes of their maſters they be bounden and charged to doe.

12 Item, that at euery moneths end, all accounts and reckonings ſhalbe brought into perfect order, into the Ledger or memoriall, and the decrees, orders, and rules of the Agents together with the priuileges, and copies of letters, may and ſhall be well and truely written by the ſecretarie, in ſuch forme as ſhalbe appointed for it, and that copies of all their doings may be ſent home with the ſaid ſhip at her returne.

13 Item, that all the Agents doe diligently learne and obſerue all kinde of wares, as wel naturals as forrein, that be beneficiall for this Realme, to be ſold for the benefit of the company, and what kinde of our commodities and other things of theſe Weſt partes bee moſt vendible in thoſe Realmes with profite, giuing a perfect aduiſe of all ſuch things requiſite.

14 Item, if the Emperour will enter into bargain with you for the whole maſſe of your ſtock, and will haue the trade of it to veter to his owne ſubiects, then debating the matter prudently among your ſelues, ſet ſuch high priſes of your commodities, as you may aſſure your ſelues to be gainers in your owne wares, and yet to buy theirs at ſuch baſe priſes, as you may here alſo make a commoditie and gaine at home, hauing in your mindes the notable charges that the companie haue diſbrayed in aduancing this voyage: and the great charges that they ſuſtaine dayly in wages, victuals and other things: all which muſt bee requited by the wiſe handling of this voyage, which being the firſt preſident ſhalbe a perpetual preſident for euer: and therefore all circumſpection is to be vſed, and foreſeene in this firſt enterpriſe, which God bleſſe and proſper vnder you, to his glorie, and the publike wealth of this Realme, whereof the Queenes Maieſtie, and the Lords of the Councell haue conceiued great hope, whoſe expectations are not to be fruſtrated.

Note.

15 Item, it is to be had in minde, that you vſe all wayes and meanes poſſible to learne howe men may paſſe from Ruſſia, either by land or by ſea to Cathaia, and what may be heard of our other ſhips, and to what knowledge you may come, by conferring with the learned or well trauailed perſons, either naturall or forrein, ſuch as haue trauailed from the North to the South.

Inquirie for the way to Cathaya.

16 Item, it is committed to the ſaid Agents, that if they ſhall be certified credibly, that any of our ſaid firſt ſhips be arriued in any place whereunto paſſage is to be had by water or by land, that then certaine of the company at the diſcretion of the Agents ſhall bee appointed to be ſent to them, to learne their eſtate & condition, to viſite, refreſh, relieue, and furniſh them with all neceſſaries and requiſites, at the common charges of the companie, and to imbrace, accept, and intreat them as our deare and welbeloued brethren of this our ſocietie, to their reioycing and comfort, aduertiſing Sir Hugh Willoughbie and others of our carefulnes of them and their long abſence, with our deſire to heare of them, with all other things done in their abſence for their commoditie, no leſſe then if they had bene preſent.

17 Item, it is decreed, that when the ſhips ſhal arriue at this going foorth at the Wardhouſe, that their Agents, with maſter Chancelor grand pilot, Iohn Brooke marchant, deputed for the Wardhouſe, with Iohn Buckland maſter of the Edward, Iohn Howlet maſter, and Iohn Robins pilot of the Philip and Marie, ſhall conferre and conſult together, what is moſt profitable to be done therfore for the benefit of the company, & to conſider whether they may bargaine with the captaine of the caſtle, and the inhabitants in that place, or alongſt the coaſt for a large quantity of fiſh, drie or wet, killed by the naturals, or to be taken by our men at a price reaſonable for trucke of cloth, meale, ſalt, or beere, and what traine oyle, or other commodity is to be had there at this time, or any other ſeaſon of the yeere, and whether there will be had or found ſufficient lading for both the ſayd ſhippes, to be bought there, and how they may conferre with the naturals for a continuance in hanting the place, if profit wil ſo ariſe to the company, and to conſider whether the Edward in her returne may receiue at the Wardhouſe any kind of lading homeward, and what it may amount vnto, and whether it ſhall be expedient for the Philip to abide at the Wardhouſe the returne of the Edward out of Ruſſia, or getting that ſhe may returne with the firſt good wind to England, without abiding for the Edward, and ſo to conclude & accord certainely among themſelues vpon their arriuall, that the certaintie may (vpon good deliberation) be ſo ordered and determined betweene both ſhips, that the one may be aſſured of the other, and their determinations to be put in writing duplicate to remaine with ech ſhip, according to ſuch order as ſhall be taken betweene them.

The Philip and Mary.

18 Item, that Iohn Brooke our marchant for the Wardhouſe take good aduiſe of the reſt of our Agents, how to vſe himſelfe in al affaires, whiles the ſhip ſhalbe at the Wardhouſe, he to ſee good order to be be kept, make bargains aduiſedly, not crediting the people vntill their natures, diſpoſitions & fidelities ſhal be well tried, make no debts, but to take ware for ware in hand, and rather be truſted then to truſt. Note diligently what be the beſt wares for thoſe parts, and howe the fiſhe falleth on the coaſt, and by what meane it is to bee bought at the moſt aduantage, what kindes and diuerſities of ſortes in fiſhes be, and whether it will keepe better in bulke piled, or in caſke.

Note.

Note.

19 Item, he to haue a diligent eye & circumſpection to the beere, ſalt, and other liquid wares, and not to ſuffer any waſte to be made by the companie, and he in all contracts to require aduiſe, counſel, and conſent of the maſter and pilot, the marchant to be our houſwife, as our ſpeciall truſt is in him, he to tender that no lawes nor cuſtomes of the countrey be broken by any of the company, and to render to the prince, and other officers, all that which to them doth appertaine, the company to be quiet, voide of all quarrelling, fighting, or vexation, abſteine from all exceſſe of drinking as much as may bee, and in all to vſe and behaue themſelues as to quiet marchants doeth, and ought to apperteine.

20 Item, it is decreed by the companie, that the Edward ſhall returne home this yeere with as much wares as may be conueniently & profitably prouided, bought, and laden in Ruſſia, and the reſt to be taken in at the Wardhouſe, as by the Agents ſhall be accorded. But by all meanes it is to be foreſeene and noted, that the Edward returne home, and not to winter in any forrein place, but to come home, and bring with her all the whole aduertiſements of the marchants, with ſuch further aduiſe for the next yeeres prouiſion, as they ſhall giue.

21 Item, it is further decreed and ordeined, inuiolably to be obſerued, that when the good ſhips, or either of them (by Gods grace) ſhall returne home to the coaſtes of England, that neither of them ſhall ſtay or touch in any Hauen or Port of England, otherwiſe then wind and weather ſhall ſerue, but ſhall directly ſaile and come to the Port of the citie of London, the place of their right diſcharge, and that no bulke be broken, hatches opened, cheſt, fardell, truſſe, barrel, fat, or whatſoeuer thing it ſhall be, be brought out of the ſhippe, vntill the companie ſhall giue order for the ſame, and appoint ſuch perſons of the companie as ſhall be thought meet for that purpoſe, to take viewe, and conſider the ſhippe and her lading, and ſhall giue order for the breaking vp of the ſaide bulke, or giue licence by diſcretion, for things to be brought to land. And that euery officer ſhall ſhewe the inuoiſe of his charge to him firſt committed, and to examine the waſtes and loſſes, and to deliuer the remainder to the vſe and benefit of the company, according to ſuch order as ſhall be appointed in that behalfe.

22 Item, the company exhorteth, willeth, and requireth, not onely all the ſaid Agents, pilots, maſters, marchants, clerkes, boatſwaines, ſtewards, ſkafemaſters, and all other officers and miniſters of this preſent voyage, being put in charge and truſt dayly to peruſe, reade, and ſtudie ſuch inſtructions as be made, giuen, & deliuered to them for perfect knowledge of the people of Ruſſia, Moſcouia, Wardhouſe, and other places, their diſpoſitions, maners cuſtomes, vſes, tolles, cariages, coines, weights, numbers, meaſures, wares, merchandiſes, commodities, and incommodities, the one to be accepted and imbraced, the other to be reiected and vtterly abandoned, to the intent that euery man taking charge, may be ſo well taught, perfited, and readily inſtructed in all the premiſſes, that by ignorance, no loſſe or preiudice may grow or chance to the company: aſſuring themſelues, that forasmuch as the company hath trauelled and laboured ſo in theſe their inſtructions to them giuen, that euery man may bee perfect, and fully learned to eſchew all loſſes, hurts and damages that may inſue by pretenſe or colour of none knowledge, the company entendeth not to allow, or accept ignorance for any lawfull or iuſt cauſe of excuſe, in that which ſhall be miſordered by negligence, the burden whereof ſhall light vpon the negligent offending perſon, eſpecially vpon ſuch as of their owne heads, or temeritie, will take vpon him or them to doe or to attempt any thing, whereby preiudice may ariſe, without the commiſſion of the Agents as aboue is mentioned, whereunto relation muſt be had. Note.

23 Foraſmuch as it is not poſſible to write and indite ſuch preſcribed orders, rules and commiſſions to the Agents and factours, but that occaſion, time and place, and the pleaſures of the princes, together with the operation or ſucceſſe of fortune ſhall change or ſhift the ſame, although not in the whole, yet in part, therefore the ſaid company doe commit to you their deare and intire beloued Agents and factors to doe in this behalfe for the commoditi and wealth of this company, as by your diſcretions, vpon good aduiſed deliberations ſhalbe thought good and beneficiall. Prouided alwayes, that the honour, good name, fame, credite, and eſtimation of the ſame companie be conſerued and preſerued: which to confirme we beſeech the liuing Lord to his glory, the publike benefite of this realme, our common profits, and your praiſes.

Finally for the ſeruice, and due accompliſhment of all the premiſſes, euery Agent and miniſter of and for this voyage, hath not onely giuen a corporall othe vpon the Euangeliſts to obſerue, and cauſe to be obſerued, this commiſſion, and euery part, clauſe and ſentence of the ſame, as much as in him lyeth, as well for his owne part as for any other perſon, but alſo haue bounde themſelues and their friendes to the companie in ſeuerall ſummes of money, expreſſed in the actes and records of this ſocietie, for the trueth and fidelities of them, for the better, and alſo manifeſter teſtification of the trueth, and of their othes, promiſes, and bands aforeſaid, they haue to this Commiſſion ſubſcribed particularly their ſeuerall hands, and the company alſo in confirmation of the ſame, haue ſet their ſeale. Yeuen the day, moneth, and yeeres firſt aboue mentioned.

The othe miniſtred to the ſeruants of the fellowſhip.

YE ſweare by the holy contents of that booke, that ye ſhal wel, faithfully and truely, and vprightly, and with all your indeuour, ſerue this right worſhipfull company in that order, which by this fellowſhips Agent or Agents in the dominions of the Emperours of Ruſſia, &c. ſhall bee vnto you committed, by commiſſion, commandement, or other his direction. And that you ſhall bee obedient and faithfull to the ſame our Agent or Agents, and that well, and truely and vprightly according to the commiſſion, charge, commãdement, or other direction of the ſaid Agent or Agents to you from time to time giuen and to be giuen, you ſhall proſecute and doe all that which in you lieth, for the good renowme, commoditie, benefite and profite of the ſaid fellowſhip: and you ſhall not directly or indirectly, openly or couertly doe, exerciſe or vſe any trade or feate of marchandizes for your owne priuate account, commodity, gaine or profite, or for the account of or for any other perſon or perſons, without conſent or licence of this ſaid fellowſhip, firſt obtained in writing. And if you ſhall know or vnderſtand any other perſon or perſons to vſe, exerciſe or doe any trade, traffike or feat of marchandiſe, to or for his or their own account or accounts, at any time or times hereafter, that then ye ſhall truely and plainly diſcloſe, open, vtter and reueale, and ſhew the ſame vnto this ſaid fellowſhip, without fraude, colour, couin or delay: So helpe you God, &c.

The letter of M. George Killingworth the companies firſt Agent in Moſcouie, touching their interteinement in their ſecond voyage. Anno 1555. the 27. of Nouember in Moſco.

Right worſhipfull, my duetie conſidered, &c. It may pleaſe your worſhip to vnderſtand, that at the making hereof we all be in good health, thanks be to God, ſaue onely William our cooke as we came from Colmogro fell into the riuer out of the boate, and was drowned. And the 11. day of September wee came to Vologda, and there we laide all our wares vp, and ſold very litle: but one marchant would haue giuen vs 12. robles for a broad cloth, and he ſaid he would haue had them all, and 4. altines for a pound of ſugar, but we did refuſe it becauſe he was the firſt, and the marchants were not come thither, nor would not come before Winter, truſting to haue more: but I feare it will not be much better. Yet notwithſtanding we did for the beſt. And the houſe that our wares lie in coſts from that day vntill Eaſter ten robles. And the 28. day of September we did determine with our ſelues that it was good for M. Gray, Arthur Edwards, Thomas Hautory, Chriſtopher Hudſon, Iohn Segewicke, Richard Iohnſon, and Richard Iudde, to tarie at Vologda, and M. Chancelor, Henry Lane, Edward Priſe, Robert Beſt and I ſhould goe to Moſco. And we did lade the Emperours ſuger, with part of all ſorts of wares to haue had to the Moſco with vs, but the way was ſo deepe, that we were faine to turne back, and leaue it ſtill at Vologda till the froſt. And we went forth with poſte horſe, and the charge of euery horſe being ſtill ten in number, comes to 16.s.7.d. halfe penie, beſides the guides. And wee came to the Moſco the 4. day of October, and were lodged that night in a ſimple houſe: but the next day we were ſent for to the Emperour his ſecretarie, and he bade vs welcome with a cheerefull countenance and cheerefull words, and wee ſhewed him that we had a letter from our Queenes grace to the Emperour his grace, and then he deſired to ſee them all, and that they might remain with him, to haue them perfect, that the true meaning might be declared to the Emperour, and ſo we did: and then we were appointed to a better houſe: and the ſeuenth day the ſecretary ſent for vs againe, and then he ſhewed vs that we ſhould haue a better houſe, for it was the Emperour his will, that we ſhould haue all things that we did lacke, and did ſend vs meade of two ſorts, and two hens, our houſe free, and euery two dayes to receiue eight hens, ſeuen altines, and two pence in money, and meade a certaine, and a poore fellow to make cleane our houſe, and to doe that whereunto we would ſet him. And wee had giuen many rewards before, which you ſhal perceiue by other, and ſo we gaue the meſſengers a reward with thanks: and the ninth day we were ſent to make vs readie to ſpeak with the Emperour on the morow. And the letters were ſent vs, that wee might deliuer them our ſelues, and we came before him the tenth day: and before we came to his preſence we went thorow a great chamber, where ſtood many ſmall tunnes, pailes, bowles and pots of ſiluer, I meane, like waſhing bowles, all parcel gilt: and within that another chamber, wherein ſate (I thinke) neere a hundred in cloth of gold, and then into the chamber where his grace ſate, and there I thinke were more then in the other chamber alſo in cloth of gold, and we did our duety, and ſhewed his grace our Queenes graces letters, with a note of your preſent which was left in Vologda: and then his grace did aske how our Queenes grace did, calling her couſin, ſaying that hee was glad that wee were come in health into his Realme, and we went one by one vnto him, and tooke him by the hand, and then his grace did bid vs goe in health, and come to dinner againe, and we dined in his preſence, and were ſet with our faces towards his grace, and none in the chamber ſate with their backes towards him, being I thinke neere a hundred at dinner then, and all ſerued with golde, as platters, chargers, pottes, cuppes, and all not ſlender but very maſſy, and yet a great number of platters of golde, ſtanding ſtill on the cupboord, not moued: and diuers times in the dinner time his grace ſent vs meat and drinke from his owne table, and when we had dined we went vp to his grace, and receiued a cuppe with drinke at his owne hand, and the ſame night his grace ſent certaine gentlemen to vs with diuers ſortes of wine and meade, to whome wee gaue a rewarde. And afterwarde we were by diuers Italians counſelled to take heed whom we did truſt to make the copie of the priuileges that we would deſire to haue, for feare it ſhould not be written in the Ruſſe tongue, as we did meane. So firſt a Ruſſian did write for vs a breuiat to the Emperor, the tenour whereof was, that we did deſire a ſtronger priuilege: and when the Secretary ſaw it, he did deliuer it to his grace, and when we came againe, his grace willed vs to write our mindes, and hee would ſee it, and ſo we did. And his grace is ſo troubled with preparations to warres, that as yet wee haue no anſwere: but we haue byn required of his Secretary, and of the vnder Chancelor, to know what wares we had brought into the Realme, and what wares we doe intend to haue, that are, or may bee had in this Realme: and we ſhewed them, and they ſhewed the Emperor thereof. And then they ſaid his graces pleaſure was, that his beſt marchants of the Moſco ſhould be ſpoken to, to meet and talk with vs. And ſo a day was appointed, and wee mette in the Secretarie his office, and there was the vnder Chancelor, who was not paſt two yeeres ſince the Emperors marchant, and not his Chancelour: and then the concluſion of our talke was, that the Chancelour willed vs to bethinke vs, where we would deſire to haue a houſe or houſes, that wee might come to them as to our owne houſe, and for marchandize to be made preparation for vs, and they would know our priſes of our wares and friſe: and we anſwered, that for our prices they muſt ſee the wares before we could make any price thereof, for the like in goodneſſe hath not bene brought into the Realme, and we did looke for an example of all ſorts of our wares to come from Vologda, with the firſt ſled way, and then they ſhould ſee them, and then we would ſhew them the prices of them: and likewiſe we could not tell them what we would giue them iuſtly, till we did knowe as well their iuſt weights as their meaſures: for in all places where we did come, al weights and meaſures did vary. Then the Secretary (who had made promiſe vnto vs before) ſaide, that we ſhould haue all the iuſt meaſures vnder ſeale, & he that was found faulty in the contrary, to buy or ſel with any other meaſure then that, the law was, that he ſhould be puniſhed: he ſaid moreouer, that if it ſo happē that any of our marchants do promiſe by couenāt at any time to deliuer you any certain ſum of wares in ſuch a place, and of ſuch like goodneſſe, at ſuch a day, for ſuch a certaine price, that then becauſe of variance, we ſhould cauſe it to be writtē, according as the bargain is, before a iuſtice or the next ruler to the place: if he did not keepe couenant & promiſe in all points, according to his couenant, that then looke what loſſe or hinderance we could iuſtly proue that we haue therby, he ſhould make it good if he be worth ſo much: and in like caſe we muſt do to them: and to that we did agree, ſaue onely if it were to come ouer the ſea, then if any ſuch fortune ſhould bee (as God forbid) that the ſhip ſhould miſchance or be robbed, & the proofe to be made that ſuch kind of wares were laden, the Engliſh marchants to beare no loſſe to the other marchant. Then ẏ Chancelor ſaid, me thinks you ſhall do beſt to haue your houſe at Colmogro, which is but 100. miles frō the right diſcharge of the ſhips, and yet I truſt the ſhips ſhal come neerer hereafter, becauſe the ſhips may not tary long for their lading, which is 1000. miles from Vologda by water, and all our marchants ſhall bring all our marchandize to Colmogro to you, and ſo ſhall our marchants neither go empty nor come empty: for if they lacke lading homeward, there is ſalt, which is good ware here, that they may come loden againe. So we were very glad to heare that, and did agree to his ſaying: for we ſhal neuertheleſſe, if we luſt, haue a houſe at Vologda, & at the Moſco, yea, & at Nouogrode, or where we wil in Ruſland: But the three & twentieth of this preſent we were with the ſecretary, and then among other talke, we moued, that if we ſhould tary at Colmogro with our wares, and ſhould not come to Vologda, or further to ſeeke our market, but tary ſtil at Colmogro, and then the marchants of the Moſco and others ſhould not come and bring their wares, and ſo the ſhips ſhould come, and not haue their lading ready, that then it were a great loſſe and hinderance for vs: then ſaide hee againe to vs, that the marchants had beene againe together with him, and had put the like doubt, that if they ſhould come and bring their wares to Colmogro, and that they ſhould not find wares there ſufficient to ſerue them, that then they ſhould be at great loſſe and hinderance, they leauing their other trades to fal to that: and to that we did anſwere, that after the time that we do appoint with them to bring their wares to Colmogro, God willing, they ſhould neuer come thither, but at the beginning of the yere, they ſhould find that our marchants would haue at the leaſt for a thouſand robles, although the ſhips were not come: ſo that he ſaide, that then wee muſt talke further with the marchants: ſo that as yet I know not, but that we ſhall haue neede of one houſe at Colmogro, and another at Vologda, and if that they bring not their wares to Colmogro, then wee ſhalbe ſure to buy ſome at Vologda, and to be out of bondage.

Vologda.

And thus may we continue three or foure yeeres, and in this ſpace we ſhall know the countrey and the marchants, and which way to ſaue our ſelues beſt, and where to plant our houſes, and where to ſeeke for wares: for the Moſco is not beſt for any kind of wares for vs to buy, ſaue onely waxe, which we cannot haue vnder ſeuen pence the Ruſſe pound, and it lackes two ounces of our pound, neither will it be much better cheape, for I haue bidden 6. pence for a pound. And I haue bought more, fiue hundred weight of yarne, which ſtands mee in eight pence farthing the Ruſſe pound one with another. And if wee had receiued any ſtore of money, and were diſpatched heere of that we tary for, as I doubt not but we ſhalbe ſhortly (you know what I meane) then as ſoone as we haue made ſale, I doe intend to goe to Nouogrode, and to Pleſco, whence all the great number of the beſt tow flaxe commeth, and ſuch wares as are there I truſt to buy part. And feare you not but we will do that may be done, if God ſend vs health, deſiring you to prepare fully for one ſhip to be ready in the beginning of April to depart off the coaſt of England.

Concerning all thoſe things which we haue done in the wares, you ſhal receiue a perfect note by the next bearer (God willing) for he that carieth theſe from vs is a marchant of Terwill and he was cauſed to cary theſe by the commandement of the Emperour his ſecretarie, whoſe name is Iuan Mecallawich Weskawate, whom we take to be our very friend. And if it pleaſe you to ſend any letters to Dantiske to Robert Elſon, or to William Watſons ſeruant Dunſtan Walton to be conueyed to vs, it may pleaſe you to incloſe ours in a letter ſent from you to him, written in Poliſh, Dutch, Latine or Italian: ſo incloſed, comming to the Moſco to his hands, he wil conuey our letters to vs whereſoeuer we be. And I haue written to Dantiske already to them for the conueyance of letters from thence.

The Ruſſian ſecretary his name.

And to certifie you of the weather here, men ſay that theſe hundred yeres was neuer ſo warme weather in this countrey at this time of the yeere. But as yeſternight wee receiued a letter from Chriſtopher Hudſon from a citie called Yeraſlaue, who is comming hither with certaine of our wares, but the winter did deceiue him, ſo that he was faine to tarie by the way: and he wrote that the Emperours preſent was deliuered to a gentleman at Vologda, and the ſled did ouerthrow, and the butte of Hollocke was loſt, which made vs all very ſory.

I pray you be not offended with theſe my rude letters for lacke of time: but aſſoone as ſales be made, I will finde the meanes to conuey you a letter with ſpeed: for the way is made ſo doubtful, that the right meſſenger is ſo much in doubt, that he would not haue any letters of any effect ſent by any man, if he might, for he knowes not of theſe: and to ſay the truth, the way is not for him to trauell in. But I will make another ſhift beſide, which I truſt ſhall ſerue the turne till he come, if ſales be made before he be readie, which is and ſhall be as pleaſeth God: who euer preſerue your worſhip, and ſend vs good ſales. Written in haſte.

A copie of the firſt Priuileges graunted by the Emperour of Ruſſia to the Engliſh Marchants in the yeere 1555.

IOhn Vaſiliuich, by the grace of God Emperor of Ruſſia, great duke of Nouogrode, Moſcouia, &c. To all people that ſhal ſee, reade, heare or vnderſtand theſe preſents, greeting. Forasmuch as God hath planted al realmes and dominions in the whole world with ſundry cõmodities, ſo as the one hath neede of the amity and commodities of the other, and by means thereof traffike is vſed from one to another, and amity thereby increaſed: and for that as amongſt men nothing is more to be deſired then amity, without the which no creature being of a naturall good diſpoſition can liue in quietnes, ſo that it is as troubleſome to be vtterly wanting, as it is perceiued to be grieuous to the body to lacke aire, fire, or any other neceſſaries moſt requiſite for the conſeruation and maintenance thereof in health: conſidering alſo how needfull marchandize is, which furniſheth men of all that which is conuenient for their liuing and nouriture, for their clothing, trimming, the ſatiſfying of their delights, and all other things conuenient and profitable for them, and that marchandize bringeth the ſame commodities from diuers quarters in ſo great abundance, as by meanes thereof nothing is lacking in any part, and that all things be in euery place (where entercourſe of marchandizes is receiued and imbraced) generally in ſuch ſort, as amity thereby is entred into, and planted to continue, and the inioyers thereof be as men liuing in a golden world: Upon theſe reſpects and other weighty and good conſiderations, vs hereunto mouing, and chiefly vpon the contemplation of the gracious letters, directed from the right high, right excellent, and right mighty Queene Mary, by the grace of God Queene of England, France, &c. in the fauour of her ſubiects, merchants, the gouernour, conſuls, aſſiſtants, and communaltie of merchants aduenturers for diſcouery of lands, &c.

Know ye therefore, that we of our grace ſpeciall, meere motion, and certaine knowledge, haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, do giue and grant as much as in vs is and lieth, vnto Sebaſtian Cabota Gouernour, Sir George Barnes knight, &c. Conſuls: Sir Iohn Greſham, &c. Aſſiſtants, and to the communaltie of the aforenamed fellowſhip, and to their ſucceſſours for euer, and to the ſucceſſours of euerie of them, theſe articles, graunts, immunities, franchiſes, liberties and priuileges, and euery of them hereafter following, expreſſed and declared. Videlicet:

1 Firſt, we for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, do by theſe preſents giue and graunt free licence, facultie, authority and power vnto the ſaid Gouernour, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants, and communalty of the ſaid fellowſhip, and to their ſucceſſors for euer, that all and ſingular the marchants of the ſame company, their Agents, factours, doers of their buſineſſe, atturneys, ſeruants, and miniſters, and euery of them may at all times hereafter for euer more ſurely, freely and ſafely with their ſhippes, merchandizes, goods and things whatſoeuer ſaile, come and enter into all and ſingular our lands, countreis, dominions, cities, townes, villages, caſtles, portes, iuriſdictions and deſtraicts by ſea, land or freſh waters, and there tary, abide and ſoiourne, and buy, ſell, barter and change all kind of merchandizes with al maner of marchants and people, of whatſoeuer nation, rite, condition, ſtate or degrees they be, and with the ſame or other ſhips, wares, marchandizes, goods & things whatſoeuer they be, vnto other empires, kingdomes, dukedomes, parts, and to any other place or places at their pleaſure and liberty by ſea, land or freſh waters may depart, and exerciſe all kinde of merchandizes in our empire and dominions, and euery part thereof freely and quietly without any reſtraint, impeachment, price, exaction, preſt, ſtraight cuſtome, toll, impoſition, or ſubſidie to be demanded, taxed or paid, or at any time hereafter to be demāded, taxed, ſet, leuied or inferred vpon them or any of them, or vpon their goods, ſhips, wares, marchandizes and things, of, for or vpon any part or parcell thereof, or vpon the goods, ſhips, wares, merchandizes, and things of any of them, ſo that they ſhall not need any other ſafe conduct or licence generall, ne ſpeciall of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, neither ſhall be bound to aſke any ſafe conduct or licence in any of the aforeſaid places ſubiect vnto vs.

2 Item, we giue and graunt to the ſaid marchants this power and liberty, that they, ne any of them, ne their goods, wares, marchandizes or things, ne any part thereof, ſhal be by any meanes within our dominions, landes, countreyes, caſtles, townes, villages, or other place or places of our iuriſdiction, at any time heereafter attached, ſtaied, arreſted ne diſturbed for anie debt, duetie or other thing, for the which they be not principall debters or ſureties, ne alſo for any offence or treſpaſſe committed, or that ſhall be committed, but onely for ſuch as they or any of them ſhall actually commit, and the ſame offences (if any ſuch happen,) ſhall bee by vs onely heard, and determined.

3 Item, we giue and graunt, that the ſaid Marchants ſhal and may haue free libertie, power, and authoritie to name, chooſe and aſſigne brokers, ſhippers, packers, weighers, meaſurers, wagoners, and all other meet and neceſſary laborers for to ſerue them in their feat of marchandiſes, and miniſter and giue vnto them and euery of them a corporall othe, to ſerue them well and truely in their offices, and finding them or any of them doing contrary to his or their othe, may puniſh and diſmiſſe them, and from time to time chooſe, ſweare and admit other in their place or places, without contradiction, let, vexation or diſturbance, either of vs, our heires or ſucceſſors, or of any other our Iuſtices, officers, miniſters or ſubiects whatſoeuer.

4 Item, we giue and graunt vnto the ſaide Marchants and their ſucceſſours, that ſuch perſon as is, or ſhalbe commended vnto vs, our heires or ſucceſſors by the Gouernour, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſaid fellowſhip reſiant within the citie of London within the realme of England, to be their chiefe Factor within this our empire and dominions, may and ſhal haue ful power and authoritie to gouerne and rule all Engliſhmen that haue had, or ſhall haue acceſſe, or repaire in or to this ſaid Empire and iuriſdictions, or any part thereof, and ſhal and may miniſter vnto them, and euery of them good iuſtice in all their cauſes, plaints, quarrels, and diſorders betweene them moued, and to be moued, and aſſemble, deliberate, conſult, conclude, define, determine and make ſuch actes, and ordinances, as he ſo commended with his Aſſiſtants ſhall thinke good and meete for the good order, gouernment and rule of the ſaid Marchants, and all other Engliſhmen repairing to this our ſaide empire and dominions, or any part thereof, and to ſet and leuie vpon all, and euery Engliſhmen, offender or offenders, of ſuch their acts and ordinances made, and to be made, penalties and mulcts by fine or impriſonment.

5 Item, if it happen that any of the ſaide Marchants, or other Engliſhman, as one or more doe rebell againſt ſuch chiefe Factor or Factors, or his or their deputies, and will not diſpoſe him or themſelues to obey them and euery of them as ſhall appertaine, if the ſaide Rebels or diſobedients doe come, and bee founde in our ſaide Empire and iuriſdictions, or any part and place thereof, then wee promiſe and graunt, that all and euery our officers, miniſters, and ſubiects ſhall effectually ayde and aſſiſt the ſaide chiefe Factour or Factours, and their deputies, and for their power ſhall really worke, to bring ſuch rebell or diſobedient rebels, or diſobedients to due obedience: And to that intent ſhall lende vnto the ſame Factour or Factours, and their deputies vpon requeſt therefore to be made, priſons, and inſtruments for puniſhments from time to time.

6 Item, we promiſe vnto the ſaide Marchants, and their ſucceſſours vpon their requeſt to exhibite and doe vnto them good, exact and fauourable iuſtice, with expedition in all their cauſes, and that when they or any of them ſhall haue acceſſe, or come to or before any of our Iuſtices, for any their plaints mooued, and to bee mooued betweene any our ſubiects or other ſtranger, and them, or any of them, that then they ſhalbe firſt and forthwith heard, as ſoon as the party which they ſhal find before our Iuſtices ſhalbe depeached, which party being heard forthwith, and aſſoone as may be, the ſaid Engliſh marchants ſhall be next and diſpatched: And if any action ſhall be moued by or againſt any of the ſaid Marchants being abſent out of our ſaide empire and dominions, then ſuch Marchants may ſubſtitute an Atturney in all and ſingular his cauſes to be followed as need ſhall require, and as ſhall ſeeme to him expedient.

7 Item, wee graunt and promiſe to the ſaide Marchants, and to their ſucceſſours, that if the ſame Marchants or any of them ſhall bee wounded, or (which God forbid) ſlaine in any part or place of our Empire or dominions, then good information thereof giuen, Wee and our Iuſtices and other officers ſhall execute due correction and puniſhment without delay, according to the exigence of the caſe: ſo that it ſhall bee an example to all other not to commit the like. And if it ſhall chaunce the factors, ſeruants, or miniſters of the ſaide Marchants or any of them to treſpaſſe or offende, whereby they or any of them ſhall incurre the danger of death or puniſhment, the goods, wares, marchandizes, and things of their Maſters ſhall not therefore bee forfaited, confiſcated, ſpoiled ne ſeiſed by any meanes by vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, or by any our officers, miniſters or ſubiects, but ſhall remaine to their vſe, franke, free, and diſcharged from all puniſhment and loſſe.

8 Item, we graunt that if any of the Engliſh nation be arreſted for any debt, he ſhal not be laid in priſon, ſo farre as he can put in ſufficient ſuretie and pawne: neither ſhall any ſergeant, or officer leade them or any of them to priſon, before he ſhall haue knowen whether the chiefe Factor or factors, or their deputies ſhalbe ſureties, or bring in pawne for ſuch arreſted: then the officers ſhal releaſe the partie, and ſhall ſet him or them at libertie.

9 Moreouer, wee giue, graunt and promiſe to the ſaide Marchants, that if any of their ſhips or other veſſels ſhall bee ſpoyled, robbed, or damnified in ſayling, anchoring or returning to or from our ſaide Empires and Dominions, or any part thereof, by any Pirats, Marchants, or other perſon, whatſoeuer hee or they bee, that then and in ſuch caſe, wee will doe all that in vs is to cauſe reſtitution, reparation, and ſatiſfaction to bee duely made to the ſaid Engliſh marchants by our letters and otherwiſe, as ſhall ſtand with our honour, and be conſonant to equitie and iuſtice.

10 Item, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, wee doe promiſe and graunt to performe, mainteine, corroborate, autenticate, and obſerue all and ſingular the aforeſaide liberties, franchiſes, and priuileges, like as preſently we firmely doe intend, and will corroborate, autentike and performe the ſame by all meane and way that we can, as much as may be to the commoditie and profite of the ſaid Engliſh Marchants, and their ſucceſſours for euer.

And to the intent that all and ſinguler the ſaide giftes, graunts and promiſes, may bee inuiolably obſerued and performed, we the ſaid Iohn Vaſiliuich by the grace of God Emperor of Ruſſia, great Duke of Nouogrode, Moſco, &c. for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, by our Imperiall and lordly word in ſtead of an othe, haue and doe promiſe by theſe preſents, inuiolably to maintayne and obſerue, and cauſe to be inuiolably obſerued and maintained all and ſinguler the aforeſayd giftes, graunts and promiſes from time to time, and at all and euery time and times hereafter. And for the more corroboration hereof haue cauſed our Signet hereunto to be put: Dated in our Caſtle of Moſco the 20. day of in the yeere.

The Charter of the Marchants of Ruſsia, graunted vpon the diſcouerie of the ſaide Countrey, by King Philip and Queene Marie.

PHilip and Marie, by the grace of God King and Queene, &c. To all maner of officers, true Iurie men, miniſters and ſubiects, and to all other people as well within this our Realme or elſewhere vnder our obeyſance, iuriſdiction, and rule, or otherwiſe vnto whome theſe our letters ſhall bee ſhewen, ſeene, or read, greeting.

Sir George Barne, William Garret, Anthony Huſe, Ioh. Southcot, are the firſt 4. Conſuls.

Whereas wee be credibly informed, that our right truſtie, right faithfull, and welbeloued Counſailors, William Marques of Wincheſter Lord high Treaſurer of this our Realme of England, Henrie Earle of Arundel Lord Steward of our houſholde, Iohn Earle of Bedford Lord keeper of our priuie Seale, William Earle of Pembroke, William Lorde Howard of Effingham Lorde high Admirall of our ſaide Realme of England, &c. Haue at their owne aduenture, coſts and charges, prouided, rigged, and tackled certaine ſhips, pinneſſes, and other meete veſſels, and the ſame furniſhed with all things neceſſary haue aduanced and ſet forward, for to diſcouer, deſcrie, and finde Iles, landes, territories, Dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and by our ſubiects before this not commonly by ſea frequented, which by the ſufferance and grace of Almightie God, it ſhall chaunce them ſailing Northwards, Northeaſtwards, and Northweſtwards, or any partes thereof, in that race or courſe which other Chriſtian Monarches (being with vs in league and amitie) haue not heretofore by Seas traffiqued, haunted, or frequented, to finde and attaine by their ſaid aduenture, as well for the glorie of God, as for the illuſtrating of our honour and dignitie royall, in the increaſe of the reuenues of our Crowne, and generall wealth of this and other our Realmes and Dominions, and of our ſubiects of the ſame: And to this intent our ſubiects aboue ſpecified and named, haue moſt humbly beſeeched vs, that our abundant grace, fauour and clemencie may be graciouſly extended vnto them in this behalfe: Whereupon wee inclined to the petition of the foreſaide our Counſailours, ſubiects and marchants, and willing to animate, aduance, further and nouriſh them in their ſaid godlie, honeſt, and good purpoſe, and, as we hope, profitable aduenture, and that they may the more willingly, and readily atchieue the ſame, Of our eſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge and meere motion, haue graunted, and by theſe preſents doe graunt, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, vnto our ſaid right truſtie, and right faithfull, and right welbeloued Counſailours, and the other before named perſons, that they by the name of marchants aduenturers of England, for the diſcouery of lands, territories, Iles, Dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and not before that late aduenture or enterpriſe by ſea or Nauigation, commonly frequented as aforeſaid, ſhalbe from henceforth one bodie and perpetuall fellowſhip and communaltie of themſelues, both in deede and in name, and them, by the names of Marchants aduenturers for the diſcouerie of lands, territories, Iles & ſeigniories vnknowen, and not by the ſeas, and Nauigations, before their ſaide late aduenture or enterpriſe by ſea or Nauigation commonly frequented, We doe incorporate, name, and declare by theſe preſents, and that the ſame fellowſhip or communalty from henceforth ſhalbe, and may haue one Gouernour of the ſaide fellowſhip, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers.

The diſcouerie principally intended for Gods glory.

And in conſideration that one Sebaſtian Cabota hath bin the chiefeſt ſetter forth of this iourney or voyage, therefore we make, ordeine, and conſtitute him the ſaid Sebaſtian to be the firſt and preſent gouernour of the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie, by theſe preſents. To haue and enioy the ſaid office of Gouernour, to him the ſaid Sebaſtian Cabota during his naturall life, without amouing or dimiſſing from the ſame roome.

Sebaſtian Cabota firſt gouernour of the Muſcouie companie.

And furthermore, we graunt vnto the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie and their ſucceſſors, that they the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie, and their ſucceſſors after the deceaſe of the ſaide Sebaſtian Cabota, ſhall, and may freely and lawfully in places conuenient and honeſt, aſſemble themſelues together, or ſo many of them as will or can aſſemble together, as well within our citie of London, or elſewhere, as it ſhall pleaſe them, in ſuch ſort and maner, as other worſhipfull corporations of our ſaide citie haue vſed to aſſemble, and there yeerely name, elect and chooſe one Gouernour or two, of themſelues, and their liberties, and alſo as well yeerely during the natural life of the ſaid Sebaſtian Cabota now Gouernour, as alſo at the election of ſuch ſaide Gouernour or gouernours before his deceaſe, to chooſe, name and appoint eight and twenty of the moſt ſad, diſcreete, and honeſt perſons of the ſaide fellowſhip, and communaltie of Marchant aduenturers, as is aboue ſpecified, and 4. of the moſt expert and ſkilfull perſons of the ſame 28. to be named and called Conſuls, and 24. of the reſidue, to be named and called Aſſiſtants to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, and Conſuls for the time being, which ſhal remaine and ſtand in their authorities for one whole yeere then next following. And if it ſhall fortune the ſaide Gouernour, Conſuls, and aſſiſtants, or any of them ſo to be elected, and choſen as is aforeſaid, to die within the yeere after his or their election, that then and ſo often, it ſhall and may be lawfull to and for the ſaid fellowſhip, and communalty, to elect and chooſe of themſelues other Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, in the place and ſteede of ſuch as ſo ſhall happen to die, to ſerue out the ſame yeere.

And further we doe make, ordeine, and conſtitute George Barnes knight and Alderman of our Citie of London, William Garret Alderman of our ſaide Citie, Athonie Huſie, and Iohn Suthcot, to be the firſt and preſent 4. Conſuls of the ſaid fellowſhip and communalty by theſe preſents, to haue and enioy the ſaid offices of Conſuls to them the ſaid George Barnes, William Garret,

Sir George Barnes, William Garret, Anthony Huſie, Ioh. Suthcot, the firſt 4. Conſuls.

Anthony Huſie, & Iohn Suthcot, for terme of one whole yere next after y date of theſe our letters patents: And we doe likewiſe make, ordeine and conſtitute Sir Iohn Greſham knight, Sir Andrew Iudde knight, Sir Thomas White knight, Sir Iohn Yorke knight, Thomas Offley the elder, Thomas Lodge, Henry Herdſon, Iohn Hopkins, William Watſon, Will. Clifton, Richard Pointer, Richard Chamberlaine, William Mallorie, Thomas Pallie the elder, William Allen, Henry Becher, Geffrey Walkenden, Richard Fowles, Rowland Heyward, George Eaton, Iohn Elliot, Iohn Sparke, Blaſe Sanders, & Miles Mording, to be the firſt and preſent 24. Aſſiſtants to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, and Conſuls, and to the ſaid fellowſhip and communaltie by theſe preſents, to haue and enioy the ſaid offices of aſſiſtants to them for terme of one whole yere, next after the date of theſe our letters patents. And further, we for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, as much as in vs is, will & graunt by theſe preſents vnto the ſaide Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip & company of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaid, & to their ſucceſſors, that the ſaid gouernour or gouernours, 4. Conſuls, & 24. aſſiſtants, that now by theſe patents are nominated and appointed, or that hereafter by the ſaide fellowſhip & communaltie of marchants aduenturers, or the more part of them, which ſhalbe then preſent, ſo from time to time to be choſen, ſo that there be 15. at the leaſt wholy agreed thereof, the ſaid Gouernour or gouernours, or one of them, and 2. of the ſaid Conſuls ſhalbe there, and 12. of the reſidue of the ſaid number of 15. ſhall be of the ſaide aſſiſtants, and in the abſence of ſuch Gouernour, that then 3. of the ſaid Conſuls, and 12. of the ſaide aſſiſtants at the leaſt for the time being, ſhal & may haue, vſe and exerciſe ful power and authoritie to rule and gouerne all and ſingular the Marchants of the ſaid fellowſhip and communaltie, and to execute and doe full and ſpeedie iuſtice to them, and euery of them, in all their cauſes, differences, variances, controuerſies, quarrels, and complaints, within any our realmes, dominions & iuriſdictions onely moued, and to be moued touching their marchandiſe, traffikes, and occupiers aforeſaid, or the good order or rule of them or any of them.

Alſo wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, ſo much as in vs is, doe likewiſe by theſe preſents graunt, that the ſaid Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie, and their ſucceſſors ſhall and may haue perpetuall ſucceſſion, and a common Seale which ſhall perpetually ſerue for the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie. And that they and their ſucceſſours, ſhall and may bee for euer able perſons, and capax in the lawe, for to purchaſe and poſſeſſe in fee and perpetuitie, and for terme of life or liues, or for terme of yeeres or otherwiſe, lands, tenements, rents, reuerſions, and other poſſeſſions, and hereditaments whatſoeuer they bee, by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of the Marchants aduenturers by Seas and Nauigations for the diſcouerie of landes, territories, Iles, Dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and before the ſaide laſt aduenture or enterpriſe by ſeas not frequented, as before is ſpecified, and by the ſame names ſhall and may lawfully alien, graunt, let and ſet the ſame or any part thereof to any perſon or perſons able in the lawe to take and receiue the ſame. So that they doe not graunt nor alien the ſame, or any part thereof into mortmaine, without ſpeciall licence of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, firſt had and obteined.

Alſo wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours haue graunted, and by theſe preſents doe graunt vnto the ſaide Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of the ſaide Marchants and to their ſucceſſours, that they and their ſucceſſours, ſhall and may lawfully purchaſe vnto them and their ſucceſſors for euer, landes, tenements and hereditaments whatſoeuer, of the cleare yeerely value of threeſcore ſixe pounds, thirteene ſhillings & foure pence of lawful money of England and not aboue, as well of ſuch lands, tenements and hereditaments, as bee holden or ſhall be holden of vs, our heires or ſucceſſours, as of any other perſon or perſons, the ſtatutes prouided againſt alienations into mortmaine, or any of them, or any article or clauſe in them or any of them contained, or any other lawe, cuſtome, ſtatute or prouiſion to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And that they by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers, for the diſcouerie of lands territories, Iles, dominions and Seigniories vnknowen by the Seas and Nauigations, and not before the ſaid late aduenture or enterpriſe by ſeas frequented as aforeſaid, ſhall and may be able in the law to implead, and be impleaded, to anſwere, and to be anſwered, to defende, and to be defended before whatſoeuer Iudge or Iuſtice, temporall or ſpirituall, or other perſons whatſoeuer, in whatſoeuer court, or courts, and in all actions perſonall, reall, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaints of nouel diſſeiſon, and alſo in all plaints, ſuites, quarels, affaires, buſineſſes and demaunds whatſoeuer they bee, touching and concerning the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie, and the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſame onely, in as ample manner and forme, as any other corporation of this our Realme may doe.

Moreouer, wee for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, haue giuen and graunted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and graunt vnto the ſaid Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhippe, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaide, and to their ſucceſſours, that the ſaide Gouernour, or Gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, and their ſucceſſors, in maner, forme, and number afore rehearſed, ſhall haue full power and authoritie from time to time hereafter, to make, ordein, eſtabliſh and erect all ſuch ſtatutes, actes and ordinances, for the gouernement, good condition, and laudable rule of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaid, as to them ſhall bee thought good, meete, conuenient and neceſſarie, and alſo to admit vnto the ſaide Corporation and fellowſhip to be free of the ſame, ſuch and as many perſons, as to them ſhal bee thought good, meete, conuenient and neceſſarie. And that euery ſuch perſon or perſons, as ſhall fortune hereafter to bee admitted into the ſaide fellowſhippe, communaltie and corporation, ſhal from the time of his or their admittance, be free of the ſame. And alſo wee will, and by theſe preſents graunt for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, vnto the ſaide Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, communaltie of Marchants aduenturers aforeſaid, and to their ſucceſſours, that the Gouernour, or gouernors, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſame, in maner, forme, and number afore rehearſed, and their ſucceſſours for the time being, ſhall, and may haue full power and authoritie by theſe preſents from time to time, as to them ſhal ſeeme good, to limite, ſet, ordeine and make, mulcts, and penalties by fines, forfeitures, & impriſonments, or any of them vpon any offender of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie, for any offence touching the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie, and alſo that all acts and ordinances by them or their ſucceſſours to bee made, which time ſhall thinke not neceſſarie or preiudiciall to the ſaide fellowſhip or communaltie, at al times to reuoke, breake, fruſtrate, annihilate, repeale and diſſolue at their pleaſure and libertie. And further, wee will, that if any of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie ſhalbe found contrarious, rebellious, or diſobedient to the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, and the ſaid aſſiſtants for the time being, or to any ſtatutes, acts or ordinances by them made or to be made, that then the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, and the ſaide aſſiſtants, in maner, forme, and number aboue ſpecified, for the time being, ſhall and may by vertue of theſe preſents, mulct, and puniſh euery ſuch offender or offenders, as the quality of the offence requireth, according to their good diſcretions.

And further, we will that none of the ſaide offender or offenders ſhall decline from the power of the ſaide Gouernour, or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, in maner, forme, and number aboueſaide for the time being: ſo alwayes, that the ſaide actes, ſtatutes and ordinances, doe onely touch and concerne the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, and the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie of our before named Marchants aduenturers, or the men of the ſame fellowſhip and communaltie, and none other; And ſo alwayes, that ſuch their acts, ſtatutes and ordinances bee not againſt our prerogatiue, lawes, ſtatutes, and cuſtomes of our realmes and Dominions, nor contrary to the ſeuerall duetie of any our ſubiects towards vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, nor contrarie to any compacts, treaties or leagues, by vs or any our progenitours heretofore had or made, or hereafter by vs, our heires and ſucceſſours to bee made, to or with any forreine Prince or potentate, nor alſo to the preiudice of the corporation of the Maior, communalties and Citizens of our Citie of London, nor to the preiudice of any perſon or perſons, bodie politique, or corporate, or incorporate, iuſtly pretending, clayming, or hauing any liberties, franchiſes, priuileges, rightes or preheminences, by vertue or pretext of anie graunt, gift, or Letters patents, by vs, or anie our Progenitours, heeretofore giuen, graunted, or made.

Moreouer, we for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſours, will, and by theſe preſents, doe graunt vnto the ſaid Gouernors, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie of our Marchants aforeſaid, that their ſaid Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants, and their ſucceſſors for the time being, in maner, forme and number aboue rehearſed, ſhal haue full power and authoritie to aſſigne, conſtitute and ordaine one officer, or diuers officers as well within our aforeſaide Citie of London, as alſo in any other place or places of this our Realme of England, or elſe where within our dominions, which officer or officers, wee will to be named and called by the name of Sergeant or Sergeants to the fellowſhip or communalty of the ſaid marchants, and that the ſaid ſergeant or ſergeants, ſhall and may haue full power and authoritie by theſe preſents, to take, leuie and gather all maner fines, forfeitures, penalties and mulctes of euery perſon and perſons, of the ſaide fellowſhip and communaltie conuict, and that ſhalbe conuicted, vpon or for breaking of any ſtatutes, acts, ordinances, to bee made by the ſaide Gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants for the time being.

And further, wee will and alſo graunt for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours, that the ſaide officer or officers ſhall haue further power and authoritie for the default of payment, or for diſobedience in this behalfe (if neede be) to ſet handes and arreſt aſwell the bodie and bodies, as the goods and chattels of ſuch offender, and offenders, & tranſgreſſers, in euery place and places not franchiſed. And if it ſhall fortune any ſuch offender or offenders, their goods and chattels or any part thereof, to be in any citie, borough, towne incorporate, or other place franchiſed or priuileged, where the ſaid officer or officers may not lawfully intromit or intermeddle, that then the Maior, ſhirifes, bayliffes, and other head officers, or miniſters, within euery ſuch citie, borough, towne incorporate, or place or places franchiſed, vpon a precept to them, or any of them, to be directed from the gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſaid fellowſhip, in number and forme aforeſaid, vnder the common ſeale of the ſayd fellowſhip and communaltie for the time being, ſhall and may attach & arreſt the body or bodies of ſuch offender or offenders, as alſo take, and ſeiſe the goods and chattels of all and euery ſuch offender or offenders, being within any ſuch place or places franchiſed, and the ſame body and bodies, goods and chattels of all and euery ſuch offender and offenders, being within any ſuch place or places franchiſed, and euery part therof ſo attached and ſeaſed, ſhall according to the tenor and purport of the ſayd precept, returne, and deliuer vnto the ſayd officer or officers of the aforeſaid fellowſhip, and communaltie.

And further, we will and grant for vs, our heires and ſucceſſours by theſe preſents, that all, and euery ſuch Maior, ſhirife, baylife, or other head officers or miniſters of any citie, borough, towne incorporate, or other places franchiſed, ſhall not be impeached, moleſted, vexed or ſued in any our court or courts, for executing or putting in execution of any of the ſaid precept or precepts.

And furthermore, we of our ample and abundant grace, meere motion, & certaine knowledge, for vs, our heires, and ſucceſſors, as much as in vs is, haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and grant vnto the ſayd gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, and communaltie of Marchants aduenturers, and to their ſucceſſors, and to the Factor and Factors, aſſigne and aſſignes of euery of them, ful and free authoritie, libertie, facultie and licence, and power to ſaile to all portes, regions, dominions, territories, landes, Iſles, Ilands, and coaſtes of the ſea, whereſoeuer before their late aduenture or enterpriſe vnknowen, or by our Marchants and ſubiects by the ſeas not heretofore commonly frequented, vnder our banner, ſtanderd, flags and enſignes, with their ſhippe, ſhips, barke, pinneſſes, and all other veſſels of whatſoeuer portage, bulke, quantitie or qualitie they may be, and with any Mariners, and men as they will leade with them in ſuch ſhippe or ſhippes, or other veſſels at their owne and proper coſts and expences, for to traffique, deſcrie, diſcouer and ſearche, whatſoeuer Iſle, Ilands, countreis, regions, prouinces, creekes, armes of the ſea, riuers & ſtreames, as wel of Gentiles, as of any other Emperor, king, prince, gouernor or Lord whatſoeuer he or they ſhalbe, and in whatſoeuer part of the world they be ſituated, being before the ſayd late aduenture or enterpriſe vnknowen, and by our Marchants and ſubiects not commonly frequēted: and to enter and land in the ſame, without any maner of denying, paine, penaltie or forfeiture to be had or taken by anie our lawes, cuſtomes or ſtatutes to our vſe, or to the vſe of our heires or ſucceſſors for the ſame.

K. Philip and Queene Mary hereby do diſanull Pope Alexanders biſſion.

And we haue alſo granted, and by theſe preſents, for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, doe graunt vnto the ſayd Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communaltie, and to their ſucceſſours, and to their Factors and aſſignes, and to euery of them, licence for to reare, plant, erect, and faſten our banners, ſtandards, flags, and Enſignes, in whatſoeuer citie, towne, village, caſtle, Iſle, or maine lande, which ſhall be by them newly found, without any the penalties, forfeitures, or dangers aforeſayde, and that the ſayd fellowſhip and communaltie, and their ſucceſſors, Factors & aſſignes and euery of them ſhall and may ſubdue, poſſeſſe and occupie, all maner cities, townes, Iſles, and maine lands of infidelitie, which is or ſhall be by them, or any of them newly founde or deſcried, as our vaſſals and ſubiects, and for to acquire and get the Dominion, title, and iuriſdiction of the ſame Cities, Townes, Caſtles, Villages, Iſles, and maine landes, which ſhall bee by them, or any of them newly diſcouered or found vnto vs, our heires and ſucceſſours for euer.

Conqueſt permitted.

And furthermore, whereas by the voyage of our ſubiects in this laſt yeere attempted by Nauigation, towards the diſcouerie and diſcloſure of vnknowen places, Realmes, Ilandes, and Dominions by the ſeas not frequented, it hath pleaſed Almightie God to cauſe one of the three ſhippes by them ſet foorth for the voyage, and purpoſe aboue mentioned, named the Edward Bonauenture, to arriue, abide, and winter within the Empire and dominions of the high and mightie Prince our couſin and brother, Lord Iohn Baſiliuich Emperour of all Ruſſia, Volodomer, great duke of Moſcouie, &c. Who, of his clemencie, for our loue and zeale, did not onely admitte the Captaine, and marchants our ſubiects into his protection, and Princely preſence, but alſo receiued and intertained them very graciouſly, and honourably, granting granting vnto them by his letters addreſſed vnto vs, franke acceſſe into all his Seigniories and dominions, with licence freely to traffique in and out with all his Subiects in all kinde of Marchandiſe, with diuers other gracious priuiledges, liberties and immunities ſpecified in his ſayde letters vnder his Signet: Know yee therefore that wee of our further royall fauour and munificence, of our meere motion, certaine knowledge, and ſpeciall grace, for vs our heires and ſucceſſours, haue giuen and granted, and by theſe preſents doe giue and grant vnto the ſame Gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip, and communalty aboue named, and to their ſucceſſours, as much as in vs is, that all the mayne landes, Iſles, portes, hauens, creekes, and riuers of the ſaid mighty Emperour of all Ruſſia, and great duke of Moſco, &c. And all and ſinguler other landes, dominions, territories, Iſles, Portes, hauens, creekes, riuers, armes of the ſea, of al and euery other Emperor, king, prince, ruler and gouernor, whatſoeuer he or they before the ſaid late aduenture or enterpriſe not knowen, or by our foreſayd marchants and ſubiects by the ſeas, not commonly frequented, nor by any part nor parcell thereof lying Northwards, Northeaſtwards, or Northweſtwards, as is aforeſayd, by ſea ſhall not be viſited, frequented nor haunted by any our ſubiects, other then of the ſayd company and felowſhip, and their ſucceſſours without expreſſe licence, agreement and conſent of the Gouernour, Conſuls, and Aſſiſtants of the ſaid felowſhip and communaltie aboue named, or the more part of them, in manner and number aforeſayd, for the time being, vpon paine of forfeiture and loſſe, as well of the ſhippe and ſhippes, with the appurtenances, as alſo of all the goods, marchandiſes, and things whatſoeuer they be, of thoſe our ſubiects, not being of the ſayd felowſhip and communalty, which ſhall attempt or preſume to ſaile to any of thoſe places, which bee, or hereafter ſhall happen to bee found, and traffiked vnto: the one halfe of the ſame forfeiture to be to the vſe of us, our heires and ſucceſſors, and the other halfe to be to the vſe of the ſayd fellowſhip and communaltie. And if it ſhall fortune anie ſtranger or ſtrangers, for to attempt to hurt, hinder, or endamage the ſame marchants, their factors, deputies or aſſignes, or any of them in ſailing, going or returning at any time in the ſayd aduenture, or for to ſaile or trade to or from any thoſe places, landes or coaſts, which by the ſayd marchants, their factors, deputies and aſſignes haue bene, or ſhall bee deſcried, diſcouered and found, or frequented, aſwell within the coaſts and limites of gentility, as within the dominions and Seigniories of the ſayd mighty Emperour and Duke, and of all and euery other Emperour, King, Prince, Ruler and gouernour whatſoeuer he or they be, before the ſayd late aduenture or enterpriſe not knowen by any our ſaid marchants and ſubiects, by the ſeas not commonly frequented, and lying Northwards, Northweſtwards or Northeaſtwards as aforeſaid, then wee will and grant, and by theſe preſents doe licence, and authoriſe for vs, our heires and ſucceſſors, the ſaid marchants, their factors, deputies, and aſſignes, and euery of them to doe their beſt in their defence, to reſiſt the ſame their enterpriſes and attempts. Willing therefore, and ſtraightly commanding and charging al and ſinguler our Officers, Maiors, Sheriffes, Eſcheators, Conſtables, Bayliffes, and all and ſinguler other our miniſters and liege men, and ſubiects whatſoeuer, to bee ayding, fauouring, helping & aſſiſting vnto the ſayd gouernour or gouernours, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, fellowſhip and communalty, and to their ſucceſſors and deputies, factors, ſeruants, and aſſignes, and to the deputies, factors and aſſignes of euery of them, in executing and enioying the premiſſes, as well on land as in the ſea, from time to time, and at all times when you or any of you ſhall be thereunto required. In witneſſe whereof, &c.

Anno 1555.

Apud Weſtmonaſterium, 6 die Feb. Annis regnorum noſtrorum, primo & ſecundo.

Certaine inſtructions deliuered in the third voyage, Anno 1556. for Ruſsia, to euery Purſer and the reſt of the ſeruants, taken for the voyage, which may ſerue as good and neceſſary directions, to all other like aduenturers.

1 FIrſt you ſhall before the ſhip doth begin to lade, goe aboord, and ſhall there take, and write one inuentorie, by the aduiſe of the Maſter, or of ſome other principall officer there aboord, of all the tackle, apparell, cables, ankers, ordinance, chambers, ſhot, powder, artillerie, and of all other neceſſaries whatſoeuer doth belong to the ſayd ſhip: and the ſame iuſtly taken, you ſhall write in a booke, making the ſayd Maſter, or ſuch officer priuie of that which you haue ſo written, ſo that the ſame may not be denied, when they ſhall call accompt thereof: that done, you ſhall write a copie of the ſame with your owne hand, which you ſhall deliuer before the ſhippe ſhall depart, for the voyage to the companies booke keeper here to be kept to their behalfe, to the ende that they may be iuſtly anſwered the ſame, when time ſhall require: and this order to be ſeene and kept euery voyage orderly, by the Purſers of the companies owne ſhip, in any wiſe.

2 Alſo when the ſhippe beginneth to lade, you ſhall be ready a boord with your booke, to enter ſuch goods as ſhall be brought aboord, to be laden for the company, packed, or vnpacked, taking the markes and numbers of euery packe, fardell, truſſe, or packet, corouoys, cheſt, fatte, butte, pipe, puncheon, whole barrell, halfe barrell, firken, or other caſke, maunde, or baſket, or any other thing, which may, or ſhall be packed by any other manner of waies or deuiſe. And firſt, all ſuch packes, or truſſes, &c. as ſhal be brought aboord to be laden, not marked by the companies marke, you ſhall doe the beſt to let that the ſame be not laden, and to enquire diligently to know the owners thereof, if you can, and what commoditie the ſame is, that is ſo brought aboord to be laden: if you can not know the owners of ſuch goods, learne what you can thereof, as well making a note in your booke, as alſo to ſend or bring word thereof to the Agent, and to ſome one of the foure Marchants with him adioined ſo ſpeedily as you can, if it be here laden or to be laden in this riuer, being not marked with the companies marke, as is aforeſaid: and when the ſayd ſhippe hath receiued in all that the companies Agent will haue laden, you ſhal make a iuſt copie of that which is laden, reciting the parcels, the markes and numbers of euery thing plainely, which you ſhall likewiſe deliuer to the ſayd bookekeeper to the vſe aforeſayd.

3 Alſo when the ſhip is ready to depart, you ſhall come for your cockets and letters to the Agent, and ſhall ſhew him all ſuch letters as you haue receiued of any perſon or perſons priuately or openly, to be deliuered to any perſon or perſons in Ruſſia or elſewhere, and alſo to declare if you know any other that ſhall paſſe in the ſhip either maſter or mariner that hath receiued any letters to be priuily deliuered to any there, directed frõ any perſon or perſons, other then from the Agent here to the Agent there: which letters ſo by you receiued, you ſhall not carie with you, without you be licenced ſo to doe by the Agent here, and ſome of the foure merchants, as is aforeſayd: and ſuch others as do paſſe, hauing receiued any priuie letters to be deliuered, you ſhal all that in you lieth, let the deliuerie of them at your arriuing in Ruſſia: and alſo if you haue or do receiue, or ſhal know any other that doth or hath receiued any goods or ready money to be imployed in Ruſſia, or to bee deliuered there to any perſon or perſons from any perſon or perſons, other then ſuch as bee the companies goods, and that vnder their marke, you ſhall before the ſhip doeth depart, declare the ſame truely to the ſayd Agent, and to ſome of the other merchants to him adioyned, as it is before declared.

4 Alſo when the ſhippe is ready to depart, and hath the maſter and the whole company aboord, you ſhall diligently foreſee and take heede, that there paſſe not any priuie perſon or perſons, other then ſuch as be authorized to paſſe in the ſaid ſhip, without the licence and warrant of one of the Gouernours and of the aſſiſtants, for the ſame his paſſage, to be firſt ſhewed. And if there be any ſuch perſon or perſons that is to paſſe and will paſſe without ſhewing the ſame warrant, you ſhall let the paſſage of any ſuch to the vttermoſt of your power: And for that there may no ſuch priuie perſon paſſe vnder the cloke and colour of ſome mariner, you ſhall vpon the weying of your ſhips anker, call the maſter and the mariners within boord by their names and that by your bookes, to the ende that you may ſee that you haue neither more nor leſſe; but iuſt the number for the voyage.

5 Alſo you muſt haue in remembrance, that if it ſhall chance the ſhippe to bee put into anie harbour in this coaſt by contrary windes or otherwiſe in making the voyage, to ſend word thereof from time to time as the caſe ſhall require, by your letters in this maner. To maſter I.B. Agent for the company of the New trades in S. in London: If you doe hier any to bring your letters, write that which he muſt haue for the portage. And for your better knowledge and learning, you ſhall do very well to keepe a dayly note of the voyage both outwards and homewards.

6 And principally ſee that you forget not dayly in all the voiage both morning and euening, to call the company within boord to prayer, in which doing you ſhall pleaſe God, and the voiage will haue the better ſucceſſe thereby, and the company proſper the better.

7 Alſo in calme weather and at other times when you ſhall fortune to come to anker in the ſeas during the voyage, you ſhall for the companies profite, and for the good huſbanding of the victuals aboord, call vpon the Boatеſwaine and other of the company to vſe ſuch hookes and other engines as they haue aboord to take fiſh with, that ſuch fiſh ſo taken may bee eaten for the cauſe aforeſayd: and if there bee no ſuch engines aboord, then to prouide ſome before you goe from hence.

8 And when God ſhall ſend you in ſafetie into the Bay of S. Nicholas at an anker, you ſhall goe a ſhore with the firſt boate that ſhall depart from the ſhip, taking with you ſuch letters as you haue to deliuer to the Agent there: and if he be not there at your comming a land, then ſend the companies letters to Colmogro to him by ſome ſure mariner or otherwiſe, as the maſter and you ſhall thinke beſt, but goe not your ſelfe at any hand, nor yet from aboord the ſhip, vnleſſe it bee a ſhore to treate with the Agent for the lading of the ſhip that you be appointed in, which you ſhall applie diligently to haue done ſo ſpeedily as may be. And for the diſcharging of the goods therein in the Bay, to be carried from thence, ſee that you doe looke well to the vnlading thereof, that there be none other goods ſent a ſhore then the companies, and according to the notes entred in your booke as is aforeſaid: if there be, inquire diligently for whom they bee, and what goods they be, noting who is the receiuer of the ſayd goods, in ſuch ſort that the company may haue the true knowledge thereof at your comming home.

9 Alſo there a ſhore, and likewiſe aboord, you ſhall ſpie and ſearch as ſecretly as you may, to learne and know what bargaining, buying and ſelling there is with the maſter and the mariners of the ſhippe and the Ruſſes, or with the companies ſeruants there: and that which you ſhall perceiue and learne, you ſhall keepe a note thereof in your booke ſecretly to your ſelfe, which you ſhall open and diſcloſe at your comming home to the gouernours and aſſiſtants, in ſuch ſorte as the trueth of their ſecret trades and occupyings may be reuealed and knowen. You ſhal need alwayes to haue Argos eyes, to ſpie their ſecret packing and conueyance, aſwell on land as aboord the ſhippe, of and for ſuch furres and other commodities, as ſecretly they doe vſe to buy, packe and conuey hither. If you will bee vigilant and ſecrete in this article, you cannot miſſe to ſpie their priuie packing one with another, either on ſhore or aboord the ſhippe: worke herein wiſely, and you ſhall deſerue great thanks of the whole company.

10 Alſo at the lading againe of the ſhippe, you ſhall continue and abide aboord, to the ende that you may note and write in your booke all ſuch goods and marchandiſes as ſhall be brought and laden, which you ſhall orderly note in all ſortes as heretofore, as in the ſecond article partly it is touched: and in any wiſe put the Maſter and the company in remembrance, to looke and foreſee ſubſtantially to the roomaging of the ſhippe, by faire meanes or threats, as you ſhall ſee and thinke will ſerue for the beſt.

11 Thus when the ſhippe is full laden againe, and all things aboord in good order, and that you doe fortune to goe a ſhore to the Agent for your letters, and diſpatch away: you ſhall demand whether all the goods be laden that were brought thither, and to know the trueth therof, you ſhal repaire to the companies ſtorehouſe there at S. Nicholas, to ſee if there be any goods left in the ſayd ſtorehouſe: if there be, you ſhal demand why they be not laden, and note what kinde of goods they be that be ſo left: and ſeeing any of the ſhippes there not fully laden, you ſhall put the Agent in remembrance to lade thoſe goods ſo left, if any ſuch be to be laden, as is aforeſayd. And thus God ſending you a faire wind, to make ſpeede and away.

12 Finally, when God ſhall ſend you to arriue againe vpon this coaſt in ſafetie, either at Harewich, or elſewhere, goe not you aland, if you may poſſiblie, to the ende that when you be gone a ſhore, there may no goods be ſent priuily aſhore to be ſolde, or elſe to be ſolde aboord the ſhip in your abſence, but keepe you ſtill aboord, if you can by any meanes, for the cauſes aforeſaid, and write the company a letter from the ſhippe of your good arriuall, which you may conuey to them by land by ſome boy or mariner of the ſhippe, or otherwiſe as you ſhall thinke beſt: and likewiſe when God ſhall ſend you and the ſhippe into the riuer here, doe not in any wiſe depart out of the ſhippe that you be in, vntil the company doe ſend ſome other aboord the ſhippe, in your ſteede and place, to keepe the ſhippe in your abſence.

The Nauigation and diſcouerie toward the riuer of Ob, made by Maſter Steuen Burrough, Maſter of the Pinneſſe called the Serchthrift, with diuers things worth the noting, paſſed in the yere 1556.

Aprill 23. WE departed from Ratcliffe to Blackewall the 23 of April. Satturday being S. Markes day, we departed from Blackewall to Grays.

27 The 27 being Munday, the right Worſhipfull Sebaſtian Cabota came aboord our Pinneſſe at Graueſende, accompanied with diuers Gentlemen, and Gentlewomen, who after that they had viewed our Pinneſſe, and taſted of ſuch cheere as we could make them aboord, they went on ſhore, giuing to our mariners right liberall rewards: and the good olde Gentleman Maſter Cabota gaue to the poore moſt liberall almes, wiſhing them to pray for the good fortune, and proſperous ſucceſſe of the Serchthrift, our Pinneſſe. And then at the ſigne of the Chriſtopher, hee and his friends banketted, and made me, and them that were in the company great cheere: and for very ioy that he had to ſee the towardnes of our intended diſcouery, he entred into the dance himſelfe, amongſt the reſt of the young and luſty company: which being ended, hee and his friends departed moſt gently, commending vs to the gouernance of almighty God.

Tueſday we rode ſtill at Graueſend, making prouiſion for ſuch things as we wanted. 28

Wedneſday in the morning we departed from Graueſende, the winde being at Southweſt, 29 that night we came to an anker thwart our Lady of Hollands.

Thurſday at three of the clocke in the morning we weyed, and by eight of the clocke, we were 30 at an anker in Orwell wannes, and then incontinent I went aboord the Edward Bonauenture, where the worſhipfull company of marchants appointed me to be, vntill the ſayd good ſhip arriued at Wardhouſe. Then I returned againe into the pinneſſe.

Note May 15.

Friday the 15 of May we were within 7 leagues of the ſhore, on the coaſt of Norway: the latitude at a South ſunne, 58 degrees and a halfe, where we ſaw three ſailes, beſide our owne company: and thus we followed the ſhoare or land, which lieth Northnorthweſt, North and by Weſt, and Northweſt and by North, as it doth appeare by the plat.

Saturday at an Eaſt ſunne we came to S. Dunſtans Iſland, which Iſland I ſo named. It 26 was off vs Eaſt two leagues and a halfe, the wind being at Southeaſt: the latitude this day at a South ſunne 59 degrees, 42 minutes. Alſo the high round mountaine bare Eaſt of vs, at a ſouth ſunne: and when this hill is Eaſt of you, and being bound to the Northward, the land lyeth North and halfe a point Weſterly, from this ſayd South ſunne, vnto a North ſunne twenty leagues Northweſt alongſt the ſhoare.

Upon Sunday at ſixe of the clocke in the morning, the fartheſt land that we could ſee that lay 17 Northnorthweſt, was Eaſt of vs three leagues, and then it trended to the Northwards, and to the Eaſtwards of the North, which headland I iudged to be Scoutſneſſe. At ſeuen of the clocke we changed our courſe and went North, the wind being at Southſoutheaſt, and it waxed very thick and miſtie, and when it cleered, we went Northnortheaſt. At a South ſunne we loſt ſight of the Serchthrift, becauſe of the miſt, making our way North. And when we loſt ſight of the ſhoare and pinneſſe, we were within two leagues & a halfe of the ſhoare: the laſt land that we ſaw when this miſt came vpon vs, which is to the Northwards of Scowtſneſſe, lay Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt, and we made our way North vntill a weſt ſunne fiue leagues.

From that vntill Munday three a clocke in the morning ten leagues Northnortheaſt: and then 18 we went North and by Eaſt, becauſe the winde came at the Weſtſouthweſt with thicke miſte: the latitude this day at a South ſunne ſixtie three degrees and a halfe truely taken: at this ſeaſon we had ſight of our Pinneſſe againe.

From that vntill Tueſday a South ſunne Northnortheaſt fortie foure leagues, and then 19 Northeaſt. From a South ſunne vntill eight of the clocke, fifteene leagues Northeaſt.

From that vntill Wedneſday a South ſunne Northnortheaſt, except the firſt watch North- 20 eaſt: then had we the latitude in ſixtie ſeuen degrees, thirtie nine minutes. From that vnto a Northweſt ſunne eighteen leagues Northeaſt, & then we were within two leagues off the ſhore, and ſaw the high land to the Southwards of Lowfoot breake out through the miſt, and then we went North and by eaſt.

From the ſayd Northweſt ſunne vntill foure of the clocke in the morning North and by Eaſt 21 ten leagues and a halfe: and then Northnortheaſt vntill a South ſunne, the latitude being ſixtie nine degrees, and a halfe. From that vntill halfe an houre paſt ſeuen of the clocke, Northnorth-eaſt eleuen leagues and a halfe, and then we went Northeaſt ten leagues. From that 3 leagues 22 and a halfe Eaſtnortheaſt, and then we ſawe the land through the cloudes and hazie thwart on the broad ſide of vs the winde being then at Southſouthweſt.

From that vntill Saturday, at eight of the clocke in the morning Eaſtnortheaſt, and to the 23 Northwards fortie eight leagues, and then the wind came vp at North, wee being aboord the ſhore, and thwart of the Chappel, which I ſuppoſe is called Kedilwike: then we caſt the ſhippes head to the ſeawards, becauſe the winde was verie ſcant: and then I cauſed the Pinneſſe to beare in with the ſhore, to ſee whether ſhe might find an harborough for the ſhips or not, and that ſhe found and ſaw two roaders ride in the ſound: and alſo they ſawe houſes. But notwithſtanding, God be prayſed, the winde enlarged vpon vs, that we had not occaſion to goe into the harborough: and then the Pinneſſe bare her Myſſen maſt ouer boord with flagge and all, and loſt the flagge: with the maſt there fell two men ouer boord, but God be praiſed, they were ſaued: the flagge was a token, whereby we might vnderſtand whether there were a good harbour there or not.

Kedelwike chappell.

At a North ſunne the North cape (which I ſo named the firſt voyage) was thwart of vs, which is nine leagues to the Eaſtwards of the foreſayd Chappel from the Eaſtermoſt point of it.

The North cape ſo named by Steuen Burrowe.

Iune.

7 The ſunday we weied in Corpus Chriſti Bay, at a Northeaſt and by Eaſt ſunne: the Bay is almoſt halfe a league deepe: the headland which is Corpus Chriſti point, lyeth Southeaſt and by Eaſt, one league from the head of the Bay, where we had a great tyde, like a race ouer the flood: the Bay is at the leaſt two leagues ouer: ſo doe I imagine from the fayre foreland to Corpus Chriſti poynt ten leagues Southeaſt and by Eaſt: It floweth in this Bay, at a South and by Weſt moone full ſea. From that we went vntill ſeuen a clocke at after noone twentie leagues Southeaſt and by South: and then we tooke in all our ſailes, becauſe it was then very miſtie, and alſo we met with much ice that ran out of the Bay, and then wee went Southſoutheaſt with our foreſayle: at eight of the clocke, we heard a piece of ordinance, which was out of the Edward, which bade vs farewell, and then we ſhot off another piece, and bade her farewell: wee could not one ſee the other, becauſe of the thicke miſte: at a Northweſt ſunne it began ſomewhat to cleere, and then we ſawe a head lande, and the ſhoare trended to the Southweſtward, which I iudged to be about Croſſe Iſland: it was off vs at a Northnorthweſt ſunne, Weſtſouthweſt.

8 From this Northnorthweſt ſunne, vntill Munday, we went Southeaſt, and this morning we came at anker among the ſhoales that lie off of point Looke out, at a Northeaſt and by Eaſt ſunne, the wind being at Eaſtſoutheaſt. At this poynt Looke out, a ſouth Moone maketh a full
ſea. Cape good fortune lyeth from the Iſle of Croſſes Southeaſt, and betweene them is tenne leagues: point Looke out lieth from Cape Good fortune Eaſtſoutheaſt, and betweene them are ſixe leagues. S. Edmonds point lieth from point Looke out Eaſtſoutheaſt, and halfe a point to the Southwards, and betweene them are ſixe leagues. There is betweene theſe two points, a Bay that is halfe a league deepe, and is full of ſhoales and dangers. At a Southeaſt ſunne we weyed, and turned to the windwards, the winde being at Eaſtſoutheaſt: and at a Southeaſt ſunne, we came to an anker, being then a full ſea, in fiue fadoms and a halfe water. It hieth at this place where we roade, and alſo at point Looke out, foure fadome water. At a Weſtnorth-9 weſt ſunne we weyed, and driued to the windewards, vntill Tueſday, a Northnortheaſt ſunne, and then being a high water, we came to an anker open of the riuer Cola, in eight fadome water. Cape S. Bernard lyeth from S. Edmonds point, Southeaſt and by South, and betwixt them are ſixe leagues, and alſo betwixt them is the Riuer Cola, into which Riuer wee went this euening.

The latitude of Cola.

10 Wedneſday we roade ſtill in the ſayd riuer, the winde being at the north: we ſent our ſkiffe aland to be dreſſed: the latitude of the mouth of the riuer Cola is ſixtie fiue degrees, fortie and eight minutes.

A Ruſſe Lodia.

11 Thurſday at 6 of the clocke in the morning, there came aboord of vs one of the Ruſſe Lodiaes, rowing with twentie oares, and there were foure and twenty men in her. The maſter of the boate preſented me with a great loafe of bread, and ſixe ringes of bread, which they call Colaches, and foure dryed pikes, and a pecke of fine otemeale, and I gaue vnto the Maſter of the boate, a combe, and a ſmall glaſſe: and he declared vnto me, that he was bound to Pechora, and after that, I made them to drinke, the tide being ſomewhat broken, they gently departed. The Maſters name was Pheodor.

Whereas the tenth day I ſent our Pinneſſe on ſhoare to be mended, becauſe ſhe was leake, and weake, with the Carpenter and three men more to helpe him, the weather chanced ſo, that it was Sunday before they could get aboord our ſhippe. All that time they were without prouiſion of victuals, but onely a little bread, which they ſpent by Thurſday at night, thinking to haue come aboord when they had liſted, but winde and weather denied them: inſomuch that they were faine to eate graſſe, and ſuch weedes as they could finde then aboue grounde, but freſh water they had plentie, but the meate with ſome of them could ſcant frame by reaſon of their queazie ſtomackes.

14 From Thurſday at afternoone, vntill Sunday in the morning, our barke did ride ſuch a road ſted that it was to be marueiled, without the helpe of God, how ſhe was able to abide it.

In the bight of the Southeaſt ſhoare of the riuer Cola, there is a good roade in fiue fadome, or foure fadome and a halfe, at a lowe water: but you ſhall haue no land Northnortheaſt of you then, I proued with our pinneſſe, that the depth goeth on the Southeaſt ſhoare.

18 Thurſday we weyed our ankers in the Riuer Cola, and went into the Sea ſeuen or eight leagues, where we met with the winde farre Northerly, that of force it conſtrained vs to goe againe backe into the ſayd riuer, where came aboord of vs ſundry of their Boates, which declared vnto me that they were alſo bound to the Northwards, a fiſhing for Morſe, and Salmon, and gaue me liberally of their white and wheaten bread.

As we roade in this riuer, wee ſawe dayly comming downe the riuer many of their Lodias, and they that had leaſt, had foure and twentie men in them, and at the laſt they grewe to thirtie ſaile of them: and amongſt the reſt, there was one of them whoſe name was Gabriel, who ſhewed to me very much friendſhippe, and he declared vnto mee, that all they were bound to Pechora, a fiſhing for Salmons, and Morſes: inſomuch that hee ſhewed mee by demonſtrations, that with a faire winde wee had ſeuen or eight dayes ſailing to the Riuer Pechora, ſo that I was glad of their company. This Gabriel promiſed to giue mee warning of ſhoales, as hee did indeede.

Lodias hauing 24 men a peice.

From Cola to Pechora is but 7 or 8 dayes ſayling.

Sunday being the one and twentieth day, Gabriel gaue me a barrell of Meade, and one of his ſpeciall friends gaue me a barrell of beere, which was caryed vpon mens backs at leaſt 2 miles. 21

Monday we departed from the riuer Cola, with all the reſt of the ſaid Lodias, but ſailing before the winde, they were all too good for vs: but according to promiſe, this Gabriel and his friend did often ſtrike their ſayles, and taried for vs forſaking their owne company. 22

The curteſie of one Gabriel.

Tueſday at an Eaſtnortheaſt ſunne we were thwart of Cape S. John. It is to be vnderſtood, that from the Cape S. John vnto the riuer or bay that goeth to Mezen, it is all ſunke land, and full of ſhoales and dangers, you ſhall haue ſcant two fadome water, and ſee no land. And this preſent day wee came to an anker thwart of a creeke, which is 4 or 5 leagues to the Northwards of the ſayd Cape, into which creeke Gabriel and his fellow rowed, but we could not get in: and before night there were aboue 20 ſaile that went into the ſayd creeke, the wind being at the Northeaſt. We had indifferent good landfang. 23

A good & neceſſarie note.

This afternoone Gabriel came aboord with his ſkiffe, and then I rewarded him for the good company that he kept with vs ouer the ſhoales with two ſmall ivory combes, and a ſteele glaſſe, with two or three trifles more, for which he was not vngratefull. But notwithſtanding, his firſt company had gotten further to the Northwards.

Wedneſday being Midſummer day, we ſent our ſkiffe aland to ſound the creeke, where they found it almoſt drie at a low water. And all the Lodias within were on ground. 24

Although the harborough were euil, yet the ſtormie ſimilitude of Northerly winds tempted vs to ſet our ſayles, & we let ſlip a cable and an anker, and bare with the harborough, for it was then neere a high water: and as alwaies in ſuch iourneis varieties do chance, when we came vpon the barre in the entrance of the creeke, the wind did ſhrink ſo ſuddenly vpon vs, that we were not able to lead it in, and before we could haue flatted the ſhippe before the winde, we ſhould haue bene on ground on the lee ſhore, ſo that we were conſtrained to let fall an anker vnder our ſailes, and rode in a very breach, thinking to haue warpt in. Gabriel came out with his ſkiffe, and ſo did ſundry others alſo, ſhewing their good will to helpe vs, but all to no purpoſe, for they were likely to haue bene drowned for their labour, in ſo much that I deſired Gabriel to lend me his anker, becauſe our owne ankers were two big for our ſkiffe to lay out, who ſent me his owne, and borrowed another alſo and ſent it vs. Then we layd out one of thoſe ankers, with a halſer which he had of 140 fadom long, thinking to haue warpt in, but it would not be: for as we ſhorted vpon ẏ ſaid warpe the anker came home, ſo that we were faine to heaue the end of the warpe, that we ruſhed in vpon the other ſmall anker that Gabriel ſent aboord, and layd that anker to ſeawards: and then betweene theſe two ankers we trauerſed the ſhips head to ſeawards, and ſet our foreſaile and maine ſayle, and when the barke had way, we cut the halſer, and ſo gate the ſea to our friends, and tryed out al that day with our maine corſe.

The Thurſday we went roome with Cape S. Iohn, where we found indifferent good rode for a Northnortheaſt wind, and for a neede, for a North and by Weſt winde. 25

Friday at afternoone we weyed, and departed from thence, the wether being meetly faire, & the winde at Eaſtſoutheaſt, and plied for the place where we left our cable and anker, and our halſer: & as ſoone as we were at an anker, the foreſaid Gabriel came aboord of vs, with 3 or foure more of their ſmall boats, and brought with them of their Aquauitæ & Meade, profeſſing vnto me very much friendſhip, and reioiced to ſee vs againe, declaring that they earneſtly thought that we had bene loſt. This Gabriel declared vnto me, that they had ſaued both the ankers and our hauſer, and after we had thus communed, I cauſed 4 or 5 of them to goe into my cabbin, where I gaue them figs, and made them ſuch cheere as I could. While I was thus banketing of thē, there came another of their ſkiffes aboord with one who was a Kerill, whoſe name afterwards I learned, & that he dwelt in Colmogro, & Gabriel dwelled in the towne of Cola, which is not far from the riuers mouth. This foreſaid Kerill ſaid vnto me that one of the ankers which I borowed was his, I gaue him thanks for the lone of it, thinking it had bene ſufficient. And as I continued in one accuſtomed 26 maner, that if the preſent which they brought were worth entertainment, they had it accordingly, he brought nothing with him, & therfore I regarded him but litle. And thus we ended, & they tooke their leaue and went a ſhore. At their comming aſhore, Gabriel and Keril were at vnconuenient words, and by the eares, as I vnderſtand: the cauſe was becauſe the one had better entertainment then the other: but you ſhal vnderſtand that Gabriel was not able to make his party good, becauſe there were 17 lodias of the Kerils company who tooke his part, and but 2 of Gabriels company.

Twentie eight Lodias belonging to Cola.

The next high water Gabriel and his company departed from thence, and rowed to their former company and neighbours, which were in number 28 at the leaſt, and all of them belonging to the riuer Cola.

27 And as I vnderſtood Keril made reckoning that the hawſer which was faſt in his anker ſhould haue bene his owne, and at firſt would not deliuer it to our boat, inſomuch that I ſent him worde that I would complaine vpon him, whereupon he deliuered the hawſer to my company.

The next day being Saturday, I ſent our boat on ſhore to fetch freſh water and wood, and at their comming on ſhore this Keril welcomed our men moſt gently, and alſo banketed them: and in the meane time cauſed ſome of his men to fill our baricoes with water, and to help our men to beare wood into their boat: and then he put on his beſt ſilke coate, and his coller of pearles, and came aboord againe, & brought his preſent with him: and thus hauing more reſpect vnto his preſent then to his perſon, becauſe I perceiued him to be vainglorious, I bade him welcome, and gaue him a diſh of figs: and then he declared vnto me that his father was a gentleman, and that he was able to ſhew me pleaſure, and not Gabriel, who was but a prieſts ſonne.

28 After their departure from vs we weied, and plyed all the ebbe to the windewards, the winde being Northerly, & towards night it waxed very ſtormie, ſo that of force we were conſtrained to go roome with Cape S. Iohn againe, in which ſtorme wee loſt our ſkiffe at our ſterne, that wee bought at Wardhouſe, and there we rode vntill the fourth of Iuly. The latitude of Cape S. Iohn is 66 degrees 50 minutes. And it is to be noted, that the land of Cape S. Iohn is of height from the full ſea marke, as I iudge, 10 fadomes, being cleane without any trees growing, & alſo without ſtones or rockes, and conſiſts onely of blacke earth, which is ſo rotten, that if any of it fall into the ſea, it will ſwimme as though it were a piece of wood. In which place, about three leagues from the ſhore you ſhall not haue aboue 9 fadom water, and clay ground.

The latitude of Cape S. Iohn 66 degrees 50 minutes.

Earth ſwimming aboue water like wood.

Iulie.

4 Saturday at a Northnorthweſt ſunne the wind came at Eaſtnortheaſt, & then we weied, and plied to the Northwards, and as we were two leagues ſhot paſt the Cape, we ſaw a houſe ſtanding in a valley, which is dainty to be ſeene in thoſe parts, and by and by I ſaw three men on the top of the hil. Then I iudged them, as it afterwards proued, that they were men which came from ſome other place to ſet traps to take vermin for their furres; which trappes we did perceiue very thicke alongſt the ſhore as we went.

5 Sunday at an Eaſt ſunne we were thwart off the creeke where the Ruſſes lay, and there came to an anker, and perceiuing the moſt part of the Lodias to be gone we thought it not good to tary any longer there, but weyed and ſpent all the ebbe, plying to the windewards.

6 Munday at a South ſunne it was high water. All alongſt the coaſt it floweth litle, onely a South moone makes a full ſea: and as we were a weying we eſpied the Ruſſe Lodias, which we firſt loſt. They came out of a creeke amongſt the ſandy hilles, which hilles beginne 15 leagues Northnortheaſt from Cape S. Iohn.

7 Plying this ebbe to an end, we came to an anker 6 leagues Northnortheaſt frō the place where we ſaw the Ruſſes come out: and there the Ruſſes harboured themſelues within a ſunke banke, but there was not water enough for vs.

At a North ſunne we weyed and plied to the Northwards, the land lying Northnortheaſt, and Southſouthweſt, vntill a South ſunne, and then we were in the latitude of 68 degrees & a halfe: and in this latitude ende thoſe ſandy hilles, and the land beginneth to lie North and by Weſt, South and by Eaſt, and Northnorthweſt, and to the Weſtwards, and there the water beginneth to waxe deepe.

The latitude 68 degrees and a halfe.

At a Northweſt ſunne we came to an anker within halfe a league of the ſhore, where wee had good plenty of fiſh, both Haddocks and Cods, riding in 10 fadom water.

8 Wedneſday we weyed, and plyed neerer the headland, which is called Caninoz, the wind being at Eaſt and by North.

9 Thurſday the wind being ſcant we turned to windwards the ebbe, to get about Caninoz: the latitude this day at noone was 68 degrees 40 minutes.

Friday we turned to the windward of the ebbe, but to no purpoſe: and as we rode at an anker, 10 we ſaw the ſimilitude of a ſtorme riſing at Northnorthweſt, & could not tell where to get rode nor ſuccor for that winde, and harborough we knew none: & that land which we rode vnder with that winde was a lee ſhore. And as I was muſing what was beſt to be done, I ſaw a ſaile come out of a creeke vnder the foreſayd Caninoz, which was my friend Gabriel, who forſooke his harborough and company, and came as neere vs as he might, and pointed vs to the Eaſtwards, & then we weyed and followed him, and went Eaſt and by South, the wind being at Weſtnorthweſt, and very miſtie.

Saturday we went Eaſtſoutheaſt & followed Gabriel, and he brought vs into an harborough 11 called Morgiouets, which is 30 leagues from Caninoz, & we had vpon the barre going in two fadome and a fourth part: and after we were paſt in ouer the barre, it waxed deeper, for we had 5 fadoms, 4 and a half, and 3 fadom &c. Our barke being mored, I ſent ſome of our men to ſhoare to prouide wood, where they had plenty of drift wood, but none growing: and in this place we found plenty of young foule, as Gulles, Seapies, and others, whereof the Ruſſes would eate none, whereof we were nothing ſorry, for there came the more to our part.

Morgiouets an harbour.

Drift wood.

Sunday our men cut wood on ſhoare, and brought it aboord, and wee balaſſed our ſhippe with ſtones. 12

This morning Gabriel ſaw a ſmoke on ẏ way, who rowed vnto it with his ſkiffe, which ſmoke was two leagues from the place where we road: and at a Northweſt ſunne he came aboord again, and brought with him a Samoed, which was but a young man: his apparell was then ſtrange vnto vs, and he preſented me with three young wild geeſe, and one young barnacle.

A Samoed.

Munday I ſent a man to the maine in Gabriels boat, and he brought vs aboord 8 barricoes of 13 freſh water: the latitude of the ſaid Morgiouets is ſixtie eight degrees and a terce. It floweth there at a Southſouthweſt moone full ſea, and hyeth two fadome and a halfe water.

At a Weſtnorthweſt ſunne we departed from this place, and went Eaſt 25 leagues, and then 14 ſaw an Iſland North and by Weſt of vs eight leagues, which Iſland is called Dolgoieue: and from the Eaſtermoſt part of this Iſland, there lyeth a ſand Eaſt and by South 7 leagues long.

Dolgoieue an Iſland.

Wedneſday at a North and by Eaſt ſunne Swetinoz was South of vs 5 leagues. This day 15 at afternoone we went in ouer the dangerous barre of Pechora, and had vpon the barre but one fadome water.

Pechora.

Thurſday we road ſtill. 16

Friday I went on ſhoare and obſerued the variation of the Compaſſe, which was three de- 17 grees and a halfe from the North to the Weſt: the latitude this day was ſixtie nine degrees ten minutes.

The variation of the Compas

From two or three leagues to the Eaſtward of Swetinoz, vntill the entering of the riuer Pechora, it is all ſandy hilles, and towards Pechora the ſandie hilles are very low.

It higheth on the barre of Pechora foure foote water, & it floweth there at a Southweſt moone a full ſea.

Munday at a North & by Eaſt ſunne, we weyed, and came out ouer the ſayd dangerous barre, 20 where wee had but fiue foote water, inſomuch that wee found a foote leſſe water comming out then wee did going in. I thinke the reaſon was, becauſe when we went in the winde was off the ſea, which cauſed the ſands to breake on either ſide of vs, and wee kept in the ſmootheſt betweene the breaches, which we durſt not haue done, except we had ſeene the Ruſſes to haue gone in before vs: and at our comming out the winde was off the ſhoare, and fayre weather, and then the ſands did not appeare with breaches as at our going in: we thanke God that our ſhip did draw ſo little water.

When we were a ſeaboord the barre the wind ſcanted vpon vs, and was at Eaſtſoutheaſt, inſomuch that we ſtopped the ebbes, and plyed all the floods to the windewards, and made our way Eaſtnortheaſt.

Tueſday at a Northweſt ſunne we thought that we had ſeen land at Eaſt, or Eaſt & by North 21 of vs: which afterwards prooued to be a monſtrous heape of ice.

Within a little more then halfe an houre after, we firſt ſaw this ice, we were incloſed within it before we were aware of it, which was a fearefull ſight to ſee: for, for the ſpace of ſixe houres, it was as much as we could doe to keepe our ſhippe aloofe from one heape of ice, and beare roomer from another, with as much wind as we might beare a coarſe. And when we had paſt from the danger of this ice, we lay to the Eaſtwards cloſe by the wind.

Ice.

The next day we were againe troubled with the ice. 22

Thurſday being calme, we plyed to the windwards, the winde being Northerly. We had the 23 latitude this day at noone in 70 degrees 11 minutes.

The lat. 70 degrees 11 min.

We had not runne paſt two houres Northweſt, the wind being at Northnortheaſt and Northeaſt and by North a good gale, but we met againe with another heape of ice: we wethered the head of it, and lay a time to the ſeawards, and made way Weſt 6 leagues.

24 Friday at a Southeaſt ſunne we caſt about to the Eaſtwards, the wind being at Northnortheaſt: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 15 minutes.

25 On S. Iames his day bolting to the windewardes, we had the latitude at noone in ſeuenty degrees twentie minutes. The ſame day at a Southweſt ſunne, there was a monſtrous Whale aboord of vs, ſo neere to our ſide that we might haue thruſt a ſworde or any other weapon in him, which we durſt not doe for feare hee ſhould haue ouerthrowen our ſhippe: and then I called my company together, and all of vs ſhouted, & with the crie that we made he departed from vs: there was as much aboue water of his backe as the bredth of our pinneſſe, and at his falling downe, he made ſuch a terrible noyſe in the water, that a man would greatly haue marueiled, except hee had knowen the cauſe of it: but God be thanked, we were quietly deliuered of him. And a little after we ſpied certaine Iſlands, with which we bare, and found good harbor in 15 or 18 fadome, and blacke oze: we came to an anker at a Northeaſt ſunne, & named the Iſland S. Iames his Iſland, where we found freſh water.

S. Iames Iſland.

26 Sunday, much wind blowing we rode ſtill.

27 Munday I went on ſhoare and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 42 minutes: the variation of the compaſſe was 7 degrees and a halfe from the North to the Weſt.

The variation of the Compas 7 degrees and a halfe.

28 Tueſday we plyed to the Weſtwards alongſt the ſhoare, the wind being at Northweſt, and as I was about to come to anker, we ſaw a ſayle comming about the point, wherunder we thought to haue ankered. Then I ſent a ſkiffe aboord of him, and at their comming aboord, they tooke acquaintance of them, and the chiefe man ſaid hee had bene in our company in the riuer Cola, and alſo declared vnto them that we were paſt the way which ſhould bring vs to the Ob. This land, ſayd he, is called Noua Zembla, that is to ſay, the New land: and then he came aboord himſelfe with his ſkiffe, and at his comming aboord he told mee the like, and ſayd further, that in this Noua Zembla is the higheſt mountaine in the worlde, as he thought, & that Camen Bolſhay, which is on the maine of Pechora, is not to be compared to this mountaine, but I ſaw it not: he made me alſo certaine demonſtrations of the way to the Ob, and ſeemed to make haſte on his owne way, being very lothe to tarie, becauſe the yeere was farre paſt, and his neighbour had ſet Pechora, and not he: ſo I gaue him a ſteele glaſſe, two pewter ſpoones, and a paire of veluet ſheathed kniues: and then he ſeemed ſomewhat the more willing to tary, and ſhewed me as much as he knew for our purpoſe: he alſo gaue me 17 wilde geeſe, and ſhewed me that foure of their lodias were driuen perforce from Caninoze to this Noua Zembla. This mans name was Loſhak.

A mighty hill in Noua Zembla.

Loſhak.

29 Wedneſday, as we plied to the Eaſtwards, we eſpied another ſaile, which was one of this Loſhaks company, and we bare roome, and ſpake with him, who in like ſort tolde vs of the Ob, as the other had done.

30 Thurſday, we plied to the Eaſtwards, the winde being at Eaſtnortheaſt.

31 Friday, the gale of winde began to increaſe, and came Weſterly withall, ſo that by a Northweſt ſunne we were at an anker among the Iſlands of Vaigats, where we ſaw two ſmall lodias, the one of them came aboord of vs, and preſented me with a great loafe of bread: and they told me that they were all of Colmogro, except one man that dwelt at Pechora, who ſeemed to be the chiefeſt among them in killing of the Morſe.

The Iſlands of Vagats.

There were ſome of their company on ſhoare, which did chaſe a white beare ouer the high cliffs into the water, which beare the lodia that was aboord of vs killed in our ſight.

This day there was a great gale of wind at North, and we ſaw ſo much ice driuing a ſeaboord, that it was then no going to ſea.

Auguſt.

1 Saturday I went aſhore, and there I ſaw three morſes that they had killed: they held one tooth of a Morſe, which was not great, at a roble, and one white beare ſkin at three robles & two robles: they further tolde me, that there were people called Samoeds on the great Iſland, and that they would not abide them nor vs, who haue no houſes, but onely couerings made of Deers ſkins, ſet ouer them with ſtakes: they are men expert in ſhooting, and haue great plenty of Deere.

Samoeds.

This night there fell a cruell ſtorme, the wind being at Weſt.

2 Sunday we had very much winde, with plenty of ſnow, and we rode with two ankers a head.

3 Munday we weyed and went roome with another Iſland, which was fiue leagues Eaſtnortheaſt from vs: and there I met againe with Loſhak, and went on ſhore with him, and hee brought me to a heape of the Samoeds idols, which were in number aboue 300, the worſt and the moſt vnartificiall worke that euer I ſaw: the eyes and mouthes of ſundrie of them were bloodie, they had the ſhape of men, women and children, very groſly wrought, & that which they had made for other parts, was alſo ſprinckled with blood. Some of their idols were an olde ſticke with two or three notches, made with a knife in it. I ſaw much of the footing of the ſayd Samoeds, and of the ſleds that they ride in. There was one of their ſleds broken, and lay by the heape of idols, & there I ſaw a deers ſkinne which the foules had ſpoyled: and before certaine of their idols blocks were made as high as their mouthes, being all bloody, I thought that to be the table whereon they offered their ſacrifice: I ſaw alſo the inſtruments, whereupon they had roaſted fleſh, and as farre as I could perceiue, they make their fire directly vnder the ſpit.

The maners of the Samoeds.

Loſhak being there preſent tolde me that theſe Samoeds were not ſo hurtfull as they of Ob are, and that they haue no houſes, as indeede I ſaw none, but onely tents made of Deers ſkins, which they vnderproppe with ſtakes and poles: their boates are made of Deers ſkins, and when they come on ſhoare they cary their boates with them vpon their backes: for their carriages they haue no other beaſtes to ſerue them, but Deere only. As for bread and corne they haue none, except the Ruſſes bring it to them: their knowledge is very baſe, for they know no letter.

The Samoeds of the Ob very hurtfull and ſhrewd people.

4 Tueſday we turned for the harborough where Loſhaks barke lay, whereas before we road vnder an Iſland. And there he came aboord of vs and ſaid vnto me: if God ſende winde and weather to ſerue, I will goe to the Ob with you, becauſe the Morſes were ſcant at theſe Iſlands of Vaigats: but if he could not get to the riuer of Ob, then he ſayd hee would goe to the riuer of Naramzay, where the people were not altogether ſo ſauage as the Samoyds of the Ob are: hee ſhewed me that they will ſhoot at all men to the vttermoſt of their power, that cannot ſpeake their ſpeech.

Naramzay.

5 Wedneſday we ſaw a terrible heape of ice approch neere vnto vs, and therefore wee thought good with al ſpeed poſſible to depart from thence, and ſo I returned to the Weſtwards againe, to the Iſland where we were the 31 of July.

6 Thurſday I went a ſhoare, and tooke the latitude, which was 70 degrees 25 minutes: and the variation of the compaſſe was 8 degrees from the North to the Weſt.

The latitude. The variation of the compas.

Loſhak and the two ſmall Lodias of Pechora departed from this Iſland, while I was on ſhoare taking the latitude, and went to the Southwards: I marueiled why he departed ſo ſuddenly, and went ouer the ſhoales amongſt the Iſlands where it was impoſſible for vs to follow them. But after I perceiued them to be weatherwiſe.

7 Friday we road ſtill, the winde being at Northnortheaſt, with a cruell ſtorme. The ice came in ſo abundantly about vs at both ends of the Iſland that we road vnder, that it was a fearefull ſight to behold: the ſtorme continued with ſnow, raine, and hayle plenty.

8 Saturday we road ſtill alſo, the ſtorme being ſomewhat abated, but it was altogether miſty, that we were not able to ſee a cables length about vs, the winde being at Northeaſt and by Eaſt.

9 Sunday at foure of the clocke in the morning we departed from this Iſland, the winde being at Southeaſt, and as we were cleere a ſea boord the ſmall Iſlandes and ſhoales, it came ſo thicke with miſtes, that we could not ſee a baſe ſhotte from vs. Then we tooke in all our ſailes to make little way.

At a Southeaſt ſunne it waxed cleere, and then we ſet our ſayles, and lay cloſe by the wind to the Southwards alongſt the Iſlands of Vaigats. At a Weſt ſunne we tooke in our ſayle againe becauſe of the great miſt and raine. Wee ſounded at this place, and had fiue and twenty fadomes water, and ſoft blacke oze, being three leagues from the ſhoare, the winde being at South and by Eaſt, but ſtill miſty.

10 Munday at an Eaſt ſunne we ſounded, and had 40 fadomes, and oze, ſtill miſty: at noone wee ſounded againe, and had 26 fadome, ſtill miſty.

11 Tueſday at an Eaſtnortheaſt ſunne we let fall our anker in three and twenty fadome, the miſt ſtill continuing.

12 Wedneſday at three of the clocke in the morning the miſt brake vp, the wind being at Northeaſt & by Eaſt, and then we ſaw part of the Iſlands of Vaigats, which we bare withall, and went Eaſtſoutheaſt cloſe by the winde: at a Weſt ſunne we were at an anker vnder the Southweſt part of the ſaid Vaigats, and then I ſent our ſkiffe to ſhoare with three men in her, to ſee if they might ſpeake with any of the Samoeds, but could not: all that day was rainie, but not windie.

They land vpon Vaigats.

10 Thurſday the wind came Weſterly, ſo that we were faine to ſeeke vs another place to ride in, becauſe the wind came a ſeaboord land, and although it were miſty, yet wee followed the ſhoare by our lead: and as we brought land in the winde of vs, we let fall our anker. At a Weſt ſunne the miſt brake vp, ſo that we might ſee about vs, and then we might perceiue that we were entred into a ſound.

This afternoone we tooke in two or three ſkiffes lading of ſtones to balaſt our ſhippe withall. It hyeth here foure foot water, and floweth by fits, vncertaine to be iudged.

The vncerteintie of ebbing & flowing.

14 Friday we road ſtill in the ſound, the wind at Southweſt, with very much raine, and at the end of the raine it waxed againe miſtie.

15 Saturday there was much winde at Weſt, and much raine, and then againe miſtie.

16 Sunday was very miſtie, and much winde.

17 Munday very miſtie, the winde at Weſtnorthweſt.

18 Tueſday was alſo miſtie, except at noone: then the ſunne brake out through the miſt, ſo that we had the latitude in 70 degrees 10 minutes: the afternoone was miſty againe, the wind being at Weſtnorthweſt.

19 Wedneſday at three of the clocke afternoone the miſt brake vp, & the wind came at Eaſtnortheaſt, and then we weyed, and went South & by Eaſt, vntil ſeuen of the clocke, eight leagues, thinking to haue had ſight of the ſandie hilles that are to the Eaſtwards of the riuer Pechora. At a Northweſt ſunne we took in our maine ſaile, becauſe the wind increaſed, & went with a foreſaile Weſtnorthweſt, the wind being at Eaſtnortheaſt: at night there grewe ſo terrible a ſtorme, that we ſaw not the like, although we had indured many ſtormes ſince we came out of England. It was wonderfull that our barke was able to brooke ſuch monſtrous & terrible ſeas, without the great helpe of God, who neuer faileth them at neede, that put their ſure truſt in him.

20 Thurſday at a Southſouthweſt ſunne, thanks be to God, the ſtorme was at the higheſt, & then the winde began to ſlake, and came Northerly withall, & then I reckoned the Weſtermoſt point of the riuer Pechora to be South of vs 15 leagues. At a Weſtſouthweſt ſunne we ſet our maine ſayle, and lay cloſe by the winde, the winde being at Northweſt and by North, making but little way, becauſe the billow went ſo high: at midnight wee caſt about, and the ſhippe caped Northnortheaſt, making little way.

They were within 15 leagues of Pechora

21 Friday at noone we had the latitude in 70 degrees 8 minutes, and we ſounded, and had 29 fadomes ſand, and in maner ſtreamy ground. At a Weſt ſunne we caſt about to the Weſtwards, and a little after the wind came vp at Weſt.

22 Saturday was calme: the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees and a terce, we ſounded heere, and had nine and forty fadomes and oze, which oze ſignified that we drew towards Noua Zembla.

And thus we being out of al hope to diſcouer any more to the Eaſtward this yeere, wee thought it beſt to returne, and that for three cauſes.

They returne the 22 of Auguſt.

The firſt, the continuall Northeaſt and Northerly winds, which haue more power after a man is paſt to the Eaſtwards of Caninoze, then in any place that I doe know in theſe Northerly regions.

Second, becauſe of great and terrible abundance of ice which we ſaw with our eies, and we doubt greater ſtore abideth in thoſe parts: I aduentured already ſomewhat too farre in it, but I thanke God for my ſafe deliuerance from it.

Third, becauſe the nights waxed darke, and the winter began to draw on with his ſtormes: and therefore I reſolued to take the firſt beſt wind that God ſhould ſend, and plie towards the bay of S. Nicholas, and to ſee if we might do any good there, if God would permit it.

This preſent Saturday we ſaw very much ice, and were within two or three leagues of it: it ſhewed vnto vs as though it had beene a firme land as farre as we might ſee from Northweſt off vs to the Eaſtwards: and this afternoone the Lord ſent vs a little gale of wind at South, ſo that we bare cleere off the Weſtermoſt part of it, thanks be to God. And then againſt night it waxed 24 calme againe, and the winde was at Southweſt: we made our way vntill Sunday noone North-weſt and by Weſt, and then we had the latitude in 70 degrees and a halfe, the winde at Southweſt: there was a billow, ſo that we could not diſcerne to take the latitude exactly, but by a reaſo-nable geſſe.

25 Sunday there was a prettie gale of wind at South, ſo that wee went Weſt and by South, the latitude this day at noone was 70 degrees 10 minutes: wee had little winde all day: at a Weſtnorthweſt ſunne we ſounded, and had 29 fadoms blacke ſandie oze, & then we were Northeaſt 5 leagues from the Northeaſt part of the Iland Colgoieue.

26 Tueſday the wind all Weſterly we plyed to the wind wards.

27 Wedneſday the wind was all Weſterly, and calme: wee had the latitude this day in 70 degrees 10 minutes, we being within three leagues of the North part of the Iland Colgoieue.

28 Thurſday, we went roome about the Weſtermoſt part of the Iland, ſeeking where we might finde a place to ride in for a Northweſt winde, but could find none, and then we caſt about againe to the ſeawards, and the winde came at Weſtſouthweſt, and this morning we had plenty of ſnow.

Friday, the winde being at Southweſt and by Weſt, we plied to the windewards. 29

Saturday, the winde being at South, we plyed to the Weſtwards, and at afternoone the miſt brake vp, and then we might ſee the land ſeuen or eight leagues to the Eaſtwards of Caninoz: we ſounded a litle before and had 35. fadoms and oze. And a while after wee ſounded againe, and had 19. fadome and ſand: then we were within three leagues and a halfe of the ſhore, and towards night there came downe ſo much winde, that we were faine to bring our ſhip a trie, and laide her head to the Weſtwards.

Sunday, the winde became more calme, and then it waxed verie myſtie: At noone wee caſt about to the Eaſtwards, the winde beeing at South, and ranne eight houres on that boorde, and then we caſt about and caped Weſt ſouthweſt: we ſounded and had 32. fathomes, and tough oze like clay. 30

Munday, we doubled about Caninoze, and came at an anker there, to the intent that we might kill ſome fiſh if God would permit it, and there we gate a great Nuſe, which Nuſes were there ſo plentie, that they would ſcarcely ſuffer any other fiſh to come neere the hookes: the ſaid Nuſes caried away ſundrie of our hookes and leads. 31

A litle after at a Weſt Sunne, the winde began to blow ſtormie at Weſt ſouthweſt, ſo that we were faine to wey and forſake our fiſhing ground, and went cloſe by the winde Southweſt, and Southweſt and by Weſt, making our way South ſouthweſt.

September.

Tueſday at a Weſt Sunne we ſounded and had 20. fathoms, and broken Wilke ſhels: I reckoned Canonize to be 24. leagues Northnortheaſt from vs. 1

The eleuenth day we arriued at Colmogro, and there we wintered, expecting the approch of the next Sommer to proceede farther in our intended diſcouerie for the Ob: which (by reaſon of our imploiments to Wardhouſe the next ſpring for the ſearch of ſome Engliſh ſhips) was not accordingly performed. 11

FIrſt, after we departed out of England we fell with Norway, and on that coſte lieth Northbern or Northbergen, and this people are vnder the King of Denmarke: But they differ in their ſpeech from the Danes, for they ſpeake North. And North of Northbern lie the Iſles of Roſte and Lofoot, and theſe Iſlands pertaine vnto Finmarke, and they keepe the lawes and ſpeake the language of the Iſlanders. And at the Eaſtermoſt part of that land is a caſtle which is called the Ward houſe, and the King of Denmarke doeth fortifie it with men of warre: and the Ruſſes may not goe to the Weſtward of that caſtle. And Eaſt Southeaſt from that caſtle is a lande called Lappia: in which lande be two maner of people, that is to ſay, the Lappians, and the Scrickfinnes, which Scrickfinnes are a wilde people which neither know God, nor yet good order: and theſe people liue in tents made of Deares ſkinnes: and they haue no certaine habitations, but continue in heards and companies by one hundred and two hundreds. And they are a people of ſmall ſtature, and are clothed in Deares ſkinnes, and drinke nothing but water, and eate no bread but fleſh all raw. And the Lappians bee a people adioyning to them ẏ be much like to them in al condicions: but the Emperour of Ruſſia hath of late ouercome manie of them, and they are in ſubiection to him. And this people will ſay that they beleeue in the Ruſſes God. And they liue in tents as the other doe. And Southeaſt and by South from Lappia lyeth a prouince called Corelia, and theſe people are called Kerilli. And South ſoutheaſt from Corelia lyeth a countrey called Nouogardia. And theſe three nations are vnder the Emperour of Ruſſia, and the Ruſſes keepe the Lawe of the Greekes in their Churches, and write ſomewhat like as the Greekes write, and they ſpeake their owne language, and they abhorre the Latine tongue, neither haue they to doe with the Pope of Rome, and they holde it not good to worſhippe any carued Image, yet they will worſhippe paynted Images on tables or boordes. And in Ruſſia their Churches, ches, ſteeples, and houſes are all of wood: and their ſhippes that they haue are ſowed with withes and haue no nayles. The Kerilles, Ruſſians and Moſcouians bee much alike in all conditions. And South from the Moſcouians lye the Tartarians, which bee Mahumetans, and liue in tentes and wagons, and keepe in heardes and companies: and they holde it not good to abide long in one place, for they will ſay, when they will curſe any of their children, I would thou mighteſt tary ſo long in a place that thou mighteſt ſmell thine owne dung, as the Chriſtians doe: and this is the greateſt curſe that they haue. And Eaſt Northeaſt of Ruſſia lieth Lampas, which is a place where the Ruſſes, Tartars and Samoeds meete twiſe a yeere, and make the faire to barter wares for wares. And Northeaſt from Lampas lieth the countrey of the Samoeds, which be about the riuer of Pechere, and theſe Samoeds bee in ſubiection to the Emperour of Ruſſia, and they lie in tentes made of Deere ſkinnes, and they vſe much witchcraft, and ſhoot well in bowes. And Northeaſt from the riuer Pechere lieth Vaygatz, and there are the wilde Samoeds which will not ſuffer the Ruſſes to land out of the Sea, but they will kill them and eate them, as wee are tolde by the Ruſſes: and they liue in heards, and haue all their carriages with deere, for they haue no horſes. Beyond Vaygatz lyeth a lande called Noua Zembla, which is a great lande, but wee ſawe no people, and there wee had Foule inough, and there wee ſawe white Foxes and white Beares. And the ſayde Samoeds which are about the bankes of Pechere, which are in ſubiection to the Emperour of Ruſſia, when they will remoue from one place to another, then they will make ſacrifices in maner following. Euerie kinred doeth ſacrifice in their owne tent, and hee that is moſt auncient is their Prieſt. And firſt the Prieſt doeth beginne to playe vpon a thing like to a great ſieue, with a ſkinne on the one ende like a drumme: and the ſticke that he playeth with is about a ſpanne long, and one ende is round like a ball, couered with the ſkinne of an Harte. Alſo the Prieſt hath vpon his head a thing of white like a garlande, and his face is couered with a piece of a ſhirt of maile, with manie ſmall ribbes, and teeth of fiſhes, and wilde beaſtes hanging on the ſame maile. Then hee ſingeth as wee vſe heere in Englande to hallow, whope, or ſhowte at houndes, and the reſt of the company anſwere him with this Owtis, Igha, Igha, Igha, and then the Prieſt replieth againe with his voyces. And they anſwere him with the ſelfeſame wordes ſo manie times, that in the ende he becommeth as it were madde, and falling downe as hee were dead, hauing nothing on him but a ſhirt, lying vpon his backe I might perceiue him to breathe. I asked them why hee lay ſo, and they anſwered mee, Nowe doeth our God tell him what wee ſhall doe, and whither wee ſhall goe. And when he had lyen ſtill a litle while, they cried thus three times together, Oghao, Oghao, Oghao, and as they vſe theſe three calles, hee riſeth with his head and lieth downe againe, and then hee roſe vp and ſang with like voyces as hee did before: and his audience anſwered him, Igha, Igha, Igha. Then hee commaunded them to kill fiue Olens or great Deere, and continued ſinging ſtill both hee and they as before. Then hee tooke a ſworde of a cubite and a ſpanne long, (I did mete it my ſelfe) and put it into his bellie halfe way and ſometime leſſe, but no wounde was to bee ſeene, (they continuing in their ſweete ſong ſtill) Then he put the ſworde into the fire till it was warme, and ſo thruſt it into the ſlitte of his ſhirte and thruſt it through his bodie, as I thought, in at his nauill and out at his fundament: the poynt beeing out of his ſhirt behinde, I layde my finger vpon it, then hee pulled out the ſworde and ſate downe. This beeing done, they ſet a kettle of water ouer the fire to heate, and when the water doeth ſeethe, the Prieſt beginneth to ſing againe they anſwering him, for ſo long as the water was in heating, they ſate and ſang not. Then they made a thing being foure ſquare, and in height and ſquareneſſe of a chaire, and couered with a gown very cloſe the forepart therof, for the hinder part ſtood to the tents ſide. Their tents are rounde and are called Chome in their language. The water ſtill ſeething on the fire, and this ſquare ſeate being ready, the Prieſt put off his ſhirt, and the thing like a garland which was on his head, with thoſe things which couered his face, & he had on yet all this while a paire of hoſen of deeres ſkins with yͤ haire on, which came vp to his buttocks. So he went into the ſquare ſeat, and ſate down like a tailour and ſang with a ſtrong voyce or halowing. Then they tooke a ſmall line made of deeres ſkinnes of foure fathoms long, and with a ſmal knotte the Prieſt made it faſt about his necke, and vnder his left arme, and gaue it vnto two men ſtanding on both ſides of him, which held the ends together. Then the kettle of hote water was ſet before him in the ſquare ſeat, al this time the ſquare ſeat was not couered, and then it was couered wͭ a gown of broad cloth without lining, ſuch as the Ruſſes do weare. Then the 2. men which did hold yͤ ends of the line ſtill ſtanding there, began to draw, & drew til they had drawn the ends of the line ſtiffe and together, and then I hearde a thing fall into the kettle of water which was before him in the tent. Thereupon I asked them that ſate by me what it was that fell into the water that ſtoode before him. And they anſwered me, that it was his head, his ſhoulder and left arme, which the line had cut off, I meane the knot which I ſawe afterwarde drawen hard together. Then I roſe vp and would haue looked whether it were ſo or not, but they laid hold on me, and ſaid, that if they ſhould ſee him with their bodily eyes, they ſhoulde liue no longer. And the moſt part of them can ſpeake the Ruſſe tongue to bee vnderſtood: and they tooke me to be a Ruſſian. Then they beganne to hallow with theſe wordes, Oghaoo, Oghaoo, Oghaoo, many times together. And as they were thus ſinging & outcalling, I ſawe a thing like a finger of a man two times together thruſt through the gowne from the Prieſt. I asked them that ſatt next to me what it was that I ſawe, and they ſaide, not his finger; for he was yet dead: and that which I ſaw appeare through the gowne was a beaſt, but what beaſt they knew not nor would not tell. And I looked vpon the gowne, and there was no hole to bee ſeene: and then at the laſt the Prieſt lifted vp his head with his ſhoulder and arme, and all his bodie, and came forth to the fire. Thus farre of their ſeruice which I ſawe during the ſpace of certaine houres: but how they doe worſhip their Idoles that I ſaw not: for they put vp their ſtuffe for to remoue from that place where they lay. And I went to him that ſerued the Prieſt, and asked him what their God ſaide to him when he lay as dead. Hee anſwered, that his owne people doeth not know, neither is it for them to know: for they muſt doe as he commanded. This I ſaw the fift day of Ianuarie in the yere of our Lord 1556, after the Engliſh account.

A diſcourſe of the honourable receiuing into England of the firſt Ambaſſador from the Emperor of Ruſſia, in the yeere of Chriſt 1556, and in the third yeere of the raigne of Queene Marie, ſeruing for the third voyage to Moſcouie. Regiſtred by Maſter Iohn Incent Protonotarie.

IT is here recorded by writing and autenticall teſtimonie, partly for memorie of things done, and partly for the veritie to be knowen to poſteritie in time to come, that whereas the moſt high and mightie Iuan Vaſiliuich Emperour of all Ruſſia, great Duke of Volodemer, Moſcouia and Nouogrode, Emperor of Caſſan, and of Aſtrachan, Lord of Pleskie, and great Duke of Smolenskie, Tuerskie, Yowgoriskie, Permskie, Viatskie, Bolgarskie, and Sibierskie, Emperour and great Duke of many others, as Nouogrode in the nether countries, Chernigoskie, Rezanskie, Polodskie, Rezewskie, Bielskie, Roſtoskie, Yeraſlaueskie, Bealozarskie, Oudarskie, Obdorskie, Condenskie, and manie other countries, and lord ouer all thoſe partes, in the yeere of our Lord God, folowing the account of yͤ Latin church, 1556. ſent by the ſea from the port of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia, his right honorable ambaſſador ſirnamed Oſep Napea, his high officer in the towne and countrey of Vologda, to the moſt famous and excellent princes, Philip and Mary by the grace of God, king and Queene of England, Spaine, France and Ireland, defenders of the faith, Archdukes of Auſtria, dukes of Burgundie, Millaine, & Brabant, counties of Haſpurge, Flanders and Tyroll, his ambaſſador & Orator with certaine letters tenderly conceiued, together with certain preſents and gifts mentioned in the foot of this memorial, as a manifeſt argument and token of a mutual amity and friendſhip to be made and continued betweene their maieſties & ſubiects reſpectiuely, for the commoditie and benefit of both the realmes and people: which Orator was the 20. day of July imbarked and ſhipped in, and vpon a good Engliſh ſhip named the Edward Bonauenture, belonging to the Gouernor, Conſuls and company of Engliſh marchants, Richard Chancelor being grand Pilot, and Iohn Buckland maſter of the ſaid ſhip. In which was laden at the aduenture of the foreſaid Ambaſſador, and marchants at ſeuerall accounts, goods & merchandizes, viz. in ware, traneople, tallow, furres, felts, yarne and ſuchlike, to the ſumme of 20000. li. ſterling, together with 16. Ruſſies attendant vpon the perſon of the ſaid Ambaſſador. Ouer and aboue ten other Ruſſies ſhipped within the ſaid Bay of S. Nicholas, in one other good ſhip to the ſaid company alſo belonging called the Bona Speranza, with goods of the ſaid Orators & marchants to the value of 6000. lib. ſterling, as by the inuoiſes and letters of lading of the ſaid ſeueral ſhips (whereunto relation is to be had) particularly appeareth. Which good ſhips comming in good order into the ſeas, & trauerſing the ſame in their iourney towards the coaſt of England, were by contrary windes and extreme tempeſts of weather ſeuered the one from the other, that is to ſay, the ſaide Bona Speranza with two other Engliſh ſhips alſo appertaining to the ſaide company, the one ſirnamed the Philip and Mary, the other the Confidentia, were driuen on the coaſt of Norway, into Drenton water, where the ſaide Confidentia was ſeene to periſh on a Rocke, and the other, videlicet, the Bona Speranza, with her whole company, being to the number of foure and twentie perſons ſeemed to winter there, whereof no certaintie at this preſent day is knowen. The third, videlicet, the Philip and Mary arriued in the Thames nigh London the eighteenth day of April, in the yeere of our Foure ſhips.

Lord,

The Edward Bonauenture arriued in Scotland, in the Bay of Pettiſlego, Nouemb. 7. 1556.

Lord one thouſand fiue hundred fiftie and ſeuen. The Edward Bonauenture trauerſing the ſeas foure moneths, finally the tenth day of Nouember of the aforeſaide yeere of our Lorde one thouſand fiue hundred, fiftie and ſixe, arriued within the Scottiſh coaſt in a Bay named Pettiſlego, where by outragious tempeſts, and extreme ſtormes, the ſaid ſhip being beaten from her ground tackles, was driuen vpon the rockes on ſhore, where ſhe brake and ſplit in pieces in ſuch ſort, as the grand Pilot vſing all carefulneſſe for the ſafetie of the bodie of the ſayde Ambaſſadour and his trayne, taking the boat of the ſaid ſhip, truſting to attaine the ſhore, and ſo to ſaue and preſerue the bodie, and ſeuen of the companie or attendants of the ſaide Ambaſſadour, the ſame boat by rigorous waues of the ſeas, was by darke night ouerwhelmed and drowned, wherein periſhed not only the bodie of the ſaid grand Pilot, with ſeuen Ruſſes, but alſo diuers of the Mariners of the ſayd ſhip: the noble perſonage of the ſaide Ambaſſadour with a fewe others (by Gods preſeruation and ſpeciall fauour) onely with much difficultie ſaued. In which ſhipwracke not onely the ſaide ſhippe was broken, but alſo the whole maſſe and bodie of the goods laden in her, was by the rude and rauenous people of the Countrey thereunto adioyning, rifled, ſpoyled and caried away, to the manifeſt loſſe and vtter deſtruction of all the lading of the ſaid ſhip, and together with the ſhip, apparell, ordinance and furniture belonging to the companie, in value of one thouſand pounds, of all which was not reſtored toward the coſts and charges to the ſumme of fiue hundred pound ſterling.

Rich. Chancelor drowned.

As ſoone as by letters addreſſed to the ſaid companie, and in London deliuered the ſixt of December laſt paſt, it was to them certainely knowen of the loſſe of their Pilote, men, goods and ſhip, the ſame merchants with all celeritie and expedition, obteined not onely the Queenes maieſties moſt gracious and fauourable letters to the Ladie Dowager, and lordes of the Councell of Scotland for the gentle comfortment and entertainment of the ſaide Ambaſſadour, his traine and companie, with preſeruation and reſtitution of his goods, as in ſuch miſerable caſes, to Chriſtian pitie, princely honour and meere Iuſtice appertaineth, but alſo addreſſed two Gentlemen of good learning, grauitie and eſtimation, videlicet, Maſter Lawrence Huſſie Doctor of the Ciuill Lawe, and George Gilpin with money and other requiſites into the Realme of Scotland, to comfort, ayde, aſſiſt, and relieue him and his there, and alſo to conduct the Ambaſſadour into England, ſending with them by poſte a Talmach or Speachman for the better furniture of the ſeruice of the ſayde Ambaſſadour, truſting thereby to haue the more ample and ſpeedie redreſſe of reſtitution: which perſonages vſing diligence, arriued at Edenborough (where the Queenes court was) the three and twentieth day of the ſaide moneth of December, who firſt viſiting the ſaide Ambaſſadour, declaring the cauſes of their comming and Commiſſion, ſhewing the letters addreſſed in his fauour, the order giuen them for his ſolace and furniture of all ſuch things as hee woulde haue, together with their daily and readie ſeruice to attend vpon his perſon and affaires, repaired conſequently vnto the Dowager Queene, deliuering the letters.

Whereupon they receiued gentle anſweres, with hope and comfort of ſpeedie reſtitution of the goods, apparell, iewels and letters: for the more apparance whereof, the Queene ſent firſt certaine Commiſſioners with an Harold of armes to Pettiſlego, the place of the Shipwracke, commaunding by Proclamation and other Edictes, all ſuch perſons (no degree excepted) as had any part of ſuch goods as were ſpoyled and taken out or from the ſhip to bring them in, and to reſtore the ſame with ſuch further order as her grace by aduiſe of her Councel thought expedient: by reaſon whereof not without great labours, paines and charges (after long time) diuers ſmall parcels of Ware, and other ſmall trifling things of no value, were by the poorer ſort of the Scottes brought to the Commiſſioners, but the Iewels, rich apparell, preſents, gold, ſiluer, coſtly furres, and ſuch like, were conueyed away, concealed and vtterly embezelled. Whereupon, the Queene at the requeſt of the ſaid Ambaſſadour, cauſed diuers perſons to the number of 180. or moe, to be called perſonally before her princely preſence, to anſwer to ẏ ſaid ſpoile, & really to exhibit and bring in all ſuch things as were ſpoiled and violently taken, & caried out of the ſame, whereof not onely good teſtimonie by writing was ſhewed, but alſo the things themſelues found in the hands of the Scottiſh ſubiects, who by ſubtile and craftie dealings, by conniuence of the commiſſioners, ſo vſed or rather abuſed themſelues towards the ſame Orator & his attendants, that no effectuall reſtitution was made: but he fatigated with daily attendance and charges, the 14. day of February next enſuing, diſtruſting any reall and effectual rendring of the ſaide goods and marchandizes and other the premiſſes, vpon leaue obtained of the ſaide Queene, departed towards England, hauing attending vpon him the ſaid two Engliſh Gentlemen and others (leauing neuertheleſſe in Scotland three Engliſhmen to purſue the deliuerie of ſuch things as were collected to haue bene ſent by ſhip to him in England: which being in Aprill next, and not before befor imbarked for London, was not at this preſent day here arriued) came the 18. day of Februarie to Barwike within the dominion and realme of England, where he was by the Queenes maieſties letters and commandement honourably receiued, vſed and interteined by the right honourable lord Wharton, lord Warden of the Eaſt marches, with goodly conducting from place to place, as the dayly iourneys done ordinarily did lie, in ſuch order, maner and forme, as to a perſonage of ſuch eſtate appertaineth. He proſecuting his voyage vntil the 27. of Februarie approched to the citie of London within twelue Engliſh miles, where he was receiued with fourſcore merchants with chaines of gold and goodly apparell, as wel in order of men ſeruants in one vniforme liuerie, as alſo in and vpon good horſes and geldings, who conducting him to a marchants houſe foure miles from London, receiued there a quantitie of gold, veluet and ſilke, with all furniture thereunto requiſite, wherewith he made him a riding garment, repoſing himſelfe that night. The next day being Saturday and the laſt day of Februarie, he was by the merchants aduenturing for Ruſſia, to the number of one hundred and fortie perſons, and ſo many or more ſeruants in one liuerie, as abouesaid, conducted towards the citie of London, where by the way he had not onely the hunting of the Foxe and ſuch like ſport ſhewed him, but alſo by the Queenes maieſties commandement was receiued and embraced by the right honourable Viſcount Montague, ſent by her grace for his entertainment: he being accompanied with diuers luſtie knights, eſquiers, gentlemen and yeomen to the number of three hundred horſes led him to the North partes of the Citie of London, where by foure notable merchants richly apparelled was preſented to him a right faire and large gelding richly trapped, together with a footcloth of Orient crimſon veluet, enriched with gold laces, all furniſhed in moſt glorious faſhion, of the preſent, and gift of the ſayde merchants: where vpon the Ambaſſadour at inſtant deſire mounted, riding on the way towards Smithfield barres, the firſt limites of the liberties of the Citie of London. The Lord Maior accompanied with all the Aldermen in their ſkarlet did receiue him, and ſo riding through the Citie of London in the middle, betweene the Lord Maior and Viſcount Montague, a great number of merchants and notable perſonages riding before, and a large troupe of ſeruants and apprentiſes following, was conducted through the Citie of London (with great admiration and plauſibilitie of the people running plentifully on all ſides, and repleniſhing all ſtreets in ſuch ſort as no man without difficultie might paſſe) into his lodging ſituate in Fant church ſtreete, where were prouided for him two chambers richly hanged and decked, ouer and aboue the gallant furniture of the whole houſe, together with an ample and rich cupboord of plate of all ſorts, to furniſh and ſerue him at all meales, and other ſeruices during his abode in London, which was, as is vnderwritten, vntil the third day of May: during which time daily diuers Aldermen and the graueſt perſonages of the ſaid companie did viſite him, prouiding all kind of victuals for his table and his ſeruants, with al ſorts of Officers to attend vpon him in good ſort and condition, as to ſuch an ambaſſadour of honour doeth and ought to appertaine.

1557. Febr. 27.

His honorable receiuing into the citie of London.

It is alſo to be remembred that at his firſt entrance into his chamber, there was preſented vnto him on the Queenes Maieſties behalfe for a gift and preſent, and his better furniture in apparel, one rich piece of cloth of tiſſue, a piece of cloth of golde, another piece of cloth of golde raiſed with crimoſin veluet, a piece of crimoſin veluet in graine, a piece of purple veluet, a piece of Damaſke purpled, a piece of crimoſin damaſke, which he moſt thankfully accepted. In this beautifull lodging refreſhing and preparing himſelfe and his traine with things requiſite he abode, expecting the kings maieſties repaire out of Flanders into England, whoſe highneſſe arriuing the one and twentie of March, the ſame Ambaſſadour the fiue and twentieth of March being the Annunciation of our Ladie (the day twelue moneth he tooke his leaue from the Emperour his maſter) was moſt honourably brought to the King and Queenes maieſties court at Weſtminſter, where accompanied firſt with the ſaid Viſcount and other notable perſonages, and the merchants, hee arriuing at Weſtminſter bridge, was there receiued with fiue lords, conducted into a ſtately chamber, where by the lords, Chancellor, Treaſurer, Priuie ſeale, Admirall, biſhop of Elie, and other Counſellers, hee was viſited and ſaluted: and conſequently was brought vnto the Kings and Queenes maieſties preſence, ſitting vnder a ſtately cloth of honour, the chamber moſt richly decked and furniſhed, and moſt honourably preſented. Where, after that hee had deliuered his letters, made his Oration, giuen two timber of Sables, and the report of the ſame made both in Engliſh and Spaniſh, in moſt louing maner embraced, was with much honour and high entertainment, in ſight of a great confluence of people, Lordes and Ladies eftſoones remitted by water to his former lodging, to the which, within two dayes after by the aſſignement of the King and Queenes maieſties, repaired and conferred with him ſecretly two graue Counſellers, that is, the lord Biſhop of Elie, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretarie to their Highneſſe, who after diuers ſecret talkes and conferences, reported to their highneſſe their proceedings, the grauitie, amitie, wiſedome, and ſtately behauiour of the ſayd Ambaſſadour, in ſuch ſort as was much to their maieſties contentations.

A league and articles of amitie concluded and confirmed vnder the great ſeale of England.

Finally concluding vpon ſuch treaties and articles of amitie, as the letters of the Kings and Queenes maieſties moſt graciouſly vnder the great ſeale of England to him by the ſayd counſellers deliuered, doth appeare.

The three and twentieth of April, being the feaſt of S. George, wherein was celebrated the ſolemnitie of the Noble order of the Garter at Weſtminſter, the ſame lord ambaſſadour was eftſoones required to haue audience: and therefore conducted from the ſayd lodging to the court by the right Noble the lords Talbot and Lumley to their maieſties preſence: where, after his Oration made, and thanks both giuen and receiued, hee moſt honourably tooke his leaue with commendations to the Emperour. Which being done, he was with ſpecial honour led into the chappell, where before the Kings and Queens maieſties, in the ſight of the whole Order of the Garter, was prepared for him a ſtately ſeate, wherein he accompanied with the Duke of Norfolke, the lords laſt aboue mentioned, and many other honorable perſonages, was preſent at the whole ſeruice, in ceremonies which were to him moſt acceptable: the diuine ſeruice ended, he eftſoones was remitted and reduced to his barge, and ſo repaired to his lodging, in like order and gratulation of the people vniuerſally, as before.

Foure goodly ſhips of the merchants prouided for Ruſſia, 1557.

The time of the yeere haſting the profection and departure of the Ambaſſador, the merchants hauing prepared foure goodly and well trimmed ſhippes laden with all kinds of merchandiſes apt for Ruſſia, the ſame Ambaſſadour making prouiſion for ſuch things as him pleaſed, the ſame ſhips in good order valed downe the Riuer of Thames, from London to Graueſend, where the ſame Ambaſſadour with his traine and furniture was imbarked towards his voyage homeward, which God proſper in all felicitie.

It is alſo to be remembred, that during the whole abode of the ſayd Ambaſſadour in England, the Agents of the ſayde marchants did not onely proſecute and purſue the matter of reſtitution in Scotland, and cauſed ſuch things to be laden in an Engliſh ſhippe hired purpoſely to conuey the Ambaſſadours goods to London, there to be deliuered to him, but alſo during his abode in London, did both inuite him to the Maior, and diuers worſhipfull mens houſes, feaſting and banquetting him right friendly, ſhewing vnto him the moſt notable and commendable ſights of London, as the kings palace and houſe, the Churches of Weſtminſter and Powles, the Tower and Guild hall of London, and ſuch like memorable ſpectacles. And alſo the ſaid 29. day of April, the ſaid merchants aſſembling themſelues together in the houſe of the Drapers hal of London, exhibited and gaue vnto yͤ ſaid Ambaſſador, a notable ſupper garniſhed with muſicke, Enterludes and bankets: in the which a cup of wine being drunke to him in the name and lieu of the whole companie, it was ſignified to him that the whole company with moſt liberal and friendly hearts, did frankly giue to him and his all maner of coſts and charges in victuals riding from Scotland to London during his abode there, and vntill ſetting of ſaile aboord the ſhip, requeſting him to accept the ſame in good part as a teſtimonie and witnes of their good hearts, zeale and tenderneſſe towards him and his countrey.

It is to be conſidered that of the Bona Speranza no word nor knowledge was had at this preſent day, nor yet of the arriuall of the ſhips or goods from Scotland.

The third of May the Ambaſſadour departed from London to Graueſend, accompanied with diuers Aldermen and merchants, who in good gard ſet him aboord the noble ſhippe, the Primroſe Admiral to the Fleete, where leaue was taken on both ſides and parts, after many imbracements and diuers farewels not without expreſſing of teares.

The King and Queens ſend letters to the Emperour of Ruſſia.

Memorandum, that the firſt day of May the Counſellers, videlicet, the Biſhop of Elye, and Sir William Peter on the behalfe of the Kings and Queenes Maieſties repairing to the lorde Ambaſſadour did not onely deliuer vnto him their highnes letters of recommendations vnder the great ſeale of England to the Emperour, very tenderly and friendly written, but alſo on their maieſties behalfe gaue and deliuered certaine notable preſents to the Emperours perſon, and alſo gifts for the lord Ambaſſadours proper vſe and behoofe, as by the particulars vnder written appeareth, with ſuch further good wordes and commendations, as the more friendly haue not bin heard, whereby it appeareth how well affected their honours be to haue and continue amitie and traffique betweene their honours and their ſubiects: which thing as the kings and Queenes maieſties haue ſhewed of their princely munificences & liberalities, ſo haue likewiſe the merchants and fellowſhip of the Aduenturers, for and to Ruſſia, manifeſted to the world their good willes, mindes and zeales borne to this new commenſed voyage, as by the diſcourſe aboue mencioned, and other the notable actes ouer long to be recited in this preſent memoriall, doeth and may moſt clearely appeare, the like whereof is not in any preſident or hiſtorie to bee ſhewed.

Foraſmuch as it may bee doubted how the ſhip named the Edward Bonauenture ſuffered ſhipwracke, what became of the goods, howe much they were ſpoiled and deteined, how little reſtored, what charges and expenſes enſued, what perſonages were drowned, how the reſt of the ſhips either arriued or periſhed, or howe the diſpoſition of almightie God hath wrought his pleaſure in them, how the ſame ambaſſadour hath bene after the miſerable caſe of ſhipwracke in Scotland unreuerently abuſed, and conſequently into England receiued and conducted, there intertained, vſed, honoured, and finally in good ſafetie towards his returne, and repaire furniſhed, and with much liberalitie and franke handling friendly diſmiſſed, to the intent that the trueth of the premiſſes may bee to the moſt mightie Emperour of Ruſſia ſincerely ſignified in eſchewment of all euents and miſfortunes that may chance in this voyage (which God defend) to the Ambaſſadours perſon, traine, and goods, this preſent memoriall is written, and autentikely made, and by the ſayde Ambaſſadour his ſeruants, whoſe names be vnderwritten, and traine in preſence of the Notarie, and witneſſes vndernamed, recognized, and acknowledged. Giuen the day, moneth, and yeere vnderwritten, of which inſtrument into euery of the ſayde Shippes one teſtimoniall is deliuered, and the firſt remaineth with the ſayde Companie in London.

The voyage of the foreſaid M. Stephen Burrough, An. 1557. from Colmogro to Wardhouſe, which was ſent to ſeeke the Bona Eſperanza, the Bona Confidentia, and the Philip and Mary, which were not heard of the yeere before.

May.

23 Vpon Sunday the 23. of May, I departed with the Searchthrift from Colmogro, the latitude whereof is 64. degrees, 25. minutes, and the variation of the compaſſe, 5. degrees, 10. minutes from the North to the Eaſt.

26 Wedneſday we came to the Iland called Pozanka, which Iland is within foure leagues of the barre Berozoua. It floweth here at an Eaſt and by South Moone full ſea.

29 Saturday in the morning we departed from Pozanka, and plied to the barre of Berôzoua Gooba, whereupon wee came to anker at a lowe water, and ſounded the ſaid Barre with our two Skiffes, and found in the beſt vpon the ſhoaldeſt of the barre 13. foote water by the rule. It higheth vpon this barre, in ſpring ſtreames 3. foote water: and an Eaſt Moone maketh a full ſea vpon this barre.

30 Sunday in the morning wee departed from the barre of Berozoua, and plied along by the ſhoalds in fiue fadome, vntill I had ſight of S. Nicholas roade, and then wee caſt about to the Coia Reca. Northwards, and went with a hommocke, which is halfe a mile to the Eaſtwards of Coya Reca, which hommocke and S. Nicholas abbey lye Southſouthweſt, and Northnortheaſt, and betweene twene them are 11. leagues. Coia Reca is halfe a mile to the Eaſtwards of Coſcaynos. Coſcaynos & the middes of the Iſland called Mondeuſtoua oſtroue, which is thwart of the barre of Berozoua lieth South and by Eaſt, North and by Weſt, and betweene them are 4. leagues, or as you may ſay from the Seaboord part of the barre to Coſcaynos are 3. leagues and a halfe.

Coſcaynos.

Munday at a Northeaſt and by Eaſt ſunne we were thwart of Coſcaynos. 31

Dogs noſe lieth from Coſcaynos Northnorthweſt, and betweene them are eight leagues: and Dogs noſe ſheweth like a Gurnerds head, if you be inwardly on both ſides of it: on the lowe point of Dogs noſe there ſtandeth a croſſe alone.

Iune.

FRom Dogs noſe to Forenoſe are three leagues, North and by Weſt. 1

The 2. day of Iune I went on ſhoare 2. miles to the Northwards of Dogs noſe, and had the latitude of that place in 65. degrees, 47. minutes. It floweth a ſhoare at this place, at an Eaſt Moone full ſea, and the ſhippe lay thwart to wende a flood in the off, at a Southſoutheaſt moone. So that it is to be vnderſtoode, that when it is a full ſea on the ſhoare, it is two points to ebbe, before it be a lowe water in the off. The variation of the Compaſſe at this place is 4. degrees from the North to the Eaſt. 2

Dogs noſe. The variation of the Compaſſe 4. degrees.

This day the Northnorthweſt winde put vs backe againe with Dogs noſe, where a ſhip may ride thwart of a ſalt houſe, in 4. fadome, or 4. fadome and a halfe of water, and haue Landfange for a North and by Weſt winde: which Salt houſe is halfe a mile to the Southwards of Dogs noſe. 3

Friday at a Southſouthweſt Sunne, wee departed from this Salt houſe. It is to be noted that foure miles to the Northwards of Dogs noſe there growe no trees on the banke by the water ſide: and the bankes conſiſt of fullers earth. Ouer the cliffes there growe ſome trees: ſo that Dogs noſe is the better to be knowen becauſe it is fullers earth, and the like I haue not ſeene in all that Countrey. 4

A head of Fore noſe a league from the ſhoare there are 15. fadome: betwixt Fore noſe and Zolaticſa there are 6. leagues, I meane the Southerly part of Fore noſe.

Fore noſe.

Sunday I ſounded the barre of Zolsticſa, which the Ruſſes told me was a good harborow, but in the beſt of it I found but 4. foote water. 6

Munday, I had the latitude in 66. degrees, and then was point Pentecoſt ſixe leagues South of vs. 7

Poynt Pentecoſt.

Wedneſday I went on land at Croſſe Iſland, and tooke the latitude, which was 66. degrees 24. minutes. 9

Croſſe Iſland.

We being one league Northeaſt of Croſſe Iſland, I ſawe the land on the Eaſtſide, which I iudged to be Cape good fortune, and it was then Eaſtſoutheaſt of vs 9. leagues.

Cape good fortune.

Cape grace is 7. leagues and a halfe Northeaſt from Croſſe Iſland.

There are 2. Iſlands 5. leagues Northnortheaſt from Cape grace, the Southermoſt of them is a little long Iſland almoſt a mile long, and the Northermoſt a little round Iſland, and they are both hard aboord the ſhore.

Cape grace.

Cape Race is from the Southermoſt Iſland North and by Weſt, and betweene them are two leagues, and from that and halfe a league Northnorthweſt, there is another poynt. Betweene which poynt and Cape Race, the Ruſſes haue a Stanauiſh or harborow for their Lodias: and to the Weſtwards of the ſaid poynt, there is a ſhoale bay.

Cape Race.

Three leagues and a halfe to Northwards of Cape Race, we had the latitude on the 10. day of this moneth in 67. degrees 10. minutes. Riding within half a league of the ſhoare in this latitude I found it to be a full ſea at a North and by Eaſt moone. I had where we rode two and twentie fadome, and the tallow which is taken vp is full of great broken ſhels, and ſome ſtones withall like vnto ſmall ſand congealed together. 10

From a South ſunne that wee weyed, the winde being at North and by Eaſt, wee driued to the windwards halfe the ebbe, with the ſhips head to the Eaſtwards. And then when we caſt her head to the Weſtwards, we ſounded, and had 22. fadome broken ſhels, and gray ſand; this preſent day was very miſtie, with froſt on the ſhrowds as the miſt fell.

Froſt in Iune.

Friday in the morning at an Eaſt ſunne, the miſt brake vp a little, the winde being at North and by Weſt a ſtiffe gale, our ſhrowdes and roapes ouer head being couered with froſt, and likely to be a ſtorme: I thought it good to ſeeke an harborow, and ſo plied roome with the Iſlands which are two leagues to the Southwards of Cape Race, and within theſe Iſlands (thankes bee to God) we found harborow for vs. It higheth at theſe Iſlands two fadome water: it floweth in the Tri Oſtroue. harborow at this place at a Southſoutheaſt moone ful ſea: and a ſea boord it floweth at a Southſouthweſt moone a full ſea. The Ruſſes call this Iſland, Tri Oſtroue.

You may come in betweene the little Iſland and the great Iſland, and keepe you in the mids of the Sound, and if you borrowe on any ſide, let it bee on the greateſt Iſland; and you ſhall haue at a low water, foure fadome, and three fadome and a halfe, and three fadome, vntill that you be ſhot ſo farre in as the narroweſt, which is betweene the Northermoſt point of the greateſt Iſland, and the Southerne point of the maine which is right againſt it, and then hale to the Northwards with the croſſe which ſtandeth in the maine, and you ſhall haue at a lowe water 10. foote water, and faire ſand. And if you be diſpoſed to goe through the Sound to the Southwards, keepe the Northweſt ſhoare aboorde, for on the Iſland ſide after you be ſhotte ſo farre in as the croſſe, it is a ſhoale of rockes halfe the ſound ouer: which rockes do laſt vnto the Southerly part of the great Iſland, and rather to the Southwards. And if you be conſtrained to ſeeke a harbor for Northerly windes, when you come out of the ſea, hale in with the Southerly part of the great Iſland, giuing the Iſland a faire birth, and as you ſhoote towards the maine, you ſhall finde roade for all Northerly windes, in foure fadome, fiue, ſixe and ſeuen fadome, at a lowe water.

Alſo within this great Iſland (if neede bee) you may haue a good place to ground a ſhip in: the great Iſland is almoſt a mile long and a quarter of a mile ouer.

16 Ice. The variation. This ſtorme of Northerly winde laſted vntill the 16. of this moneth, and then the winde came Southerly, but we could not get out for Ice. I went on ſhore at the croſſe, and tooke the latitude, which is 66. degrees, 58. minutes, 30. ſeconds: the variation of the Compaſſe 3. degrees and a halfe from the North to the Eaſt.

17 Thurſday being faire weather, and the winde at North we plied to the winde-wards with ſailes and oares: wee ſtopped the flood this day three leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, two miles from the ſhoare, and had twentie fadome water, faire gray and blacke ſand, and broken ſhels. And when the ſlake came wee wayed and made aboord to the ſhoare-wards, and had 18 within two cables length of the ſhoare, eighteene fadomes faire gray and blacke ſand: a man may finde roade there for a North winde, and ſo to the Weſtwards.

Two leagues to the Southward of Corpus Chriſti poynt, you may haue Landfang for a North and by Eaſt winde, and from that to the Weſtwards in 23. fadome almoſt a mile from ſhoare, and faire ſand, and amongſt the ſand little yong ſmall limpets, or ſuch like as growe vpon muſcles: and within two cables length and leſſe of the ſhoare are eighteene fadomes, and the ſounding aforeſaid, but the yong limpets more plentifull. It was a full ſea where we roade, almoſt a mile from ſhoare, at a South and by Weſt moone: two leagues to the Southwards of Corpus Chriſti point is the vttermoſt land, which land and Cape Race lyeth South and halfe a point to Weſtwards, and North and halfe a point to the Eaſtwards, and betweene them are ſixe leagues. Riding this day ſixe leagues to the Northwards of Cape Race, the winde at North-

19 northweſt, with miſt and froſt, at noone the ſunne appeared through the miſt, ſo that I had the latitude in 67. degrees, 29. minutes.

21 Corpus Chriſti poynt. Munday we were thwart of Corpus Chriſti point, two leagues and a halfe from ſhoare, or rather more, where we ſounded, and had 36. fadoms, and broken cocle ſhels, with brannie ſand, but the broken ſhels very thicke.

22 Cape Gallant. Tueſday in the morning we were ſhotte a head of Cape gallant, which the Ruſſes call Sotinoz. And as we were ſhot almoſt halfe a league betwixt it, and Cape comfort, the wind came vp at the Northweſt, and after to the Northwards, ſo that we were faine to beare roome to ſeeke a harbour, where we found good harbour for all windes, and the leaſt 7. fadome water betweene S.Iohns Iſlands, and the maine.

After that we came to an ancre, we tooke the latitude, which was 68. degrees 1. minute, after noone, the winde at North with plentie of ſnowe.

At a Weſt ſunne there came aboord vs certaine Lappians in a boate, to the number of ſixteene perſons, and amongſt them there were two wenches, and ſome of them could ſpeake the Ruſſe tongue: I aſked them where their abiding was, and they tolde mee that there was a companie or heard of them, to the number of 100. men, beſides women and children, but a litle from vs in the riuer Iekonga.

They tolde me that they had bene to ſeeke meate among the rockes, ſaying, If wee get no meate, wee eate none. I ſawe them eate rocke weedes as hungerly, as a cowe doeth graſſe when ſhee is hungrie. I ſawe them alſo eate foules egges rawe, and the yong birdes alſo that were in the egges.

I obſerued certaine wordes of their language, which I thought good to ſet downe for their vſe, that hereafter ſhall haue occaſion to continue this voyage.

25 Friday in the morning we departed from Saint Iohns Iland: to the Weſtwards thereof, a mile from the ſhoare, we ſounded, and had 36. fadoms, and oazie ſand, Iuana Creos.

Iuana Creos is from Cape gallant Weſtnorthweſt, and halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them is 7. leagues. The point of the Iſland, which is Cape comfort, lyeth from Iuana Creos, Northweſt and by North, and almoſt the 3. part of a point to the Weſtwards, and betweene them are 3. leagues.

S.Georges Iſlands.

Cape comfort.

The Eaſtermoſt of S.Georges Iſlands, or the 7. Iſlands, lyeth from Iuana Creos Northweſt, & halfe a point to the Northwards, and betweene them are 14. leagues & a halfe. The vttermoſt of the 7. Iſlands, & Cape comfort lieth Northweſt, & by North, Southeaſt, and by South.

Vnder the Southermoſt Iſland you ſhall finde good roade for all Northerly windes from the Northweſt to the Northeaſt. From the Southeaſt part of the 7. Iſlands, vnto the Northweſt part of them, are 3. leagues and a halfe.

S.Peters Iſlands.

From the Northweſt part of the Iſlands aforeſaid, vnto S.Peters Iſlands, are 11. leagues Northweſt.

26 S.Peters Iſlands riſe an indifferent low point, not ſeeming to be an Iſland, and as if it had a caſtle vpon it.

S.Pauls Iſlands.

S.Pauls Iſlands lie from S.Peters Iſlands Northweſt and to the Weſtwards, and betweene them are 6. leagues. Within theſe Iſlands there is a faire ſandy bay, and there may be found a good roade for Northerly windes.

Cape Sower beere.

Cape Sower beere lyeth from S.Pauls Iſlands Northweſt and by Weſt, and betweene them are 5. leagues.

Kildina.

Cape comfort, which is the Iſland of Kildina, lieth from Cape Sower beere, 6. leagues Weſt Northweſt, and it is altogether a bay betweene them ſeeming many Iſlands in it.

Cape Bonauenture.

From Cape Bonauenture, to Chebe Nauoloche are 10. leagues Northweſt, and a litle to the Weſtwards. Chebe Nauoloche is a faire point, whereon ſtandeth a certaine blacke, like an emptie butte ſtanding a head.

Kegor.

From Chebe Nauoloch to Kegor, is 9. leagues and a halfe Northweſt, and halfe a poynt to the Weſtwards, Kegor riſeth as you come from the Eaſtwards like 2. round hommocks ſtanding together, and a faire ſadle betweene them.

Domſhaff.

27 It floweth where we rode this Munday to the Eaſtwards of Kegor, at a Southeaſt and by Eaſt moone, a full ſea: we rode in 15. fadome water within halfe a mile of the ſhoare: at a Northweſt Sunne the miſt came downe ſo thicke, that we were faine to come to an ancre within leſſe then a mile of the point that turneth to Doms haff, where we had 33. fadome, and the ſounding like to the ſkurfe of a ſkalde head.

Wardhouſe.

| Which were the Bona Eſperanza, the Bona confidentia and the Philip and Marie. Whereof the two firſt were loſt.

28 Munday at afternoone, wee came into the Sound of Wardhouſe, although it were very miſtie. Then I ſent a man a ſhoare to know ſome newes, and to ſee whether they could heare any thing of our | ſhips.

29 Tueſday I went on ſhoare, and dined with the Captaines deputie, who made mee great cheere: the Captaine himſelfe was not as yet come from Bergen: they looked for him euery houre, and they ſaid that he would bring newes with him.

At a Northweſt and by North ſunne we departed from Wardhouſe, toward Colmogro.

| Or, Dronton.

The Philip and Marie. The bona Confidentia caſt away.

30 Wedneſday we came to Kegor, where we met with the winde at Eaſt Southeaſt, ſo that we were faine to go in to a bay to the Weſtwards of the point Kegor, where a man may moare 2. or 3. ſmall ſhips, that ſhall not drawe paſt 11. or 12. foote water, for all windes, an Eaſt Northeaſt winde is the worſt. It is a ledge of rocks, that defendeth the Northerly winds frõ the place where they moare. When we came into the bay we ſaw there a barke which was of | Dronton, & three or foure Norway yeaghes, belonging to Northberne: ſo when I came a ſhoare, I met firſt with the Dutchmen, amongſt whom was the Borrow-maſters ſonne of Dronton, who tolde me that the Philip and Mary wintered at Dronton, and departed from thence for England in March: and withall he ſhewed me that the Confidence was loſt, and that he had bought her ſailes for his ſhip. Then the Dutch-men caried me to their Boothe, and made me good cheere, where I ſawe the Lappians chepen of the ſaid Dutchmen, both ſiluer platters and diſhes, ſpoones, gilt rings, ornaments for girdles of ſiluer & gilt, and certaine things made to hang about the necks, with ſiluer chaines belonging to them.

The Dutchmen bring hither mightie ſtrong beere, I am certaine that our Engliſh double beere would not be liked of the Kerils and Lappians, as long as that would laſt.

Here I ſawe the Dutchmen alſo haue courſe cloth, both blew, greene and reede, and ſo horſe-fleſh colour. And hither they bring alſo Otters caſes and foxe caſes, both blacke and redde: our Engliſh foxe caſes are but counterfaits vnto them.

They would not let me vnderſtand any of their priſes, but as I otherwiſe vnderſtood they bartered 2. load of ſiluer for 100 of ſtockfiſh, and 2. loade is a doller. And the Dutchmen told me, that they had made a notable good yeere this preſent yeere 1557. They tolde me that they ſhould be faine to goe to Wardhouſe with one lading, and lay it on land there, and ſo come againe and fetch another. The Dutch maſter ſent vnto me, that he would go to Amſterdam with his lading of ſtockfiſh, who gaue me a barrell of ſtrong beere, and brought it in aboord our ſhip himſelfe.

After this I went among the Ruſſes and Kerils, who offered me fiſh to ſell, and likewiſe the Lappians deſired me to looke vpon their fiſh. I made them anſwere, that I had now no wares nor money to barter with them, and ſaid that I came only to ſee if I might meete with our Engliſh ſhips. Then they deſired me that I would come thither the next yeere: I ſaid to them, If I ſhould come the next yeere, I thinke here would not be fiſh ynough to ſerue the Dutchmen and vs alſo. They anſwered me, that if more ſhips did reſort thither, there would more people labour to kill and make fiſh: and further they ſaid, that ſome of them came thither a fiſhing 8. weekes iourney with Deere, which Deere will trauaile more ſpeedily then horſes will.

A gainefull trade of fiſhing at Kegor.

As I was thus in talke with the Kerils and Lappians, the Emperour of Ruſſia his deputie (who was there to gather the tribute of the Lappians) ſent for me to come to his tent, who after familiar ſalutations, made me good cheere. He demaunded of me, why none of our ſhips came thither. I anſwered him, becauſe we knew not the place before now, neither yet heard of any faire that was kept there. Then ſaid he, If you will come hither, here would more people reſort to kill fiſh. I thinke it good (ſaid he) that you make a beginning. I tolde him, that by the grace of God the next yeere, one Engliſh ſhip ſhould come thither.

Becauſe I ſawe the ſeruants of the king of Denmarke there alſo gathering the tribute, I asked Vaſilie Pheodorouich the Ruſſe deputie, whether the Denmarks would not be a let to vs, if we ſhould come to this Kegor. And he ſaid, no, they ſhould not: for this land is my kings, and therefore be bolde to come hither.

The Kerils and the Lappians ſolde no fiſh, vntill the ſaid deputie had looked vpon it, and had giuen them leaue to ſell. I asked him what wares were beſt for vs to bring thither, and he ſaid, ſiluer, pearles, cloth, blewe, red, and greene, meale, ſtrong beere, wine, pewter, fine caſes, and golde.

Commodities for Kegor.

The Lappians pay tribute to the Emperour of Ruſſia, to the king of Denmarke, and to the king of Sweden. He tolde me that the Riuer Cola is little more then 20. leagues to the Southwards of Kegor, where we ſhould haue great plentie of ſalmon, if corne were any thing cheape in Ruſſia: for then poore men would reſort thither to kill ſalmon.

The Dutchmen tolde me that they had made a good yeere of this, but the Kerils complained of it, becauſe they could not ſell all their fiſh, and that which they ſold was as pleaſed the Dutchmen, and at their owne price. I asked the Kerils at what price they ſold their fiſh to the Ruſſes, & they ſaid good cheape: wee ſell 24. fiſhes for 4. altines. I thinke they ſolde little aboue 20. pence, the 25. fiſhes this yeere.

The Dutchmen tolde me that the beſt ſtockfiſh is made at Kegor. I ſawe at Vaſilies tent 7. or 8. iauelins, and halfe a dozen of bowes here, with their quiuers of arrowes, & likewiſe ſwords with other weapons: Otherwiſe I ſawe no weapons there.

I was alſo conueyed to their lodgings, which gathered tribute for the king of Denmarke, where I ſawe a paire of bilbowes: and I asked whether they were for the Lappians (if neede were,) and they ſaid no, but onely for their owne company if they ſhould chance to be vnruly.

The Kerils and the Lappians are not to be truſted, for they will ſteale as well as the Ruſſes, if they may conueniently come by any thing.

Concerning my voyage, becauſe the winde was ſcant to goe backe againe to Colmogro, I tarried to the Eaſtwards of the point Kegor, and ſent to land, and baked two batches of bread in the ouens that the Kerils haue for their prouiſion.

Inſtructions giuen to the Maſters and Mariners to be obſerued in and about this Fleete, paſſing this yeere 1577. toward the Bay of S. Nicolas in Ruſſia, for this preſent Race to be made & returne of the ſame by Gods grace to the port of London, the place of their right diſcharge, as in the Articles enſuing is deduced.

First, it is accorded and agreed betweene the ſeuerall proprietaries and owners, maſters and companies of the foure ſhips, ſurnamed the Primroſe, the Iohn Euangeliſt, the Anne and the Trinitie, and the Lieutenant, Conſuls, aſſiſtants and companie of the Marchant aduenturers, that the aboue named foure ſhips ſhall in good order and conſort, ſaile, paſſe, and trauaile together in one fleete, going, and conſerue of ſocietie, to be kept inuiolably and not to be ſeuered, but within continuall ſight, ſo farre foorth as (by winde & weather) by poſſibilitie ſhall or may be without any ſeparation or departure of one from the other.

2 Item, it is agreed that the good ſhip named the Primeroſe, ſhalbe Admirall of this flote, and that Anthonie Ienkinſon Gentleman, ſhalbe Captaine thereof: and that all other the 3. ſhips ſhall enſue and folow her in all courſes, and that no courſe nor waying (in harborough eſpecially) ſhall be made without aduice, conſent and agreement of the ſayd Captaine, the Maſter, his mate, and two other officers of the ſaid ſhip, or of three of them at the leaſt.

3 Item, that the ſaid Anthonie is and ſhalbe reputed & taken for Captaine general of the ſaid flote together with all ſuch orders, preeminences, priuiledges and preferments as by the order of ſeas is due and accuſtomed to a Captaine during his abode and exerciſe of the ſame.

4 It is alſo ordeined, that if any one or moe of the ſaid 3. ſhips ſhalbe out of ſight either before or behinde the Admirall, that then the reſt of the ſhips ſhall tacke or take off their ſailes in ſuch ſort as they may meete and come together, in as good order as may be, to the intent to keepe the conſortment exactly in all poynts.

5 It is conſtituted, that if any ſhips ſhalbe ſeuered by miſt or darke weather, in ſuch ſort as the one cannot haue ſight of the other, then and in ſuch caſe the Admiral ſhall make ſound and noiſe by drumme, trumpet, horne, gunne or otherwiſe or meanes, that the ſhips may come as nigh together, as by ſafetie and good order they may.

6 It is alſo to be obſerued, that euery day once the other three ſhippes ſhall ſend and come aboord the Admirall, and there conſult and determine of ſuch matter and things as ſhall be for the aſſurance of their Nauigation, and moſt expedition of the ſame.

7 Item, that notes & entries be daily made of their Nauigations put in writing & memory, and that the yong Mariners and apprentices may be taught & cauſed to learne and obſerue the ſame.

8 It is accorded that the ſaid Captaine ſhall haue the principall rule and gouernement of the apprentices: And that not onely they, but alſo all other the ſailers, ſhalbe attendant and obedient to him, as of duetie and reaſon appertaineth.

9 Alſo that no beere nor broth, or other liquor be ſpilt vpon the balaſt, or other place of the ſhip, whereby any anoyance, ſtinke, or other vnſauorineſſe ſhall growe in the ſhippe to the infection or hurt of the perſons in the ſame.

10 Item, that the Captaine by diſcretion ſhall from time to time diſſhip any artificer or Engliſh ſeruingman or apprentice out of the Primroſe into any of the other three ſhips, and in lieu of him or them, take any ſuch apprentice as he ſhall thinke conuenient and moſt meete to ſerue the benefite of the companie.

11 Item, that great reſpect be had to the Gunners and Cookes roomes, that all danger and perill of powder and fire may be eſchewed and auoyded.

12 Item, that ſingular care and reſpect be had to the ports of the ſhip, aſwell in Nauigation as in harborow, and eſpecially in lading and vnlading of the ſhippes, that nothing be lacking or ſurcharged: and that the bookes may oftentimes be conferred and made to agree in eſchuement of ſuch loſſes, as may enſue.

13 Special foreſight is to be had, that at the Wardhouſe no treacherie, inuaſion, or other peril of moleſtation be done or procured to be attempted to our ſhips by any kings, princes, or companies, that do miſlike this new found trade by ſeas to Ruſſia, or would let & hinder the ſame, whereof no ſmall boaſt hath bene made: which giueth occaſion of more circumſpection and diligence.

14 If the winde and weather will ſerue, it is thought good rather to goe by the Wardhouſe then to come in and ancre there, leſt any male engine, or danger may be the rather attempted againſt vs, our goods and ſhips as aboue.

15 It is thought good that Richard Iohnſon, late ſeruant to M. Chanceler, ſhall be ſent home in this next returne, to inſtruct the company of the ſtate of the Countrey, and of ſuch queſtions as may be demanded of him, for our better aduertiſements and reſolutions, in ſuch doubtes as ſhall ariſe here: and that he ſhall haue the roome of the Captaine in ſuch ſort, as Maſter Ienkinſon is in this preſent cocket aſſigned vnto. And if Iohnſon can not, may not, nor will not returne and occupie the ſaid place, then any other perſon to be preferred thereunto, as by the diſcretion of our ſaid Captaine, with conſent of our Agents, ſhall be thought meete and apt to ſupply the ſame.

16 Prouided alway, that the ſhips returning be not diſfurniſhed of one ſuch able man, as ſhall occupie the Captainſhip in like order, as is, and hath bene in ſuch caſe appoynted, as reaſon and good order requireth.

17 Item that all other former orders, rules, and deuiſes, made and prouided for the good order of our ſhips, wares, and goods, being not repugnant, contrary or diuerſe, to theſe articles, and the contents of the ſame, ſhall be, and ſtand in full force and effect, to be in all reſpects obſerued and kept of all and euery perſon and perſons, whom the ſame doth or ſhall touch or concerne.

In witneſſe of the premiſſes faithfully to be obſerued and kept,the owners and Maſters of the ſaid foure ſhips, together with the ſaid Captaine, to theſe ſeuenteene articles, contained in two sheetes of paper,haue ſubſcribed their hands. Giuen in London, the third of May,in the yeere of our Lord God 1557.

A letter of the Company of the Marchants aduenturers to Ruſsia vnto George Killingworth, Richard Gray, and Henry Lane their Agents there, to be deliuered in Colmogro or els where: ſent in the Iohn Euangeliſt.

After our heartie commendations vnto you and to either of you: your generall letter and other particular letters with two bookes of the ſale and remainders of our goods, and the buying of ware there with you, we receiued about the ende of Nouember out of the Edward, with heauie newes of the loſſe of the ſayde good ſhippe and goods at Petſlego in Scotland, with the death of Richard Chanceler and his Boy, with certaine of the Embaſſadours ſeruants, and he himſelfe with nine of his ſeruants eſcaped very hardly onely by the power of God: but all his goods and ours in maner were loſt and pilfered away by the Scots,and that that is ſaued is not yet come to our hands, but we looke for it daily, and it will ſkant pay the charges for the recouering of it. No remedy but patience: and to pray to God to ſend vs better fortune hereafter. As touching the receiuing and entertaining of the Embaſſadour and his retinue ſince his comming to England at the king and Queenes Maieſties hands,with the Counſell & Lords of this Realme,and the Marchants that be free in Ruſſia with feaſting and beneuolence giuen him, wee referre it to his report and others. The like we thinke haue not bene ſeene nor ſhewed here of a long time to any Ambaſſadour. The Philip and Marie arriued here tenne dayes paſt: ſhee wintered in Norway. The Confidence is loſt there. And as for the Bona Eſperanza, as yet we haue no newes of her. We feare it is wrong with her. By your billes of lading receiued in your generall letters we perceiue what wares are laden in them both. Your letters haue no date nor mention where they were made, which were written by Henry Lane, and ſirmed by you George Killingworth and Richard Gray: both it and the other Letters and Bookes came ſo ſore ſpoyled and broken with water that we cannot make our reckoning by them. You ſhall vnderſtand we haue fraighted for the parts of Ruſſia foure good ſhippes to be laden there by you & your order: That is to ſay, The Primeroſe of the burthen of 240. Tunnes, Maſter vnder God Iohn Buckland: The Iohn Euangeliſt of 170. Tunnes, Maſter vnder God Laurence Roundal: The Anne of London of the burthen of 160.tunnes, Maſter vnder God Dauid Philly, and the Trinitie of London of the burthen of 140. Tunnes, Maſter vnder God Iohn Robins, as by their Charter parties may appeare: which you may require to ſee for diuers cauſes. You ſhall receiue, God willing, out of the ſaid good ſhips, God ſending them in ſafety for the vſe of the Company, theſe kinds of wares following, all marked with the general marke of the Company as followeth. 25.fardels containing 207.ſorting clothes,one fine violet in graine,and one ſkarlet,and 40. cottons for wrappers, beginning with number 1.and ending with number 52. The ſorting clothes may coſt the firſt peny 5.li.9.s.the cloth,one with the other. The fine violet 18.li.6.s.6.d. The ſkarlet 17.li.13.s.6.d. the cottons at 9.li.10.s.the packe,accompting 7.cottons for a packe.more 500.pieces of Hampſhire kerſies,that is 400.watchets,43.blewes,53.reds,15.greenes,5.ginger colours,and 2.yelowes which coſt the firſt penny 4.li.6.s.the piece,& 3.packes containing 21.cottons at 9.li.10.s. the packe: and part of the clothes is meaſured by Arſhines. More 9.barrels of Pewter of Thomas Haſels making,&c. Alſo the wares bee packed and laden as is aforeſayde, as by an Inuoyce in euery Shippe more plainely may appeare. So that when it ſhall pleaſe God 1557.

Wares ſent into Ruſſia out of England.

The Arſhine is a Ruſſe meaſure.

God to ſend the ſaid good ſhips to you in ſafetie, you are to receiue our ſaid goods, and to procure the ſales to our moſt aduantage either for ready money, time or barter: hauing conſideration that you doe make good debts, and giue ſuch time, if you giue any, as you may employ and returne the ſame againſt the next voyage; and alſo foreſeeing that you barter to a profit, and for ſuch wares as be here moſt vendible, as wexe, tallowe, traine oyle, hempe and flaxe. Of furres we deſire no great plentie, becauſe they be dead wares. And as for Felts, we will in no wiſe you ſend any. And whereas you haue prouided tarre, and as as we ſuppoſe, ſome hempe ready bought, our aduiſe is, that in no wiſe you ſend any of them hither vnwrought, becauſe our fraight is 4. li. a tunne or little leſſe: which is ſo deare, as it would not beare the charges: and therefore we haue ſent you 7. ropemakers, as by the copies of their couenants here incloſed ſhall appeare. Whom we wil you ſet to worke with al expedition in making of cables & ropes of al ſorts, from the ſmalleſt rope to xii. inches: And that ſuch tarre and hempe as is already brought to the water ſide, they may there make it out, and after that you ſettle their worke in Vologhda or Colmogro as you ſhall thinke good, where their ſtuffe may be neereſt to them: at which place and places you doe aſſigne them a principall ouerſeer aſwell to ſee the deliuerie of the ſtuffe vnwrought, as alſo to take charge of the ſtuffe wrought, & to foreſee that neither the yarne be burnt in tarring, nor the hempe rotted in the watering; and alſo to furniſh them ſo with labourers, workemen and ſtuffe, as hereafter when theſe workmen ſhall come away, we be not deſtitute of good workmen, and that theſe may diſpatch as much as poſſibly they may, doing it ſubſtancially: for we eſteeme it a principal commoditie, and that the Counſel of England doth well allowe. Let all diligence be vſed, that at the returne of theſe ſhippes we may ſee ſamples of all ropes & cables if it be poſſible, and ſo after to continue in worke, that we may haue good ſtore againſt the next yeere. Therefore they haue neede to haue a place to worke in, in the winter: and at any hand let them haue helpe ynough to ſpinne their ſtuffe: for ſeeing you haue great plentie of hempe there, and at a reaſonable price, we truſt we ſhalbe able to bring as good ſtuffe from thence, and better cheape then out of Danske: if it be diligently vſed, and haue a good ouerſeer.

7. Ropemakers ſent into Ruſſia.

Cables and Ropes a principall commoditie.

Danſke the old chiefe place for Cables.

Let the chiefeſt lading of theſe foure ſhippes be principally in wexe, flaxe, tallowe and traine oyle. And if there be any more wares then theſe ſhips be able to take in, then leaue that which is leaſt in valew and groſſeſt in ſtowage vntill the next ſhipping: for wee doe purpoſe to ground our ſelues chiefly vpon theſe commodities, as wexe, cables and ropes, traine oyle, flaxe and ſome linen yarne. As for Maſts, Tarre, Hempe, Feathers, or any ſuch other like, they would not beare the charges to haue any, conſidering our deere fraight. We haue ſent you a Skinner to be there at our charges for meate, drinke and lodging, to viewe and ſee ſuch furres as you ſhall cheape or buye, not minding neuertheleſſe, that you ſhall charge your ſelues with many, except thoſe which bee moſt vendible, as good marterns, minuers, otherwiſe called Lettis, and Mynkes. Of theſe you may ſend vs plentie, finding them good and at a reaſonable price. As for Sables and other rich Furres, they bee not euery mans money: therefore you may ſend the fewer, vſing partly the diſcretion of the ſkinner in that behalfe.

Commodities not bearing the charges of long fraight.

Furres moſt vendible.

Wee heare that there is great plentie of ſteele in Ruſſia and Tartarie, whereof wee would you ſent vs part for an example, and to write your mindes in it what ſtore is to be had: for we heare ſay there is great plentie, and that the Tartars ſteele is better then that in Ruſſia. And likewiſe we be informed that there is great plentie of Copper in the Emperours Dominions: we would be certified of it what plentie there is, and whether it be in plates or in round flat cakes, and ſend vs ſome for an example. Alſo we would haue you to certifie vs what kinde of wollen cloth the men of Rie and Reuel, and the Poles and Lettoes doe bring to Ruſſia, and ſend the ſkantlings of them with part of the liſts, and a full aduiſe of the lengths and breadths, colours and prices, and whether they be ſtrained or not: and what number of them may be vttered in a yeere, to the intent we may make prouiſion for them for the like ſortes, and all other Flemiſh wares which they bring thither and be moſt vendible there. And to certifie vs whether our ſet clothes be vendible there or not: and whether they be rowed and ſhorne: becauſe oftimes they goe vndreſt. Moreouer, we will you ſend vs of euery commoditie in that Countrey part, but no great quantitie other then ſuch as is before declared. And likewiſe euery kinde of Lether, whereof wee bee informed there is great ſtore bought yeerely by the Eſterlings and Duches for hie Almaigne and Germanie.

Steele.

Copper.

Wollen cloth of Rie and Reuel, of Poland and Lettowe.

Ruſſian lether.

More, that you doe ſend vs for proofe a quantity of ſuch earth, hearbes, or what thing ſoeuer it be, that the Ruſſes do die and colour any kinde of cloth linen or wollen, Lether or any other thing withall: and alſo part of that which the Tartars and Turkes doe bring thither, and how it muſt be vſed in dying and colouring. Moreouer, that you haue a ſpeciall foreſight in the chuſing of your Tallowe, and that it may be well purified and tried, or els it will in one yeere putrifie & conſume.

Things good to die withall.

Alſo that you certifie vs the trueth of the waights and meaſures, and howe they doe anſwere with ours, and to ſend vs 3. robles in money, that we may trie the iuſt value of them.

Ten yong men ſent into Ruſſia.

Alſo we doe ſend you in theſe ſhips ten yong men that be bound Prentiſes to the Companie, whom we will you to appoynt euery of them as you ſhall there finde moſt apt and meete, ſome to keepe accompts, ſome to buy and ſell by your order and Commiſſion, and ſome to ſend abroad into the notable Cities of the Countrey for vnderſtanding and knowledge. And we will you ſend vs aduertiſement from time to time aſwell of the demeanours of our Prentiſes which we doe ſend now, as alſo of ſuch other as bee already there with you. And if you finde any of them remiſſe, negligent, or otherwiſe miſuſe themſelues and will not be ruled, that then you doe ſend him home, and the cauſe why.

Henry Lane Agent.

And becauſe we doe perceiue the Countrey to be large, and that you haue three houſholds, we doe appoynt Henry Lane to be one of our Agents, and to ioyne with you in all your doings, and to haue like authoritie and power as you George Killingworth and Richard Gray haue: not doubting but you three will ſo conferre together, as both our Prentiſes and others may be appoynted and diuided euery of them to his office, and to that he can beſt ſkill of: and you alſo ſo diuide your ſelues euery of you to an houſe, as by aduertiſement one from another, our buſineſſe and trafficke may take good ſucceſſe. And for diuers conſiderations, to auoyde many troubles and buſineſſe that might happen, wee haue appoynted that hee which ſhall abide at Colmogro (which we doe thinke to bee moſt meeteſt Henry Lane) ſhall haue with him there ſuch of our yong men, as can beſt ſkill in keeping of accompts after the maner of Marchants, that is, by Debitor and Creditor: And that there ſhall be the place, where our bookes ſhalbe kept: becauſe it is nearer the ſea ſide, where our goods ſhalbe diſcharged and our ſhips laden. And the ſaid Henry Lane to be charged with all ſuch goods as we ſhall diſcharge there out of our ſhips, according to our Inuoyces. Which goods are to be ſent from Colmogro to Vologhda or to Moſco, or to any other place where you three or two of you do appoynt thẽ to be ſold, ſo that Henry Lane be one. And ſo frõ time to time immediatly as any thing is ſold, doe you certifie the ſame to Henry Lane, that he may enter it into the Bookes as appertaineth: otherwiſe he ſhould be too farre behinde in his Bookes at the comming of our ſhips, when he ſhould ſend vs the accompt of the whole yeere paſſed. And we will alſo that you George Killingworth and Richard Gray doe in the fine of April next ſend either of you vnto Henry Lane a whole, perfit, & iuſt accompt firmed with your owne hands of all the goods you haue ſolde and bought vntill that time, and what remaineth vnſolde: and alſo the accompt of all maner coſts of wares, and charges of you and the yong men vnder you particularly in ſuch ſort as the ſaid accompt may bee with him in Colmogro at the fine of May at the furtheſt: to the intent that hee may make all our accompts perfite againſt the comming of our ſhips: and in any wiſe to keepe accompt of euery voyage by it ſelfe, and not mingle one voyage with another at no hand. And as we will haue you to keepe accompt of euery voyage by it ſelfe, euen ſo wee would haue all the whole coſtes and charges of euery yeere put into the voyage of that yeere. As the charges of all the laſt yeere muſt be put to the accompt of the third voyage: and the charges of this yeere preſent, muſt in the fine of April next, be put to the fourth voyage. Not doubting but your wiſedome is ſuch, that you will not take it in euill part, that wee doe appoynt Henry Lane to take the accompt of the reſt. For we doe it for none other cauſe, but to keepe a good order in our bookes, that his bookes and ours may by this meanes agree: and hee being the yonger man, may beſt take paines: and that you doe keepe accompt of euery kinde of wares by it ſelfe, to the intent wee may perceiue wherein is our moſt gaine. And alſo in the making of your returne, in any wiſe name in your billes of lading, letters, and accompts, what wares doe appertaine to the firſt, ſecond, and third voyage: and that wee may knowe the ſame by the numbers or otherwiſe as you ſhall thinke good by your wiſedomes, putting the charges of the ſaide wares vnto them, as nigh as you can. And all ſuch money as ſhall bee made of your goods in any place, wee referre that to your diſcretion, where it ſhall remaine vntill it bee employed, either at Vologhda, Moſco, or els where. And likewiſe wee will that Henry Lane doe make in a readineſſe about the beginning of Iune euery yeere our whole accompt of the voyage in that yeere paſſed: in ſuch ſort that wee may receiue the ſame by our ſhippes: and that wee may plainely perceiue what ſales are made, and what remaineth of the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth voyage, and what charges haue bene layde out for the ſayd voyages, and what wares bee bought, and laden, and what they coſt, and for what voyage euery parcell thereof is: and to ſend vs a copie of the ſame accompt in euery ſhippe. And alſo forasmuch as at this time we haue ſent you but ſmall ſtore of wares in compariſon of that we haue hope will bee vttered in ſhort ſpace, and yet neuertheleſſe much more then you wrote for, whereby there ſhall not be ſufficient to make any ample returne

The olde traffike of Ruſſia to Rie, Reuel and Poland turned to Saint Nicholas.

returne: and vnderſtanding that there is great quantitie of goods ſtayed for our trade there by the Emperour, wee haue mooued the Embaſſador that you may haue credite for ſuch quantitie as ſhall ſeeme good to you to prouide for our benefite. Which credite if you may by his meanes obtaine, or otherwiſe haue, we would you bought as much Wexe principally as you may get. For if there be in that countrey ſo great quantitie, as we be informed there is, it will be the beſt commoditie we may haue: for hauing that wholly in our hands, we may ſerue our owne countrey and others. Therefore ſeeing the Emperour doth minde, that ſuch commodities as bee in his dominions ſhall not paſſe to Rie and Reuel and Poland as they haue done, but bee reſerued for vs: therefore we muſt ſo lay for it, that it may not ly vpon their hands that haue it to ſell, alwayes hauing conſideration in the price and time as our next diſpatch may correſpond. Whereof you may ſend a certaine aduiſe, as well what you ſhall receiue of credit, and to what quantitie, as alſo what wares are remaining in your hands: which together well conſidered, you may aduertiſe vs as well for how many hundreth tonnes we muſt prouide fraight againſt the next yeere, as alſo what ſortes, quantities and qualities of wares we ſhall ſend you, as well to pay your credite, as alſo to furniſh the next aduenture after. Of this we would be anſwered largely. For we truſt by this time you are able to giue full inſtructions of the ſtate of the countrey: according to the articles of your firſt Commiſſions, and what commodities doe principally abound there with their prices: and likewiſe what of our cõmodities haue moſt vtterance there, and what prices will be giuen for them there: and all other things requiſite and neceſſary to be knowen.

The articles of their firſt Commiſſion giuen 1555.

Leonard Brian ſent to ſearch out Yewe in the North parts of Ruſſia.

Alſo we doe vnderſtand that in the Countrey of Permia or about the riuer of Pechora is great quantitie of Yewe, and likewiſe in the Countrey of Vgory, which we be deſirous to haue knowledge of, becauſe it is a ſpeciall commoditie for our Realme. Therefore wee haue ſent you a yong man, whoſe name is Leonard Brian, that hath ſome knowledge in the wood, to ſhew you in what ſorte it muſt be cut and clouen. So our minde is if there be any ſtore, and that it bee found to be good, that there you doe prouide a good quantitie againſt the next yeere for the comming of our ſhippes: and if there can bee found none that will ſerue for our purpoſe, then you may ſet the ſayd Leonard Brian to any other buſineſſe that you ſhall finde moſt fitteſt for him, vntill the returne of our ſhips the next yeere. For he is hired by the yeere onely for that purpoſe. We doubt not but that hee ſhall doe you good ſeruice there. For hee hath good knowledge of wares of that Countrey: for his bringing vp hath bene moſt in Danske, and hath good vnderſtanding in making of Ropes and Cables. Alſo we doe ſend you two Coopers to remaine there with you at our finding for meate and drinke and lodging to make in a readineſſe all ſuch caſke as ſhalbe needfull for traine oyle, tallowe, or any thing elſe. One of them may goe with Leonard Brian to cut and cleue ſuch Yewe as he ſhall like there. And becauſe we be not ſure what timber they ſhall finde there to make Caſke, we haue laden in theſe ſhips 140. tunnes emptie Caſke, that is 94. tunnes ſhaken Caſke and 46. tunnes whole, and ten thouſand hoopes, & 480. wrethes of twigs: they may be doing with that till they can prouide other timber, which we would be glad to heare of. They haue an example with them of the bigneſſe of the Caſke they ſhall make. Neuertheleſſe, all ſuch Buttes and Hoggeſheads as may be found to ſerue we will ſhalbe filled with Traine Oyle.

2. Coopers ſent into Ruſſia.

Alſo we charge you that you ſuffer no goods nor marchandies of any perſons being not free of the Company, and of the accompt of the Company to be laden in any wiſe in our ſhips either now or at any time hereafter: except the Emperour or Embaſſadour minde to ſend any thing to the King and Queenes Maieſties, or to any noble man, or to the Marchants of the Companie: Nor likewiſe that you ſuffer any goods that goe in theſe ſhips to be brought on land there, except the Ambaſſadours goods, and the Phyſitions & Apothecaries, and others that hee hath with him, who carie no Marchandiſe. And becauſe our ſhips be freighted by the great, it ſhalbe very needefull that you do appoynt certaine to ſee the romaging of the ſhips, and to giue the maſter or Boatſwaine, or him that will take vpon him to romage, a good reward for his labour to ſee the goods well romaged. If it be iii.d. or iiii.d. the tunne, it ſhall not be amiſſe. For if it be not ſubſtantially well looked vnto, it may bee a great deale of money out of our wayes.

Alſo becauſe we reckon that from the Moſco will bee alwayes better conueyance of letters to vs by land: our minde is that from time to time as occaſion ſhall ſerue, our Agents ſhall write to him that ſhall lie at Moſco of all things that ſhall paſſe, that hee may giue vs large inſtructions, aſwell what is ſolde and bought, as alſo what lading we ſhall take, and what quantitie and kinde of goods we ſhall ſend. For hitherto we haue had but a ſlender aduiſe, more like a bill to ſerue a Chapman, then for quantitie of wares to ſerue a kingdome. For we muſt procure to vtter good quantitie of wares, eſpecially the commodities of our Realme, although we afford a good penyworth, to the intent to make other that haue traded thither, wearie, and ſo to bring our ſelues and our commodities in eſtimation, and likewiſe to procure to haue the chiefe commodities of that countrey in our hands, as waxe and ſuch others, that other nations may bee ſerued by vs and at our hands. For wee doe vnderſtand that the greateſt quantitie of waxe that commeth to Danske, Lubeck, and Hambourgh, commeth out of Ruſſia. Therefore if wee ſhould buy part, and they alſo buy, it would raiſe the price there, and would bee litle worth here. And all ſuch letters of importance and ſecrecie as you doe ſend by land for any wares or otherwiſe, you muſt write them in Cyphers, after the order of a booke ſent you in the ſhippes: alwayes taking good heede in placing of your letters and cyphers, that wee may vnderſtand them by the ſame booke heere, and to ſend them in ſuch ſort, that we may haue them here by Chriſtmas or Candlemas, if it be poſſible. And becauſe you cannot ſo certainly aduertiſe vs by letters of your doings, but ſome doubt may ariſe, whereof we would moſt gladly be certified: our mind is therefore that with theſe ſhips you ſend vs home one ſuch yong man as is moſt expert in knowledge of that countrey, and can beſt certifie vs in ſuch queſtions as may be demanded, whome we will remit vnto you againe in the next ſhips. We thinke Arthur Edwards wil be fitteſt for that purpoſe: neuertheleſſe vſe your diſcretion in that matter.

The marchãts letters ouer land written in cyphers.

As touching our goods that were robbed and pilfered out of our ſhips at Colmogro and Vologda we truſt by this time they are reſtored againe, and the malefactors ſo puniſhed that other may take example for doing the like, otherwiſe it will be an euill preſident. Moreouer, wee doe perceiue that Richard Gray doeth buy maſtes to ſend into England, they will not quit the coſtes, except we had a ſhip of purpoſe for them. And likewiſe that Steuen Burrow is returned from his diſcouerie with the Serchthrift, and wintereth at Colmogro, and is minded to ſet forth in the beginning of Iune next to ſeeke the riuer of Ob. We pray God to ſpeede him well, and truſt to haue him here in England this yeere to bring vs good newes.

The voyag of Steuen Burrowe for the diſcouerie of the riuer of Ob.

We doe perceiue there is a riuer found about the mouth of S. Nicholas Bay that hath thirteen foot vpon the barre at a lowe water, and is as neere Colmogro as S. Nicholas: which will bee a great pleaſure vnto vs. We will that Steuen Burrowe doe proceed on his voiage to diſcouer. Alſo we haue ſent you one Anthonie Ienkinſon Gentleman, a man well trauelled, whom we mind to vſe in further trauelling, according to a Commiſſion deliuered him, ſubſcribed by maſter Anthonie Huſe and others. Wherefore we will you deliuer him one or more of ſuch painfull young men as he ſhal thinke meeteſt for his purpoſe: and likewiſe ſuch money and wares as he ſhal think beſt to take with him. He muſt haue fourty pounds a yeere for foure yeeres, to be paid him by the halfe yeere, or as he will demaund it of you, ſo let him haue it from Eaſter laſt. Alſo the prices of wares here at this preſent are, bale flaxe twenty pound the packe and better, towe flaxe twentie eight pound the hundred, traine oyle at nine pound the tunne, waxe at foure pound the hundred, tallow at ſixteene ſhillings the hundred, cables and ropes very deare: as yet there are no ſhippes come out of Danske.

M. Anthonie Ienkinſon his firſt trauaile intended for Cathay by the Caſpian ſea and Boghar.

Kept vntill the tenth day of this preſent. As this day came the goods out of Scotland that were recouered out of the Edward Bonauenture: and nowe we doe perceiue that the caſke that the trayne oyle came in, is verie good, and much better then ours. Therefore our minde is, that you ſhall lade it all in ſuch barrels of the bigger ſort as you laded in the Edward, and no long barrels nor ſmall. And that caſke that wee haue ſent may ſerue for the Tallow or anie other ware that is not leakage. Neuertheleſſe, this voyage you muſt take ſuch as you can get.

Good caſke made in Ruſſia.

Alſo if the Emperour bee minded to deliuer you any ſumme of money, or good Ware at as reaſonable a price as you may buye for readie money, wee will that you ſhall take it and lade it for our accomptes, and to come at our aduenture, and hee to bee payed at the returne of the ſhippes in Veluets, Sattens, or any other kinde of ſilke, or cloth of golde, cloth of tiſſue, or according as his Commiſſion ſhall bee that hee ſhall ſende vs in the ſhippes, and according to ſuch paternes as hee ſhall ſend. Wee doe not finde the Ambaſſadour nowe at the laſt ſo conformable to reaſon as wee had thought wee ſhoulde. Hee is very miſtruſtfull, and thinketh euerie man will beguile him. Therefore you had neede to take heede howe you haue to doe with him or with any ſuch, and to make your bargaines plaine, and to ſet them downe in writing. For they bee ſubtill people, and doe not alwaies ſpeake the trueth, and thinke other men to bee like themſelues. Therefore we would haue none of them to ſend any goods in our ſhippes at any time, nor none to come for paſſengers, vnleſſe the Emperour doe make a bargaine with you, as is aforeſaid, for his owne perſon.

Alſo we charge you not to ſuffer any of our nation to ſend any wares to their wiues or friends in any of our ſhips; but to take their money there to be paied heere by the companie and not otherwiſe: and to haue conſideration how you doe take the roble. For although we doe rate it after ſixteene ſhillings eight pence of our money, yet it is not worth paſt 12, or 13, ſhillings ſterling.

Moreouer, you had neede to ſende newe accomptes, for them that came in the Edward bee marred and torne, ſo that we can make no reckoning by them: and likewiſe to write vs a perfect note of all the goodes which you receiued the laſt voyage out of the Edward, and heerein not to faile.

A Letter of Maſter Thomas Hawtrey to the worſhipfull Maſter Henrie Lane Agent at Colmogro, written in Vologda the 31. of Ianuarie 1557.

Worſhipfull Sir, heartie commendations premiſed. Theſe may bee to aduertiſe you, that yeſterday the thirtieth of this preſent came hither Robert Beſt, and brought with him two hundred robles, that is, one hundred for this place, and one hundred for you at Colmogro. As for hempe which is here at two robles and a halfe the bercouite, maſter Gray hath written to buy no more at that price: for Iohn Sedgewicke hath bought for ſixe or ſeuen hundred robles worth at Nouogrode for one roble and a halfe the bercouite, and better cheape: and white Nouogrode flaxe is there at three robles the bercouite. I truſt hee will doe much good by his going thither. As I doe vnderſtand, Richard Iohnſon is gone to Nouogrode with money to him, I doubt not but Maſter Gray hath aduertiſed you of all their doings, both at the Moſco and at Nouogrod. And touching our doings heere, you ſhall perceiue that wee haue ſolde wares of this fourth voyage for one hundred and fourtie robles, beſides fiftie robles of the ſecond and third voyage ſince the giuing vp of my laſt account, and for wares of the Countrey, you ſhall vnderſtand that I haue bought tried and vntried for 77. robles foure hundred podes of tried tallowe, beſides foure hundred podes that I haue giuen out money for, whereof God graunt good receipt when the time commeth, which is in Lent. And in browne flaxe and hempe I haue bought ſeuenteene bercouites, ſixe podes and ſixteene pound, which coſt 28. robles, eleuen altines two pence. And as for other kindes of wares I haue bought none as yet. And for maſtes to bee prouided, you ſhall vnderſtand that I wrote a letter to Totma the 28. of this preſent for fiftie maſtes, to wit, for 25. of fifteene fathoms, and 25. of foureteene fathoms, to be an arſhine and a halfe at the ſmall ende. And more, I haue written for 30. great trees to be two arſhines and a halfe at the ſmall end, and for the other that were prouided the laſt yeere, I truſt they ſhall be ſent downe in the ſpring of the yeere. And as concerning the Ropemakers, you ſhall vnderſtand that their abiding place ſhall bee with you at Colmogro, as I doe thinke Maſter Gray hath aduertiſed you. For, as Roger Bontinge Maſter of the workes doeth ſay, there is no place more meete for their purpoſe then with you: and there it will be made with leſſer coſt, conſidering that the pale is the one halfe of it: which is to ſet one pale more to that, and ſo for to couer it ouer, which as they ſay, will be but little coſt. They doe pray that it may bee made ſixteene foote broade, and one hundred and eightie fathoms long: and that in the midde way twentie foote from the pale towarde the water ſide there may be a houſe made to tarre in, ſtanding alone by it ſelfe for danger of fire. The Tarre houſe that they woulde haue made, is to bee fifteene fathoms long, and ten fathoms broade, and they would that houſe ſhould be made firſt: for I thinke they will not tarre before they come there. And farther they deſire that you will prouide for as much tarre as you may, for heere wee haue ſmall ſtore, but when the time commeth that it ſhoulde be made, I will prouide as much as I can here, that it may bee ſent downe when the Naſade commeth. The ſtuffe that they haue readie ſpunne is about fiue thouſand waight, and they ſay that they truſt to haue by that time they come downe yarne ynough to make 20. cables. As concerning a copie of the Alphabet in ciphers Maſter Gray hath written hither that Robert Auſten had one, which he willed that he ſhoulde deliuer to you. Thus I ſurceaſe, beſeeching God to preſerue you in health, and to ſend you your hearts deſire.

A Letter

A Letter of Maſter Richard Gray one of the firſt Agents of the Moſcouie companie to Maſter Henrie Lane at Moſco, written in Colmogro the 19. of Februarie 1558.

1558

WOrſhipfull Sir, after heartie commendations &c. You ſhall vnderſtand that this Lent commeth to Lampas ſuch a number of men of diuers nations with wares, as hath not bene ſeene theſe ten yeeres. Thither come many out of Vgori: therefore I would haue bene there my ſelfe, and alſo haue receiued ſuch money as is owing vs in wares by Kerill his brother and Oſep Boſcouo. For as you well know, thence they will goe with their wares to the Moſco, and make vs payment with delayes, as they haue done theſe other yeeres paſt. Colobone and his partner be departed towards Lampas with ſeuen ſleddes laden with victuals. Others alſo are gone to that Mart. As touching the bringing of money with you, it will bee good, for I aſſure you ſince our comming to this countrey haue not ſo many perſons gone to the Sea, as will doe this yeere. Truſting that God will ſend good ſtore of traine oyle, I will cauſe as much caſke to bee in a readineſſe as I can, if you ſhall thinke it meete to ſend ſome money before. All our olde hempe is ſpunne and wrought in tenne cables from fifteene ynches to ten the leaſt, and thirteene Hauſers from ſixe ynches to three ynches: and all may weigh while eight and twenty thouſande pounde weight and vpwarde. There is in hempe ockam fiue thouſand pound two hundred weight in twelue caſkes at the leaſt: the flaxe that came downe in the Naſſadaes with thoſe ſeuen podes that came laſt is all ſpunne with a good part of that hempe that came laſt. God ſend more ſhortly, for all that is here and that is comming in the three other ſleddes, will bee diſpatched by the fourth weeke in Lent. Within theſe few dayes I bought thirteen podes, ſeuen pound of hempe that coſt two robles, twenty eight altines, foure pence, which together with that that was bought before, ſhall bee laide in dipping and ſounding lines, for it is very good. There are ſpent aboue fiftie barrels of tarre alreadie: you ſhall vnderſtand that theſe eight workemen will ſpinne and lay aboue fourescore and tenne thouſand pound of hempe, ſo it bee dreſſed readie to their hands, hauing two to turne the wheeles, and two to winde vp. Therefore I haue agreed with theſe two boyes to ſerue the worſhipfull companie foure yeeres a piece. One of them windeth vp and is very apt to ſpinne: therefore I will haue two other young men Ruſſes to ſpinne, if they can finde good ſureties for their trueth. I haue bene in hand with theſe two yong men that came out of the Trinitie, and they with me, but vnder ſeuen pound a yeere they will not ſerue, nor Thomas Bunting that was Roger Bunting his ſeruant. Therefore I would haue three Ruſſes at the leaſt to ſpinne, fiue of them will be as good as theſe three, and will not be ſo chargeable all, as one of theſe would be. I thinke it were good that our Naſſada were ſomewhat ſtrengthened in her floore on both ſides with plankes of fiue or ſixe ynches thicke, from the ſtemme to the ſterne, as I haue written to Thomas Hawtrey at Vologda. Alſo if you ſhall ſo thinke meet, your ware and tallowe ſhall bee laden in two Doſnickes, for they bee meete to goe aboord the ſhippes: I doe intend to ſet vp an houſe at Boroſeua ouer againſt the place whereas the ſhippes ſhall ride, your aduiſe therein I expect, it ſhall not coſt aboue three robles, and yet if we will, there ſhall be two warme roomes in it. As for other matter at this preſent I haue not to trouble you withall, and if it would pleaſe you I would be glad to heare ſome good newes of Maſter Ienkinſon. Thus Ieſus be with you and be his guide.

Lampas a great mart for the Samoeds in the North.

What quantitie of hempe & workmen will worke in a yeere.

Poſtſcriptum.

As for theſe our Hawkes they bee not white, but white and mayled, but indeede are Iarfawkons. Theſe dayes paſt our Olen died. So this yeere our Maſters of the companie are like to haue none, nor any white beares. Neither may any paſſe out of the realme without a ſpecial licence from the Emperour.

I intend God willing to goe to Lampas, if I doe I will take foure or fiue kerſeys with me, but as for money there is ſmall ſtore here to carie.

White hawks & white beares prohibited without licence.

Maſter Grayes iourney to Lampas.

Yours, Richard Gray.

MY duety premiſed vnto your worſhips, with cōmēdations &c. It may pleaſe you to be aduertiſed, ẏ my laſt I ſent frō Smoleſco, which I truſt you haue receiued wᵗ other letters to diuers of our Engliſh men, wherein I certified you of my long retayning there, as alſo of my departure from thence, and howe that I had hired a Totar to bring mee to Danske. We came to a certaine village on Saterday the ſixe and twentieth of Februarie, and there remained that night and Sunday to refreſh our horſes, intending to haue gone away on Munday earely. But on Saterday at night one of his neighbours departed to Tirwill, and there declared to the Captaine howe that at ſuch a place there was a Dutch man that was come from the Moſco, and woulde ride to Danske, ſaying, for the one, I cannot tell what he is. The Captaine incontinent ridde to the King to ſhewe him thereof, ſo that without any delay there was ſent out for mee one of the Gentlemen of the Kings houſe, and one of the Meſnickes of the Towne with ſixe Officers to take mee. They came thither in the night about midnight, and there apprehended mee and tooke all that I had from me: they left mee nothing but my clothes to put on my backe, and ſo brought mee to Tirwill to the Captaines houſe, where before I dyned, I had a payre of fetters clapped on my legges, wherewithall I ſate vntill it was Munday in the Eaſterweeke. On which day, after long and earneſt calling to the Captaine as hee ridde by the windowe, hee commaunded the Marſhall that mine yrons ſhoulde be taken off, but no worde I could heare when I ſhould be deliuered out of captiuitie till it was Saint George his day: on which day I was had before the Marſhall, who declared vnto me that the Kings Maieſtie had ſhewed his mercie and goodneſſe towardes mee: for his pleaſure was that I ſhould be deliuered out of priſon to depart into England, but no way elſe. So after I had giuen thankes for the Kings Maieſties goodneſſe ſhewed vnto me, I deſired him that he woulde be a meane that I might haue the remaynder of ſuch thinges as were taken from me reſtored vnto me againe. Hee made me anſwere, that I might thanke God that I eſcaped with my head, and that if euer there came any more of vs through the land, they ſhould not ſo doe. The weeke before Eaſter they deliuered mee my Corobia againe with all thinges that were therein. They tooke from mee in money nine Hungers gylderns in golde, fiue ſhillings foure pence in Lettoes money, fourtie Altines in Ruſſe money, whereof twentie and more were for tokens, halfe an angell and a quarter of Maſter Doctour Standiſhes, with his golde ring. Your two pieces of money (Maſter Gray) that you ſent to your wife and daughter, with my two pieces of Boghary money. Of all this I had eight Hungers gilderns deliuered mee the thirde weeke of mine impriſonment to paye for my charges, which ſtoode mee in a Doller a weeke. So that at the day of my deliuerie I had but three gyldernes left me. For the reſt I made a ſupplication to the Captaine and had the like anſwere giuen mee as the Marſhall gaue me. So that all the reſt of the thinges before written are loſt, and no recouerie to bee had, which grieueth me more for the tokens ſakes then doeth mine eight weeks impriſonment. They haue alſo my ſword, my bootes, my bowe and arrowes that I bought at Smolenſco, which coſt me foure marks, my ſled, my felt, the combold, a booke of the Flowres of godly prayers, and my booke wherein my charges were written. Of all theſe I can get nothing againe, not ſo much as my two bookes.

Doctor Standiſh the Emperours Phiſition.

After I had remayned there fiue and thirtie dayes, I was had before the Captaine vp into a great chamber to bee examined for letters and of the cauſe of my comming through the Countrey. In the Captaines companie was one of the Lordes of Danske. They demaunded of mee where my letters were, I declared vnto them that I had none: your Officers (ſayd I) tooke me when I was in my bedde, they ſearched mee and tooke all that I had from mee, if there be any they ſhall finde them among my ſtuffe which they haue. They aſked mee then, for what cauſe I went home ouer lande? I declared vnto them, that the Winter beeing a warme ſeaſon, and hauing intelligence that The frozen Sea was not much frozen, and ſuppoſing this Sommer it would be nauigable, I was onely ſent to prouide a Shippe to bee ſent to paſſe the ſayde Seas to diſcouer Cataia: which if God graunted wee might doe, it woulde not onely bee a commoditie to the Realme of Englande, but vnto all Chriſtian landes, by the riches that might bee brought from thence, if the hiſtories bee true that are written thereof. Much other communication I had with them concerning the ſame voyage. Then he demaunded of mee what wares wee brought into Ruſſia, and what wee carried from thence. I declared the ſame vnto them. Then they burdened mee, that wee brought thither thouſandes of ordinance, as alſo of harneis, ſwordes, with other munitions of warre, artificers, copper, with many other things: I made them anſwere, that wee had brought thither about one hundred ſhirtes of mayle, ſuch olde thinges newe ſcowred as no man in Englande woulde weare. Other talke they had with mee concerning the trade of Moſcouia too long to commit to writing.

At my comming hither heere were Ambaſſadours from the townes of Danske, Lubeck, and Hamburgh, as alſo out of Liefland to deſire this king to bee their Captaine and head in their intended voyage, which was to ſtoppe all ſuch ſhippes as ſhoulde goe out of England for Moſcouia. Whereunto the King graunted, and immediatly they departed to prepare their ſhippes. So that I am afraide that either theſe our enemies, or the great warres that we haue with France and Scotland will be an occaſion that you ſhall haue no ſhippes at Colmogro this yeere.

An attempt to hinder our trade to Moſcouia by the Hans townes & Eaſterlings.

To conclude, although I haue no tokens to deliuer them, that the tokens taken from me were ſent unto, yet I will declare unto them that I had tokens for them, with the miſchance. And thus I commit you to Almightie God with the reſt of the companie, who keepe you in health to his holy will and pleaſure.

By yours to commaund
Thomas Alcocke.

A Letter of Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon vpon his returne from Boghar to the worſhipful Maſter Henrie Lane Agent for the Moſcouie companie reſident in Vologda, written in the Moſco the 18. of September, 1559.

1559

WOrſhipfull Sir, after my heartie commendations premiſed with moſt deſire to God of your welfare and proſperous ſucceſſe in all your affaires. It may pleaſe you to bee aduertiſed that the fourth of this preſent I arriued with Richard Iohnſon and Robert Iohnſon all in health, thankes bee to God. Wee haue bene as farre as Boghar, and had proceeded farther on our voyage toward the lande of Cathay, had it not bene for the inceſſant and continuall warres, which are in all theſe brutall and wilde countreys, that it is at this preſent impoſſible to paſſe, neither went there any Carauan of people from Boghar that way theſe three yeeres. And although our iourney hath bene ſo miſerable, dangerous, and chargeable with loſſes, charges and expenſes, as my penne is not able to expreſſe the ſame: yet ſhall wee bee able to ſatiſfie the worſhipfull Companies mindes, as touching the diſcouerie of The Caſpian Sea, with the trade of merchandiſe to bee had in ſuch landes and countreyes as bee thereabout adiacent, and haue brought of the wares and commodities of thoſe Countries able to anſwere the principall with profite: wiſhing that there were vtterance for as great a quantitie of kerſies and other wares as there is profite to bee had in the ſales of a ſmall quantitie, (all ſuch euill fortunes beeing eſcaped as to vs haue chaunced this preſent voyage,) for then it woulde be a trade worthie to bee followed. Sir, for that I truſt you will be here ſhortly (which I much deſire) I will deferre the diſcourſe with you at large vntill your comming, as well touching my trauel, as of other things. Sir, Iohn Lucke departed from hence toward England the ſeuenth of this preſent, and intendeth to paſſe by the way of Sweden, by whom I ſent a letter to the worſhipfull Companie, and haue written that I intend to come downe unto Colmogro to be readie there at the next ſhipping to imbarke my ſelfe for England, declaring that my ſeruice ſhal not be needfull here, for that you are a man able to ſerue their worſhips in greater affaires then they haue heere to doe, ſo farre as I perceiue. As touching the Companies affaires heere, I referre you to Chriſtopher Hudſons letters, for that I am but newly arriued. Hauing here but litle buſineſſe to doe, I ſend you Richard Iohnſon to helpe you there in your affaires. Thus giuing you moſt heartie thanks for my wench Aura Soltana, I commend you to the tuition of God, who ſend you health with hearts deſire.

Maſter Ienkinſons voyage intended for Cathay.

Paſſage to and from Moſcouia by Sweden.

This was a yong Tartar girle which he gaue to the Queene afterward.

Your aſſured to command,
Anthonie Ienkinſon.

A Letter of the Moſcouie companie to their Agents in Ruſſia, Maſter Henrie Lane, Chriſtopher Hudſon, and Thomas Glouer ſent in their ſeuenth voyage to Saint Nicholas with three ſhips, the Swallowe, the Philip and Marie, and the Ieſus the fifth of May, 1560.

AFter our heartie commendations to you. The twelfth day of the laſt moneth here arriued in ſafety, thanks be to God, our two ſhips, & by them we receiued your letters & inuoices very well

Tallowe.

Waxe.

well perceiuing what you haue laden in them. The tallowe came euill conditioned and broken, by reaſon it came in Corrobias, wee loſe and ſpoyle more then the Caſke will coſt, and much of this tallowe is verie euill, blacke, ſoft and putriſied. Touching the Waxe, as yet wee knowe not howe the weight will riſe, by reaſon that ſome of it was loſt in the barkes. The weight of the laſt yeeres waxe did not riſe ſo well as the other yeeres before it did. There had neede good heede to bee taken in the weighing. Alſo much of this Waxe had a great foote and is not ſo faire waxe as in times paſt wee haue had. You muſt cauſe the foote to bee taken off before you doe weigh it, or elſe you muſt ſeeke to haue a good allowance for it.

Traine oyles.

The traine Oyles which you laded this yeere came well conditioned, and the caſke was good and of a good ſiſe. But if they were made a little bigger it were the better, for they be not hogſheads. You haue written to vs to ſend you caſke which is not heere to be had, neither doe wee thinke it ſo beſt if it were heere, conſidering it muſt goe either ſhaken and bounde vp, or elſe emptie, which will bee peſterable, and likewiſe will ſhrinke and drie, and not be fitte to lade oyles in. Therefore our minde is, you ſhall cauſe ſo much caſke to bee made there of the ſiſe of hogſheads as will ſerue both for your oyles and tallowe, and let them be well trimmed with pitch on the heads and ſeames, and ſtand full of water three or foure dayes before you put Oyles in them. Your Cowper may bee ouerſeer to them that make them, that they be well hooped and cleere tymber without knottes, the worſt caſke you may put the tallowe in. Hee that ſeeth the filling of the oyles had neede to looke well to it, for there was much water in this that came nowe. Wee perceiue you haue bought and haue in a readineſſe one hundred and fourtie tunnes of oyles, and that if neede be you may haue more ſtore. Wherefore we doe minde to ſend you ſhipping for three hundred tunnes and vpwards, becauſe we would haue this next Sommer as great a returne as you can of the commodities of that Countrey, as alſo ſuch of our wares as you haue that are not vendible, or will not be ſolde or bartered, becauſe we would haue a ful knowledge and ſtate of our accounts.

Sables.

The Sables which you ſent this yeere be very baſe, among them all we could not make one principall timber: we haue alwayes written vnto you to ſend them that bee good or elſe none.

Wolnerings.
Luſerns.
Lettes.
Ermines.
Squirels.

The Wolnerings were indifferent, and ſome of the wolues, the reſt verie baſe, the Luſernes but meane, the Lettes not ſo large ſkinnes as we haue had: the beſt is, they were of a new death. As for the Ermines, they coſt more there with you, then we can ſell them for here. Therefore buy no more of them, nor of Squirels, for wee loſt the one halfe in the other.

Flaxe.
Cables and ropes.

The wares that we would haue you prouide againſt the comming of the ſhippes are, Waxe, Tallowe, trayne Oyles, Flaxe, Cables and Ropes, and Furres, ſuch as we haue written to you for in our laſt letters by the ſhippes: and from henceforth not to make any great prouiſion of any rich Furres except principall Sables & Lettes:

A proclamation againſt forren Furres.

for now there is a Proclamation made that no furres ſhall be worne here, but ſuch as the like is growing here within this our Realme.

3000. podes of Tallow a yere.

Alſo we perceiue that there might be a great deale of tallowe more prouided in a yeere then you ſend. Therefore our minde is, you ſhould enlarge ſomewhat more in the price, and to ſend vs if you can three thouſand podes a yeere: for we doe moſt good in it. And likewiſe the Ruſſes, if you would giue them a reaſonable price for their wares, woulde be the willinger to buy and ſell with you, and not to carie ſo much to Nouogrode as they doe, but woulde rather bring it to Vologda to you, both Waxe, Tallowe, Flaxe, Hempe, and all kinde of other wares fitte for our Countrey.

500. Loſh hides.

Our minde is you ſhould prouide for the next ſhips fiue hundred Loſh hides, of them that be large and faire, and thickeſt in hand, and to be circumſpect in the chooſing, that you buy them that bee killed in ſeaſon and well dryed and whole. If they bee good we may ſell them here for ſixteene ſhillings and better the piece, wee would haue the whole ſkinnes, that is, the necke and legges withall, for theſe that you ſent now lacke their neckes and legges.

Note.

Neuertheleſſe for this time you muſt ſende them as you may get them: if you coulde finde the meanes that the haire might bee clipped off them, they woulde not take ſo much roome in the ſhippes as they doe. We perceiue by your letters that the prices of Waxe doe riſe there with you, by reaſon that the Poles and Lifelanders doe trade into Ruſſia by licence: which, if there ſhoulde bee peace betweene them, woulde bee an occaſion that all other commodities in Ruſſia woulde riſe to a bigger price, and not bee ſufficient to ſerue them and vs too, and likewiſe woulde bring downe there the prices of our commodities. Therefore we thinke it good you ſhoulde make a ſupplication to the Emperour in the name of The Companie to returne the trade from Rye and Reuel to vs, eſpecially for ſuch wares as wee doe buy: promiſing that wee will bee bounde to take them at a reaſonable price, as wee haue bought them in times paſt: and likewiſe that wee will bring to them ſuch wares of ours, as are thought fitte for the Countrey, and to ſell them at ſuch reaſonable prices as wee haue done. If this ſhoulde not come to paſſe, wee might be out of hope of doing any good by the trade there: but that we haue a further hope of ſome good trade to be found out by Maſter Antonie Ienkinſon: by reaſon we doe perceiue by your letters, that raw ſilke is as plentifull in Perſia, as flaxe is in Ruſſia: beſide other commodities that may come from thence. Wee vnderſtand by your letters that you be at a point with the Ruſſe for the Waxe, Tallow, and Traine oyle that he ſhipped the laſt yere for 311 robles 20 altines, which is well: although much be not gotten by it, but becauſe they ſhould not vnderſtand our reckonings. We much marueil what you meane to buy Seale ſkins and tanne them. All that you haue ſent in times paſt lie here vnſold, and will yeelde no money. If you ſend 100 of them tawed with the haire on, they will bee ſolde, as afore. In our ſhippe we will ſend you ſuch things as you write to haue for the ropers: and wee would they ſhould make more ſtore of ſmall cables and ropes, as cables of 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. inches. For theſe great cables be not for euery man; and the greateſt cables bee not beſt laied: and likewiſe ſmall ropes for ſhroudes, ſholes, and other ſmall tackeling: and that you looke better to the ſpinning of their yarne that it be euen and well tarred. The cables that you doe minde to ſend vs let them be principall and fayre, and not paſt foure or fiue timbars. For they will not be ſo commonly worne here as they haue bin with noble men: and likewiſe of Luſerns ſend fewe and principall good. We minde to ſend you in our ſhippes 100 tunnes of ſalte. And becauſe we perceiue that balaſt is hardly to be had at our lading place there with you, we would you ſhould haue in a readineſſe 100 tunnes of the white ſtones whereof you ſent vs home an example two yeres paſt. And likewiſe to haue in a readineſſe maſtes of all ſortes for our ſhippes: for we know not what neede wee ſhall haue of them. The bringer hereof is Thomas Alcock, he could not be ſuffered the the laſt yeare to paſſe through Poland. And as we wrote vnto you in our ſhippes, hee is our ſeruant for yeares: And for that we know him to be honeſt, true and painefull, our mind is he ſhalbe placed where he may do beſt ſeruice. He doth know the commodities and diſcommodities of all kinde of wares which you doe ſend vs. Therefore we would you ſhould credite his ſayings both in quantitie of wares and goodnes, as alſo wherein is moſt our profit. We ſee by your letters that your opinion is that the ropemakers ſhould remaine there two yeres more; and that you haue prouided great plentie of hempe, which we are content withall. But as yet we haue ſolde none of our cables nor halſers, neither is the proofe of them knowen; becauſe the firſt you ſent vs were made of flaxe, which are worth no money: for after they be once wet they will rotte and moulder away like moſſe. And thoſe which you ſent vs now laſt, by misfortune there with you at the lading were wette and fretted in many places, and haue loſt their colour: by meanes whereof they be not ſo vendible as if they had come well conditioned. Of an hard beginning we truſt God will ſend vs a good ending. We hope in your next letters to heare good newes of the proceedings of Maſter Antonie Ienkinſon. We perceiue by his letters that Aſtracan is not ſo good a Mart towne as the fame hath gone of it: and maruell much that round pewter ſhould be ſo good, and good chepe there, and from whence it ſhould come. And whereas you write that you will come for England in our next ſhippes, we would gladly haue you to remaine there vntill the next yere following, for the better inſtruction of our ſeruants there; who haue not had ſo long time of continuance for the language, and knowledge of the people, countrey, and wares as you haue had. Neuertheleſſe if you will needs come away, we haue no doubt, but that you will leaue good order with our ſeruants there, namely with Chriſtopher Hodſon and Thomas Glouer, whom we appoint to remaine there as Agents in your roome, till further order bee taken: not doubting but that they will vſe themſelues ſo diſcreetely and wiſely in all their doings, as ſhall be to the worſhip and benefite of this company. And as we haue a good hope in them that they will be carefull, diligent and true in all their doings: ſo haue we no leſſe hope in all the reſt of our ſeruants there, that they will bee not onely obedient to them (conſidering what roome they be in) but alſo will be carefull, paineful, diligent, and true euery one in his roome and place for the benefite and profite of the company: That hereafter in the abſence of others they may be called and placed in the like roome there or elſewhere. And if you find any to be diſobedient and ſtubborne, and will not be ruled; wee will you ſhall ſend him home in our ſhippes: who ſhall find ſuch ſmall fauour and friendſhip during the time that he hath to ſerue, as by his diſobedience and euill ſeruice hee hath deſerued. And whereas Chriſtopher Hodſon hath written to come home, as partly he hath good cauſe, conſidering the death of his father and mother: yet in regard that Sir George Barne and the Ladie his wife were his ſpecial friends in his abſence, we doubt not but that he will remain in the roome, which we haue appointed him, if you doe not tarie and remaine there, till further order be taken: and for his ſeruice and paines hee ſhall be conſidered, as reaſon is, as friendly as if his friends were liuing. Thus we truſt you will take ſuch order the one to remaine at the Moſco, and the other at Colmogro, or elſewhere, as moſt neede is. Thomas Alcocke is deſirous to be in the Moſco: neuertheleſſe you ſhall find him reaſonable to ſerue where he may doe moſt good. The Hope of trade to be found by maſter Antonie Ienkinſon.

Seale ſkinnes tawed.

Small cables beſt vendible.

Maſts of all ſorts to be prepared.

Aſtracan no great good marte.

Chriſtopher Hodſon and Thomas Glouer appointed Agents 1560.

62 robles which you receiued of Iohn Boucher we haue payed him here, and alſo the 8 robles, which you receiued the yere before of Chriſtopher Roſe, and the money which you receiued more of George Burton, for the which we haue you our debtors. Thus we reſt, referring that which is here omitted to the report of the bringer: and ſo God haue you in his keeping. Alſo we will that you ſhould ſend vs in our ſhippes 200 horſe-clothes more. The things before written wee would that you ſhould let our ſeruants ſee and reade, to the intent they may perceiue our mindes.

Another letter to the foreſaid parties. 1560.

Stockholme.

John Luck taken priſoner in Lieflande.

The Swallow.

The Philip and Marie.

The Ieſus.

This letter before written is the copie of one ſent you by Thomas Alcock, truſting that hee was with you long ſince. The 26 day of the laſt moneth we receiued a letter from him, dated in Stockholme in Sweden the 14 day of Ianuary, and we perceiue by his letter that hee had talked with a Dutch man that came lately from the Moſco, who informed him that our friend Maſter Antony Ienkinſon was returned to the Moſco in September laſt paſt, but how farre he had beene, or what he had done, he could not tell. Alſo he wrote that one Iohn Lucke a Ioyner was taken by the Liefelanders, and put in priſon. As yet wee haue not heard from the ſayd Iohn Lucke, nor know not whether he be releaſed out of priſon or not. We ſuppoſe that by him you wrote ſome letter which as yet is not come to our hands: ſo that we thinke hee is yet in priſon, or otherwiſe diſpatched out of the way. The fifteenth day of December wee receiued a letter from Chriſtopher Hodſon, dated in the Moſco the 29 of Iuly, by the way of Danske: which is in effect a copie of ſuch another receiued from him in our ſhippes. You ſhal vnderſtand that we haue laden in three good ſhippes of ours theſe kind of wares following: to wit, in the Swallowe of London, Maſter vnder God Steuen Burrow, 34 fardels N° 136 broad ſhort clothes, and foure fardels N° 38 Hampſhire Kerſies: and 23 pipes of baſtards and ſeckes, and 263 pieces of raiſins and 4 hogſheds N° 154 pieces of round pewter, and ten hogſheds and poncheons of prunes, and one dryfatte with Almonds. And in the Philip and Marie, Maſter vnder God Thomas Wade, 25 fardels N° 100 broad clothes, and three fardels N° 42 Hampſhire Kerſies, and thirtie pipes of ſeckes and baſtards, and 100 pieces of raiſins. And in the Ieſus of London, Maſter vnder God Arthur Pette, 10 fardels N° 40 broade ſhorte clothes, and twenty ſeuen pipes of baſtards and ſeckes, as by the Inuoices herewith incloſed may appeare: Alſo you ſhall receiue ſuch neceſſaries as you did write to bee ſent for the rope makers: truſting that you ſhall haue better ſucceſſe with them which you ſhall ſend vs in theſe ſhips, then with the reſt which you haue ſent vs yet: for we as yet haue ſold none of them. And whereas we wrote vnto you in our former letter, that we would ſend you a hundred tunnes of ſalte, by reaſon it is ſo deare here we doe ſend you but nine tunnes and a halfe, for it coſt here ten pence the buſhell the firſt penie: namely in the Swallow 6 tunnes and a halfe, in the Philip and Marie one tunne and a halfe, and in the Ieſus one tunne and a halfe. The 4 hogſheds of round pewter goe in the Swallow and in the Philip and Marie N° 154 pieces, as is aforeſaid. We ſend you three ſhips, truſting that you haue prouided according to our former writing good ſtore of lading for them. If yee haue more wares then will lade the ſhips, let it be Traine oyles that you leaue behinde: the price is not here ſo good as it was: it is worth here 9 pound the tunne. We thinke it good you ſhould let the ſmaller ſhip bring as much of the traine as ſhe can cary: And that the maſters of the ſhips do looke wel to the romaging, for they might bring away a great deale more then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging: and beſtowe the traine by it ſelfe, and the ware and tallowe by it ſelfe: for the leakage of the traine doth fowle the other wares much. As for Allard the ſkinner, if you thinke good, he may come home in theſe ſhippes. We haue no doubt but that you Henrie Lane, if you minde to come home now in theſe ſhips as you requeſted, will leaue ſuch good order there with our ſeruants as ſhall bee for our moſt profite and their preferment, if they doe their dueties diligently and truely. If our friend Maſter Antonie Ienkinſon bee returned, and meane to come away in theſe ſhips to declare his mind and opinion of his trauaile, if need require and he be ſo minded he may returne thither by land and be there by the fine of Ianuarie or before. But as we be vncertaine whether he be returned or not: ſo we know not what he hath done, nor what benefite may riſe hereafter of his trauaile. Therefore in this wee remit it to his and your good diſcretions. Wee ſend you Thomas Hawtrey which is our ſeruant for yeeres: our minde is he ſhould be placed, where he may doe beſt ſeruice.

Nicholas Chancelour.

Alſo we ſend you Nicholas Chancelour to remaine there, who is our apprentice for yeeres: our minde is hee ſhould be ſet about ſuch buſineſſe as he is moſt fit for: he hath been kept at writing ſchoole long: he hath his Algoriſme, and hath vnderſtanding of keeping of bookes of reckonings. We ſend you now but 100 Kerſies: but againſt the next yeere, if occaſion ſerue, wee will ſend you a greater quantitie, according as you ſhal aduiſe vs: One of the pipes of ſeckes that is in the Swallow, which hath 2 round compaſſes vpon the bung, is to be preſented to the Emperour: for it is ſpecial good. The nete waight of the 10 puncheons of prunes is 4300. 2 thirds 1 pound. It is written particularly vpon the head of euery puncheon: and the nete weight of the fatte of almonds is 500 li. two quarters. The raiſins, prunes, and almonds you were beſt to diſpatch away at a reaſonable price, and principally the raiſins. for in keeping of them will be great loſſe in the waight, and the fruit will decay. We thinke it good that you prouide againſt the next yeere for the comming of our ſhippes 20 or 30 bullockes killed and ſalted, for beefe is very deare here. Therefore you were beſt to ſaue ſome of this ſalt that we doe ſend you in theſe ſhips for the purpoſe. The ſalte of that countrey is not ſo good. In this you may take the opinion of the maſters of the ſhippes. Fore ſkins, white, blacke, and ruſſet will be vendible here. The laſt yere you ſent none: but there were mariners that bought many. If any of the mariners doe buy any trifling furres or other commodities, we will they ſhall be regiſtred in our purſers bookes, to the intent we may know what they be. We deſire to know how the Emperour tooke the letter which we ſent in our ſhips, as an anſwere to the letter that came in his name and vnder his ſeale for the ſixe thouſand dallers. Thus wee reſt, committing you to God, from London the fift day of May 1560.

The ſalt of Ruſſia is not ſo good as Bay ſalte.

The maner of Iuſtice by lots in Ruſsia, written by Maſter Henrie Lane, and executed in a controuerſie betweene him and one Sherky Coſtromitskey in Moſco. 1560.

After the comming home into Ruſſia of Ioſeph Napea the firſt ambaſſadour to Queene Marie, I remaining the Agent there, ſundrie Ruſſian marchants by Ioſephs procurement obtained letters from the Emperour to freight goods and paſſe in our ſhips for England: which thing vpon good conſideration I anſwered and refuſed. They were then driuen to credite vs and compound in value vntill the next returne. At which time, notwithſtanding good accompt in the value of 600 robles, there grewe queſtion by their double demand. So in April Anno 1560. before my comming from Moſcouia, they obtained trial by combat or letter to haue their ſumme double, or as I proffered 600 robles. For combatte I was prouided of a ſtrong willing Engliſhman, Robert Beſt, one of the companies ſeruants: whome the Ruſſes with their Champion refuſed. So that we had the words of our priuiledge put in effect, which were to draw lots. The day and maner of triall appointed by the Emperour at his caſtle in his palace and high Court of Moſcouia was thus. The Emperours two Treaſurers, being alſo Chancelours and chiefe Iudges, ſate in court. They appointed officers to bring me, mine interpreter, & the other, through the great preſſe within the rayle or barre, and permitted me to ſit downe ſome diſtance from them: the aduerſe parties being without at the barre. Both parties were firſt perſwaded with great curteſie, to wit, I to enlarge mine offer, and the Ruſſes to mitigate their challenge. Notwithſtanding that I proteſted my conſcience to be cleere, and their gaine by accompt to bee ſufficient, yet of gentlenes at the magiſtrates requeſt I made proffer of 100 robles more: which was openly commended, but of the plaintifes not accepted. Then ſentence paſſed with our names in two equall balles of waxe made and holden vp by the Iudges, their ſleeues ſtripped vp. Then with ſtanding vp and wiſhing well to the trueth attributed to him that ſhould be firſt drawen, by both conſents among the multitude they called a tall gentleman, ſaying: Thou with ſuch a coate or cap, come vp: where roome with ſpeede was made. He was commanded to hold his cappe, wherein they put the balles, by the crowne vpright in ſight, his arme not abaſing. With like circumſpection, they called at aduenture another tall gentleman, commanding him to ſtrip vp his right ſleeue, and willed him with his bare arme to reach vp, and in Gods name ſeuerally to take out the two balles: which he did, deliuering to either Iudge one. Then with great admiration the lotte in ball firſt taken out was mine: which was by open ſentence ſo pronounced before all the people, and to be the right and true partie. The chiefe plaintifes name was Sheray Coſtromitsky. I was willed forthwith to pay the plaintifes the ſumme by me appointed. Out of which for their wrong or ſinne, as it was termed, they payd tenne in the hundred to the Emperor. Many dayes after, as their maner is, the people tooke our nation to be true and vpright dealers, and talked of this iudgement to our great credite.

Triall by combat or lot.

Note.

The former letters dated 1558, 1559, and 1560, ſhould all followe M. Ienkinſons voyage to Boghar.

The firſt voyage made by Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon, from the Citie of London toward the land of Ruſsia, begun the twelfth of May, in the yeere 1557.

Firſt by the grace of God, the day and yeere aboue mentioned, I departed from the ſayd Citie, and the ſame day at Grauesend embarked my ſelfe in a good ſhippe, named the Primeroſe, being appointed, although vnworthy, chiefe captaine of the ſame, and alſo of the other 3 good ſhips, to ſay, the Iohn Euangeliſt, the Anne, and the Trinitie, hauing alſo the conduct of the Emperour of Ruſsia his ambaſſadour named Oſep Nepea Gregoriwich, who paſſed with his company in the ſayde Primeroſe. And thus our foure tall ſhippes being well appointed, aſwell for men as victuals as other neceſſarie furniture, the ſaide twelfth day of the moneth of May, we weyed our ankers, and departed from the ſaide Grauesend, in the after noone, and plying downe the Thames, the wind being Eaſterly, and fayre weather, the 13 day we came a ground with the Primeroſe, vpon a ſand called the blacke taile, where we ſate faſt vntill the 14 day in the morning, and then God be prayſed, ſhe came off: and that day we plyed downe as farre as our Ladie of Holland, and there came to an anker, the wind being Eaſterly, & there remayned vntill the 20 day: then we weyed and went out at Goldmore gate, and from thence in at Balſey ſlade, and ſo into Orwel wands, where we came to an anker: but as we came out at the ſayd Goldemore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certaine rockes, that lye to the Northward of the ſaid gate, and was like to be bilged and loſt. But by the aide of God, at the laſt ſhe came off againe, being very leake: and the 21 day the Primeroſe remaining at an anker in the wands, the other three ſhippes bare into Orwel hauen, where I cauſed the ſayd Trinitie to be grounded, ſearched, and repaired. So we remayned in the ſaid hauen, vntill the 28 day: and then the winde being Weſterly, the three ſhippes that were in the hauen, weyed and came forth, and in comming forth the Iohn Enangeliſt came on ground vpon a ſand, called the Andros, where ſhe remained one tide, and the next full ſea ſhe came off againe without any great hurt, God be praiſed.

Iune.

The 29 day in the morning all foure ſhips weied in the Wands, and that tide went as farre as Orfordneſſe, where we came to an anker, becauſe the wind was Northerly: And about ſixe of the clock at night, the wind vered to the Southweſt, and we weyed anker, and bare cleere of the neſſe, and then ſet our courſe Northeaſt & by North vntill midnight, being then cleare of Yarmouth ſands. Then we winded North and by Weſt, and Northnorthweſt, vntill the firſt of Iune at noone, then it waxed calme, and continued ſo vntill the ſecond day at noone: then the winde came at Northweſt, with a tempeſt, and much raine, and we lay cloſe by, and caped Northnortheaſt, and Northeaſt and by North, as the winde ſhifted, and ſo continued vntill the third day at noone: then the wind vered Weſterly againe, and we went North our right courſe, and ſo continued our way vntill the fourth day, at three of the clocke in the afternoone, at which time the wind vered to the Northweſt againe and blew a freſh gale, and ſo continued vntill the ſeuenth day in the morning, we lying with all our ſhippes cloſe by, and caping to the Northwards: and then the wind vering more Northerly, we were forced to put roomer with the coaſt of England againe, and fell ouerthwart Newcaſtle, but went not into the hauen, & ſo plied vpon the coaſt the eight day & the ninth.

Heilick Iſlands in 66 degrees 40 minutes.

Roſt Iſlands.

The tenth day the winde came to the Northnorthweſt, & we were forced to beare roomer with Flamborow head, where we came to an anker, and there remained vntill the ſeuenteenth day. Then the winde came faire, and we weyed, and ſet our courſe North and by Eaſt, and ſo continued the ſame with a mery winde vntill the 21 at noone, at which time we tooke the ſunne, and had the latitude in ſixty degrees. Then we ſhifted our courſe, and went Northnortheaſt, and Northeaſt and by North, vntil the 25 day. Then we diſcouered certaine Iſlands, called Heilick Iſlands, lying from vs Northeaſt, being in the latitude of ſixtie ſixe degrees, 40 minutes. Then we went north and by Weſt, becauſe we would not come too nigh the land, and running that courſe foure houres, we diſcouered, and had ſight of Roſt Iſlands, ioining to the main land of Finmarke. Thus continuing our courſe along the coaſt of Norway and Finmark, the 27 day we tooke the Sunne, being as farre ſhot as Lofoot, and had the latitude in 69 degrees. And the ſame day in the afternoone appeared ouer our heads a rainebow, like a ſemicircle, with both ends vpwarde. Note that there is betweene the ſaid Roſt Iſlands & Lofoot, a whirle poole called Maleſtrand, which from halfe ebbe vntill halfe flood, maketh ſuch a terrible noiſe, that it ſhaketh the ringes in the doores of the inhabitants houſes of the ſayd Iſlands tenne miles off. Alſo if there commeth any Whale within the current of the ſame, they make a pitifull crie. Moreouer, if great trees be caried into it by force of ſtreams, and after with the ebbe be caſt out againe, the ends and boughs of them haue bene ſo beaten, that they are like the ſtalkes of hempe that is bruiſed. Note, that all the coaſte of Finmarke is high mountaines and hils, being couered all the yere with ſnow. And hard aboord the ſhoare of this coaſt, there is 100 or 150 fadomes of water in depth. Thus proceeding and ſailing forward, we fell with an Iſland called Zenam, being in the latitude of 70 degrees. About this Iſland we ſaw many Whales, very mõſtrous, about our ſhips, ſome by eſtimation of 60 foot long: and being the ingendring time they roared and cried terriblie. From thence we fell with an Iſland, called Kettelwicke.

Zenam Iſland.

Kettelwike Iſland.

This coaſt from Roſt vnto Lofoot lieth North and ſouth, and from Lofoot to Zenam Northeaſt and ſouthweſt, and from Zenam to Kettelwike Eaſtnortheaſt and Weſtſouthweſt. From the ſaid Kettelwike we ſailed Eaſt and by North 10 leagues, and fell with a land called Inger ſound, where we fiſhed, being becalmed, and tooke great plenty of Cods. Thus plying along the coaſt, we fell with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the Northermoſt land that wee paſſe in our voyage to S. Nicholas, and is in the latitude of 71 degrees and ten minutes, and is from Inger ſound Eaſt, and to the Northwards 15 leagues. And being at this North Cape the ſecond day of Iuly, we had the ſunne at North 4 degrees aboue the Horizon. The third day wee came to Wardhouſe, hauing ſuch miſts that we could not ſee the land. This Wardhouſe is a Caſtle ſtanding in an Iſland 2 miles from the maine of Finland, ſubiect to the king of Denmarke, and the Eaſtermoſt land that he hath. There are two other Iſlands neere adioining vnto that, whereon the Caſtle of Wardhouſe ſtandeth. The inhabitants of thoſe three Iſlands liue onely by fiſhing, and make much ſtockefiſh, which they dry with froſt: their moſt feeding is fiſh; bread and drinke they haue none, but ſuch as is brought them from other places. They haue ſmall ſtore of cattell, which are alſo fed with fiſh. From Wardhouſe we ſailed Southſoutheaſt ten leagues, and fell with a Cape of land called Kegor, the Northermoſt part of the lande of Lappia. And betweene Wardhouſe, and the ſaid Cape is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the South part whereof is a Monaſterie of Monkes of the Ruſſes religion, called Pechinchow. Thus proceeding forward and ſayling along the coaſt of the ſaid land of Lappia, winding Southeaſt, the fourth day through great miſts and darkenes we loſt the company of the other three ſhips, and met not with them againe, vntill the ſeuenth day, when we fell with a Cape or headland called Swetinoz, which is the entring into the Bay of S. Nicholas. At this Cape lieth a great ſtone, to the which the barkes that paſſed thereby, were wont to make offrings of butter, meale, and other victuals, thinking that vnleſſe they did ſo, their barkes or veſſels ſhould there periſh, as it hath bene oftentimes ſeene: and there it is very darke and miſtie. Note that the ſixt day we paſſed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughbie, with all his company periſhed, which is called Arzina reca, that is to ſay, the riuer Arzina.

The land of Lappia is an high land, hauing ſnow lying on it commonly all the yere. The people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they liue in the ſummer time neere the ſea ſide, and vſe to take fiſh, of the which they make bread, and in the winter they remoue vp into the countrey into the woods, where they vſe hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Woolues, Foxes, and other beaſts, with whoſe fleſh they be nouriſhed, and with their ſkinnes apparelled in ſuch ſtrange faſhion, that there is nothing ſeene of them bare but their eies. They haue none other habitation, but onely in tents, remouing from place to place, according to the ſeaſon of the yeere. They know no arte nor facultie, but onely ſhooting, which they exerciſe dayly, as well men as women, and kill ſuch beaſts as ſerue them for their foode. Thus proceeding along the coaſt from Swetinoz aforeſaid, the ninth day of Iuly wee came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66 degrees and 45 minutes, and is at the entring in of the Bay of S. Nicholas. Aboord this land there is 20 or 30 fadoms water, and ſundry grounds good to anker in. The current at this Cape runneth Southweſt and Northeaſt. From this Cape wee proceeded along vntill we came to Croſſe Iſland, which is ſeuen leagues from the ſayd Cape Southweſt: and from this Iſland, wee ſet ouer to the other ſide of the Bay, and went Southweſt, and fell with an headland called Foxenoſe, which is from the ſayd Iſland 25 leagues. The entring of this Bay from Croſſe Iſland to the neereſt land on the other ſide is ſeuen leagues ouer. From Foxenoſe proceeding forward the twelfth day of the ſayd moneth of Iuly, all our foure ſhips arriued in ſafetie at the road of Saint Nicholas in the land of Ruſſia, where we ankered, and had ſailed from London vnto the ſaid roade ſeuen hundred and fifty leagues. The Ruſſian amballadour and his company with great ioy got to ſhore, and our ſhips here forthwith diſcharged themſelues: and being laden againe, and hauing a faire winde, departed toward England the firſt of Auguſt. The third of the ſayd moneth I with other of my company came vnto the citie of Colmogro, being an hundred verſtes from the Bay of Saint Nicholas, and in the latitude of 64 degrees 25 minutes. I tarried at the ſaid Colmogro vntill the fifteenth day: and then I departed in a little boate vp the great riuer of Dwina, which runneth very ſwiftly, and the ſelfe ſame day paſſed by the mouth of a riuer called Pinego, leauing it on our lefte hand fifteene verſtes from Colmogro. On both ſides of the mouth of this riuer Pinego is high land, great rockes of Alablaſter, great woods, and Pineapple trees lying along within the ground, which by report haue lien there ſince Noes flood. And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning, I came into a town called Yemps, an hundred verſtes from Colmogro. All this way along they make much tarre, pitch and aſhes of Aſpen trees. From thence I came to a place called Vſtiug, an ancient citie the laſt day of Auguſt. At this citie meete two riuers: the one called Iug, and the other Sucana, both which fall into the aforeſaid riuer of Dwina. The riuer Iug hath his ſpring in the land of the Tartars called Cheremizzi, ioining to the countrey of Permia: and Succana hath his head from a lake not farre from the citie of Vologda. Thus departing from Vſtiug, and paſſing by the riuer Succana, we came to a towne called Totma. About this place the water is verie ſhallow, and ſtonie, and troubleſome for Barkes and boats of that countrey, which they call Naſſades, and Doſneckes, to paſſe that way: wherein marchandiſe are tranſported from the aforeſayd Colmogro to the citie of Vologhda. Theſe veſſels called Naſſades, are very long builded, broade made, and cloſe aboue, flatte bottomed, and draw not aboue foure foote water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they haue none iron appertaining to them but all of timber, and when the winde ſerueth, they are made to ſayle. Otherwiſe they haue many men, ſome to hale and drawe by the neckes with long ſmall ropes made faſt to the ſayd boats, and ſome ſet with long poles. There are many of theſe barks vpon the riuer of Dwina: And the moſt part of them belongeth vnto the citie of Vologhda: for there dwell many marchants, and they occupie the ſaid boates with carying of ſalte from the ſea ſide vnto the ſayd Vologhda. The twentieth of September I came vnto Vologhda, which is a great citie, and the riuer paſſeth through the midſt of the ſame. The houſes are builded with wood of Firre trees, ioyned one with another, and round without: the houſes are foure ſquare without any iron or ſtone worke, couered with birch barkes, and wood ouer the ſame: Their Churches are all of wood, two for euery pariſh, one to be heated for Winter, and the other for Summer.

On the toppes of their houſes they laye much earth, for feare of burning: for they are ſore plagued with fire. This Vologhda is in 59 degrees, eleuen minutes, and is from Colmogro, 1000 verſtes.

Good counſell for trauellers.

All the way I neuer came in houſe, but lodged in the wilderneſſe, by the riuers ſide, and caried prouiſion for the way. And he that will trauell thoſe wayes, muſt carie with him an hatchet, a tinder boxe, and a kettle, to make fire and ſeethe meate, when he hath it: for there is ſmall ſuccour in thoſe parts, vnleſſe it be in townes.

December.

The firſt day of December, I departed from Vologhda in poſte in a ſled, as the maner is in Winter. And the way to Moſcua is as followeth. From Vologhda to Commelski, 27 verſtes, ſo to Olmor 25 verſtes, ſo to Teloytske 20 verſtes, ſo to Vre 30 verſtes, ſo to Voſhansko 30 verſtes, then to Yeraſlaue 30 verſtes, which ſtandeth vpon the great riuer Volga, ſo to Roſtoue, 50 verſtes, then to Rogarin 30 verſtes, ſo to Peraſlaue 10 verſtes, which is a great towne, ſtanding hard by a faire lake. From thence to Dowbnay 30 verſtes, ſo to Godoroke 30 verſtes, ſo to Owchay 30 verſtes, and laſt to the Moſco 25 verſtes, where I arriued the ſixt day of December.

There are 14 poſtes called Yannes betweene Vologhda and Moſco, which are accompted 500 verſtes aſunder.

The 10 day of December I was ſent for to the Emperors Caſtle by the ſayd Emperour, and deliuered my letters vnto the Secretary, who talked with me of diuers matters, by the commandement of the Emperour. And after that my letters were tranſlated, I was anſwered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would giue me that I deſired.

The 25 day, being the day of the natiuitie, I came into the Emperors preſence, and kiſſed his hand, who ſate aloft in a goodly chaire of eſtate, hauing on his heade a crowne moſt richly decked, and a ſtaffe of gold in his hand, all apparelled with golde, and garniſhed with precious ſtones.

There ſate diſtant from him about two yardes his brother, and next vnto him a boy of twelue yeares of age, who was inheritor to ẏ Emperor of Caſan, conquered by this Emperor 8 yeares paſt. Then ſate his nobilitie round about him, richly apparelled with gold and ſtone. And after I had done obeiſance to the Emperour, he with his own mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and ſo I departed to my lodging till dinner time, which was at ſixe of the clocke, by candle light.

The Emperour dined in a fayre great hall, in the midſt whereof was a pillar foure ſquare, very artificially made, about which were diuers tables ſet, and at the vppermoſt part of the hall, ſate the Emperour himſelfe, & at his table ſate his brother, his Uncles ſonne, the Metropolitane, the young Emperour of Caſan, and diuers of his noble men, all of one ſide. There were diuers Ambaſſadors, & other ſtrangers, as well Chriſtians as heathens, diuerſly apparelled, to the number of 600 men, which dined in the ſayd hall, beſides 2000 Tartars, men of warre, which were newly come to render themſelues to the Emperour, & were appointed to ſerue him in his wars againſt the Lieflanders, but they dined in other hals. I was ſet at a litle table, hauing no ſtranger with me, directly before the Emperors face. Being thus ſet and placed, the Emperour ſent me diuers bowles of wine, and meade, & many diſhes of meat from his own hand, which were brought me by a Duke, and my table ſerued all in gold and ſiluer, and ſo likewiſe on other tables, there were ſet bowles of gold, ſet with ſtone, worth by eſtimation 400 pounds ſterling one cup, beſides the plate which ſerued the tables.

There was alſo a Cupbord of plate, moſt ſumptuous and rich, which was not vſed: among the which, was a piece of golde of two yardes long, wrought in the toppe with towers, and dragons heads, alſo diuers barrels of gold and ſiluer, with Caſtles on the bungs, richly and artificially made. The Emperour and all the hall throughout was ſerued with Dukes: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called me by name, & gaue me drinke with his own hand, & ſo I departed to my lodging.

Note, that when the Emperour drinketh, all the company ſtand vp, and at euery time he drinketh or taſteth of a diſh of meate he bleſſeth himſelfe. Many other things I ſawe that day, not here noted.

The 4 of January, which was Twelftide with them, the Emperour, with his brother and all his nobles, all moſt richly apparelled with gold, pearles, precious ſtones, and coſtly furres, with a crowne vpon his head, of the Tartarian faſhion, went to the Church in proceſſion, with the Metropolitan, and diuers biſhops and prieſts. That day I was before the Emperour again in Ruſſe apparell, and the Emperour aſked if that were not I, and his Chancelor anſwered yea. Then he bad me to dinner: then came he out of the church, and went with the proceſſion vpon the riuer, being all frozen, and there ſtanding bare headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the ice, and the Metropolitan hallowed the water with great ſolemnitie and ſeruice, and did caſt of the ſayd water vpon the Emperors ſonne and the Nobility. That done, the people with great thronging filled pots of the ſaid water to carie home to their houſes, and diuers children were throwen in, and ſicke people, and plucked out quickly againe, and diuers Tartars chriſtened: all which the Emperour beheld. Alſo there were brought the Emperours beſt horſes, to drink at the ſayd hallowed water. All this being ended, he returned to his palace againe, and went to dinner by candle light, and ſate in a woodden houſe, very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue 300 ſtrangers, and I ſate alone as I did before, directly before the Emperour, and had my meat, bread and drinke ſent me from the Emperour.

The citie of Moſco is great, the houſes for the moſt part of wood, and ſome of ſtone, with windowes of iron, which ſerue for ſummer time. There are many faire Churches of ſtone, but more of wood, which are made hot in the winter time. The Emperors lodging is in a faire and large caſtle, walled foure ſquare of bricke, high, and thicke, ſituated vpon a hill, 2 miles about, and the riuer on the Southweſt ſide of it, and it hath 16 gates in the walles, & as many bulwarks. His palace is ſeparated from the reſt of the Caſtle, by a long wall going north and ſouth, to the riuer ſide. In his palace are Churches, ſome of ſtone and ſome of wood, with round towers fairely gilded. In the Church doores and within the Churches are images of golde: the chiefe markets for all things, are within the ſayd Caſtle, and for ſundry things ſundry markets, and euery ſcience by it ſelfe. And in the winter there is a great market without the caſtle, vpon the riuer being frozen, and there is ſold corne, earthen pots, tubs, ſleds, &c. The caſtle is in circuit 2900 paſes.

The countrey is ful of mariſh ground, & plaine, in woods and riuers abundant, but it bringeth forth good plenty of corne. This Emperour is of great power: for he hath conquered much, as wel of the Lieflanders, Poles, Lettoes, and Swethens, as alſo of the Tartars, & Gentiles, called Samoeds, hauing thereby much inlarged his dominions. He keepeth his people in great ſubiection: all matters paſſe his iudgement, be they neuer ſo ſmall. The law is ſharpe for all offenders.

The Metropolitan dealeth in matters of religion, as himſelfe liſteth, whome the Emperour greatly honoreth. They vſe the ceremonies, and orders of the Greeke Church. They worſhip many images painted on tables, and ſpecially the image of S. Nicholas. Their Prieſts be maried, but their wiues being dead, they may not marie the ſecond time, and ſo become Monkes, whereof there are a great number in the land.

They haue foure Lents in the yeere, and the weeke before Shroftide, they call the Butter weeke, &c.

They haue many ſortes of meats and drinkes, when they banket and delight in eating of groſſe meates, and ſtinking fiſh. Before they drinke they vſe to blowe in the cup: their greateſt friendſhip is in drinking: they are great talkers and lyers, without any faith or truſt in their words, flatterers and diſſemblers. The women be there very obedient to their husbands, & are kept ſtraightly from going abroad, but at ſome ſeaſons.

At my being there, I heard of men and women that drunke away their children, and all their goods at the Emperors tauerne, and not being able to pay, hauing impawned himſelfe, the Tauerner bringeth him out to the high way, and beates him vpon the legges: then they that paſſe by, knowing the cauſe, and hauing peraduenture compaſſion vpon him, giue the money, and ſo he is ranſomed.

In euery good towne there is a drunken Tauerne called a Curſemay, which the Emperour ſometime letteth out to farme, & ſometimes beſtoweth for a yeare or two on ſome duke or gentleman, in recompenſe of his ſeruice: and for that time he is Lord of all the towne, robbing and ſpoiling, and doing what pleaſeth him: and then he being growen rich, is taken by the Emperor, and ſent to the warres againe, where he ſhall ſpend all that which he hath gotten by ill meanes: ſo that the Emperour in his warres is little charged, but all the burden lieth vpon the poore people.

They vſe ſadles made of wood & ſinewes, with the tree gilded with damaske worke, & the ſeat couered with cloth, ſometimes of golde, and the reſt Saphian leather, well ſtitched. They vſe little drummes at their ſadle bowes, by the ſound whereof their horſes vſe to runne more ſwiftly.

The Ruſſe is apparelled in this maner: his vpper garment is of cloth of golde, ſilke, or cloth, long, downe to the foot, and buttoned with great buttons of ſiluer, or els laces of ſilke, ſet on with brooches, the ſleeues thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed vp. Vnder that he hath another long garment, buttoned with ſilke buttons, with a high coller ſtanding vp of ſome colour, and that garment is made ſtraight. Then his ſhirt is very fine, and wrought with red ſilk, or ſome gold, with a coller of pearle. Vnder his ſhirt he hath linnen breeches, vpon his legs, a paire of hoſe without feete, and his bootes of red or yellow leather. On his head hee weareth a white Colepecke, with buttons of ſiluer, gold, pearle, or ſtone, and vnder it a blacke Foxe cap, turned vp very broad.

When he rideth on horſebacke to the warres, or any iourney, he hath a ſword of the Turkiſh faſhion, and his bowe and arrowes of the ſame maner. In the towne he weareth no weapon, but onely two or three paire of kniues, hauing the hafts of the tooth of a fiſh, called the Morſe.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with ſleds, in towne and countrey, the way being hard, and ſmooth with ſnow: the waters and riuers are all frozen, and one horſe with a ſled, will draw a man vpon it 400 miles, in three daies: but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with mire, and trauelling is very ill.

The Ruſſe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his houſe in the winter, but vpon his ſled, and in Summer vpon his horſe: and in his ſled he ſits vpon a carpet, or a white Beares ſkinne: the ſled is drawen with a horſe well decked, with many Foxes and Woolues tailes at his necke, & is conducted by a litle boy vpon his backe: his ſeruants ſtand vpon the taile of the ſled &c.

The voyage, wherein Oſep Napea the Moſcouite Ambaſſadour returned home into his countrey, with his entertainement at his arriuall, at Colmogro: and a large deſcription of the maners of the Countrey.

THe twelfth of Maye, in the yeare of our Lorde 1557 there departed from Grauelend, foure good ſhippes well appointed for Marchants, which were preſently bound into the Baye of S. Nicholas in Ruſſia: with which ſhippes was tranſported, or caried home, one Oſep Gregoriwich Napea, who was ſent Meſſenger from the Emperour and great Duke of Moſcouia. The foure ſhips were theſe, whoſe names follow, viz.

The Primeroſe Admirall.
The Iohn Euangeliſt Viceadmirall.

The Anne and the Trinitie Attendants.

The 13 of July, the foreſayd foure ſhippes came to an anker in the Baye of S. Nicholas, before an Abbey, called the Abbey of S. Nicholas, whereas the ſayde Meſſenger, Oſep Gregoriwich Napea went a ſhoare, and as many Engliſh men as came to ſerue the Emperour remained with him at the Abbey for the ſpace of ſixe daies, vntill he had gotten all his things a ſhoare, and laden the ſame in barkes, to goe vp the riuer Dwina, vnto Vologhda, which is by water 1000 verſtes, and euery verſte is about three quarters of an Engliſh mile.

The 20 of July, we departed from S. Nicholas, and the 24 of the ſame, we came to Colmogro, where we remained eight daies: and the ſayd Meſſenger was there of all his acquaintance welcommed home, and had preſents innumerable ſent vnto him, but it was nothing but meate and drinke. Some ſent white bread, ſome rie bread, and ſome buttered bread & pancakes, beefe, mutton, bacon, egges, butter, fiſhes, ſwannes, geeſe, duckes, hennes, and all maner of victuals, both fiſh and fleſh, in the beſt maner, that the rude people could deuiſe: for among them, theſe preſents are highly eſteemed.

Preſents vſed in Ruſſia are all for the moſt part of victuals.

The 29 of July, we departed from Colmogro, and the 14 of Auguſt we came to Vſtiug, where we remained one day, and changed our barkes or boates.

The 27 of Auguſt, we came to Vologhda, where we remained 4 daies vnlading the barkes, and lading our cheſtes and things in ſmall waggons, with one horſe in a piece, which in their tongue are called Telegos, and with theſe Telegoes they caried our ſtuffe from Vologhda vnto the Moſco, which is 500 verſtes: and we were vpon the ſame way 14 daies: for we went no faſter then the Telegoes.

There are three great townes betweene the Moſco and Vologhda, that is to ſay, Yeraſlaue, Roſtaue, & Pereſlaue. Vpon one ſide of Yeraſlaue runneth a famous riuer, which is called Volga. It runneth into the Caſpian ſea, and it deuideth it ſelfe before it come into the Mare Caſpium, in 50 parts or more, and neere vnto the ſame ſea there ſtands a great Citie, called Boghar, the inhabitants of the which are called by the ſame name.

The citie of Boghar.

The people of the ſaid Citie doe traffique vnto the Citie of Moſco: their commodities are ſpices, muſke, ambergreeſe, rubarbe, with other drugs. They bring alſo many furres which they buy in Siberia comming towards the Moſco: the ſayd people are of the ſect of Mahomet.

The 12 of September we came vnto the citie of Moſco, where we were brought by Napea, and two of the Emperours gentlemen vnto a large houſe, where euery one of vs had his chamber appointed.

They arriue at Moſco.

The 14 of September we were commanded to come vnto the Emperour, and immediatly after our comming we were brought into his preſence, vnto whom each of vs did his duetie accordingly, and kiſſed his right hand, his maieſtie ſitting in his chaire of eſtate, with his crowne on his head, and a ſtaffe of goldſmiths worke in his left hand well garniſhed with rich and coſtly ſtones: and when we had all kiſſed his hand and done our dueties, his maieſtie did declare by his interpreter that we were all welcome vnto him, and into his countrey, & therupon willed vs to dine with him: that day we gaue thanks vnto his maieſtie, and ſo departed vntill the dinner was readie.

When dinner time approched, we were brought againe into the Emperours dining chamber, where we were ſet on one ſide of a table that ſtoode ouer againſt the Emperours table, to the end that he might wel behold vs al: and when we came into the foreſayd chamber, we found there readie ſet theſe tables following.

Firſt at the vpper end of one table were ſet the Emperour his maieſtie, his brother, & the Emperour of Cazan, which is priſoner. About two yardes lower ſate the Emperour of Cazan his ſonne, being a child of fiue yeeres of age, and beneath him ſate the moſt part of the Emperors noble men.

And at another table neere vnto the Emperours table, there was ſet a Monke all alone, which was in all points as well ſerued as the Emperour. At another table ſate another kind of people called Chirkaſſes, which the Emperour entertaineth for men of warre to ſerue againſt his enemies. Of which people and of their countrey, I will hereafter make mention.

All the tables aforeſayde were couered onely with ſalt and bread, and after that we had ſitten a while, the Emperour ſent vnto euery one of vs a piece of bread, which were giuen and deliuered vnto euery man ſeuerally by theſe words: The Emperour and great Duke giueth the bread this day, and in like manner three or foure times before dinner was ended, he ſent vnto euery man drinke, which was giuen by theſe words, The Emperour and great Duke giueth thee to drinke. All the tables aforeſayd were ſerued in veſſels of pure and fine golde, as well baſons and ewers, platters, diſhes and ſawcers, as alſo of great pots, with an innumerable ſorte of ſmall drinking pottes of diuers faſhions, whereof a great number were ſet with ſtone. As for coſtly meates

I haue many times ſeene better: but for change of wines, and diuers ſorts of meads, it was wonderfull: for there was not left at any time ſo much void roome on the table, that one cuppe more might haue bin ſet, and as far as I could perceiue, all the reſt were in the like maner serued.

In the dinner time there came in ſixe ſingers which ſtood in the midſt of the chamber, and their faces towards the Emperor, who ſang there before dinner was ended three ſeuerall times, whoſe ſongs or voices delighted our eares little or nothing.

The Emperour neuer putteth morſell of meate in his mouth, but he firſt bleſſeth it himſelfe, & in like maner as often as he drinketh: for after his maner he is very religious, & he eſteemeth his religious men aboue his noble men.

This dinner continued about the ſpace of fiue houres, which being ended, and the tables taken vp, we came into the midſt of the chamber, where we did reuerence vnto the Emperors maieſtie, and then he deliuered vnto euery one of vs with his own hands a cup of mead, which when euery man had receiued and drunke a quantity thereof, we were licenced to depart, & ſo ended that dinner. And becauſe the Emperour would haue vs to be mery, he ſent to our lodging the ſame Euening three barrels of meade of ſundry ſortes, of the quantitie in all of one hogſhed.

The 16 day of September the Emperour ſent home vnto our lodging for euery of vs a Tartarie horſe to ride from place to place as we had occaſion, for that the ſtreetes of Moſco are very fowle and mirie in the Summer.

M. Standiſh doctor of Phiſicke.

The 18 of September there were giuen vnto maſter Standiſh doctor in Phiſick, and the reſt of our men of our occupations, certaine furred gownes of branched veluet and gold, and ſome of red damaſke, of which maſter Doctors gowne was furred with Sables, and the reſt were furred ſome with white Ermine, and ſome with gray Squirel, and all faced and edged round about with blacke beauer.

The 1 of October in the morning we were commanded to come vnto the Emperors court, and when we came thither, we were brought vnto the Emperor vnto whom we did our duties accordingly: wherupon he willed vs to dine with him that day, and ſo with thanks vnto his maieſtie, we departed vntill dinner time, at which time we came and found the tables couered with bread and ſalt as at the firſt: & after that we were all ſet vpon one ſide of the table, the Emperors maieſtie according to his accuſtomed maner ſent vnto euery man a piece of bread by ſome of the Dukes which attended on his highneſſe.

And whereas the 14 of September we were ſerued in veſſels of gold, we were now ſerued in veſſels of ſiluer, and yet not ſo abundantly as was the firſt of gold: they brought drinke vnto the table in ſiluer boles which conteined at the leaſt ſixe gallons a piece, and euerie man had a ſmal ſiluer cuppe to drinke in, & another to dip or to take his drinke out of the great boll withall: the dinner being ended, the Emperour gaue vnto euery one of vs a cup with meade, which when we had receiued, we gaue thanks and departed.

Moreouer, whenſoeuer the Emperors pleaſure is that any ſtranger ſhall dine with him, he doth ſend for them in the morning, and when they come before him, he with his owne mouth biddeth them to dinner, and this order he alwaies obſerueth.

The 10 of October the Emperour gaue vnto M. Standiſh 70 rubles in money, and to the reſt of our men of occupations 30 rubles apiece.

The 3 of Nouember we dined againe with the Emperour, where we were ſerued as before.

Long dinners

The 6 of December being S. Nicholas day, we dined againe at the Emperours, for that is one of the principall feaſts which the Moſcouites hold: we were ſerued in ſiluer veſſels and ordered in all points as before, and it was paſt 7 of the clocke at night before dinner was ended.

The Emperors maieſtie vſeth euery yeare in the moneth of December, to haue all his ordinance that is in the citie of Moſco caried into the field which is without the Suburbs of the citie, and there to haue it planted and bent vpon two houſes of Wood filled within with earth: againſt which two houſes there were two faire white markes ſet vp, at which markes they diſcharge all their ordinance, to the ende the Emperour may ſee what his Gunners can doe. They haue faire ordinance of braſſe of all ſortes, baſes, faulcons, minions, ſakers, culuerings, cannons double and royall, baſiliſkes long and large, they haue ſixe great pieces whoſe ſhot is a yard of height, which ſhot a man may eaſily diſcerne as they flee: they haue alſo a great many of morter pieces or potguns, out of which pieces they ſhoote wild fire.

Ordinance in Ruſſia.

A yeerly triumph.

The 12 of December the Emperors Maieſtie and all his nobility came into the field on horſebacke, in moſt goodly order, hauing very fine Iennets & Turkie horſes garniſhed with gold & ſiluer abundantly. The Emperors maieſtie hauing on him a gowne of rich tiſſue, & a cap of ſkarlet on his head, ſet not only with pearles, but alſo with a great number of rich and coſtly ſtones: his noble men were all in gownes of cloth of gold, which did ride before him in good order by 3. & 3. and before them there went 5000 harquebuſiers, which went by 5 and 5 in a rank in very good order, euery of them carying his gun vpon his left ſhoulder, and his match in his right hand, and in this order they marched into the field where as the foreſayd ordinance was planted.

And before the Emperors maieſtie came into the field, there was a certaine ſtage made of ſmall poles which was a quarter of a mile long, and about threeſcore yardes off from the ſtage of poles were certaine pieces of ice of two foot thicke, and ſixe foote high ſet vp, which ranke of ice was as long as the ſtage of poles, and as ſoone as the Emperors maieſtie came into the field, the harquebuſiers went vpon the ſtage of poles where they ſetled themſelues in order. And when the Emperors maieſtie was ſetled where he would be, and where he might ſee all the ordinance diſcharged and ſhot off, the harquebuſiers began to ſhoot off at the banke of ice, as though it had bin in any ſkirmiſh or battel, who ceaſed not ſhooting, vntill they had beaten all the ice flat on the ground.

After the handguns, they ſhot off their wild fire vp into the aire, which was a goodly ſight to behold. And after this, they began to diſcharge the ſmal pieces of braſſe, beginning with the ſmalleſt and ſo orderly bigger and bigger, vntill the laſt and biggeſt. When they had ſhot them all off, they began to charge them againe, and ſo ſhot them al off 3 times after the firſt order, beginning with the ſmalleſt, and ending with the greateſt. And note that before they had ended their ſhooting, the 2 houſes that they ſhot vnto were beaten in pieces, & yet they were very ſtrongly made of Wood and filled with earth, being at the leaſt 30 foote thicke. This triumph being ended, the Emperour departed and rode home in the ſame order that he came foorth into the field. The ordinance is diſcharged euery yeare in the moneth of December, according to the order before mentioned.

On Chriſtmas day we were all willed to dine with the Emperors Maieſtie, where for bread, meat and drinke, we were ſerued as at other times before: but for goodly and rich plate, we neuer ſaw the like or ſo much before. There dined that day in the Emperors preſence aboue 500 ſtrangers, and two hundred Ruſſes, and all they were ſerued in veſſels of gold, and that as much as could ſtand one by another vpō the tables. Beſides this there were foure cupbords garniſhed with goodly plate both of gold & ſiluer. Among the which there were 12 barrels of ſiluer, conteining aboue 12 gallons a piece, and at each end of euery barrell were 6 hoopes of fine gold: this dinner continued about ſixe houres.

Euery yeare vpon the 12 day they vſe to bleſſe or ſanctifie the riuer Moſcua, which runneth through the citie of Moſco, after this maner.

First, they make a ſquare hole in the ice about 3 fadoms large euery way, which is trimmed about the ſides & edges with white boords. Then about 9 of the clocke they come out of the church with proceſſion towards the riuer in this wiſe.

The hallowing of the riuer of Moſco.

First and foremoſt there goe certaine young men with waxe tapers burning, and one carying a great lanterne: then follow certaine banners, then the croſſe, then the images of our Lady, of S. Nicholas, and of other Saints, which images men carie vpon their ſhoulders: after the images follow certaine prieſts to the number of 100 or more: after them the Metropolitane who is led betweene two prieſts, and after the Metropolitan came the Emperour with his crowne vpon his head, and after his maieſtie all his noble men orderly. Thus they followed the proceſſion vnto the water, & when they came vnto the hole that was made, the prieſts ſet thēſelues in order round about it. And at one ſide of the ſame poole there was a ſcaffold of boords made, vpon which ſtood a faire chaire in which the Metropolitan was ſet, but the Emperours maieſtie ſtood vpon the ice.

After this the prieſts began to ſing, to bleſſe and to ſenſe, and did their ſeruice, and ſo by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being ſanctified, the Metropolitane tooke a litle thereof in his hands, and caſt it on the Emperour, likewiſe vpon certaine of the Dukes, & then they returned againe to the church with the prieſts that ſate about the water: but that preaſſe that there was about the water when the Emperor was gone, was wonderful to behold, for there came aboue 5000 pots to be filled of that water: for that Moſcouite which hath no part of that water, thinks himſelfe vnhappy.

And very many went naked into the water, both men and women and children: after the preaſſe was a litle gone, the Emperours Iennets and horſes were brought to drinke of the ſame water, and likewiſe many other men brought their horſes thither to drinke, and by that meanes they make their horſes as holy as themſelues.

All theſe ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were ſerued in veſſels of ſiluer, and in all other points as we had bene beforetime.

The Ruſſes begin their Lent alwaies 8 weekes before Eaſter: the firſt weeke they eate egs, milke, cheeſe & butter, and make great cheare with pancakes and ſuch other things, one friend viſiting another, & from the ſame Sunday vntill our Shroueſunday there are but few Ruſſes ſober, but they are drunke day by day, and it is accompted for no reproch or ſhame among them.

The Ruſſes Lent.

The next weeke being our firſt weeke at Lent, or our clenſing weeke, beginning our Shroueſunday, they make and keepe a great faſt. It is reported, and the people doe verily beleeue that the Metropolitan neither eateth nor drinketh any maner of thing for the ſpace of ſeuen dayes, and they ſay that there are many religious men which doe the like.

The Emperors Maieſtie eateth but one morſel of bread, and drinketh but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke, and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houſes during that time, ſo that the ſtreetes are almoſt void of company, ſauing a fewe poore folkes which wander to and fro. The other ſixe weekes they keepe as we doe ours, but not one of them will eate either butter, cheeſe, egs or milke.

On Palme ſunday they haue a very ſolemne proceſſion in this maner following.

Firſt, they haue a tree of a good bigneſſe which is made faſt vpon two ſleds, as though it were growing there, and it is hanged with apples, raiſins, figs and dates, and with many other fruits abundantly. In the midſt of ẏ ſame tree ſtand 5 boyes in white veſtures, which ſing in the tree before the proceſſion: after this there followed certaine yong men with waxe tapers in their hands burning, & a great lanterne that al the light ſhould not go out: after them followed two with long banners, & ſixe with round plates ſet vpon long ſtaues: the plates were of copper very ful of holes and thin: then followed 6 carying painted images vpon their ſhoulders, after the images followed certaine prieſts to the number of 100 or more, with goodly veſtures, wherof 10 or 12 are of white damaſke, ſet and imbrodered round about with faire and orient pearles, as great as peaſe, and among them certaine Saphires and other ſtones. After them followed the one halfe of the Emperours noble men: then commeth the Emperors maieſtie and the Metropolitane, after this maner.

Firſt, there is a horſe couered with white linnen cloth downe to ẏ ground, his eares being made long with the ſame cloth like to an aſſes eares. Vpon this horſe the Metropolitane ſitteth ſidelong like a woman: in his lappe lieth a faire booke, with a crucifix of Goldſmiths worke vpon the couer, which he holdeth faſt with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a croſſe of gold, with which croſſe he ceaſeth not to bleſſe the people as he rideth.

There are to the number of 30 men which ſpread abroad their garments before the horſe, and as ſoone as the horſe is paſt ouer any of them, they take them vp againe and run before, and ſpred them againe, ſo that the horſe doth alwayes go on ſome of them. They which ſpred the garments are all prieſts ſonnes, and for their labours the Emperour giueth vnto them new garments.

The Emperor leadeth ẏ Metropolitans horſe in proceſſion.

One of the Emperors noble men leadeth the horſe by the head, but the Emperour himſelfe going on foote leadeth the horſe by the ende of the reine of his bridle with one of his hands, and in the other of his hands he had a branch of a Palme tree: after this followed the reſt of the Emperours Noble men and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one church to another within the caſtle, about the diſtance of two flights ſhot: and ſo returned againe to the Emperours Church, where they made an end of their ſeruice. Which being done, the Emperours maieſtie and certaine of his noble men went to the Metropolitane his houſe to dinner, where of delicate fiſhes and good drinks there was no lacke.

The reſt of this weeke vntill Eaſter day they kept very ſolemnely, continuing in their houſes for the moſt part, and vpon Munday or Thurſday the Emperour doth alwayes vſe to receiue the Sacrament, and ſo doe moſt of his nobles.

Vpon good Friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they vſe euery yere on good Friday to let looſe a priſoner in the ſtead of Barrabas. The night following they go to the Church where they ſleepe vntill the next morning, & at Eaſter they haue the reſurrection, & after euery of the Lents they eat fleſh the next weeke following, Friday, Saturday and all.

They haue an order at Eaſter which they alwaies obſerue, and that is this: euery yere againſt Eaſter to die or colour red with Brazell a great number of egs, of which euery man and woman giueth one vnto the prieſt of their Pariſh vpon Eaſter day in the morning. And moreouer the common people vſe to carie in their hands one of their red egs, not onely vpon Eaſter day, but alſo three or foure dayes after, and gentlemen and gentlewomen haue egs gilded which they cary in like maner. They vſe it as they ſay for a great loue, and in token of the reſurrection, whereof they reioyce. For when two friends meete during the Eaſter holy dayes, they come & take one another by the hand: the one of them ſayth, the Lord or Chriſt is riſen, the other anſwereth, it is ſo of a truth, and then they kiſſe and exchange their egs both men and women, continuing in kiſſing 4 dayes together.

Kiſſing vſed in the Greeke church.

The 12 of Aprill being Tueſday in the Eaſter weeke, maſter Ienkinſon and maſter Graie, and certayne other of vs Engliſh men dined with the Emperor, where we were ſerued as we had bin before time. And after diner the Emperours maieſtie gaue vnto maſter Ienkinſon and vnto M. Gray, and ſo orderly vnto euery one of vs a cup of Mead, according to his accuſtomed maner

Which when euery man had receiued and giuen thanks, M. Ienkinſon ſtepped into the midſt of the chamber before the Emperours maieſtie, and gaue thanks to his highneſſe for his goodneſſe vnto him extended, deſiring his grace to licence him to depart, and in like maner did maſter Gray. His maieſtie did not onely licence them to depart, but alſo granted vnto maſter Ienkinſon his letters vnder his great ſeale, vnto all princes through whoſe dominions maſter Ienkinſon ſhould haue occaſion to paſſe, that he might the ſooner and quietlier paſſe by meanes thereof. Which being granted, maſter Ienkinſon and Gray lowly ſubmitted themſelues, thanking his maieſtie. So the Emperour gaue vnto either of them a cuppe of meade to drinke, and willed them to depart at their pleaſure in Gods peace.

With these letters M. Ienkinſon tooke his voyage the ſame Aprill to Boghar.

The 14. of Aprill in the morning when M. Gray and I were ready to depart towards England, the Chancellor ſent vnto vs and willed vs to come to their office in the Chancerie, where at our comming they ſhewed vs a great number of the Emperors iewels, and rich robes, willing vs to marke and beholde them well, to the end that at our arriuall into England, we might make report what we had ſeene there.

The Emperours wardrobe.

The chiefeſt was his maieſties crowne, being cloſe vnder the top very faire wrought: in mine opinion, the workmanſhip of ſo much gold few men can amend. It was adorned and decked with rich and precious ſtones abundantly, among the which one was a rubie, which ſtood a handfull higher then the top of the crown vpon a ſmall wier, it was as big as a good beane: the ſame crown was lined with a faire blacke Sable, worth by report 40. robles.

Wee ſawe all his maieſties robes which were very richly ſet with ſtones, they ſhewed vs many other great ſtones of diuers kindes, but the moſt part of them were vneuen, in maner as they came out of the worke, for they doe more eſteeme the greatneſſe of ſtones, then the proportion of them.

We ſaw two goodly gownes which were as heauie as a man could eaſily carrie, all ſet with pearles ouer and ouer: the gards or borders round about them were garniſhed with ſaphires and other good ſtones abundantly. One of the ſame gownes was very rich, for the pearles were very large, round and orient: as for the reſt of his gownes and garments, they were of rich tiſſue and cloth of gold and all furred with very blacke Sables.

When we had ſufficiently peruſed all theſe things, they willed maſter Gray at his arriuall in England, to prouide if he could, ſuch iewels and rich clothes as he had ſeene there, and better if he could, declaring that the Emperour would gladly beſtow his money vpon ſuch things.

So we tooke our leaue the ſame time, and departed towards Vologda immediatly.

The maners, vſages, and ceremonies of the Ruſſes.

Of the Emperour.

The Emperours name in their tongue is Iuan Vaſiliuich, that is as much to ſay, as Iohn the ſonne of “Vaſilie and by his princely ſtate hee is called Oteſara, as his predeceſſors haue bene before, which to interprete, is a king, that giueth not tribute to any man. And this word Oteſara his maieſties interpreters haue of late dayes interpreted to be Emperour, ſo that now hee is called Emperour and great Duke of all Ruſſia, &c. Before his father they were neither called Emperours nor kings but onely Rueſe Velike, that is to ſay, great Duke. And as this Emperor which now is Iuan Vaſiliuich, doeth exceede his predeceſſors in name, that is, from a Duke to an Emperour, euen ſo much by report he doeth exceede them in ſtoutneſſe of courage and valiantneſſe, and a great deale more: for he is no more afraid of his enemies which are not few, then the Hobbie of the larks.

“Or, Baſilius.

His enemies with whom he hath warres for the moſt part are theſe: Litto, Poland, Sweden, Denmarke, Lifland, the Crimmes, Nagaians, and the whole nation of the Tartarians, which are a ſtoute and a hardie people as any vnder the Sunne.

This Emperour vſeth great familiaritie, as wel vnto all his nobles and ſubiects, as alſo vnto ſtrangers which ſerue him either in his warres, or in occupations: for his pleaſure is that they ſhall dine oftentimes in the yeere in his preſence, and beſides that he is oftentimes abroad, either at one Church or another, and walking with his noble men abroad. And by this meanes he is not onely beloued of his nobles and commons, but alſo had in great dread and feare through all his dominions, ſo that I thinke no prince in Chriſtendome is more feared of his owne then he is, nor yet better beloued. For if he bid any of his Dukes goe, they will runne, if he giue any euil or angrie worde to any of them, the partie will not come into his maieſties preſence againe of a long time if he be not ſent for, but will faine him to be very ſicke, and will let the haire of his head grow very long, without either cutting or ſhauing, which is an euident token that hee is in the Emperors diſpleaſure: for when they be in their proſperitie, they account it a ſhame to weare long haire, in conſideration whereof, they vſe to haue their heads ſhauen.

Note.

His maieſty heareth all complaints himſelfe, and with his owne mouth giueth ſentence, and iudgement of all matters, and that with expedition: but religious matters he medleth not withall, but referreth them wholly vnto the Metropolitane.

His maieſtie retaineth and well rewardeth all ſtrangers that come to ſerue him, and eſpecially men of warre.

Hee delighteth not greatly in hawking, hunting, or any other paſtime, nor in hearing inſtruments or muſicke, but ſetteth all his whole delight vpon two things: Firſt, to ſerue God, as vndoubtedly he is very deuoute in his religion, and the ſecond, howe to ſubdue and conquere his enemies.

He hath abundance of gold and ſiluer in his owne handes or treaſurie: but the moſt part of his know not a crowne from a counter, nor gold from copper, they are ſo much cumbred therewithall, and he that is worth 2.3.or 4.grotes, is a rich man.

Of their Religious men.

The Metropolitane is next vnto God, our Lady and S. Nicholas excepted: for the Emperors maieſty iudgeth & affirmeth him to be of higher dignitie then himſelfe; for that, ſaith he, he is Gods ſpiritual officer, and I the Emperour am his temporall officer, and therefore his maieſtie ſubmitteth himſelfe vnto him in many things concerning religious matters, as in leading the Metropolitans horſe vpon Palme ſunday, and giuing him leaue to ſitte on a chaire vpon the 12. day, when the riuer Moſco was in bleſſing, his maieſtie ſtanding on the yce.

All matters of religion are reformed by the Metropolitane, he heareth the cauſes and giueth ſentence as himſelfe liſteth, and is authorized ſo to doe, whether it be to whip, hang or burne, his will muſt needs be fulfilled.

They haue both monks, friers and nunnes, with a great number of great & rich monaſteries: they keepe great hoſpitalitie, and doe relieue much poore people day by day. I haue bene in one of the monaſteries called Troietes, which is walled about with bricke very ſtrongly like a caſtle, and much ordinance of braſſe vpon the walles of the ſame. They told me themſelues that there are ſeuen hundred brethren of thẽ which belong vnto that houſe. The moſt part of the lands, towns, and villages which are within 40. miles of it, belong vnto the ſame. They ſhewed me the church, wherein were as many images as could hang about, or vpon the wals of the Church round about, and euen the roofe of the church was painted ful of images. The chiefe image was of our Ladie, which was garniſhed with gold, rubies, ſaphirs and other rich ſtones abundantly. In the midſt of the church ſtood 12. waxe tapers of two yards long, and a fathom about in bigneſſe, & there ſtands a kettle full of waxe with about 100. weight, wherein there is alwayes the wicke of a candle burning, as it were a lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

They ſhewed me a coffin couered with cloth of gold which ſtoode vpon one ſide within their church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who neuer eate or dranke, and yet that he liueth. And they told me (ſuppoſing that I had beleeued them) that he healeth many diſeaſes, and giueth the blind their ſight, with many other miracles, but I was hard of belief becauſe I ſaw him worke no miracle whileſt I was there.

After this they brought me into their ſellers, and made me taſte of diuers kinds of drinks, both wine and beere, mead and quaſſe, of ſundry colours and kinds. Such abundance of drink as they haue in their ſellers, I doe ſuppoſe few princes haue more, or ſo much at once.

Their barrels or veſſels are of an vnmeaſurable bignes & ſiſe: ſome of them are 3. yards long and more, and 2. yards & more broad in their heads: they containe 6. or 7. tunnes a piece: they haue none in their ſellers of their owne making that are leſſe then a tunne. They haue 9. or 10. great vautes which are full of thoſe barrels which are ſeldome remooued: for they haue trunks which come downe through the roofe of the vautes in ſundry places, through which they powre drinke downe, hauing the caske right vnder it to receiue the ſame, for it ſhould be a great trouble to bring it all downe the ſtayres.

The hoſpitalitie of their monaſteries.

They giue bread, meat and drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are at their abbey, but alſo when they depart, to ſerue them by the way.

There are a great number of ſuch monaſteries in the Realm, and the Emperors maieſty rideth oftentimes from one to another of them, and lieth at them 3. or 4. daies together.

The ſame monkes are as great merchants as any in the land of Ruſſia, and doe occupy buying and ſelling as much as any other men, and haue boats which paſſe too and fro in the riuers with merchandize from place to place where any of their countrey do traffike.

They eate no fleſh during their liues as it is reported: but vpon Sunday, Munday, Tueſday, Thurſday and Saturday it is lawful for them to eate egges, butter, cheeſe and milke, and at all times to eate fiſh, and after this ſort they lead their liues.

They weare all blacke garments, and ſo doe none other in all the lande, but at that abbey onely.

They haue no preachers no not one in al the land to inſtruct the people, ſo that there are many, & the moſt part of the poore in the country, who if one aſke them how many gods there be, they wil ſay a great many, meaning that euery image which they haue is a god: for all the countrey and the Emperours maieſty himſelfe wil bleſſe and bowe, and knocke their heads before their images, in ſo much that they will crie earneſtly vnto their images to helpe them to the things which they need. Al men are bound by their law to haue thoſe images in their houſes, and ouer euery gate in all their townes and cities are images ſet vp, vnto which the people bow and bend, and knocke their heads againſt the ground before them: as often as they come by any church or croſſe they do in like maner. And when they come to any houſe, they bleſſe themſelues 3. or 4. times before they will ſalute any man in the houſe.

Want of preachers cauſe of great ignorãce and idolatry.

They reckon and hold it for great ſinne to touch or handle any of their images within the circle of the boord where the painting is, but they keep them very daintily, and rich men deck them ouer and about with gold, ſiluer and ſtones, and hang them ouer and about with cloth of gold.

The prieſtes are married as other men are, and weare all their garments as other men doe, except their nightcaps, which is cloth of ſome ſad colour, being round, yͭ reacheth vnto the eares: their crownes are ſhauen, but the reſt of their haire they let grow, as long as nature will permit, ſo that it hangeth beneath their eares vpon their ſhoulders: their beards they neuer ſhaue: if his wife happen to die, it is not lawfull for him to mary againe during his life.

They miniſter the Communion with bread and wine after our order, but he breaketh the bread and putteth it into the cup vnto the wine, and commonly ſome are partakers with them: and they take the bread out againe with a ſpoon together with part of the wine, and ſo take it themſelues, and giue it to others that receiue with them after the ſame maner.

Their ceremonies are al as they ſay, according to the Greeke Church vſed at this preſent day, and they allow no other religion but the Greeks, and their owne: and will not permit any nation but the Greeks to be buried in their ſacred burials, or churchyards.

All their churches are full of images, vnto the which the people when they aſſemble, doe bowe and knocke their heads, as I haue before ſaid, that ſome will haue knobbes vpon their foreheads with knocking, as great as egges.

All their ſeruice is in the Ruſſe tongue, and they and the common people haue no other praiers but this, Ghoſpodi Ieſus Chriſtos eſine voze ponuloi naſhe. That is to ſay, O Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, ſonne of God haue mercy vpon vs: and this is their prayer, ſo that the moſt part of the vnlearned know neither Pater noſter, nor the Beliefe, nor Ten commaundements, nor ſcarcely vnderſtand the one halfe of their ſeruice which is read in their Churches.

All their ſeruice is in their mother tongue.

Of their Baptiſme.

When any child is borne, it is not baptized vntil the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptized then, it muſt tary vntil the ſecond Sunday after the birth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many Godfathers and Godmothers as they will, the more the better.

When they go to the Church, the midwife goeth formoſt, carying the childe, yͭ the Godfathers and Godmothers follow into the midſt of the Church, where there is a ſmall table ready ſet, and on it an earthen pot ful of warme water, about the which the Godfathers and Godmothers, with the childe, ſettle themſelues: then the clearke giueth vnto euery of them a ſmal waxe candle burning, then commeth the prieſt, and beginneth to ſay certaine words, which the Godfathers and Godmothers muſt anſwere word for word, among which one is, that the childe ſhal forſake the deuill, and as that name is pronounced, they muſt all ſpit at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he bleſſeth the water which is in the pot, and doth breathe ouer it: then he taketh al the candles which the goſſeps haue, and holding them all in one hand letteth part of them drop into the water, and then giueth euery one his candle againe, and when the water is ſanctified, he taketh the childe and holdeth it in a ſmall tubbe, and one of the Godfathers taketh the pot with warme water, and powreth it all vpon the childs head.

After this he hath many more ceremonies, as anoynting eares and eyes with ſpittle, and making certaine croſſes with oyle vpon the backe, head, and breſt of the childe: then taking the childe in his armes, carieth it to the images of S. Nicholas, and our Ladie, &c. and ſpeaketh vnto the images, deſiring them to take charge of the childe, that he may liue, and beleeue as a Chriſtian man or woman ought to doe, with many other wordes. Then comming backe from the images, he taketh a a paire of ſheares and clippeth the yong and tender haires of the childes head, in three or foure places, and then deliuereth the childe, whereunto euery of the Godfathers & Godmothers lay a hand: then the prieſt chargeth them, that the childe be brought vp in the faith & feare of God or Chriſt, and that it be inſtructed to clinege and bow to the images, and ſo they make an end: then one of the Godfathers muſt hang a croſſe about the necke of the childe, which he muſt alwayes weare, for that Ruſſe which hath not a croſſe about his necke they eſteeme as no Chriſtian man, and thereupon they ſay that we are no Chriſtians, becauſe we do not weare croſſes as they do.

Of their Matrimonie.

Their matrimonie is nothing ſolemnized, but rather in moſt points abhominable, and as neere as I can learne, in this wiſe following.

Firſt, when there is loue betweene the parties, the man ſendeth vnto the woman a ſmall cheſt or boxe, wherein is a whip, needles, threed, ſilke, linnen cloth, ſheares, and ſuch neceſſaries as ſhee ſhall occupie when ſhe is a wife, and perhaps ſendeth therwithall raiſins, figs or ſome ſuch things, giuing her to vnderſtand, that if ſhe doe offend, ſhe muſt be beaten with the whip, & by the needles, threed, cloth, &c. that ſhe ſhould apply her ſelfe diligently to ſowe, and do ſuch things as ſhee could beſt doe, and by the raiſins or fruites he meaneth if ſhe doe well, no good thing ſhalbe withdrawn from her, nor be too deare for her: and ſhe ſendeth vnto him a ſhirt, handkerchers, and ſome ſuch things of her owne making. And now to the effect.

When they are agreed, and the day of marriage appointed, when they ſhall goe towardes the Church, the bride will in no wiſe conſent to go out of the houſe, but reſiſteth and ſtriueth with thē that would haue her out, and faineth her ſelfe to weepe, yet in the end, two women get her out, and lead her towards the church, her face being couered cloſe, becauſe of her diſſimulatiō, that it ſhould not be openly perceiued: for ſhe maketh a great noiſe, as though ſhe were ſobbing and weeping, vntil ſhe come at the Church, and then her face is vncouered. The man commeth after among other of his friends, and they cary with them to the church a great pot with wine or mead: then the prieſt coupleth them together much after our order, one promiſing to loue and ſerue the other during their liues together, &c. which being done, they begin to drinke, and firſt the woman drinketh to the man, and when he hath drunke he letteth the cuppe fall to the ground, haſting immediatly to tread vpon it, and ſo doth ſhe, and whether of them tread firſt vpon it muſt haue the victorie and be maſter at all times after, which commonly happeneth to the man, for he is readieſt to ſet his foot on it, becauſe he letteth it fall himſelfe, then they goe home againe, the womans face beeing vncouered. The boyes in the ſtreetes crie out and make a noyſe in the meane time, with very diſhoneſt wordes.

When they come home, the wife is ſet at the vpper end of the table, and the huſband next vnto her: they fall then to drinking till they bee all drunke, they perchance haue a minſtrell or two, and two naked men, which led her from the Church daunce naked a long time before all the companie. When they are wearie of drinking, the bride and the bridegrome get them to bed, for it is in the euening alwayes when any of them are married: and when they are going to bedde, the bridegrome putteth certain money both golde and ſiluer, if he haue it, into one of his boots, and then ſitteth down in the chamber, croſſing his legges, and then the bride muſt plucke off one of his boots, which ſhe will, and if ſhe happen on the boote wherein the money is, ſhe hath not onely the money for her labor, but is alſo at ſuch choyſe, as ſhe need not euer from that day forth to pul off his boots, but if ſhe miſſe the boot wherin the money is, ſhe doth not onely looſe the money, but is alſo bound from that day forwards to pull off his boots continually.

Then they continue in drinking and making good cheere three daies following, being accompanied with certaine of their friends, and during the ſame three daies he is called a Duke, & ſhee a dutches, although they be very poore perſons, and this is as much as I haue learned of their matrimony: but one common rule is amongſt them, if the woman be not beaten with the whip once a weeke, ſhe will not be good, and therefore they looke for it orderly, & the women ſay, that if their huſbands did not beate them, they ſhould not loue them.

They vſe to marry there very yong, their ſonnes at 16. and 18. yeeres olde, and the daughters at 12. or 13. yeeres or yonger: they vſe to keepe their wiues very cloſely, I meane thoſe that be of any reputation, ſo that a man ſhall not ſee one of them but at a chance, when ſhe goeth to church at Chriſtmas or at Eaſter, or els going to viſite ſome of her friends.

The moſt part of the women vſe to ride a ſtride in ſaddles with ſtyrrops, as men do, and ſome of them on ſleds, which in ſummer is not commendable.

The huſband is bound to finde the wife colours to paint her withall, for they vſe ordinarily to paynt themſelues: it is ſuch a common practiſe among them, that it is counted for no ſhame: they greaſe their faces with ſuch colours, that a man may diſcerne them hanging on their faces almoſt a flight ſhoote off: I cannot ſo well liken them as to a millers wife, for they looke as though they were beaten about the face with a bagge of meale, but their eye browes they colour as blacke as ieat.

The women of Ruſſia paint their faces.

The beſt propertie that the women haue, is that they can ſowe well, and imbroder with ſilke and golde excellently.

Of their buriall.

VVhen any man or woman dieth, they ſtretch him out, and put a new paire of ſhooes on his feete, becauſe he hath a great iourney to goe: then doe they winde him in a ſheet, as we doe, but they forget not to put a teſtimonie in his right hand, which the prieſt giueth him, to teſtifie vnto S. Nicholas that he died a Chriſtian man or woman. And they put the coarſe alwayes in a coffin of wood, although the partie be very poore: and when they goe towards the Church, the friends and kinſemen of the partie departed carrie in their hands ſmall waxe candles, and they weepe and howle, and make much lamentation.

They that be hanged or beheaded, or ſuch like, haue no teſtimonie with them: how they are receiued into heauen, it is a wonder, without their paſport.

There are a great number of poore people among them which die daily for lacke of ſuſtenance, which is a pitifull caſe to beholde: for there hath beene buried in a ſmall time, within theſe two yeeres, aboue 80. perſons young and old, which haue died onely for lacke of ſuſtenance: for if they had had ſtraw and water enough, they would make ſhift to liue: for a great many are forced in the winter to drie ſtraw and ſtampe it, and to make bread thereof, or at the leaſt they eate it in ſtead of bread. In the ſummer they make good ſhift with graſſe, herbes and rootes: barks of trees are good meat with them at all times, There is no people in the world, as I ſuppoſe, that liue ſo miſerably as do the pouerty in thoſe parts: and the moſt part of them that haue ſufficient for themſelues, and alſo to relieue others that need, are ſo vnmerciful that they care not how many they ſee die of famine or hunger in the ſtreets.

Bread made of ſtraw.

The vnmercifulneſſe of the Ruſſes toward the poore.

It is a countrey full of diſeaſes, diuers, and euill, and the beſt remedie is for anie of them, as they holde opinion, to goe often vnto the hote houſes, as in a maner euery man hath one of his owne, which hee heateth commonly twiſe euery weeke, and all the houſholde ſweate, and waſh themſelues therein.

Stooues or bathes vſuall with the Muſcouites.

The names of certaine ſortes of drinkes vſed in Ruſsia, and commonly drunke in the Emperours Court.

THe firſt and principall meade is made of the iuice or licour taken from a berrie called in Ruſſia, Malieno, which is of a maruellous ſweete taſte, and of a carmoſant colour, which berry I haue ſeene in Paris.

Reported by Thomas Bulley.

The ſecond meade is called Viſnoua, becauſe it is made of a berry ſo called, and is like a blacke gooſeberrie: but it is like in colour and taſte to the red wine of France.

The third meade is called Amarodina or Smorodina, ſhort, of a ſmall berry much like to the ſmall reyſin, and groweth in great plentie in Ruſſia.

The fourth meade is called Chereunikyna, which is made of the wilde blacke cherry.

The fift meade is made of hony and water, with other mixtures.

There is alſo a delicate drinke drawen from the root of the birch tree, called in the Ruſſe tongue Berozeuites, which drinke the noble men and others vſe in Aprill, May, and Iune, which are the three moneths of the ſpring time: for after thoſe moneths, the ſappe of the tree dryeth, and then they cannot haue it.

The voyage of Maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, made from the citie of Moſco in Ruſſia, to the citie of Boghar in Bactria, in the yeere 1558: written by himſelfe to the Merchants of London of the Moſcouie companie.

The 23. day of April, in the yeere 1558. (hauing obtained the Emperor of Ruſsia his letters, directed vnto ſundry kings and princes, by whoſe dominions I ſhould paſſe) I departed from Moſco by water, hauing with mee two of your ſeruants, namely, Richard Iohnſon, & Robert Iohnſon, and a Tartar Tolmach, with diuers parcels of wares, as by the inuentory appeareth: and the 28. day we came to a town called Collom, diſtant from the Moſco 20. leagues, & paſſing one league beyond the ſaide Collom, we came vnto a riuer called Occa, into the which the riuer Moſco falleth, and looſeth his name: and paſſing downe the ſaid riuer Occa 8. leagues, we came vnto a caſtle called Terreuettisko, which we left vpon our right hand, and proceeding forward, the ſecond day of May, we came vnto another caſtle called Peroſlaue, diſtant 8. leagues, leauing it alſo on our right hand. The third day we came vnto the place where olde Rezan was ſituate, beeing now moſt of it ruined and ouergrowen, and diſtant from the ſaid Peroſlaue, 6, leagues: the 4. day we paſſed by a caſtle called Terrecouia, from Rezan 12. leagues, & the 6. day we came to another caſtle called Caſſim, vnder the gouernment of a Tartar prince named Vtzar Zegoline, ſometime Emperour of the worthy citie of Cazan, and now ſubiect vnto the Emperour of Ruſſia. But leauing Caſſim on our left hand, the 8. day we came vnto a faire town called Morom, from Caſsim 20. leagues, where we took the ſonne, and found the latitude 56. degrees: and proceeding forward the 11. day, we came vnto another faire town & caſtle called Nyſe Nouogrod, ſituated at the falling of the foreſaid riuer Occa into the worthie riuer of Volga, diſtant from the ſaide Morom 25. leagues, in the latitude of 56. degrees 18. minutes. Frō Rezan to this Nyſe Nouogrod, on both ſides the ſaid riuer of Occa, is raiſed the greateſt ſtore of waxe and hony in all the land of Ruſsia. We tarried at the foreſaid Nyſe Nouogrod vntil the 19. day, for the comming of a captain which was ſent by the Emperour to rule at Aſtracan, who beeing arriued, and hauing the number of 500. great boates vnder his conduct, ſome laden with victuals, ſouldiers, and munition: and other ſome with merchandiſe, departed altogether the ſaid 19. day from the ſaid Nyſe Nouogrod, and the 22. we came vnto a caſtle called Vaſiliagorod, diſtant 25. leagues, which we left vpon our right hand. This towne or caſtle had his name of this Emperours father, who was called Vaſilius, and gorod in the Ruſſe tongue is as much to ſay as a caſtle, ſo that Vaſiliagorod is to ſay, Vaſilius caſtle: and it was the furtheſt place that the ſaid Emperour conquered from the Tartars. But this preſent Emperour his ſonne, called Iuan Vaſiliwich, hath had great good ſucceſſe in his warres, both againſt the Chriſtians and alſo the Mahometiſts and Gentiles, but eſpecially againſt the Tartars, inlarging his Empire euen to the Caſpian ſea, hauing conquered the famous riuer of Volga, with all the countreis thereabout adiacent. Thus proceeding on our iourney the 25. day of May aforeſaide, wee came to another caſtle called Sabowſhare, which wee left on our right hand, diſtant from Vaſiliagorod 16. leagues. The countrey heereabout is called Mordouits, and the habitants did profeſſe the law of the Gentiles; but nowe beeing conquered by this Emperour of Ruſsia, moſt of them are chriſtened, but lie in the woods and wilderneſſe, without towne or habitation.

The 27. day we paſſed by another caſtle called Swyasko, diſtant from Shabowſhare aforeſaid 25. leagues: we left it on our right hand, and the 29. came vnto an Iland one league from the citie of Cazan, from which falleth downe a riuer called Cazanka reca, & entreth into the foreſaide Volga. Cazan is a faire town after the Ruſſe or Tartar faſhion, with a ſtrong caſtle, ſituated vpon a high hill, and was walled round about with timber & earth, but now the Emperour of Ruſsia hath giuen order to plucke downe the old walles, and to builde them againe of free ſtone. It hath bene a citie of great wealth and riches, and being in the hands of the Tartars it was a kingdome of it ſelfe, and did more vexe the Ruſſes in their warres, then any other nation: but 9. yeres paſt, this Emperour of Ruſsia conquered it, and tooke the king captiue, who being but young is nowe baptiſed, and brought vp in his court with two other princes, which were alſo kings of the ſaid Cazan, and being ech of thē in time of their reignes in danger of their ſubiects through ciuil diſcord, came and rendred themſelues at ſeueral times vnto the ſaid Emperor, ſo that at this preſent there are three princes in the court of Ruſsia, which had bene Emperours of the ſaid Cazan, whom the Emperour vſeth with great honour.

Cazan.

We remained at Cazan till the 13. day of Iune, and then departed from thence: and the ſame day paſſed by an Iland called the Iland of merchants, becauſe it was woont to be a place where all merchants, as well Ruſſes and Cazanites, as Nagayans and Crimmes, and diuers other nations did reſort to keepe mart for buying and ſelling, but nowe it is forſaken, and ſtandeth without any ſuch reſort thither, or at Cazan, or at any place about it, from Moſco vnto Mare Caſpium.

The Iland of merchants.

Thus proceeding forward the 14. day, we paſſed by a goodly riuer called Cama, which we left on our left hand. This riuer falleth out of the countrey of Permia into the riuer of Volga, and is from Cazan 15. leagues: and the countrey lying betwixt the ſaid Cazan and the ſaid riuer Cama on the left hand of Volga is called Vachen, and the inhabitants be Gentiles, and liue in the wilderneſſe without houſe or habitation: and the countrey on the other ſide of Volga ouer againſt the ſaid riuer Cama is called the land of Cheremizes, halfe Gentiles, halfe Tartars, and all the land on the left hand of the ſaid Volga from the ſaid riuer vnto Aſtracan, and ſo following the North and Northeaſt ſide of the Caſpian ſea, to a land of the Tartars called Turkemen, is called the countrey of Mangat or Nagay, whoſe inhabitants are of the law of Mahomet, and were all deſtroyed in the yeere 1558, at my being at Aſtracan, through ciuill warres among them, accompanied with famine, peſtilence, and ſuch plagues, in ſuch ſort that in the ſaid yeere there were conſumed of the people, in one ſort and another, aboue one hundred thouſand: the like plague was neuer ſeen in thoſe parts, ſo that the ſaid countrey of Nagay being a countrey of great paſture, remaineth now vnrepleniſhed to the great contentation of the Ruſſes, who haue had cruel warres a long time together.

The riuer of Cama.

Nagay Tartars.

The Nagayans when they flouriſhed, liued in this maner: they were diuided into diuers companies called Hords, and euery Hord had a ruler, whom they obeyed as their king, and was called a Murſe. Towne or houſe they had none, but liued in the open fields, euery Murſe or King hauing his Hords or people about him, with their wiues, children and cattell, who hauing conſumed the paſture in one place, remooued vnto another: and when they remooue they haue houſes like tents ſet vpon wagons or carts, which are drawen from place to place with camels, & therin their wiues, children, and all their riches, which is very litle, is caried about, and euery man hath at the leaſt foure or fiue wiues beſides concubines. Vſe of money they haue none, but doe barter their cattell for apparell and other neceſſaries. They delight in no arte nor ſcience, except the warres, wherein they are expert, but for the moſt part they be paſturing people, and haue great ſtore of cattel, which is all their riches. They eate much fleſh, and eſpecially the horſe, and they drinke mares milke, wherewith they be oftentimes drunke: they are ſeditious & inclined to theft and murther. Corne they ſowe not, neither doe eate any bread, mocking the Chriſtians for the ſame, and diſabling our ſtrengths, ſaying we liue by eating the top of a weede, and drinke a drinke made of the ſame, allowing their great deuouring of fleſh, and drinking of milke to be the increaſe of their ſtrength. But now to proceed forward to my iourney.

Hordes.

All the countrey vpon our right hand the riuer Volga, from ouer againſt the riuer Cama vnto the towne of Aſtracan, is the land of Crimme, whoſe inhabitants be alſo of the lawe of Mahomet, and liue for the moſt part according to the faſhions of the Nagayes, hauing continual wars with the Emperour of Ruſsia, and are valiant in the fielde, hauing countenance, and ſupport from the great Turke.

The Crimme Tartars.

The 16. day of Iune we paſſed by certaine fiſhermens houſes called Petowſe twenty leagues from the riuer Cama, where is great fiſhing for Sturgeon, ſo continuing our way vntill the 22. day, and paſſing by another great riuer called Samar, which falleth out of the aforeſaide countrey, and runneth through Nagay, and entreth into the ſaide riuer of Volga. The 28. day wee came vnto a great hill, where was in times paſt a caſtle made by the Crimmes, but now it is ruined, being the iuſt midway betweene the ſaid Cazan and Aſtrachan, which is 200. leagues or thereabout, in the latitude of 51. degrees 47. minutes. Vpon all this ſhore groweth abundance of Licoris, whoſe root runneth within the ground like a vine.

The riuer of Samar.

Licoris in great plentie.

Thus going forward the firſt day of Iuly we came to a place called Perouolog, ſo named becauſe in times paſt the Tartars caried their boates from Volga vnto the riuer Tanais, otherwiſe called Don, by land, when they would robbe ſuch as paſſed downe the ſaid Volga to Aſtracan, and alſo ſuch as paſſed downe by the riuer Tanais, to Aſou, Caffa, or any other towne ſituated vpon Mare Euxinum, into which ſea Tanais falleth, who hath his ſprings in the countrey of Rezan, out of a plaine ground. It is at this ſtreight of Perouolog from the one riuer to the other two leagues by land, and is a dangerous place for theeues and robbers, but now it is not ſo euill as it hath bene, by reaſon of the Emperour of Ruſsia his conqueſts.

Departing from Perouolog, hauing the wilderneſſe on both ſides, wee ſawe a great heard of Nagayans, paſturing, as is aboueſaid, by eſtimation aboue a thouſand Camels drawing of cartes with houſes vpon them like tents, of a ſtrange faſhion, ſeeming to bee a farre off a towne: that Hord was belonging to a great Murſe called Smille, the greateſt prince in all Nagay, who hath ſlaine and driuen away all the reſt, not ſparing his owne brethren and children, and hauing peace with this Emperour of Ruſſia he hath what he needeth, and ruleth alone: ſo that now the Ruſſes liue in peace with the Nagayans, who were wont to haue mortall warres together.

Aſtracan.

Store of Sturgions.

The 14. day of Iuly paſſing by an old caſtle, which was Old Aſtracan, and leauing it vpon our right hand, we arriued at New Aſtracan, which this Emperour of Ruſſia conquered ſixe yeeres paſt, in the yeere 1552. It is from the Moſco vnto Aſtracan ſixe hundreth leagues, or thereabout. The towne of Aſtracan is ſituated in an Iland vpon a hill ſide, hauing a caſtle within the ſame, walled about with earth and timber, neither faire nor ſtrong: The towne is alſo walled about with earth: the buildings and houſes (except it be the captaines lodging, and certaine other gentlemens) moſt baſe and ſimple. The Iland is moſt deſtitute and barren of wood and paſture, and the ground will beare no corne: the aire is there moſt infected, by reaſon (as I ſuppoſe) of much fiſh, and ſpecially Sturgion, by which onely the inhabitants liue, hauing great ſcarſitie of fleſh and bread. They hang vp their fiſh in their ſtreets and houſes to dry for their prouiſion, which cauſeth ſuch abundance of flies to increaſe there, as the like was neuer ſeene in any land, to their great plague. And at my being at the ſayd Aſtracan, there was a great famine and plague among the people, and ſpecially among the Tartars called Nagayans, who the ſame time came thither in great numbers to render thẽſelues to the Ruſſes their enemies, & to ſeeke ſuccour at their hands, their countrey being deſtroyed, as I ſaid before: but they were but ill entertained or relieued: for there died a great number of them for hunger, which lay all the Iland through in heapes dead, and like to beaſts vnburied, very pitifull to behold: many of them were alſo ſold by the Ruſſes, and the reſt were baniſhed from the Iland. At that time it had bene an eaſie thing to haue conuerted that wicked Nation to the Chriſtian faith, if the Ruſſes themſelues had bene good Chriſtians: but how ſhould they ſhew compaſſion vnto other Nations, when they are not mercifull vnto their owne? At my being there I could haue bought many goodly Tartars children, if I would haue had a thouſand, of their owne fathers and mothers, to ſay, a boy or a wench for a loafe of bread worth ſixe pence in England, but we had more need of victuals at that time then of any ſuch merchandiſe. This Aſtracan is the furtheſt hold that this Emperour of Ruſſia hath conquered of the Tartars towards the Caſpian ſea, which he keepeth very ſtrong, ſending thither euery yere prouiſion of men, and victuals, and timber to build the caſtle.

There is a certaine trade of merchandiſe there vſed, but as yet ſo ſmall and beggerly, that it is not worth the making mention, and yet there come merchants thither from diuers places. The chiefeſt commodities that the Ruſſes bring thither are redde hides, redde ſheepes ſkinnes, wodden veſſels, bridles, and ſaddles, kniues, and other trifles, with corne, bacon, and other victuals. The Tartars bring thither diuers kindes of wares made of cotten wooll, with diuers kindes of wrought ſilkes: and they that come out of Perſia, namely from Shamacki doe bring ſowing ſilke, which is the courſeſt that they vſe in Ruſſeland, Craſko, diuers kinds of pide ſilkes for girdles, ſhirts of male, bowes, ſwords, and ſuch like things: and ſome yeeres corne, and wallnuts, but all ſuch things in ſuch ſmall quantitie, the merchants being ſo beggerly and poore that bring the ſame, that it is not worth the writing, neither is there any hope of trade in all thoſe parts worth the folowing.

The length of the Iland of Aſtracan.

They enter into the Caſpian ſea.

This foreſaid Iland of Aſtracan is in length twelue leagues, and in bredth three, & lieth Eaſt and Weſt in the latitude of fortie ſeuen degrees, nine minutes: we taried there vntil the ſixt day of Auguſt, and hauing bought and prouided a boate in company with certaine Tartars and Perſians, we laded our goods and imbarked our ſelues, and the ſame day departed I, with the ſaid two Iohnſons hauing the whole charge of the Nauigation downe the ſayd riuer Volga, being very crooked, and full of flats toward the mouth thereof. We entred into the Caſpian ſea the tenth day of Auguſt at the Eaſterly ſide of the ſayd riuer, being twentie leagues from Aſtracan aforeſayd, in the latitude of fortie ſix degrees, twentie ſeuen minutes.

The blew ſea.

Volga hath ſeuentie mouthes or fals into the ſea: and we hauing a large wind, kept the Northeaſt ſhore, and the eleuenth day we ſailed ſeuen leagues Eaſtnortheaſt, and came vnto an Iland hauing an high hill therein, called Accurgar, a good marke in the ſea. From thence Eaſt tenne leagues, we fell with another Iland called Bawhiata, much higher then the other. Within theſe two Ilands to the Northwards, is a great Baie called the Blew ſea. From thence wee ſailed Eaſt and by North ten leagues, and hauing a contrary wind, we came to an anker in a fadome water, and ſo rid vntill the fifteenth day, hauing a great ſtorme at Southeaſt, being a moſt contrary wind, which we rid out. Then the wind came to the North, and we weyed, and ſet our courſe Southeaſt, and that day ſailed eight leagues.

Thus proceeding forwards, the 17. day wee loſt ſight of land, and the ſame day ſailed thirtie leagues, and the 18. day twentie leagues winding Eaſt, and fell with a land called Baughleara, being 74. leagues from the mouth of the ſaid Volga, in the latitude of 46. degrees 54. minutes, the coaſt lying neereſt Eaſt and by South, and Weſt and by North. At the point of this land lieth buried a holy Prophet, as the Tartars call him, of their law, where great deuotion is vſed of all ſuch Mahometiſts as doe paſſe that way.

Baughleara being 74. leagues from Volga.

The nineteenth day the winde being Weſt, and we winding Eaſtſoutheaſt, we ſailed tenne leagues, and paſſed by a great riuer called Iaic, which hath his ſpring in the lande of Siberia, nigh vnto the foreſaid riuer Cama, and runneth through the lande of Nagay, falling into this Mare Caſpium. And vp this riuer one dayes iourney is a Towne called Serachick, ſubiect to the aforeſaid Tartar prince called Murſe Smille, which is nowe in friendſhip with the Emperour of Ruſſia. Here is no trade of merchandize vſed, for that the people haue no vſe of money, and are all men of warre, and paſturers of cattel, and giuen much to theft and murther. Thus being at an anker againſt this riuer Iaic, and all our men being on land, ſauing I, who lay ſore ſicke, and fiue Tartars, whereof one was reputed a holy man, becauſe he came from Mecka, there came vnto vs a boate with thirtie men well armed and appointed, who boorded vs, and began to enter into our barke, and our holy Tartar called Azy, perceiuing that, aſked them what they would haue, and withall made a prayer: with that theſe rouers ſtaied, declaring that they were Gentlemen, baniſhed from their countrey, and out of liuing, & came to ſee if there were any Ruſſes or other Chriſtians (which they call Caphars) in our barke? To whom this Azi moſt ſtoutly anſwered, that there were none, auowing the ſame by great othes of their lawe, (which lightly they will not breake) whom the rouers beleeued, and vpon his wordes departed. And ſo through the fidelitie of that Tartar, I with all my company and goods were ſaued, and our men being come on boord, and the wind faire, we departed from that place, and winding Eaſt and Southeaſt, that day being the 20. of Auguſt ſailed 16. leagues.

Iaic riuer.

Serachick.

The 21. day we paſſed ouer a Bay of 6. leagues broad, and fell with a Cape of land, hauing two Iſlands at the Southeaſt part thereof, being a good marke in the ſea: & doubling that Cape the land trendeth Northeaſt, and maketh another Bay, into which falleth the great riuer Yem, ſpringing out of the land of Colmack.

The Countrey of Colmack.

The 22, 23, and 24. dayes, we were at an anker.

The 25. the winde came faire, and wee ſailed that day 20. leagues, and paſſed by an Iſland of lowe land, and thereabout are many flats and ſands: and to the Northward of this Iſland there goeth in a great Bay, but we ſet off from this Iſland, and winded South to come into deepe water, being much troubled with ſhoalds & flats, and ran that courſe 10. leagues, then Eaſt Southeaſt 20. leagues, and fel with the maine land, being full of copped hils, and paſſing along the coaſt 20. leagues, the further we ſailed, the higher was the land.

The 27. day we croſſed ouer a Bay, the South ſhore being the higher land, and fel with a high point of land: & being ouerthwart the Cape, there roſe ſuch a ſtorme at the Eaſt, that we thought verily we ſhould haue periſhed: this ſtorme continued 3. dayes. From this Cape we paſſed to a port called Manguſlaue. The place where we ſhould haue arriued at the Southermoſt part of the Caſpian ſea, is 12. leagues within a Bay: but we being ſore tormented and toſſed with this foreſaid ſtorme, were driuen vnto another land on yͤ other ſide the Bay, ouerthwart the ſayd Manguſlaue being very lowe land, and a place as well for the ill commoditie of the hauen, as of thoſe brute field people, where neuer barke nor boate had before arriued, not liked of vs.

The port of Manguſlaue.

But yet here we ſent certaine of our men to land to talke with the gouernour and people, as well for our good vſage at their handes, as alſo for prouiſion of camels to carry our goods from the ſayd ſea ſide to a place called Sellyzure, being from the place of our landing fiue and twentie dayes iourney. Our meſſengers returned with comfortable wordes and faire promiſes of all things.

Wherefore the 3. day of September 1558. we diſcharged our barke, and I with my companie were gently entertained of the Prince & of his people. But before our departure from thence, we found them to be very bad and brutiſh people, for they ceaſed not daily to moleſt vs, either by fighting, ſtealing or begging, raiſing the price of horſe and camels, & victuals, double that it was wont there to be, and forced vs to buy the water that we did drinke: which cauſed vs to haſten away, and to conclude with them as well for the hire of camels, as for the price of ſuch as wee bought, with other prouiſion, according to their owne demaund: So that for euery camels lading, being but 400. waight of ours, we agreed to giue three hides of Ruſſia, and foure wooden diſhes, and to the Prince or gouernour of the ſayd people, one ninth, and two ſeuenths: Namely, nine ſeuerall things, and twiſe ſeuen ſeuerall things: for money they vſe none.

They goe on land.

The countrey of Manguſlaue.

And thus being ready, the fourteenth of September we departed from that place, being a Carauan of a thouſand camels. And hauing trauailed fiue dayes iourney, we came to another Princes Dominion, and vpon the way there came vnto vs certaine Tartars on horſebacke, being well armed, and ſeruants vnto the ſaide Prince called Timor Soltan, gouernour of the ſaid countrey of Manguſlaue, where wee meant to haue arriued and diſcharged our barke, if the great ſtorm aforeſayd had not diſappointed. Theſe aforeſaid Tartars ſtayd our Carauan in the name of their Prince, and opened our wares, and tooke ſuch things as they thought beſt for their ſaide prince without money, but for ſuch things as they tooke from me, which was a ninth (after much diſſenſion) I ridde vnto the ſame Prince, and preſented my ſelfe before him, requeſting his fauour, and paſport to trauaile through his countrey, and not to be robbed nor ſpoiled of his people: which requeſt he granted me, and intertained me very gently, commaunding me to be well feaſted with fleſh and mares milke: for bread they vſe none, nor other drinke except water: but money he had none to giue mee for ſuch things as he tooke of mee, which might be of value in Ruſſe money, fifteene rubbles, but he gaue me his letter, and a horſe worth ſeuen rubbles. And ſo I departed from him being glad that I was gone: for he was reported to be a very tyrant, and if I had not gone vnto him, I vnderſtoode his commaundement was, that I ſhould haue beene robbed and deſtroyed.

This Soltan liued in the fieldes without Caſtle or towne, and ſate, at my being with him, in a litle rounde houſe made of reedes couered without with felt, and within with Carpets. There was with him the great Metropolitan of that wilde Country, eſteemed of the people, as the Biſhop of Rome is in moſt parts of Europe, with diuers other of his chiefe men. The Soltan with this Metropolitan demaunded of me many queſtions, as wel touching our kingdoms, lawes, and Religion, as alſo the cauſe of my comming into thoſe parts, with my further pretence. To whom I anſwered concerning all things, as vnto me ſeemed beſt, which they tooke in good part. So hauing leaue I departed and ouertooke our Carauan, and proceeded on our iourney, and trauailed 20. dayes in the wildernes from the ſea ſide without ſeeing towne or habitation, carying prouiſion of victuals with vs for the ſame time, and were driuen by neceſſity to eate one of my camels and a horſe for our part, as other did the like: and during the ſaid 20. daies we found no water, but ſuch as we drew out of old deepe welles, being very brackiſh and ſalt, and yet ſometimes paſſed two or three dayes without the ſame. And the 5. day of October enſuing, we came vnto a gulfe of the Caſpian ſea againe, where we found the water very freſh and ſweete: at this gulfe the cuſtomers of the king of Turkeman met vs, who took cuſtome of euery 25. one, and 7. ninthes for the ſaide king and his brethren, which being receiued they departed, and we remained there a day after to refreſh our ſelues.

20. dayes trauaile in the wilderneſſe, with ſcarcitie of water.

Another gulfe of the Caſpian ſea.

Note that in times paſt there did fal into this gulf the great riuer Oxus, which hath his ſprings in the mountains of Paraponiſus in India, & now cõmeth not ſo far, but falleth into another riuer called Ardock, which runneth toward the North, & conſumeth himſelf in the ground paſſing vnder ground aboue 500. miles, and then iſſueth out againe and falleth into the lake of Kithay.

Will. de Rubricis deſcribeth this riuer of Ardok, cap. 4.

We hauing refreſhed our ſelues at the foreſaide gulfe, departed thence the 4. day of October, and the ſeuenth day arriued at a caſtle called Sellizure, where yͤ king called Azim Can, remained with 3. other of his brethren, and the 9. day I was commaunded to come before his preſence, to whom I deliuered the Emperors letters of Ruſſia: and I alſo gaue him a preſent of a ninth, who entertained me very well, and cauſed me to eate in his preſence as his brethren did, feaſting me with fleſh of a wilde horſe, and mares milk without bread. And the next day he ſent for me again, and aſked of me diuers queſtions, as wel touching the affaires of the Emperour of Ruſſia, as of our countrey and lawes, to which I anſwered as I thought good: ſo that at my departure he gaue me his letters of ſafe conduct.

Sellizure, or Shayzure.

Letters of ſafe conduct.

This Caſtle of Sellizure is ſituated vpon an high hill, where the King called the Can lyeth, whoſe palace is built of earth very baſely, and not ſtrong: the people are but poore, and haue litle trade of marchandiſe among them. The South part of this Caſtle is lowe lande, but very fruitfull, where grow many good fruites, among which there is one called a Dynie, of a great bigneſſe and full of moyſture, which the people doe eate after meate in ſteade of drinke. Alſo there growes another fruite called a Carbuſe of the bigneſſe of a great cucumber, yellow and ſweete as ſugar: alſo a certaine corne called Iegur, whoſe ſtalke is much like a ſugar cane, and as high, and the graine like rice, which groweth at the toppe of the cane like a cluſter of grapes: the water that ſerueth all that countrey is drawen by ditches out of the riuer Oxus, vnto the great deſtruction of the ſaid riuer, for which cauſe it falleth not into the Caſpian ſea as it hath done in times paſt, and in ſhort time all that land is like to be deſtroied, and to become a wildernes for want of water, when the riuer of Oxus ſhal faile.

The Vrgence.

The 14. day of the moneth we departed from this Caſtle of Sellizure, and the 16. of the ſame we arriued at a citie called Vrgence, where we paid cuſtome as wel for our own heads, as for our camels and horſes. And hauing there ſoiourned one moneth, attending the time of our further trauaile, the king of that countrey called Aly Soltan, brother to the forenamed Azym Can, returned from a towne called Coraſan, within the borders of Perſia, which he lately had conquered from the Perſians, with whom he and the reſt of the kings of Tartaria haue continuall warres. Before this king alſo I was commanded to come, to whom I likewiſe preſented the Emperors letters of Ruſſia, and he intertained me wel, and demanded of me diuers queſtions, and at my departure gaue me his letters of ſafeconduct.

The countrey of Turkeman.

This city or towne of Vrgence ſtandeth in a plaine ground, with walles of the earth, by eſtimation 4. miles about it. The buildings within it are alſo of earth, but ruined and out of good order: it hath one long ſtreet that is couered aboue, which is the place of their market. It hath bene wonne and loſt 4. times within 7. yeeres by ciuill warres, by meanes whereof there are but few merchants in it, and they very poore, and in all that towne I could not ſell aboue 4. kerſeis. The chiefeſt commodities there ſold are ſuch wares as come from Boghar, and out of Perſia, but in moſt ſmal quantity not worth the writing. All the land from the Caſpian ſea to this Citie of Vrgence is called the land of Turkeman, & is ſubiect to the ſaid Azim Can, and his brethren which be fiue in number, and one of them hath the name of the chiefe king called Can, but he is little obeyed ſauing in his owne Dominion, and where he dwelleth: for euery one will be King of his owne portion, and one brother ſeeketh alwayes to deſtroy another, hauing no natural loue among them, by reaſon that they are begotten of diuers women, and commonly they are the children of ſlaues, either Chriſtians or Gentiles, which the father doeth keepe as concubines, and euery Can or Sultan hath at the leaſt 4. or 5. wiues, beſides yong maidens and boyes, liuing moſt viciouſly: and when there are warres betwixt theſe brethren, (as they are ſeldome without) he that is ouercome if he be not ſlaine, flieth to the field with ſuch companie of men as will followe him, and there liueth in the wilderneſſe reſorting to watering places, and ſo robbeth and ſpoileth as many Carauans of Marchants and others as they be able to ouercome, continuing in this ſort his wicked life, vntil ſuch time as he may get power and aide to inuade ſome of his brethren againe. From the Caſpian ſea vnto the Caſtle of Sellizure aforeſaid, and all the Countries about the ſaid Sea, the people liue without towne or habitation in the wilde fields, remouing from one place to another in great companies with their cattel, whereof they haue great ſtore, as camels, horſes, and ſheepe both tame and wilde. Their ſheepe are of great ſtature with great buttocks, weighing 60. or 80. pound in weight. There are many wild horſes which the Tartars doe many times kil with their hawkes, and that in this order.

The hawkes are lured to ſeaſe vpon the beaſts neckes or heads, which with chaſing of themſelues and ſore beating of the hawkes are tired: then the hunter following his game doeth ſlay the horſe with his arrow or ſword. In all this lande there groweth no graſſe, but a certaine bruſh or heath, whereon the cattell feeding become very fat.

The Tartars neuer ride without their bow, arrowes, and ſword, although it be on hawking, or at any other pleaſure, and they are good archers both on horſebacke, and on foote alſo. Theſe people haue not the vſe of golde, ſiluer, or any other coyne, but when they lacke apparell or other neceſſaries, they barter their cattell for the ſame. Bread they haue none, for they neither till nor ſow: they be great deuourers of fleſh, which they cut in ſmal pieces, & eat it by handfuls moſt greedily, & eſpecially the horſefleſh. Their chiefeſt drink is mares milke ſowred, as I haue ſaid before of the Nagayans, & they wilbe drunk with the ſame. They haue no riuers nor places of water in this countrey, vntil you come to the foreſaid gulf, diſtant from the place of our landing 20. dayes iourney, except it be in wels, the water wherof is ſaltiſh, & yet diſtant the one from the other two daies iourney and more. They eate their meate vpon the ground, ſitting with their legs double vnder them, and ſo alſo when they pray. Art or ſcience they haue none, but liue moſt idlely, ſitting round in great companies in the fields, deuiſing, and talking moſt vainely.

The riuer of Ardock falleth into the lake of Kitay.

The 26. day of Nouember, we departed from the towne of Vrgence, and hauing trauailed by the riuer Oxus, 100. mile, we paſſed ouer another great riuer called Ardock, where we paid a certaine petty cuſtome. This riuer Ardock is great, and very ſwift, falling out of the foreſaid Oxus, and paſſing about 1000. mile to the Northward, it then conſumeth it ſelfe in the ground, and paſſing vnder the ſame about 500. mile, iſſueth out againe, and falleth into the lake of Kitay, as I haue before declared.

The caſtle of Kait.

The 7. of December following, we arriued at a Caſtle called Kait, ſubiect to a Soltan called Saramet Soltan, who meant to haue robbed all the Chriſtians in the Carauan, had it not bene for feare of his brother the king of Vrgence, as we were informed by one of his chiefeſt counſellers, who willed vs to make him a preſent, which he tooke, and deliuered: beſides we paid at the ſaid caſtle for cuſtome, of euery camel one red hide of Ruſsia, beſides petty gifts to his officers.

Thus proceeding in our iourney, the tenth day at night being at reſt, and our watch ſet, there came vnto vs foure horſemen, which we tooke as ſpies, from whom wee tooke their weapons and bound them, and hauing well examined them, they confeſſed that they had ſeene the tract of many horſemen, and no footing of camels, & gaue vs to vnderſtand, that there were rouers and theeues abroade: for there trauaile few people that are true and peaceable in that Countrey, but in companie of Carauan, where there be many camels: and horſefeeting new without camels were to be doubted. Whereupon we conſulted & determined amongſt our ſelues, and ſent a poſte to the ſaid Soltan of Kayte, who immediatly came himſelfe with 300. men, and mette theſe foure ſuſpected men which we ſent vnto him, and examined them ſo ſtreightly, and threatned them in ſuch ſort, that they confeſſed, there was a baniſhed Prince with 40. men 3. daies iourney forward, who lay in wait to deſtroy vs, if he could, and that they themſelues were of his companie.

The Soltan therefore vnderſtanding, that the theeues were not many, appointed vs 80. men well armed with a Captaine to goe with vs, and conduct vs in our way. And the Soltan himſelfe returned backe againe, taking the foure theeues with him. Theſe ſouldiers trauailed with vs two dayes, conſuming much of our victuals. And the 3. day in the morning very early they ſet out before our Carauan, and hauing ranged the wilderneſ for the ſpace of foure houres, they mette vs, comming towards vs as faſt as their horſe could runne, and declared that they had founde the tract of horſes not farre from vs, perceiuing well that we ſhould meete with enemies, and therefore willed vs to appoint our ſelues for them, and asked vs what wee would giue them to conduct vs further, or els they would returne. To whom we offered as we thought good, but they refuſed our offer, and would haue more, and ſo we not agreeing they departed from vs, and went backe to their Soltan, who (as wee coniectured) was priuie to the conſpiracie. But they being gone, certaine Tartars of our companie called holy men, (becauſe they had bene at Mecha) cauſed the whole Carauan to ſtay, and would make their prayers, and deuine howe wee ſhould proſper in our iourney and whether we ſhould meet with any ill company or no: To which, our whole Carauan did agree. And they tooke certaine ſheepe and killed them, and tooke the blade bones of the ſame, and firſt ſodde them, and then burnt them, and tooke of the blood of the ſaid ſheepe, and mingled it with the powder of the ſaide bones, and wrote certaine Characters with the ſame blood, vſing many other ceremonies and wordes, and by the ſame deuined and found, that wee ſhoulde meete with enemies and theeues (to our great trouble) but ſhould ouercome them, to which ſorcerie, I and my companie gaue no credit, but we found it true: for within 3. houres after that the ſouldiers departed from vs, which was the 15. day of December, in the morning, we eſcried farre off diuers horſemen which made towards vs, and we (perceiuing them to be rouers) gathered our ſelues together, being 40. of vs wel appointed, and able to fight, and we made our prayers together euery one after his lawe, profeſſing to liue and die one with another, and ſo prepared our ſelues. When the theeues were nigh vnto vs, we perceiued them to be in number 37. men well armed, and appointed with bowes, arrowes and ſwords, and the captaine a prince baniſhed from his Countrey. They willed vs to yeelde our ſelues, or els to be ſlaine, but wee defied them, wherewith they ſhotte at vs all at once, and wee at them very hotly, and ſo continued our fight from morning vntill two houres within night, diuers men, horſes and camels being wounded and ſlaine on both partes: and had it not bene for 4. handgunnes which I and my companie had and vſed, we had bene ouercome and deſtroyed: for the theeues were better armed, and were alſo better archers then we; But after wee had ſlaine diuers of their men and horſes with our gunnes, they durſt not approch ſo nigh, which cauſed them to come to a truce with vs vntill the next morning, which we accepted, and encamped our ſelues vpon a hill, and made the faſhion of a Caſtle, walling it about with packes of wares, and laide our horſes and camels within the ſame to ſaue them from the ſhotte of arrowes: and the theeues alſo incamped within an arrowe ſhotte of vs, but they were betwixt vs and the water, which was to our great diſcomfort, becauſe neither we nor our camels had drunke in 2. dayes before.

Diuination by ſorcerie.

Handgunnes very profitable.

Thus keeping good watch, when halfe the night was ſpent, the Prince of the theeues ſent a meſſenger halfe way vnto vs, requiring to talke with our Captaine, in their tongue, the Carauan Baſha, who anſwered the meſſenger, I will not depart from my companie to goe vnto the halfe way to talke with thee: but if that the Prince with all his companie will ſweare by our Lawe to keepe the truce, then will I ſend a man to talke with thee, or els not. Which the Prince vnderſtanding as well himſelfe as his company, ſwore ſo loude that we might all heare. And then we ſent one of our company (reputed a holy man) to talke with the ſame meſſenger. The meſſage was pronounced aloude in this order, Our Prince demaundeth of the Carauan Baſha, and of all you that be Buſſarmans, (that is to ſay circumciſed) not deſiring your bloods, that you deliuer into his hands as many Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers (meaning vs the Chriſtians) as are among you with their goods, and in ſo doing, hee will ſuffer you to depart with your goods in quietneſſe, and on the contrary, you ſhall be handled with no leſſe crueltie then the Caphars, if hee ouercome you, as he doubteth not. To the which our Carauan Baſha anſwered, that he had no Chriſtians in his company, nor other ſtrangers, but two Turkes which were of their Law, and although hee had, hee would rather die then deliuer them, and that we were not afraide of his threatnings, and that ſhould he know when day appeared. And ſo paſſing in talke, the theeues (contrary to their othe) caried our holy man away to their Prince, crying with a lowde voyce in token of victory, Ollo, ollo. Wherewith we were much diſcomforted, fearing that that holy man would betray vs: but he being cruelly handled and much examined, would not to death confeſſe any thing which was to vs preiudiciall, neither touching vs, nor yet what men they had ſlaine and wounded of ours the day before. When the night was ſpent, in the morning we prepared our ſelues to battel againe: which the theeues perceiuing, required to fall to agreement & asked much of vs: And to be briefe, the moſt part of our companie being loth to go to battel againe, and hauing litle to looſe, & ſafeconduct to paſſe, we were compelled to agree, and to giue the theeues 20 ninths (that is to ſay) 20 times 9 ſeuerall things, and a camell to cary away the ſame, which being receiued, the theeues departed into the wildernes to their old habitation, and we went on our way forward. And that night came to the riuer Oxus, where we refreſhed our ſelues, hauing bene 3 dayes without water and drinke, and tarried there all the next day, making mery with our ſlaine horſes and camels, and then departed from that place, & for feare of meeting with the ſaid theeues againe or ſuch like, we left the high way which went along the ſaid riuer, and paſſed through a wildernes of ſand, and trauelled 4 dayes in the ſame before we came to water: and then came to a wel, the water being very brackiſh, and we then as before were in neede of water, and of other victuals, being forced to kill our horſes and camels to eate.

Buſſarmans. Caphar.

The riuer of Oxus.

A wildernes of ſande.

In this wildernes alſo we had almoſt fallen into the hands of theeues: for one night being at reſt, there came certaine ſcoutes, and caried away certaine of our men which lay a litle ſeparated from the Carauan, wherewith there was a great ſhoute and crie, and we immediatly laded our camels, and departed being about midnight and very darke, and droue ſore till we came to the riuer Oxus againe, and then we feared nothing being walled with the ſaid riuer: & whether it was for that we had gotten the water, or for that the ſame theeues were far from vs when the ſcouts diſcouered vs, we know not, but we eſcaped that danger.

So vpon the 23 day of December wee arriued at the citie of Boghar in the lande of Bactria. This Boghar is ſituated in the loweſt part of all the land, walled about with a high wall of earth, with diuers gates into the ſame: it is diuided into 3 partitions, whereof two parts are the kings, and the 3 part is for Marchants and markets, and euery ſcience hath their dwelling and market by themſelues. The Citie is very great, and the houſes for the moſt part of earth, but there are alſo many houſes, temples and monuments of ſtone ſumptuouſly builded, and gilt, and ſpecially bathſtoues ſo artificially built, that the like thereof is not in the world: the maner whereof is too long to rehearſe. There is a little riuer running through the middeſt of the ſaid Citie, but the water thereof is moſt vnholſome, for it breedeth ſometimes in men that drinke thereof, and eſpecially in them that be not there borne, a worme of an ell long, which lyeth commonly in the legge betwixt the fleſh and the ſkinne, and is plucked out about the ancle with great art and cunning, the Surgeons being much practiſed therein, and if ſhee breake in plucking out, the partie dieth, and euery day ſhe commeth out about an inch, which is rolled vp, and ſo worketh till ſhe be all out. And yet it is there forbidden to drinke any other thing then water, & mares milke, and whoſoeuer is found to breake that law is whipped and beaten moſt cruelly through the open markets, and there are officers appointed for the ſame, who haue authoritie to goe into any mans houſe, to ſearch if he haue either Aquauitæ, wine, or brage, and finding the ſame, doe breake the veſſels, ſpoile the drinke, and puniſh the maſters of the houſe moſt cruelly, yea, and many times if they perceiue but by the breath of a man that he hath drunke, without further examination he ſhall not eſcape their hands.

Boghar a citie of Bactria.

A ſtrange worme in mens legs.

There is a Metropolitane in this Boghar, who cauſeth this law to bee ſo ſtreightly kept: and he is more obeyed then the king, and will depoſe the king, and place another at his will and pleaſure, as he did by this king that raigned at our being there, and his predeceſſour, by the meanes of the ſayd Metropolitan: for he betrayed him, and in the night ſlewe him in his chamber, who was a Prince that loued all Chriſtians well.

This Countrey of Boghar was ſometime ſubiect to the Perſians, & do now ſpeake the Perſian tongue, but yet now it is a kingdome of it ſelfe, and hath moſt cruel warres continually with the ſayd Perſians about their religion, although they be all Mahometiſts. One occaſion of their wars is, for that the Perſians will not cut the haire of their vpper lips, as the Bogharians and all other Tartars doe, which they accompt great ſinne, and cal them Caphars, that is, vnbeleeuers, as they doe the Chriſtians.

The king of Boghar hath no great power or riches, his reuenues are but ſmall, and he is moſt mainteined by the Citie: for he taketh the tenth penie of all things that are there ſolde, as well by the craftſmen as by the marchants, to the great impouerishment of the people, whom he keepeth in great ſubiection, and when he lacketh money, he ſendeth his officers to the ſhoppes of the ſayd Marchants to take their wares to pay his debts, and will haue credite of force, as the like he did to pay me certaine money that he owed me for 19 pieces of Kerſey. Their money is ſiluer and copper, for gold there is none currant: they haue but one piece of ſiluer, & that is worth 12 pence Engliſh, and the copper money are called Pooles, and 120 of them goeth the value of the ſaid 12. pence, and is more common paiment then the ſiluer, which the king cauſeth to riſe and fall to his moſt aduantage euery other moneth, and ſometimes twiſe a moneth, not caring to oppreſſe his people, for that he looketh not to reigne aboue 2 or 3 yeres before he be either ſlaine or driuen away, to the great deſtruction of the countrey and merchants.

The coyne of Boghar.

The 26 day of the moneth I was commanded to come before the ſaid king, to whom I preſented the Emperour of Ruſſia his letters, who interteined vs moſt gently, and cauſed vs to eate in his preſence, and diuers times he ſent for me, and deuiſed with me familiarly in his ſecret chamber, as well of the power of the Emperour, and the great Turke, as alſo of our countries, lawes, and religion, and cauſed vs to ſhoote in handguns before him, and did himſelfe practiſe the vſe thereof. But after all this great interteinement before my departure he ſhewed himſelfe a very Tartar: for he went to the wars owing me money, and ſaw me not payd before his departure. And although indeede he gaue order for the ſame, yet was I verie ill ſatiſfied, and forced to rebate part, and to take wares as payment for the reſt contrary to my expectation: but of a begger better paiment I could not haue, and glad I was ſo to be paid and diſpatched.

But yet I muſt needs praiſe & commend this barbarous king, who immediately after my arriuall at Boghar, hauing vnderſtoode our trouble with the theeues, ſent 100 men well armed, and gaue them great charge not to returne before they had either ſlaine or taken the ſayd theeues. Who according to their commiſſion ranged the wildernes in ſuch ſort, that they met with the ſaid company of theeues, and ſlew part, and part fledde, and foure they tooke and brought vnto the king, and two of them were ſore wounded in our ſkirmiſh with our gunnes: And after the king had ſent for me to come to ſee them, he cauſed them all 4 to be hanged at his palace gate, becauſe they were Gentlemen, to the example of others. And of ſuch goods as were gotten againe, I had part reſtored me, and this good iuſtice I found at his hands.

There is yerely great reſort of Marchants to this Citie of Boghar, which trauaile in great Carauans from the countries thereabout adioining, as India, Perſia, Balgh, Ruſſia, with diuers others, and in times paſt from Cathay, when there was paſſage: but theſe Marchants are ſo beggerly and poore, and bring ſo little quantitie of wares, lying two or 3 yeeres to ſell the ſame, that there is no hope of any good trade there to be had worthy the following.

The chiefe commodities that are brought thither out of theſe foreſayd Countreys, are theſe following.

Marchandiſe of India.

The Indians doe bring fine whites, which the Tartars do all roll about their heads, & al other kinds of whites, which ſerue for apparell made of coton wooll and craſko, but golde, ſiluer, precious ſtones, and ſpices they bring none. I enquired and perceiued that all ſuch trade paſſeth to the Ocean ſea, and the vaines where all ſuch things are gotten are in the ſubiection of the Portingals. The Indians carie from Boghar againe wrought ſilkes, red hides, ſlaues, and horſes, with ſuch like, but of Kerſeis and other cloth, they make little accompt. I offered to barter with Marchants of thoſe Countreis, which came from the furtheſt parts of India, euen from the countrey of Bengala, & the riuer Ganges, to giue them Kerſies for their commodities, but they would not barter for ſuch commoditie as cloth.

Marchandiſe of Perſia.

The Perſians do bring thither Craska, wollen cloth, linnen cloth, diuers kindes of wrought pide ſilkes, Argomacks, with ſuch like, and doe carie from thence redde hides with other Ruſſe wares, and ſlaues, which are of diuers countreies, but cloth they will by none, for that they bring thither themſelues, and is brought vnto them as I haue inquired from Aleppo in Syria, and the parts of Turkie. The Ruſſes doe carie vnto Boghar, redde hides, ſheepeſkinnes, wollen cloth of diuers ſorts, woodden veſſels, bridles, ſaddles, with ſuch like, and doe carie away from thence diuers kindes of wares made of cotton wooll, diuers kinds of ſilkes, Craſca, with other things, but there is but ſmal vtterance. From the Countreis of Cathay are brought thither in time of peace, and when the way is open, muſke, rubarbe, ſatten, damaſke, with diuers other things. At my being at Boghar, there came Carauans out of all theſe foreſaid Countries, except from Cathay: and the cauſe why there came none from thence was the great warres that had dured 3 yeres before my comming thither, and yet dured betwixt 2 great Countries & cities of Tartars, that are directly in the way betwixt the ſaid Boghar and the ſaid Cathay, and certaine barbarous fielde people, as well Gentiles a Mahometiſts bordering to the ſaid Cities. The cities are called Taskent and Caſkar, and the people that warre againſt Taskent are called Caſſaks of the law of Mahomett: and they which warre with the ſayd countrey of Caſkar are called Kings, Gentiles & idolaters. Theſe 2 barbarous nations are of great force liuing in the fields without houſe or towne, & haue almoſt ſubdued the foreſaid cities, & ſo ſtopped vp the way, that it is impoſſible for any Carauan to paſſe vnſpoiled: ſo that 3 yeres before our being there, no Carauan had gone, or vſed trade betwixt the countries of Cathay and Boghar, and when the way is cleare, it is 9 moneths iourney.

Marchandiſe of Ruſſia.

Marchandiſe of Cathay.

Taskent & Caſcar.

To ſpeake of the ſaid countrey of Cathay, and of ſuch newes as I haue heard thereof, I haue thought it beſt to reſerue it to our meeting. I hauing made my ſolace at Boghar in the Winter time, and hauing learned by much inquiſition, the trade thereof, as alſo of all the other countries thereto adioyning, and the time of the yeere being come, for all Carauans to depart, and alſo the king being gone to the warres, and newes come that he was fled, and I aduertiſed by the Metropolitan himſelfe, that I ſhould depart, becauſe the towne was like to bee beſieged: I thought it good and meete, to take my iourney ſome way, and determined to haue gone from thence into Perſia, and to haue ſeene the trade of that countrey, although I had enformed my ſelfe ſufficiently thereof, as well at Aſtracan, as at Boghar: and perceiued well the trades not to be much vnlike the trades of Tartaria: but when I ſhould haue taken my iourney that way, it was let by diuers occaſions: the one was, the great wars that did newly begin betwixt the Sophie, and the kings of Tartaria, whereby the waies were deſtroyed: and there was a Carauan deſtroied with rouers & theeues, which came out of India and Perſia, by ſafe conduct: and about ten daies iourney from Boghar, they were robbed, and a great part ſlaine. Alſo the Metropolitan of Boghar, who is greater then the king, tooke the Emperors letters of Ruſſia from me, without which I ſhould haue bene taken ſlaue in euery place: alſo all ſuch wares as I had receiued in barter for cloth, and as I tooke perforce of the king, & other his Nobles, in paiment of money due vnto me, were not vendible in Perſia: for which cauſes, and diuers others, I was conſtrained to come backe againe to Mare Caſpium, the ſame way I went: ſo that the eight of March 1559, we departed out of the ſaid Citie of Boghar, being a Carauan of 600 Camels: and if we had not departed when we did, I and my company had bene in danger to haue loſt life and goods. For ten daies after our departure, the king of Samarcand came with an armie, & beſieged the ſaid Citie of Boghar, the king being abſent, and gone to the wars againſt another prince, his kinſman, as the like chanceth in thoſe Countries once in two or three yeres. For it is maruell, if a King reigne there aboue three or foure yeres, to the great deſtruction of the Countrey, and marchants.

He returneth the eight of March 1559.

The 25 of March, we came to the foreſayd towne of Vrgence, and eſcaped the danger of 400 rouers, which lay in waite for vs backe againe, being the moſt of them of kindred to that company of theeues, which we met with going forth, as we perceiued by foure ſpies, which were taken. There were in my company, and committed to my charge, two ambaſſadors, the one from the king of Boghar, the other from the king of Balke, and were ſent vnto the Emperor of Ruſſia. And after hauing taried at Vrgence, and the Caſtle of Sellyſure, eight daies for the aſſembling, and making ready of our Carauan, the ſecond of Aprill we departed from thence, hauing foure moe Ambaſſadors in our companie, ſent from the king of Vrgence, and other Sultans, his brethren, vnto the Emperor of Ruſſia, with anſwere of ſuch letters as I brought them: and the ſame Ambaſſadors were alſo committed vnto my charge by the ſayde Kings and princes: to whome I promiſed moſt faithfully, and ſwore by our law, that they ſhould be well vſed in Ruſland, and ſuffered to depart from thence againe in ſafetie, according as the Emperor had written alſo in his letters: for they ſomewhat doubted, becauſe there had none gone out of Tartaria into Ruſſia, of long time before.

Vrgence.

The king of Balke, or Bolgh.

The 23 of Aprill, we arriued at the Mare Caſpium againe, where we found our barke which we came in, but neither anker, cable, cocke, nor ſaile: neuertheleſſe wee brought hempe with vs, and ſpunne a cable our ſelues, with the reſt of our tackling, and made vs a ſaile of cloth of cotton wooll, and rigged our barke as well as we could, but boate or anker we had none. In the meane time being deuiſing to make an anker of wood of a cart wheele, there arriued a barke, which came from Aſtracan, with Tartars and Ruſſes, which had 2 ankers, with whom I agreed for the one: and thus being in a readines, we ſet ſaile and departed, I, and the two Iohnſons being Maſter and Mariners our ſelues, hauing in our barke the ſaid ſixe ambaſſadors, and 25 Ruſſes, which had bene ſlaues a long time in Tartaria, nor euer had before my comming, libertie, or meanes to get home, and theſe ſlaues ſerued to rowe when neede was. Thus ſailing ſometimes along the coaſt, and ſometimes out of ſight of lande, the 13. day of May, hauing a contrary winde, wee came to an anker, being three leagues from the ſhoare, & there roſe a ſore ſtorme, which continued 44. houres, and our cable being of our owne ſpinning, brake, and loſt our anker, and being off a lee ſhoare, and hauing no boate to helpe vs, we hoyſed our ſaile, and bare roomer with the ſaid ſhoare, looking for preſent death: but as God prouided for vs, we ranne into a creeke ful of oze, and ſo ſaued our ſelues with our barke, & liued in great diſcomfort for a time. For although we ſhould haue eſcaped with our liues the danger of the ſea, yet if our barke had periſhed, we knew we ſhould haue bene, either deſtroyed, or taken ſlaues by the people of that Countrey, who liue wildly in the field, like beaſts, without houſe or habitation. Thus when the ſtorme was ſeaſed, we went out of the creeke againe: and hauing ſet the land with our Compaſſe, and taken certaine markes of the ſame, during the time of the tempeſt, whileſt we ridde at our anker, we went directly to the place where we ridde, with our barke againe, and found our anker which wee loſt: whereat the Tartars much marueiled, how we did it. While we were in the creeke, we made an anker of wood of cart wheeles, which we had in our barke, which we threw away, when wee had found out yron anker againe. Within two dayes after, there aroſe another great ſtorme, at the Northeaſt, and we lay a trie, being driuen far into the ſea, and had much ado to keepe our barke from ſinking, the billowe was ſo great: but at the laſt, hauing faire weather, we tooke the Sunne, and knowing howe the land lay from vs, we fel with the Riuer Yaik, according to our deſire, whereof the Tartars were very glad, fearing that wee ſhould haue bene driuen to the coaſt of Perſia, whoſe people were vnto them great enemies.

The Engliſh flag in the Caſpian ſea.

Note, that during the time of our Nauigation, wee ſet vp the redde croſſe of S. George in our flagges, for honour of the Chriſtians, which I ſuppoſe was neuer ſeene in the Caſpian ſea before. We paſſed in this voyage diuers fortunes: notwithſtanding the 28. of May we arriued in ſafetie at Aſtracan, and there remained till the tenth of Iune following, as well to prepare vs ſmall boates, to goe vp againſt the ſtreame of Volga, with our goods, as alſo for the companie of the Ambaſſadours of Tartarie, committed vnto me, to bee brought to the preſence of the Emperour of Ruſſia.

A notable deſcription of the Caſpian ſea.

This Caſpian ſea (to ſay ſome thing of it) is in length about two hundred leagues, and in breadth 150. without any iſſue to other ſeas: to the Eaſt part whereof, ioyneth the great deſert countrey of the Tartars, called Turkemen: to the Weſt, the countreyes of the Chyrcaſſes, the mountaines of Caucaſus, and the Mare Euxinum, which is from the ſaid Caſpian Sea a hundred leagues. To the North is the riuer Volga, and the land of Nagay, and to the South part ioyne the countreys of Media and Perſia. This ſea is freſh water in many places, and in other places as ſalt as our great Ocean. It hath many goodly Riuers falling into it, and it auoideth not it ſelfe except it be vnder ground. The notable Riuers that fall into it, are firſt the great Riuer of Volga, called in the Tartar tongue Edell, which ſpringeth out of a lake in a marriſh or plaine ground, not farre from the Citie of Nouogrode in Ruſſia, and it is from the ſpring to the Sea, aboue two thouſande Engliſh miles. It hath diuers other goodly Riuers falling into it, as out of Siberia, Yaic, and Yem: Alſo out of the mountaines of Caucaſus, the Riuers of Cyrus and Araſh, and diuers others.

As touching the trade of Shamaky in Media and Tebris, with other townes in Perſia, I haue enquired, and do well vnderſtand, that it is euen like to the trades of Tartaria, that is little vtterance, and ſmall profite: and I haue bene aduertiſed that the chiefe trade of Perſia is into Syria, and ſo tranſported into the Leuant ſea. The fewe ſhippes vpon the Caſpian Seas, the want of Mart and port Townes, the pouertie of the people, and the ice, maketh that trade naught.

At Aſtracan there were merchants of Shamaky, with whom I offered to barter, and to giue them kerſies for their wares, but they would not, ſaying, they had them as good cheape in their countrey, as I offred them, which was ſixe rubbles for a kerſie, that I aſked: and while I was at Boghar, there were brought thither out of Perſia, Cloth, and diuers commodities of our countries, which were ſold as good cheape, as I might ſell ours.

The tenth day of Iune, we departed from Aſtracan towards the Mosco, hauing an hundred gunners in our company at the Emperors charges, for the ſafe conduct of the Tartar Ambaſſadors and me. And the eight and twentieth day of Iuly folowing, wee arriued at the citie of Cazan, hauing bene vpon the way from Aſtracan thither, ſixe weekes and more, without any refreſhing of victuals: for in all that way there is no habitation.

The ſeuenth of Auguſt folowing, wee departed from Cazan, and tranſported our goods by water, as farre as the citie of Morum, and then by land: ſo that the ſecond of September, we arriued at the citie of Moſco, and the fourth day I came before the Emperours Maieſtie, kiſſed his hand, and preſented him a white Cowes taile of Cathay, and a drumme of Tartaria, which he well accepted. Alſo I brought before him all the Ambaſſadors that were committed to my charge, with all the Ruſſe ſlaues: and that day I dined in his Maieſties preſence, and at dinner, his Grace ſent me meate by a Duke, & aſked me diuers queſtions touching the lands and countreis where I haue bene. And thus I remained at the Moſco about your affaires, vntil the 17. day of Februarie that your wares were ſent downe: and then hauing licence of the Emperors Maieſtie to depart, the 21. day I came to your houſe at Vologhda, and there remained vntil the breaking vp of the yce: and then hauing ſeene all your goods laden into your boates, I departed with the ſame, and arriued withall in ſafetie at Colmogro the 9. of May 1560. And here I ceaſe for this time, intreating you to beare with this my large diſcourſe, which by reaſon of the varietie of matter, I could make no ſhorter, and I beſeech God to proſper all your attempts.

Certaine notes gathered by Richard Iohnſon (which was at Boghar with M. Anthony Ienkinſon) of the reports of, Ruſſes and other ſtrangers, of the wayes of Ruſſia to Cathaya, and of diuers and ſtrange people.

The firſt note giuen by one named Sarnichoke a Tartarian ſubiect to the Prince of Boghar, which are alſo Tartars bordering vpon Kizilbaſh or Perſia, declaring the way from Aſtracan, being the furtheſt part of Ruſſia, to Cathaya as foloweth.

First from Aſtracan to Serachick by land, trauailing by leyſure as Merchants vſe with wares, is 10. dayes iourney.

From Serachick to a towne named * Vrgenſhe, 15. dayes.

*Or, Vrgence.

From Vrgenſhe to Boghar, 15. dayes.

From Boghar to Caſcar, 30. dayes.

From Caſcar to Cathaya, 30. dayes iourney.

By the ſame partie a note of another way more ſure to traueile, as he reporteth.

From Aſtracan to Turkemen by the Caſpian ſea, 10. dayes with barkes.

From Turkemen by lande ſpecially with Camels, bearing the weight of 15. poodes for their common burthens, is 10. dayes to Vrgenſhe.

From Vrgenſhe to Boghar, 15. dayes.

Note. At this Citie of Boghar is the marte or meeting place betweene the Turkes and nations of thoſe parts and the Cathayans.

Alſo the toll there is the 40. part to be payed of Merchandizes or goods.

From thence to Caſcar is one moneths iourney, and from Caſcar (being the frontier of the great Can, hauing many townes and fortes by the way) is alſo a moneths trauel for merchants by land to Cathay.

Further, as he hath heard (not hauing bene in thoſe parts himſelfe) ſhips may ſaile from the dominions of Cathaia vnto India. But of other waies, or how the ſeas lie by any coaſt hee knoweth not.

The inſtruction of another Tartarian merchant dwelling in the citie of Boghar, as he hath learned by other his countreymen which haue bene there.

First from Aſtracan by ſea to Serachick is 15 daies: affirming alſo that a man may trauell the other way before written by Turkemen.

From Serachick to Vrgence is 15 dayes.

From Vrgence to Boghar alſo 15 dayes.

Note. Theſe laſt 30 daies iourney is without habitation of houſes: therefore trauellers lodge in their owne tents, carying with them to eate, their ſeuerall prouiſions: and for drinke there bee many wels of faire water at equall baiting places not farre diſtant dayly to be had.

From Boghar to Taskent eaſie trauelling with goods, is 14 dayes by land.

From Taskent to Occient 7 dayes.

From Occient to Caſcar 20 daies. This Caſcar is the head towne or citie of another prince, lying betweene Boghar and Cathaia, called Reſhit can.

From Caſcar to Sowchick 30 daies iourney, which Sowchick is the firſt border of Cathay.

From Sowchick to Camchick 5 daies iourney, and from Camchick to Cathay is a moneths iourney, all the way being inhabited, temperate, & wel repleniſhed with innumerable fruits, & the chiefe citie in that whole land is called Cambalu, which is yet 10 daies iourney from Cathay.

Beyond this land of Cathay, which they praiſe to be ciuill & vnſpeakeably rich, is the countrey named in the Tartarian tongue Cara-calmack inhabited with blacke people: but in Cathay, the moſt part therof ſtretching to the ſunne riſing, are people white and of faire complexion. Their religion alſo, as the Tartars report, is chriſtian, or after the maner of Chriſtians, and their language peculiar, differing from the Tartarian tongue.

There are no great and furious Beares in trauelling through the waies aforeſaid, but wolues white and blacke. And becauſe that woods are not of ſuch quantitie there, as in theſe parts of Ruſſia, but in maner rather ſcant then plentiful, as is reported, the Beares breed not that way, but ſome other beaſts (as namely one in Ruſſe called Barſe) are in thoſe coaſts. This Barſe appeareth by a ſkinne of one ſeene here to ſell, to be nere ſo great as a big lion ſpotted very faire and therefore we here take it to be a Leopard or Tiger.

Angrim.

Note that 20 daies iourney from Cathay is a countrey named Angrim, where liueth the beaſt that beareth the beſt Muske, & the principall therof is cut out of the knee of the male. The people are tawnie, & for that the men are not bearded nor differ in complexion from women, they haue certaine tokens of iron, that is to ſay: the men weare the ſunne round like a boſſe vpon their ſhoulders, and women on their priuie parts. Their feeding is raw fleſh in the ſame land, and in another called * Titay: the Duke there is called Can. They worſhip the fire, and it is 34 dayes iourney from great Cathay, and in the way lyeth the beautifull people, eating with kniues of golde, and are called Comorom, and the land of ſmall people is neerer the Mosko then Cathay.

Mandeuille ſpeaketh hereof.

Or Kitay.

Small people.

The inſtructions of one of Permia, who reporteth he had bene at Cathay the way before written, and alſo another way neere the ſea coaſt, as foloweth, which note was ſent out of Ruſſia from Giles Holmes.

Pechora but ſix dayes iourney by land or water from Ob.

First from the prouince of Dwina is knowen the way to Pechora, and from Pechora traueiling with Olens or harts, is ſixe dayes iourney by land, and in the Sommer as much by water to the riuer of Ob.

The Ob is a riuer full of flats, the mouth of it is 70. Ruſſe miles ouer. And from thence three dayes iourney on the right hand is a place called Chorno-leſe, to ſay in Engliſh, blacke woods, and from thence neere hand is a people called Pechey-cony, wearing their haire by his deſcription after the Iriſh faſhion.

From Pechey-cony to Ioulc Calmachey three dayes iourney, & from thence to Chorno Callachay three dayes tending to the Southeaſt.

Theſe two people are of the Tartarian faith, and tributaries to the great Can.

Here follow certaine countreys of the Samoeds which dwell vpon the riuer Ob, and vpon the ſea coaſts beyond the ſame, taken out of the Ruſſe tongue word by word, and trauailed by a Ruſſe borne in Colmogro, whoſe name was Pheodor Towtigin, who by report, was ſlaine in his ſecond voyage in one of the ſaid countreys.

VPon the Eaſt part beyond the countrey of Vgori, the riuer Ob is the moſt Weſtermoſt part thereof. Vpon the ſea coaſt dwell Samoeds, and their countrey is called Molgomſey, whoſe meate is fleſh of Olens, or Harts, and Fiſh, and doe eate one another ſometimes among themſelues. And if any Marchants come vnto them, then they kill one of their children for their ſakes to feaſt them withall. And if a Marchant chance to die with them, they burie him not, but eate him, and ſo doe they eate them of their owne countrey likewiſe. They be euill of ſight, and haue ſmall noſes, but they be ſwift and ſhoote very well, and they trauaile on Harts and on dogges, and their apparell is Sables and Harts ſkinnes. They haue no Marchandiſe but Sables onely.

Trauelling on dogs & harts.

2 Item, on the ſame coaſt or quarter beyond thoſe people, and by the ſea ſide alſo doth dwell another kinde of Samoeds in like maner, hauing another language. One moneth in the yeere they liue in the ſea, and doe not come or dwell on the dry land for that moneth.

3 Item beyond theſe people, on the ſea coaſt, there is another kinde of Samoeds, their meate is fleſh and fiſh, and their merchandiſe are Sables, white and blacke Foxes (which the Ruſſes call Pſcles) and Harts ſkinnes, and Fawnes ſkinnes.

The relation of Chaggi Memet a Perſian Marchant, to Baptiſta Ramuſius, and other notable citizens of Venice, touching the way from Tauris the chiefe citie of Perſia, to Campion a citie of Cathay ouer land: in which voyage he himſelfe had paſſed before with the Carauans.

A letter of Sigiſmond king of Polonia, written in the 39. yeere of his reigne to Elizabeth the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie of England, &c.

Sigiſmudus Auguſtus by the grace of God king of Polonia, great Duke of Lituania, Ruſſia, Pruſſia, Maſſouia, and Samogetia, &c. Lord and heire &c. to the moſt Noble Princeſſe Ladie Elizabeth by the ſame grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, &c. our deare ſiſter and kinſewoman, greeting, and increaſe of all felicitie. Whereas your Maieſtie writeth to vs that you haue receiued two of our letters, wee haue looked that you ſhould haue anſwered to them both. Firſt to the one, in which we intreated more at large in forbidding the voyage to Narue, which if it had bene done, we had bene vnburdened of ſo often writing of one matter: and might haue anſwered your Maieſtie much better to the purpoſe. Now we thus anſwere to your Maieſtie to thoſe matters of the which you writte to vs the 3 of October from Windſore. Firſt, forasmuch as your Maieſtie at the requeſt of our letters hath diſcharged the arreſt of Marchants goods, and of the names of the men of Danske our ſubiects, which was ſet vpon them by the commaundement of your Maieſtie: and alſo haue reſtored the olde and ancient libertie of traffique, we acknowledge great pleaſure done vnto vs in the ſame: and alſo thinke it to bee done according to common agreement made in times paſt. Neither were we euer at any time of any other opinion touching your Maieſtie, but that wee ſhould obtaine right and reaſon at your hands. Forasmuch as we likewiſe ſhall at all times be ready to grant to your Maieſtie, making any requeſt for your ſubiects, ſo farre as ſhall ſtand with iuſtice, yet neither will we yeeld any thing to your Maieſtie in contention of loue, beneuolence, and mutuall office, but that we iudge euery good turne of yours to be recompenſed by vs to the vttermoſt: and that ſhall we proue as occaſion ſhall ſerue. Therefore we ſhall command the arreſts, if any be made by our ſubiects (as it is vnknowen to vs) of merchants goods and Engliſh names to be diſcharged: and ſhall conſerue the olde libertie of trafficke, and all other things which ſhall ſeeme to appertaine to neighbourhood betweene vs and your Maieſty: ſo that none of the ſubiects of your Maieſty hereafter preſume to vſe the nauigation to the Narue forbidden by vs, and full of danger not onely to our parts, but alſo to the open deſtruction of all Chriſtians and liberall nations. The which as we haue written afore, ſo now we write againe to your Maieſty that we know and feele of a ſurety, the Moſcouite, enemy to all liberty vnder the heauens, dayly to grow mightier by the increaſe of ſuch things as be brought to the Narue, while not onely wares but alſo weapons heretofore vnknowen to him, and artificers & arts be brought vnto him: by meane whereof he maketh himſelfe ſtrong to vanquiſh all others. Which things, as long as this voyage to Narue is vſed, can not be ſtopped. And we perfectly know your Maieſty can not be ignorant how great the cruelty is of the ſaid enemy, of what force he is, what tyranny he vſeth on his ſubiects, and in what ſeruile ſort they be vnder him. We ſeemed hitherto to vanquiſh him onely in this, that he was rude of arts, and ignorant of policies. If ſo be that this nauigation to the Narue continue, what ſhall be vnknowen to him? Therefore we that know beſt, and border vpon him, do admoniſh other Chriſtian princes in time, that they do not betray their dignity, liberty and life of them and their ſubiects to a moſt barbarous and cruell enemy, as we can no leſſe do by the duty of a Chriſtian prince. For now we do foreſee, except other princes take this admonition, the Moſcouite puffed vp in pride with thoſe things that be brought to the Narue, and made more perfect in warlike affaires with engines of warre and ſhippes, will make aſſault this way on Chriſtendome, to ſlay or make bound all that ſhall withſtand him: which God defend. With which our admonition diuers princes already content themſelues, and abſtaine from the Narue. The others that will not abſtaine from the ſayd voyage ſhalbe impeached by our nauie, and incurre the danger of loſſe of life, liberty, wife and children. Now therfore if the ſubiects of your Maieſty will forbeare this voyage to Narue, there ſhalbe nothing denied to them of vs. Let your Maieſty well weigh and conſider the reaſons & occaſions of our ſtopping of ſhips going to the Narue. In which ſtopping, our ſubiects of Danske be in no fault, as we haue already written to your Maieſty, neither vſe we their counſell in the ſame. In any other matter, if there be any fault in them againſt your Maieſty or your ſubiects, we will gladly do iuſtice vpon them, that your Maieſty may well vnderſtand that we be carefull of you and your ſubiects. Neither thinke we it meet to take Hamburgh, or any other place to iudge the matter: for we haue our councell & iudgement ſeat at Rie, where your Maieſty & your ſubiects, or any other, ſhal haue iuſtice adminiſtred vnto them, with whom we haue had ancient league and amity. And thus much we haue thought good to let your Maieſty vnderſtand. Fare ye well. Dated the ſixt of December the 39 of our reigne.

The trade to Narue forbidden by the K. of Poland.

The Queenes Maieſties Letters to the Emperour of Ruſsia, requeſting licence, and ſafe conduct for M. Anthony Ienkinſon to paſſe thorow his kingdome of Ruſsia, into Perſia, to the Great Sophie. 1561.

ELIZABETHA Dei gratia, Angliæ, &c. Regina, ſereniſſimo & potentiſſimo principi, D. Ioanni Baſiliuich, Imperatori totius Ruſſiæ, Magno Duci, &c. Salutem, & omnium rerum proſperarum fœliciſſimum incrementum. Potentiſſime Princeps, res eſt nobis ad memorandum longè gratiſſima, illa veſtræ Maieſtatis erga nos & noſtros amicitia. Quæ tempore fœliciſſimæ memoriæ Regis Edwardi ſexti, fratris noſtri chariſſimi, Dei benignitate incepta, deinceps verò veſtra non ſolùm ſingulari humanitate alta atque fota, ſed incredibili etiam bonitate aucta atque cumulata, nunc autem omnibus beneuolentiæ veſtræ officijs ſic firmata eſt atque conſtabilita, vt iam minimè dubitemus, quin ea ad laudem Dei, ad gloriam vtriuſque noſtrum, ad publicam noſtrorum vtrobique regnorum immenſam commoditatem, ad priuatam ſingulorum vtrinque ſubditorum optatam ſpem, certámque fœlicitatem multis ſit deinceps ſeculis duratura. Et quanquam hæc veſtra bonitas, pleniſſimè ſeſe effudit in omnes noſtros ſubditos, qui ſeſe in vllas imperij veſtri partes vnquam receperunt, (pro qua ingentes noſtras, vt par eſt, gratias veſtræ Maieſtati habemus, veſtríſque viciſſim in omni opportunitatis loco libentiſſimè feremus) tamen abundantia benignitatis veſtræ, in accipiendo, támque humanitèr tractando noſtrum fidelem & perdilectum famulum Antonium Ienkinſon, qui has perfert literas, ſeorſim nobis gratiſſima exiſtit. Nam præterquam quòd nullis non locis veſtri Imperij & magna libertate, & ſumma humanitate veſtræ ſerenitatis non permiſſu ſolùm, ſed iuſſu etiam frueretur, veſtra bonitas tamen non in hac domeſtica benignè faciendi ratione conquieuit, ſed perlibentèr & vltró eundum noſtrum hunc perdilectum famulum, varijs exteris principibus, quoquouerſus ipſe iter ſuum inſtituerat, literis ſuis, ſuo magno Imperiali ſigillo conſignatis commendauit. Quod beneficium illi vbiuis gentium, & viam ſine vllo periculo, propter publicam veſtram fidem, & aduentum cum magno fauore, propter veſtram commendationem, optatè quidem & fœliciter communiuit. Itaq; quemadmodum gemina hæc veſtra beneuolentia, cum illa generalis exhibita in veſtro regno negotiantibus ſubditis noſtris vniuerſis, tum iſta ſeorſim præſtita huic Antonio Ienkinſon, perfideli noſtro famulo, nobis in mente non ſolùm ad gratam perpetuámque memoriam, verùm etiam ad mutuam, vel opportunam compenſationem, firmiſſimè defixa eſt: ita, petimus a veſtra Maieſtate vt vtramque beneuolentiæ veſtræ rationem & communem noſtris vniuerſis, & priuatam huic noſtro dilecto famulo, vtriſque deinceps dignetur tueri, atq; conſeruare. Neque nos quidem diffidimus, quin quem fauorem veſtra Maieſtas anteà ſua ſponte Antonio Ienkinſon, tum quidem priuato oſtendit, eundem nunc noſtro rogatu eidem Antonio in noſtrum iam famulatum cooptato benignè velit denuò declarare. Et propterea petimus à veſtra Maieſtate, vt dignetur iterum concedere eidem noſtro famulo, literas ſuas commeatus, publicæ fidei, ac ſaluiconductus, quarum tenore, authoritate, atque præſidio, ſit illi, familiaribus ſuis, & ſeruis, tutum, liberumque, cum mercibus, ſarcinis, equis, & bonis ſuis vniuerſis, inuehendis euehendiſque, per veſtra regna, domicilia, atque prouincias, proficiſci, ire, tranſire, redire, abire, & iſtic morari, quamdiu placuerit, & inde recedere quandocunque illi aut ſuis libitum fuerit. Et ſicut non dubitamus, quin veſtra Maieſtas hæc omnia humanitatis grata officia, pro immenſa bonitate ſuæ naturæ benignè & largiter huic famulo noſtro ſit conceſſura, ita valdè optamus, adeóque petimus, vt veſtra Maieſtas eodem noſtrum famulum, vnà cum omnibus ſuis familiaribus, ac bonis, exteris alijs principibus literis ſuis dignetur commendare, præſertim verò atque ſeorſim Magno Sophi, Perſarum Imperatori, in cuius etiam imperia & ditiones idem noſter famulus gratia potiſſimè experiundi peregrina commercia, proficiſci vnà cum ſuis conſtituit.

Confidimus igitur hæc omnia noſtra poſtulata pro famuli ſpe, pro noſtra expectatione, pro veſtra bonitate, pro noſtrorum vtrinque ſubditorum commoditate, fauſta illi, grata nobis, accepta etiam veſtræ Maieſti, & noſtris vtrobíque perquam vtilia euaſura. The ſame in Engliſh.

Elizabeth by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. to the right excellent, and right mightie Prince, Lord Iohn Baſiliwich, Emperour of all Ruſſia, &c. greeting, and moſt happie increaſe in all proſperitie. Right mightie Prince, the amitie of your Maieſtie towards vs and our ſubiects is very pleaſant to vs to be remembred, which being begun by the goodneſſe of God in the reigne of our moſt deare brother of happie memorie, King Edward the ſixt, and afterwards, through your not onely ſingular humanitie, fed, and nouriſhed, but alſo through your incredible goodneſſe increaſed, and augmented, is now firmed and eſtabliſhed, with all maner of tokens of your beneuolence, that now we doubt not, but that from henceforth, during many ages, the ſame ſhall endure to the praiſe of God, to both our glories, to the publike great commoditie of our Realmes on either part, and to the priuate deſired hope, and certeine felicitie of all our ſubiects. And although that this your goodneſſe hath bene abundantly extended to all our ſubiects, that haue at any time repaired into any part of your Empire, for the which wee giue (as reaſon is) your Maieſtie right heartie thankes, and will againe ſhew the like vnto yours, right willingly, whenſoeuer opportunitie ſhall require: yet the abundance of your benignitie both in receiuing, and alſo in entertaining our faithfull and beloued ſeruant, Anthonie Ienkinſon, the bringer of theſe our letters, is vnto vs for him priuately very thankefull. For beſides this, that in all places of your Empire, he not onely by your Maieſties ſufferance, but alſo by your commandement, enioyed much libertie, and great friendſhip, your goodneſſe not ceaſing in this your domeſticall diſpoſition of clemencie, did right willingly, and of your owne abundant grace, commend the ſame our welbeloued ſeruant, by your letters ſealed with your Imperiall ſeale, to ſundrie forren Princes, vnto whom he was minded to iourney: which your magnificence did purchaſe vnto him happily, according to his deſire, both paſſage without all perill, through your notable credit, and alſo atchieuing of his iourney through your commendation. Therefore like as theſe your duplicated beneuolences, both that one generally exhibited to all our ſubiects frequenting that your Realme, and alſo this the other extended apart to this our right faithfull ſeruant Anthonie Ienkinſon, is right aſſuredly faſtened in our remembrance, not onely for a perpetuall and gratefull memoriall, but alſo for a mutuall and meet compenſation: ſo we deſire of your Maieſtie, to vouchſafe from henceforth to conſerue and continue the geminate diſpoſition of your beneuolences, both generally to all our ſubiects, and alſo priuately to this our beloued ſeruant. And we doubt not, but that at our requeſt, you will againe graciouſly ſhew vnto the ſame Anthony, now admitted into our ſeruice, the like fauor as heretofore your Maieſty of your meere motion did exhibite vnto him, being then a priuate perſon. And therefore we deſire your Maieſty eftſoones to grant to the ſame our ſeruant, your letters of licence, paſport, & ſafe conduct, through the tenour, authority, and helpe whereof, he, his ſeruants, together with their merchandiſes, baggages, horſes, and goods whatſoeuer, that ſhall be brought in, or carried out, by or thorow all your empire, kingdome, dominions, and prouinces, may ſurely and freely iourney, go, paſſe, repaſſe, depart, and there tary ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe him: and from thence returne whenſoeuer it ſhall ſeeme good to him or his: and as we doubt not, but that your Maieſty in the goodneſſe of your nature will graciouſly and abundantly grant all theſe good offices of humanity, ſo we do heartily deſire that your Maieſty wil likewiſe vouchſafe to commend the ſame our ſeruant, together with all his goods, by your letters to other forren Princes, and ſpecially to the great Sophy, and Emperour of Perſia, into whoſe empire and iuriſdictions the ſame our ſeruant purpoſeth with his for to iourney, chiefly for triall of forren merchandiſes.

We therefore doe truſt that all theſe our demands ſhall tend, and haue effect, according to the hope of our ſeruant, and to our expectation, for your wealth, for the commodity of both our ſubiects, lucky to him, thankefull to vs, acceptable to your Maieſty, and very profitable to our ſubiects on either part. God grant vnto your Maieſty long and happy felicity in earth, and euerlaſting in heauen. ELIZABETHA Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hibetniæ Regina, &c. Potentiſſimo & inuictiſſimo Principi, Magno Sophi Perſarum, Medorum, Parthorum, Hircanorum, Carmanorum, Margianorum, populorum cis & vltrà Tygrim fluuium, & omnium intra Mare Caſpium, & Perſicum ſinum nationum atque Gentium Imperatori ſalutem, & rerum proſperarum fœliciſſimum incrementum. Summi Dei benignitate factum eſt, vt quas gentes, non ſolum immenſa terrarum ſpacia, & inſuperabiles marium vaſtitates, ſed & ipſi etiam cœlorum cardines longiſſimè diſiunxerunt, ipſæ tamen literarum bono & mentis certa cogitata, & humanitatis grata officia, & intelligentiæ mutuæ multa commoda facilè inter ſe & opportunè poſſint communicare. The ſame in Engliſh.

This letter was alſo written in Hebrew, and Italian.

Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, &c. To the right mightie, and right victorious Prince, the great Sophie, Emperour of the Perſians, Medes, Parthians, Hircans, Carmanians, Margians, of the people on this ſide, and beyond the riuer of Tygris, and of all men, and nations, betweene the Caſpian ſea, and the gulfe of Perſia, greeting, and moſt happie increaſe in all proſperitie. By the goodneſſe of the Almightie God it is ordeined, that thoſe people, which not onely the huge diſtance of the lands, and the inuincible wideneſſe of the ſeas, but alſo the very quarters of the heauens do moſt farre ſeparate, and ſet aſunder, may neuertheleſſe through good commendation by writing, both eaſe, and alſo communicate betweene them, not onely the conceiued thoughts, or deliberations, and gracefull offices of humanitie, but alſo many commodities of mutuall intelligence. Therefore whereas our faithfull, and right welbeloued ſeruant Anthonie Ienkinſon, bearer of theſe our letters, is determined with our licence, fauour, and grace, to paſſe out of this our Realme, and by Gods ſufferance to trauell euen into Perſia, and other your iuriſdictions: we minde truely with our good fauour, to ſet forward, and aduance that his right laudable purpoſe: and that the more willingly, for that this his enterpriſe is onely grounded vpon an honeſt intent, to eſtabliſh trade of merchandiſe with your ſubiects, and with other ſtrangers traffiking in your realmes. Wherefore we haue thought good, both to write to your Maieſtie, and alſo to deſire the ſame, to vouchſafe at our requeſt, to grant to our ſayd ſeruant, Anthonie Ienkinſon, good paſports, and ſafe conducts, by meanes, and authoritie whereof, it may be free and lawfull for him, together with his familiars, ſeruants, cariages, merchandiſe, and goods whatſoeuer, thorow your Realmes, Dominions, Iuriſdictions, and Prouinces, freely, and without impeachment, to iourney, go, paſſe, repaſſe, and tary ſo long as he ſhall pleaſe, and from thence to returne whenſoeuer he or they ſhall thinke good. If theſe holy duties of entertainment, and ſweet offices of naturall humanitie may be willingly concluded, ſincerely embraced, and firmely obſerued betweene vs, and our Realmes, and ſubiects, then we do hope that the Almightie God will bring it to paſſe, that of theſe ſmall beginnings, greater moments of things ſhall hereafter ſpring, both to our furniture and honours, and alſo to the great commodities, and vſe of our peoples: ſo it will be knowen that neither the earth, the ſeas, nor the heauens, haue ſo much force to ſeparate vs, as the godly diſpoſition of naturall humanity, and mutuall beneuolence haue to ioyne vs ſtrongly together. God grant vnto your Maieſtie long and happy felicity in earth, and perpetuall in heauen. Dated in England, in our famous citie of London, the 25 day of the moneth of April, in the yere of the creation of the world, 5523, and of our Lord and God Ieſus Chriſt, 1561, and of our reigne the third.

A remembrance giuen by vs the Gouernours, Conſuls, and Aſſiſtants of the company of Merchants trading into Ruſſia, the eight day of May 1561, to our truſtie friend Anthonie Ienkinſon, at his departure towards Ruſſia, and ſo to Perſia, in this our eight iourney.

First you ſhall vnderſtand that we haue laden in our good ſhip, called the Swallow, one Cheſt, the keyes whereof we doe heere deliuer you, and alſo a bill, wherein are written particularly the contents in the ſayd Cheſt, and what euery thing did coſt: and becauſe, as you know, the ſayd Cheſt is of charge, we deſire you to haue a ſpeciall regard vnto it, and when God ſhall ſend you vnto Moſco, our minde and will is, that you, with the aduiſe of our Agents there, doe appoint ſome ſuch preſents for the Emperour and his ſonne, either wine, cloth of golde, ſcarlet, or plate, as to your good diſcretion ſhall be thought meet, and when you haue deliuered vnto him the Queenes Maieſties Letters, and our ſayd preſent in the name of the Company, we thinke it good that you make your humble ſute vnto his Highneſſe in our name, to get his licence or ſafe conduct for you and all other our ſeruants or Agents at all times hereafter with ſuch wares and merchandiſe as you at this time, or they hereafter at all other times ſhall thinke good to paſſe out of his dominions towards Tartaria, Perſia, or other places, and alſo to returne vnto Moſco with ſuch wares and merchandiſes as you ſhall bring or ſend from any land or countrey that is not in his dominions, and if it be thought good by you and our Agents there to make compoſition with the emperor or his officers for ſome certeine cuſtome or tole vpon ſuch goods as we ſhall paſſe that way, to the intent we might be the better fauored, we refer it to your deſcretion, foreſeeing that ẏ opening of this matter be not preiudiciall vnto our former priuileges.

And for the ſale of our cloth of gold, plate, pearles, ſaphyres, and other iewels, we put our truſt and confidence in you principally to ſell them for ready mony, time to good debters, or in barter for good wares, ſo that you make our other Agents priuy how and for what price you ſell any of the premiſſes, and alſo deliuer ſuch ſummes of money, billes or wares, as you ſhall receiue, vnto our ſaid Agents: thinking good further, that if you perceiue that the plate or other iewels, or any part thereof will not be ſold for profit before your departure from the Moſco, that then you cauſe them to be ſafe packed, and ſet order they may be ſent hither againe in our ſhippes the next yeere, except you perceiue that there may be ſome profit in carrying ſome part of them into Perſia, which we would not to be of any great value.

We haue alſo laden in the ſayd Swallow and the other two ſhips 80 fardles, conteining 400 kerſies, as by ẏ inuoice doth appeare, which fardles be packed, & appointed to be caried into Perſia: neuertheleſſe, if you chance to finde good ſales for them in the Moſco, we thinke it were good to ſell part of them there, and to cary the leſſe quantity with you, becauſe we be vncertaine what vent or ſale you ſhall finde in Perſia or other places where you ſhall come.

If you obtaine the Emperours licence to paſſe out of his dominions, and to returne, as aforeſaid, & that you perceiue you may ſafely do the ſame, our minde is, that at ſuch time as you thinke beſt and moſt conuenient for that purpoſe, you do appoint ſo many, and ſuch of our hired ſeruants or apprentiſes as you thinke neceſſary & meet for our affaires, and may beſt be ſpared, to go with you in your ſaid voyage, whereof we would one to be ſuch as you might make priuy of all your doings for diuers conſiderations and cauſes that may happen: which ſeruants and apprentiſes, we will and command, by this our remembrance, to be obedient vnto you as vnto vs, not onely to goe with you, and to doe ſuch things as you command them in your preſence, but alſo to goe vnto ſuch countreys or places as you ſhall appoint them vnto, either with wares or without wares, & there to remaine and continue ſo long as you ſhall thinke good, and if they or any of them will refuſe to do ſuch things as you do appoint them, as aforeſaid, or that any of them (be he hired ſeruant or apprentiſe) do miſuſe himſelfe by any maner of diſobedience or diſorder, and will not by gentle and faire meanes be reformed, we will that you ſend him backe to the Moſco, with ſtraight order that he may be ſent from thence hither, & let vs haue knowledge of his euill behauior, to the intent that if he be a hired ſeruant we may pay him his wages according to his ſeruice, and if he be an apprentiſe we may vſe him according to his deſerts.

We will alſo that you take with you ſuch karſies, ſcarlet, and other clothes, or any other ſuch wares of ours, as you ſhall thinke good, and ſo in the name of God to take your iourney towards Perſia, either by the way of Aſtracan and Mare Caſpium, or otherwiſe, as you ſhall ſee cauſe: and when God ſendeth you into Perſia, our minde is, that you repaire vnto the great Sophy with the Queenes Maieſties letters, if he be not too farre from the Caſpian ſea for you to trauell, and that you make him ſuch a preſent as you ſhall thinke meet, and if you paſſe by any other kings, princes, or gouernors, before or after you come to the preſence of the Sophy, likewiſe to make them ſome preſent, as you ſee cauſe, according to their eſtate and dignitie, and withall to procure letters of priuilege or ſafeconduct of the ſayd Sophy or other princes in as large and ample maner as you can, for the ſure eſtabliſhing of further trade in merchandiſe by vs heereafter to be made, frequented and continued in thoſe parts, not onely that we may freely ſell in all places within his dominions ſuch wares as we cary thither, but alſo buy and bring away any maner of wares or merchandiſe whatſoeuer it be, that is for our purpoſe and commoditie within his dominions, with free paſſage alſo for vs at all times, to paſſe as often as we will with our goods and merchandiſe into any part of India or other countreys thereunto adioyning, and in like maner to returne thorow his dominions into Ruſſia or elſwhere.

And for the ſale of our kerſies or other wares that you ſhall haue with you, as our truſt is that you will doe for our moſt profit and commoditie: euen ſo we referre all vnto your good diſcretion, aſwell in the ſale of our ſayd goods, as to make our returne in ſuch things as you ſhall finde there, and thinke beſt for our profit. But if paſſage cannot be had into Perſia by Aſtracan, or otherwiſe, the next Summer, which ſhalbe in the yeere 1562, then our minde is, that you procure to ſell our kerſies, & other ſuch wares as are appointed for Perſia, in the Moſco, or other the Emperours dominions, if you may ſell them for any reaſonable price, and then to employ your ſelfe with ſuch other of your ſeruants, as you ſhall thinke meet for the ſearch of the paſſage by Noua Zembla, or els you to returne for England as you thinke good. Prouided alwayes, that if you do perceiue or vnderſtand, that paſſage is like to be had into Perſia the Summer folowing, which ſhalbe ſhalbe in the yeere 1563, and that you can not ſell our kerſies in the Emperours dominions, as aforeſayd, at a reaſonable price: then we will rather they may be kept till the ſaid Summer in the yeere 1563, and then you to proceed forwards vpon your iourney towards Perſia as aforeſayd. If paſſage into Perſia cannot be obteined the next yeere, neither good hope of paſſage in the yeere 1563, neither yet in the meane time good ſale of our kerſies in the Emperours dominions, then we thinke good for you to ſee if you can practiſe to cary your ſaid wares by ſafe conduct thorow Polonia, or any other wayes into Conſtantinople, or els where you thinke beter ſale may be had, then in Ruſſia.

Thus haue we giuen you to vnderſtand our meanings in this intended aduenture: but foraſmuch as we do conſider and know, that if we ſhould preſcribe vnto you any certeine way, or direct order what you ſhould doe, we might ſo worke cleane contrary to our purpoſe and intent: therefore knowing your approued wiſedome with youre experience, and alſo your carefull and diligent minde in the atchieuing and bringing to good ſucceſſe (by the helpe of almighty God) all things that you take in hand, we doe commit our whole affaires concerning the ſaid aduenture wholly vnto your good diſcretion, praying God ſo to proſper you, as may be firſt for his glory, ſecondly for the honour and commoditie of this realme, and next for our profit, with the increaſe of your good name for euer.

And yet further deſiring, and alſo moſt earneſtly requiring you, as you tender the ſtate of our company, that you will haue a ſpeciall regard vnto the order of our houſes & our ſeruants, aſwell at Colmogro and Vologda, as at Moſco, and to ſee and conſider if any miſorder be amongſt our ſeruants or apprentiſes, wherby you thinke we might hereafter be put to hinderance or loſſe of any part of our goods or priuilege there, that you doe not onely ſee the ſame reformed, but alſo to certifie vs thereof by your letter at large, as our truſt is in you.

And for the better knowledge to be had in the prices and goodnes of ſuch things as we do partly ſuppoſe you ſhall finde in the partes of Ruſsia, we doe heerewith deliuer you a quantitie of certeine drugges, wherby you may perceiue how to know the beſt, and alſo there are noted the prices of ſuch wares and drugges as be heere moſt vendible: alſo we deliuer you heerewith one pound and one ounce weight in braſſe, to the end, that you may therby, & with the bill of prices of wares, know what things be worth here. As for the knowledge of ſilks, we need not to giue you any inſtructions thereof, other then you know.

Weights and drugs deliuered to M. Ienkinſon.

And if you vnderſtand that any commoditie in Ruſsia be profitable for vs to haue with you into Perſia or other places, our minde is that our Agents ſhall either prouide it for you, or deliuer you money to make prouiſion your ſelfe. And becauſe the Ruſſes ſay that in trauelling Eaſtwardes from Colmogro thirty or forty dayes iourney, there is the maine ſea to be found, we thinke that Richard Iohnſon might imploy his time that way by land, and to be at Moſco time enough to goe with you into Perſia: for if it be true that he may trauell to the ſea that way, and that he may know how many miles it is towards the Eaſt from Colmogro, it will be a great helpe for vs to finde out the ſtraight and paſſage that way, if any be there to be had.

The maine ſea within thirtie dayes Eaſtward of Colmogro.

A compendious and briefe declaration of the iourney of M. Anth. Ienkinſon, from the famous citie of London into the land of Perſia, paſſing in this ſame iourney thorow Ruſsia, Moſcouia, and Mare Caſpium, alias Hircanum, ſent and imployed therein by the right worſhipfull Societie of the Merchants Aduenturers, for diſcouerie of Lands, Iſlands, &c. Being begun the foureteenth day of May, Anno 1561, and in the third yere of the reigne of the Queenes Maieſtie that now is: this preſent declaration being directed and written to the foreſayd Societie.

1561

FIrſt imbarking my ſelfe in a good ſhippe of yours, named the Swallow, at Grauesend, hauing a faire and good winde, our anker then weyed, and committing all to the protection of our God, hauing in our ſailing diuerſitie of windes, & thereby forced to direct and obſerue ſundry courſes (not here rehearſed, becauſe you haue bene thereof heretofore amply informed) on the fourteenth day of Iuly, the yere aforeſayd I arriued in the bay of S. Nicholas in Ruſsia: and the ſixe and twentieth day of the ſame moneth, after conference then had with your Agents there, concerning your worſhips affaires, I departed from thence, paſſing thorow the countrey of Vago, and on the eight day of Auguſt then following, I came to Vologda, which is diſtant from Colmogro, ſeuen hundred miles, where I remained foure dayes, attending the arriuall of one of your boats, wherein was laden a cheſt of iewels with the preſent, by your worſhips appointed for the Emperors Maieſty: which being arriued, and the cheſt receiued, I therewith departed toward the city of Moſco, and came thither the twentith day of the ſame moneth, where I immediatly cauſed my comming to be ſignified vnto the Secretary of the Imperiall Maieſty, with the Queenes Highneſſe letters addreſſed vnto the ſame his Maieſtie, who informed the Emperour thereof. But his Highneſſe hauing great affaires, and being at that preſent ready to be married vnto a Ladie of Chircaſsi, of the Mahometicall law, commanded that no ſtranger, Ambaſſadour, nor other, ſhould come before him for a time, with further ſtreight charge, that during the ſpace of three dayes that the ſame ſolemne feaſt was celebrating, the gates of the citie ſhould be ſhut, and that no perſon, ſtranger or natiue (certeine of his houſhold reſerued) ſhould come out of their ſaid houſes during the ſaid triumph, the cauſe thereof vnto this day not being knowen.

The Queenes letters to the Emperour of Ruſſia.

The firſt of September following, the Emperour made a great feaſt, whereunto were called all Ambaſſadours and ſtrangers being of reputation, and hauing affaires: amongſt whom I was one, but being willed by the Secretary firſt to come, and to ſhew him the Queenes Maieſties letters, I refuſed ſo to doe, ſaying I would deliuer the ſame vnto the Emperours owne hands, and not otherwiſe: which heard, the Secretarie anſwered, that vnleſſe he might firſt peruſe the ſayd letters, I ſhould not come into the Emperors preſence, ſo that I was not at the feaſt. Neuertheleſſe, I was aduertiſed by a noble man that I was inquired for by the Emperours Maieſtie, although the cauſe of my abſence was to his Maieſtie vnknowen. The next day following, I cauſed a ſupplication to be made, and preſented it to his Highneſſe owne hands, and thereby declared the cauſe of my comming, ſignified by the Queenes Maieſties letters, and the anſwere of his ſayd Secretary, moſt humbly beſeeching his Grace that he would receiue and accept the ſame her Highneſſe letters, with ſuch honour and friendſhip, as his letters ſent by Oſep Napea were receiued by the hands of our late Soueraigne Lady Queene Mary, or els that it would pleaſe his Highnes to diſmiſſe me, ſaying that I would not deliuer the ſaid letters but vnto his owne hands, for that it is ſo vſed in our countrey. Thus the matter being pondered, and the effect of my ſupplication well digeſted, I was forthwith commanded to come with the ſaid letters before his Maieſtie, and ſo deliuered the ſame into his owne hands (with ſuch preſents as by you were appointed) according to my requeſt, which were gratefully accepted, & the ſame day I dined in his Graces preſence, with great entertainment. Shortly after, I deſired to know whether I ſhould be licenced to paſſe thorow his Highneſſe dominions into the land of Perſia, according to the Queenes Maieſties requeſt: hereunto it was anſwered, that I ſhould not paſſe thither, for that his Maieſtie meant to ſend an armie of men that way into the land of Chircaſsi, whereby my iourney ſhould be both dangerous & troubleſome, and that if I ſhould periſh therein, it would be much to his Graces diſhonour, but he doubted other matters, although they were not expreſſed. Thus hauing receiued his anſwere, neither to my expectation, nor yet contentation, and there remaining a good part of the yere, hauing in that time ſolde the moſt part of your kerſies and other wares appointed for Perſia, when the time of the yeere required to returne for England, I deſired paſport, and poſt horſes for money, which was granted: but hauing receiued my paſport, ready to depart, there came vnto our houſe there Oſep Napea, who perſwaded me that I ſhould not depart that day, ſaying that the Emperor was not truely informed, imputing great fault to the frowardneſſe of the Secretary, who was not my friend: before whom comming againe the next day, and finding the ſame Secretary and Oſep Napea together, after many allegations and obiections of things, and perceiuing that I would depart, I was willed to remaine vntill the Emperours Maieſtie were ſpoken with againe touching my paſſage: wherewith I was content, & within three dayes after ſending for me, he declared that the Emperours pleaſure was, that I ſhould not onely paſſe thorow his dominions into Perſia, but alſo haue his Graces letters of commendations to forren princes, with certaine his affaires committed to my charge, too long here to rehearſe: whereupon I appointed my ſelfe for the voyage, & the 15 day of March, the yeere aforeſaid, I dined againe in his Maieſties preſence in company of an Ambaſſadour of Perſia and others, and receiuing a cup of drinke at his Maieſties hands, I tooke my leaue of his Highneſſe, who did not onely giue me letters, as aforeſayd, but alſo committed matter of importance and charge vnto me, to be done when I ſhould arriue in thoſe countreys whither I intended to go, and hauing all things in readineſſe for the ſame voyage, I departed from the city of Moſco the 27 day of April 1562, downe by the great riuer of Volga, in company of the ſaid Ambaſſadour of Perſia, with whom I had great friendſhip and conference all the way downe the ſame riuer vnto Aſtracan, where we arriued all in health the 10 day of Iune.

And as touching the ſituations of the cities, townes, caſtles and countreys, aſwell of Mahometans as alſo of Gentils adioyning to the ſame, whereby I paſſed from Moſco vnto Aſtracan, I omit in this breuiat to rehearſe, for that I heretofore haue declared the ſame moſt amply vnto you in my voyage to Boghar. Thus being arriued at Aſtracan, as is aforeſayd, I repaired vnto the captaine there, vnto whom I was commended from the Emperours Maieſty, with great charge that he not only ſhould ayd and ſuccor me with all things needfull during my abode there, but alſo to ſafeconduct me with 50 gunners wel appointed in two ſtroogs or brigantines into the Caſpian ſea, vntil I had paſſed certaine dangerous places which pirats & rouers do accuſtome to haunt, and hauing prepared my barke for the ſea, the Ambaſſador of Perſia being before departed in a barke of his owne the 15 day of July, the yeere aforeſayd, I and my company tooke our voyage from the ſayd Aſtracan, and the next day at a Weſt ſunne, paſſed the mouth of the ſaid riuer being twenty miles diſtant, lying next Southeaſt. The 18 at a Southweſt ſunne, we paſſed by three Iſlands being diſtant nine miles from the ſaid mouth of Volga, and Southſouthweſt from thence, ſailing Southſouthweſt the next day, at a Weſt & by North ſun we fel with the land called Challica Oſtriua, being foure round Iſlands together, diſtant from the ſaid three Iſlands forty miles. From thence ſailing the ſaid courſe the next day, we had ſight of a land called Tuke, in the countrey of Tumen, where pirats and rouers do vſe: for feare of whom we haled off into the ſea due Eaſt forty miles, and fell vpon ſhallowes out of the ſight of land, and there were like to haue periſhed, eſcaping moſt hardly: then the 22 day we had ſight of a goodly Iſland called Chatalet, diſtant from the ſaid Challica Oſtriua an hundred miles, the winde being contrary, and a ſtiffe gale, we were not able to ſeize it: but were forced to come to an anker to the leeward of the ſame ſixe miles off in three or foure fathom water, being diſtant from the maine land to the Weſtward of vs, which was called Skafcayl or Connyk a countrey of Mahometans, about miles, and ſo riding at two ankers a head, hauing no other prouiſion, we loſt one of them, the ſtorme and ſea being growen very ſore, and thereby our barke was ſo full of leaks, that with continuall pumping we had much adoe to keepe her aboue water, although we threw much of our goods ouerboord, with loſſe of our boat, and our ſelues thereby in great danger like to haue periſhed either in the ſea or els vpon the lee ſhore, where we ſhould haue fallen into the hands of thoſe wicked infidels, who attended our ſhipwracke: and ſurely it was very vnlike that we ſhould haue eſcaped both the extremities, but onely by the power and mercy of God, for the ſtorme continued ſeuen dayes, to wit, vntill the thirtieth day of the ſame moneth: and then the winde comming vp at the Weſt with faire weather, our anker weyed, and our ſaile diſplayed, lying South, the next day haling to the ſhore with a Weſt ſunne, we were nie a land called by the inhabitants Shyruanſha, and there we came againe to an anker, hauing the winde contrary, being diſtant from the ſaid Chatalet 150 miles, and there we continued vntill the third day of Auguſt, then hauing a faire winde, winding Southſoutheaſt, and ſailing threeſcore miles, the next day at a Southeaſt ſunne we arriued at a city called Derbent in the king of Hircans dominion, where comming to land, and ſaluting the captaine there with a preſent, he made to me and my company a dinner, and there taking freſh water I departed.

Derbent.

This city of Derbent is an ancient towne hauing an olde caſtle therein, being ſituated vpon an hill called Caſtow, builded all of free ſtone much after our building, the walles very high and thicke, and was firſt erected by king Alexander the great, when he warred againſt the Perſians and Medians, and then hee made a wall of a woonderfull height and thickneſſe, extending from the ſame city to the Georgians, yea vnto the principall city thereof named Tewfliſh, which wall though it be now raſed, or otherwiſe decayed, yet the foundation remaineth, & the wall was made to the intent that the inhabitants of that countrey then newly conquered by the ſaid Alexander ſhould not lightly flee, nor his enemies eaſily inuade. This city of Derbent being now vnder the power of the Sophy of Perſia, bordereth vpon the ſea, adioyning to the foreſaid land of Shalfcall, in the latitude of 41 degrees. From thence ſailing Southeaſt and Southſoutheaſt about 80 miles, the firſt day of Auguſt, the yere aforeſaid, we arriued at our landing place called Shabran, where my barke diſcharged: the goods layd on ſhore, and there being in my tent keeping great watch for feare of rouers, whereof there is great plenty, being field people, the gouernor of the ſaid countrey named Alcan Murcy, comming vnto me, entertained me very gently, vnto whom giuing a preſent, he appointed for my ſafegard forty armed men to watch & ward me, vntil he might haue newes from the king of Shiruan. The 12 day of the ſame moneth newes did come from the king, with order that I ſhould repaire vnto him with all ſpeed: and for expedition, aſwell camels to the number of fiue and forty to cary my goods, as alſo horſes for me and my company were in readineſſe, ſo that the goods laden, and taking my iourney from thence the ſaid twelft day, on the 18 of the ſame moneth I came to a city called Shamaky, in the ſaid countrey of Hircan, otherwiſe called Shiruan, and there the king hath a faire place, where my lodging being appointed, the goods were diſcharged: the next day being the 19 day, I was ſent for to come to the king, named

Obdolowcan, who kept his court at that time in the high mountaines in tents, diſtant from the ſayd Shamaki twentie miles, to auoyd the iniury of the heat: and the 20 day I came before his preſence, who gently interteined me, and hauing kiſſed his hands, he bad me to dinner, and commanded me to ſit downe not farre from him. This king did ſit in a very rich pauillion, wrought with ſilke & golde, placed very pleaſantly, vpon a hill ſide, of ſixteene fathom long, and ſixe fathom broad, hauing before him a goodly fountaine of faire water: whereof he & his nobility did drinke, he being a prince of a meane ſtature, and of a fierce countenance, richly apparelled with long garments of ſilke, and cloth of gold, imbrodred with pearles and ſtone: vpon his head was a tolipane with a ſharpe end ſtanding vpwards halfe a yard long, of rich cloth of golde, wrapped about with a piece of India ſilke of twentie yards long, wrought with golde, and on the left ſide of his tolipane ſtood a plume of fethers, ſet in a trunke of golde richly inameled, and ſet with precious ſtones: his earerings had pendants of golde a handfull long, with two great rubies of great value, ſet in the ends thereof: all the ground within his pauilion was couered with rich carpets, & vnder himſelfe was ſpred a ſquare carpet wrought with ſiluer & golde, and therupon was layd two ſutable cuſhions. Thus the king with his nobility ſitting in his pauillion with his legs a croſſe, and perceiuing that it was painfull for me ſo to ſit, his highneſſe cauſed a ſtoole to be brought in, & did will me to ſit thereupon, after my faſhion. Dinner time then approching, diuers clothes were ſpred vpon the ground, and ſundry diſhes ſerued, and ſet in a ranke with diuers kindes of meats, to the number of 140 diſhes, as I numbred them, which being taken away with the table clothes, and others ſpred, a banket of fruits of ſundry kindes, with other banketting meates, to the number of 150 diſhes, were brought in: ſo that two ſeruices occupied 290 diſhes, and at the end of the ſayd dinner & banket, the king ſaid vnto me, Quoſhe quelde, that is to ſay, Welcome: and called for a cup of water to be drawen at a fountaine, and taſting thereof, did deliuer me the reſt, demanding how I did like the ſame, and whether there were ſo good in our countrey or not: vnto whom I anſwered in ſuch ſort, that he was therewith contented: then he proponed vnto me ſundry queſtions, both touching religion, and alſo the ſtate of our countreys, and further queſtioned whether the Emperor of Almaine, the Emperor of Ruſsia, or the great Turke, were of moſt power, with many other things too long here to rehearſe, to whom I anſwered as I thought moſt meet. Then he demanded whether I intended to goe any further, and the cauſe of my comming: vnto that I anſwered, that I was ſent with letters from the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſty of England vnto the great Sophy, to intreat friendſhip and free paſſage, and for his ſafeconduct to be granted vnto Engliſh merchants to trade into his Segniories, with the like alſo to be granted to his ſubiects, when they ſhould come into our countreys, to the honour and wealth of both realmes, and commodity of both their ſubiects, with diuers other words, which I omit to rehearſe. This ſayd king much allowing this declaration ſayd, that he would not onely giue me paſſage, but alſo men to ſafeconduct me vnto the ſayd Sophy, lying from the foreſayd citie of Shamaki thirtie dayes iourney, vp into the land of Perſia, at a caſtle called Casbin: ſo departing from the king at that time, within three dayes after, being the foure and twentieth day of Auguſt the yere aforeſaid, he ſent for me againe: vnto whom I repaired in the morning, and the king not being riſen out of his bed (for his maner is, that watching in the night, and then banketting with his women, being an hundred and forty in number, he ſleepeth moſt in the day) did giue one commandement that I ſhould ride on hawking with many Gentlemen of his Court, and that they ſhould ſhew me ſo much game and paſtime as might be: which was done, and many cranes killed. We returned from hawking about three of the clocke at the afternoone: the king then riſen, and ready to dinner, I was inuited thereunto, and approching nigh to the entring in of his tent, and being in his ſight, two gentlemen incountered me with two garments of that countrey faſhion, ſide, downe to the ground, the one of ſilke, and the other of ſilke and golde, ſent vnto me from the king, and after that they cauſed me to put off my vpper garment, being a gowne of blacke veluet furred with Sables, they put the ſayd two garments vpon my backe, and ſo conducted me vnto the king, before whom doing reuerence, and kiſſing his hand, he commanded me to ſit not farre from him, and ſo I dined in his preſence, he at that time being very mery, and demanding of me many queſtions, and amongſt other, how I like the maner of their hawking. Dinner ſo ended, I required his highneſſe ſafeconduct for to depart towards the Sophy, who diſmiſſing me with great fauour, and appointing his Ambaſſadour (which returned out of Ruſsia) and others, to ſafeconduct me, he gaue me at my departure a faire horſe with all furniture, and cuſtome free from thence with all my goods. So I returned to Shamaki againe, where I remained vntill the ſixt of October, to prouide camels, horſes, and other neceſſaries for my ſayd intended iourney.

in times paſt was of great renowme, hauing many cities, townes, and caſtles in it: and the kings thereof in time of antiquity were of great power, able to make wars with the Sophies of Perſia: but now it is not onely otherwiſe (for that the cities, townes, and caſtles be decayed) but alſo the king is ſubiect to the ſayd Sophie (although they haue their proper king) and be at the commandement of the ſayd Sophy, who conquered them not many yeeres paſſed, for their diuerſity in religion, and cauſed not onely all the nobility & gentlemen of that countrey to be put to death, but alſo ouer and beſides, raſed the walles of the cities, townes, and caſtles of the ſaid realme, to the intent that there ſhould be no rebellion, and for their great terror, cauſed a turret of free ſtone and ſlimes to be erected in the ſayd city called Shamaki, and in a ranke of ſlimes of the ſayd turret, did ſet the heads of the ſayd nobility and gentlemen, then executed. This city is diſtant from the ſea ſide, with camels, ſeuen dayes iourney, but now the ſame being much decayed, & chiefly inhabited with Armenians, another city called Arraſh, bordering vpon the Georgians, is the chiefeſt and moſt opulent in the trade of merchandiſe, & thereabouts is nouriſhed the moſt abundant growth of raw ſilke, and thither the Turks, Syrians, and other ſtrangers do reſort and trafficke. There be alſo diuers good and neceſſary commodities to be prouided & had in this ſayd realme: viz. galles rough and ſmooth, cotton wooll, allome, and raw ſilke of the naturall growth of that countrey: beſides, here all kinde of ſpices and drugges, and ſome other commodities, which are brought thither from out of East India, but in the leſſe quantity, for that they be not aſſured to haue vent or vtterance of the ſame: but the chiefeſt commodities be there raw ſilks of all ſorts, whereof there is great plenty. Not farre from the ſayd city of Shamaki, there was an olde caſtle called Gulliſtone, now beaten downe by this Sophy, which was eſteemed to be one of the ſtrongeſt caſtles in the world, and was beſieged by Alexander the great, long time before he could win it. And not farre from the ſayd caſtle was a Nunry of ſumptuous building, wherein was buried a kings daughter, named Ameleck Channa, who ſlew herſelfe with a knife, for that her father would haue forced her (ſhe profeſſing chaſtity) to haue married with a king of Tartarie: vpon which occaſion the maidens of that countrey do reſort thither once euery yere to lament her death.

Alſo in the ſayd countrey there is an high hill called Quiquiſs, vpon the toppe whereof (as it is commonly reported) did dwell a great Giant, named Arneoſte, hauing vpon his head two great hornes, and eares, and eyes like a Horſe, and a taile like a Cow. It is further ſayd, that this monſter kept a paſſage thereby, vntill there came an holy man, termed Haucoir Hamſhe, a kinſeman to one of the Sophies, who mounted the ſayd hill, and combating with the ſayd Giant, did binde not onely him in chaines, but alſo his woman called Lamiſache, with his ſonne named After: for which victory they of that countrey haue this holy man in great reputation, and the hill at this day (as it is bruited) ſauoureth ſo ill, that no perſon may come nigh vnto it: but whether it be true or not, I referre it to further knowledge.

The towne of Yauate.

The city of Ardouill.

The city Tebris or Tauris.

Now to returne to the diſcourſe of the proceeding in my voyage towards the great Sophie. The 6 of October in the yeere aforeſayd, I with my company departed from Shamachi aforeſaid, and hauing iourneyed threeſcore miles, came to a towne called Yauate, wherein the king hath a faire houſe, with orchards and gardens well repleniſhed with fruits of all ſorts. By this towne paſſeth a great riuer called Cor, which ſpringeth in the mountaines of the Georgians, & paſſing thorow the countrey of Hircania aforeſayd, falleth into the Caſpian or Hircan ſea, at a place betweene two ancient townes called Shabran and Bachu, ſituate within the realme of Hircane, and from thence iſſueth further, paſſing thorow a fruitfull countrey, inhabited with paſturing people, which dwell in the Summer ſeaſon vpon mountaines, and in Winter they remoue into the valleyes without reſorting to townes or any other habitation: and when they remooue, they doe iourney in carrauans or troops of people and cattell, carrying all their wiues, children and baggage vpon bullocks. Now paſſing this wilde people ten dayes iourney, comming into no towne or houſe, the ſixteenth day of October we arriued at a citie called Ardouill, where we were lodged in an hoſpitall builded with faire ſtone, and erected by this Sophies father named Iſmael, onely for the ſuccour and lodging of ſtrangers and other trauellers, wherein all men haue victuals and feeding for man and horſe, for three dayes and no longer. This foreſayd late prince Iſmael lieth buried in a faire Meſkit, with a ſumptuous ſepulchre in the ſame, which he cauſed to be made in his life time. This towne Ardouill is in the latitude of eight and thirtie degrees, an ancient citie in the prouince of Aderraugan, wherein the Princes of Perſia are commonly buried: and there Alexander the great did keepe his Court when he inuaded the Perſians. Foure dayes iourney to the Weſtward is the citie Tebris in olde time called Tauris, the greateſt citie in Perſia, but not of ſuch trade of merchandiſe as it hath bene, or as others be at this time, by meane of the great inuaſion of the Turke, who hath conquered from the Sophie almoſt to the ſayd citie of Tauris, which the ſayd Turke once ſacked, and thereby cauſed the Sophie to forſake the ſame, and to keepe his court ten dayes iourney from thence, at the ſayd citie of Casbin.

M. Ienkinſons arriuall at the Sophies court 2. Nouember, 1562.

The 21 day we departed from Ordowil aforeſayd, trauelling for the moſt part ouer mountaines all in the night ſeaſon, and reſting in the day, being deſtitute of wood, and therefore were forced to vſe for fewell the dung of horſes & camels, which we bought deare of the paſturing people. Thus paſſing ten dayes iourney the yere aforeſayd, the ſecond day of Nouember we arriued at the foreſayd citie of Casbin, where the ſayd Sophie keepeth his court, and were appointed to a lodging not farre from the kings pallace, and within two dayes after the Sophie commanded a prince called Shalli Murzey, ſonne to Obdolowcan king of Shiruan aforeſayd, to ſend for me to his houſe, who aſked me in the name of the ſaid Sophy how I did, and whether I were in health, and after did welcome me, and inuited me to dinner, whereat I had great entertainment, and ſo from thence I returned to my lodging. The next day after I ſent my interpreter vnto the Sophies Secretarie, declaring that I had letters directed from our moſt gracious Soueraigne lady the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie of the Realme of England, vnto the ſayd Sophy, and that the cauſe of my comming was expreſſed in the ſame letters, deſiring that at conuenient time I might come into his Maieſties preſence, who aduertiſing the Sophy thereof, ſhortly after anſwered me that there were great affaires in hand: which being finiſhed, I ſhould come before his preſence, willing me in the meane time to make ready my preſent if I had any to deliuer.

The Turkes Ambaſſadour to the Sophy.

At this time, the great Turkes Ambaſſadour arriued foure dayes before my comming, who was ſent thither to conclude a perpetuall peace betwixt the ſame great Turke and the Sophie, and brought with him a preſent in golde, and faire horſes with rich furnitures, and other gifts, eſteemed to be worth forty thouſand pound. And thereupon a peace was concluded with ioyfull feaſts, triumphs and ſolemnities, corroborated with ſtrong othes, by their law of Alkaron, for either to obſerue the ſame, and to liue alwayes after as ſworne brethren, ayding the one the other againſt all princes that ſhould warre againſt them, or either of them. And vpon this concluſion the Sophy cauſed the great Turkes ſonne named Baiſet Soltan, a valiant Prince (who being fled from his father vnto the Sophie, had remained in his Court the ſpace of foure yeeres) to be put to death. In which time the ſayd Turkes ſonne had cauſed mortall warres betwixt the ſayd Princes, and much preuailed therein: the Turke demanded therefore his ſonne to be ſent vnto him, & the Sophy refuſed thereunto to conſent. But now being ſlaine according to the Turks will, the Sophy ſent him his head for a preſent, not a litle deſired, and acceptable to the vnnaturall father. Diſcourſing at my firſt arriuall with the king of Shiruan of ſundry matters, and being intertained as hath bene before declared, the ſayd king named Obdolocan, demaunding whether that we of England had friendſhip with the Turks or not: I anſwered, that we neuer had friendſhip with them, and that therefore they would not ſuffer vs to paſſe thorow their countrey into the Sophy his dominions, and that there is a nation named the Venetians, not farre diſtant from vs, which are in great league with the ſayd Turks, who trade into his dominions with our commodities, chiefly to barter the ſame for raw ſilks, which (as we vnderſtand) come from thence: and that if it would pleaſe the ſayd Sophy and other Princes of that countrey, to ſuffer our merchants to trade into thoſe dominions, and to giue vs paſport and ſafe conduct for the ſame, as the ſayd Turke hath granted to the ſayd Venetians, I doubted not but that it ſhould grow to ſuch a trade to the profit of them as neuer before had beene the like, and that they ſhould be both furniſhed with our commodities, and alſo haue vtterance of theirs, although there neuer came Turke into their land, perſwading with many other wordes for a trade to be had. This king vnderſtanding the matter liked it marueilouſly, ſaying, that he would write vnto the Sophy concerning the ſame: as he did in very deed, aſſuring me that the Sophy would graunt my requeſt, and that at my returne vnto him he would giue me letters of ſafe conduct, and priuileges. The Turks Ambaſſadour was not then come into the land, neither any peace hoped to be concluded, but great preparation was made for warre, which was like much to haue furthered my purpoſe, but it chanced otherwiſe.

The Turkes merchants withſtand M. Ienkinſon.

For the Turks Ambaſſadour being arriued, and the peace concluded, the Turkiſh merchants there at that time preſent, declared to the ſame Ambaſſadour, that my comming thither (naming me by the name of Franke) would in great part deſtroy their trade, and that it ſhould be good for him to perſwade the Sophy not to fauour me, as his Highneſſe meant to obſerue the league and friendſhip with the great Turke his maſter, which requeſt of the Turkiſh merchants the ſame Ambaſſadour earneſtly preferred, and being afterwards diſmiſſed with great honour, he departed out of the Realme with the Turks ſonnes head as aforeſayd, and other preſents.

Shaw Thomas the Sophies name.

The 20 day of Nouember aforeſayd, I was ſent for to come before the ſayd Sophy, otherwiſe called Shaw Thomas, and about three of the clocke at afternoone I came to the Court, and in lighting from my horſe at the Court gate, before my feet touched the ground, a paire of the Sophies owne ſhoes termed in the Perſian tongue Baſmackes, ſuch as hee himſelfe weareth when he ariſeth in the night to pray (as his maner is) were put vpon my feet, for without the ſame ſhoes I might not be ſuffred to tread vpon his holy ground, being a Chriſtian, and called amongſt them Gower, that is, vnbeleeuer, and vncleane: eſteeming all to be infidels and Pagans which do not beleeue as they do, in their falſe filthie prophets, Mahomet and Murtezalli. At the ſayd Court gate the things that I brought to preſent his Maieſtie with, were deuided by ſundry parcels to ſundry ſeruitors of the Court, to cary before me, for none of my company or ſeruants might be ſuffered to enter into the Court with me, my interpreter onely excepted. Thus comming before his Maieſtie with ſuch reuerence as I thought meete to be vſed, I deliuered the Queenes Maieſties letters with my preſent, which hee accepting, demaunded of mee of what countrey of Franks I was, and what affaires I had there to doe? Unto whom I anſwered that I was of the famous Citie of London within the noble Realme of England, and that I was ſent thither from the moſt excellent and gracious ſoueraigne Lady Elizabeth Queene of the ſaide Realme for to treate of friendſhip, and free paſſage of our Merchants and people, to repaire and traffique within his dominions, for to bring in our commodities, and to carry away theirs to the honour of both princes, the mutuall commoditie of both Realmes, and wealth of the Subiects, with other wordes here omitted. He then demaunded me in what language the letters were written, I anſwered, in the Latine, Italian and Hebrew: well ſaid he, we haue none within our Realme that vnderſtand thoſe tongues. Whereupon I anſwered that ſuch a famous and worthy prince (as hee was) wanted not people of all nations within his large dominions to interprete the ſame. Then he queſtioned with me of the ſtate of our Countreys, and of the power of the Emperour of Almaine, king Philip, and the great Turke, and which of them was of moſt power: whom I anſwered to his contentation, not diſpraiſing the great Turke, their late concluded friendſhip conſidered. Then he reaſoned with mee much of Religion, demaunding whether I were a Gower, that is to ſay, an vnbeleeuer, or a Muſelman, that is, of Mahomets lawe. Unto whom I anſwered, that I was neither vnbeleeuer nor Mahometan, but a Chriſtian. What is that, ſaid he vnto the king of the Georgians ſonne, who being a Chriſtian was fled vnto the ſaid Sophie, and he anſwered that a Chriſtian was he that beleeueth in Ieſus Chriſtus, affirming him to be the Sonne of God, and the greateſt Prophet. Doeſt thou beleeue ſo, ſaid the Sophie vnto me? Yea that I do, ſaid I: Oh thou vnbeleeuer, ſaid he, we haue no neede to haue friendſhip with the vnbeleeuers, and ſo willed me to depart. I being glad thereof did reuerence and went my way, being accompanied with many of his gentlemen and others, and after me followed a man with a Baſanet of ſand, ſifting all the way that I had gone within the ſaid pallace, euen from the ſaid Sophies ſight vnto the court gate.

The Queenes letters deliuered.

The Sophies queſtions.

Thus I repaired againe vnto my lodging, and the ſaid night Shally Murzey ſonne to the king of Hircan aforeſaid, who fauoured me very much for that I was commended vnto him from his father, willed mee not to doubt of any thing, putting mee in hope that I ſhould haue good ſucceſſe with the Sophie, and good intertainment.

The curteſie of Shally Murzey.

Thus I continued for a time, dayly reſorting vnto me diuers gentlemen ſent by the Sophie to conferre with me, eſpecially touching the affaires of the Emperour of Ruſſia, and to know by what way I intended to returne into my countrey, either by the way that I came, or by the way of Ormus, and ſo with the Portingals ſhips. Unto whom I anſwered, that I durſt not returne by the way of Ormus, the Portingals and wee not being friendes, fully perceiuing their meaning: for I was aduertiſed that the ſaide Sophie meant to haue warres with the Portingals, and would haue charged mee that I had bene come for a ſpie to paſſe through his dominions vnto the ſaide Portingals, thinking them and vs to be all one people, and calling all by the name of Franks, but by the prouidence of God this was preuented.

Warres intended againſt the Portingals.

After this the ſaid Sophie conferred with his nobilitie and counſel concerning me, who perſwaded that he ſhould not entertaine me wel, neither diſmiſſe me with letters or gifts, conſidering that I was a Franke, and of that nation that was enemie to the great Turke his brother, perſwading that if he did otherwiſe, and that the newes thereof ſhould come to the knowledge of the Turke, it ſhould be a meane to breake their new league and friendſhip lately concluded: diſſwading further becauſe he had no neede, neither that it was requiſite for him to haue friendſhip with vnbeleeuers, whoſe Countreys lay farre from him, and that it was beſt for him to ſend me with my letters vnto the ſaid great Turke for a preſent, which he was fully determined to haue done at ſome meet time, meaning to ſend his Ambaſſadour vnto the ſaid great Turke very ſhortly after.

But the king of Hircanes ſonne aforeſaide, vnderſtanding this deliberation, ſent a man in poſt vnto his father, for to declare and impart the purpoſe vnto him, who as a gracious prince, conſidering that I had paſſed through his dominions, and that I had iourneyed for a good intent, did write to the Sophie al that which he vnderſtood of his ſaid determination, & that it ſhould not ſtand with his Maieſties honour to doe mee any harme or diſpleaſure, but rather to giue mee good entertainment, ſeeing I was come into his land of my free will, and not by conſtraint, and that if hee vſed mee euil, there would few ſtrangers reſort into his countrey, which would bee greatly vnto his hinderance, with many other perſwaſions: which after that the ſaide Sophie had well and throughly pondered and digeſted (much eſteeming the ſame king of Hircane, being one of the valianteſt princes vnder him and his nigh kinſeman) changed his determined purpoſe, and the twentieth of March 1562. he ſent to me a rich garment of cloth of golde, and ſo diſmiſſed me without any harme.

Conference with Indian Merchants.

During the time that I ſoiourned at the ſayde City of Casbin, diuers merchants out of India came thither vnto mee, with whom I conferred for a trade of ſpices: whereunto they anſwered that they would bring of all ſorts ſo much as we would haue, if they were ſure of vent, whereof I did promiſe to aſſure them, ſo that I doubt not but that great abundance thereof may from time to time be there prouided and had.

M. Jenkinsons returne.

The ſame twentieth day of March I returned from the ſaide Citie of Casbin where I remayned all the Winter, hauing ſent away all my Camels before, and the thirtieth day I came to the ſaide Citie of Ardouil, and the fifteenth of April vnto Zauat aforeſayd, where king Obdolowcan was at that preſent, who immediatly ſent for me, and demaunding of me many queſtions, declared that if it had not bene for him, I had bene vtterly caſt away, and ſent to the great Turke for a preſent by the Sophie, through the euill perſwaſion of his wicked counſell, that the Zieties and holy men were the chiefe and principal procurers and moouers thereof: but the Sophie himſelfe ment mee much good at the firſt, and thought to houe giuen me good entertainement, and ſo had done, had not the peace and league fortuned to haue bene cōcluded betweene them and the great Turke. Neuertheleſſe, ſayd he, the Sophie hath written vnto me to entertaine you well, and you are welcome into my Countrey, and ſo he intreated mee very gently, in whoſe Court I remained ſeuen dayes, and obteined of him letters of ſafe conductes and priuiledges in your names to bee free from paying cuſtome, which I deliuered vnto your ſeruants Thomas Alcocke and George Wrenne, at their departure towards Perſia for your affaires: and his highneſſe did giue mee two garments of ſilke, and ſo diſmiſſed me with great fauour, ſending with me his Ambaſſadour againe vnto the Emperour of Ruſſia, and committed the chiefeſt ſecret of his affaires vnto me, to declare the ſame vnto the Emperours Maieſtie at my returne: and thus departing the tenth day of April, I came to the City of Shamachi, and there remayning certaine dayes for prouiſion of Camels downe to the Sea ſide, I ſent from thence before men to repaire my Barke, and to make her in a readineſſe. And during my abode in Shammachi, there came vnto me an Armenian ſent from the king of Georgia, who declared the lamentable eſtate of the ſame king, that being encloſed betwixt thoſe two cruell tyrants and mightie princes, the ſaid great Turke and the Sophie, hee had continuall warres with them, requiring for the loue of Chriſt and as I was a Chriſtian, that I would ſend him comfort by the ſaid Armenian, and aduiſe how he might ſend his Ambaſſadour to the ſayd Emperour of Ruſſia, and whether I thought that he would ſupport him or no: and with many other wordes required me to declare his neceſſitie vnto the ſame Emperour at my returne: adding further that the ſaid king would haue written vnto me his minde, but that hee doubted the ſafe paſſage of his meſſenger. Vnto whom I did likewiſe anſwere by word of mouth, not onely perſwading him to ſende his Ambaſſadour to Ruſſia, not doubting but that hee ſhould finde him moſt honourable and inclined to helpe him, but alſo I directed him his way how the ſayde king might ſend by the Countrey of Chircaſſi, through the fauour of Teneruk king of the ſayd Countrey, whoſe daughter the ſaid king had lately married. And thus diſmiſſing the ſaide Armenian, within two dayes after I ſent Edward Cleark your ſeruaunt vnto the Citie of Arraſh, where the moſt ſtore of Silkes is to be had, giuing him Commiſſion to haue paſſed further into the ſaide Countrey of Georgia, and there to haue repaired vnto the ſayde king. And after my commendations premiſed, and my minde declared to haue purſued for ſafeconduct of the ſame Prince for our Merchants to trade into his dominions, and that obtained to haue returned againe with ſpeede. The ſame your ſeruaunt iourneying to the ſayd Citie of Arraſh, and there finding certaine Merchants Armenians, which promiſed to goe to the ſayd City of Georgia, comming to the borders thereof, was perceiued by a Captaine there, that he was a Chriſtian, and thereupon demaunded whither he went, and vnderſtanding that he could not paſſe further without great ſuſpition, anſwered that he came thither to buy Silkes, and ſhewed the king of Hircanes letters which hee had with him, and ſo returned backe againe, and the fifteenth of April came to Shamachi: from whence I departed the ſixteene of the ſame moneth, and the one and twentie therof comming to the Sea ſide, and finding my backe in a readineſſe, I cauſed your goods to be laden, and there attended a faire winde.

Priuiledges obtained of Obdolowcan, which are hereafter annexed.

An Armenian ſent to M. Ienkinſon from the king of Georgia.

Teneruk king of Chircaſſi.

But before I proceede any further to ſpeake of my returne, I intend with your fauours ſomewhat to treate of the countrey of Perſia, of the great Sophie, and of his countrey, lawes and religion.

The deſcription of Perſia.

The chiefe Cities of Perſia.

This land of Perſia is great and ample, deuided into many kingdomes and prouinces, as Gillan, Coraſan, Shiruan, and many others hauing diuers Cities, townes and caſtles in the ſame. Euery prouince hath his ſeuerall King, or Sultan, all in obedience to the great Sophie. The names of the chiefeſt Cities be theſe: Teueris, Caſbin, Keſhan, Yeſſe, Meskit, Heirin, Ardouill, Shamachi, Arraſh with many others. The countrey for the moſt part toward the ſea ſide is plaine and full of paſture, but into the land, high, full of mountaines, and ſharpe. To the South it bordereth vpon Arabia and the Eaſt Ocean. To the North vpon the Caſpian ſea and the lands of Tartaria. To the Eaſt vpon the prouinces of India, and to the Weſt vpon the confines of Chaldea, Syria, and other the Turkes lands. All within theſe dominions be of the Sophies, named Shaw Thamas, ſonne to Iſmael Sophie. This Sophie that now raigneth is nothing valiant, although his power be great, and his people martiall: and through his puſillanimitie the Turke hath much inuaded his countreys, euen nigh vnto the Citie of Teueris, wherein hee was wont to keepe his chiefe court. And now hauing forſaken the ſame, is chiefly reſident at Caſbin aforeſaide, and alwayes as the ſaid Turke purſueth him, he not being able to withſtand the Turke in the fielde, truſting rather to the mountaines for his ſafegard, then to his fortes and caſtles, hath cauſed the ſame to bee raſed within his dominions, and his ordinance to be molten, to the intent that his enemies purſuing him, they ſhould not ſtrengthen themſelues with the ſame.

The difference of religion.

This prince is of the age of fiftie yeeres, and of a reaſonable ſtature, hauing fiue children. His eldeſt ſonne he keepeth captiue in priſon, for that he feareth him for his valiantneſſe and actiuitie: he profeſſeth a kinde of holyneſſe, and ſaith that hee is deſcended of the blood of Mahomet and Murtezalli: and although theſe Perſians bee Mahometans, as the Turkes and Tartars bee, yet honour they this falſe fained Murtezalli, ſaying that hee was the chiefeſt diſciple that Mahomet had, curſing and chiding dayly three other diſciples that Mahomet had called Ouear, Vſiran, and Abebeck, and theſe three did ſlay the ſaide Murtezalli, for which cauſe and other differences of holy men and lawes, they haue had and haue with the Turkes and Tartars mortall warres. To intreat of their religion at large, being more or leſſe Mahomets lawe and the Alkaron, I ſhall not need at this preſent. Theſe perſons are comely and of good complexion, proude and of good courage, eſteeming themſelues to bee beſt of all nations, both for their religion and holineſſe, which is moſt erroneous, and alſo for all other their faſhions. They be martial, delighting in faire horſes and good harneſſe, ſoone angrie, craftie and hard people. Thus much I haue thought good to treate of this nation, and nowe I returne to diſcourſe the proceeding of the reſt of my voyage.

The 30. of May 1563.

My barke being ready at the Caſpian ſea as aforeſaide, hauing a faire winde, and committing our ſelues vnto God the 30. day of May 1563, we arriued at Aſtracan, hauing paſſed no leſſe dangers vpon the Sea in our returne, then wee ſuſtained in our going foorth, and remayning at the ſaid Aſtracan, vntill the tenth day of Iune, one hundred gunners being there admitted vnto mee for my ſafegard vp the riuer Volga, the fifteenth of Iuly I arriued at the Citie of Cazan, where the Captaine entertained me well, and ſo diſmiſſing mee, I was conducted from place to place vnto the Citie of Moſco, where I arriued the twentieth day of Auguſt 1563. in ſafetie, thankes bee to God, with all ſuch goods, merchandizes, and iewels, as I had prouided as well for the Emperours ſtocke and accompt, as alſo of yours, all which goods I was commaunded to bring into the Emperours treaſurie before it was opened, which I did, and deliuered thoſe parcels of wares which were for his Maieſties accompt, videlicet, precious ſtones, and wrought ſilkes of ſundry colours and ſortes, much to his highneſſe contentation, and the reſidue belonging to you, viz. Crasko, and rawe ſilkes, with other merchandizes, (as by accompt appeareth) were brought vnto your houſe, whereof part there remained, and the reſt was laden in your ſhippes lately returned.

Shortly after my comming to the Moſco, I came before the Emperours Maieſtie, and preſented vnto him the apparell giuen vnto me by the Sophie, whoſe highneſſe conferred with mee touching the princes affaires which he had committed to my charge: and my proceedings therein it pleaſed him ſo to accept, that they were much to his contentation, ſaying vnto mee, I haue perceiued your good ſeruice, for the which I doe thanke you, and will recompence you for the ſame, wiſhing that I would trauell againe in ſuch his other affaires, wherein hee was minded to employ mee: to whom I anſwered, that it was to my heartie reioycing that my ſeruice was ſo acceptable vnto his highneſſe, acknowledging all that I had done to bee but of duetie, humbly beſeeching his grace to continue his goodneſſe vnto your worſhips, and euen at that inſtant I humbly requeſired his Maieſtie to vouchſafe to graunt vnto you a newe priuiledge more ample then the firſt, which immediately was graunted, and ſo I departed. And afterwards hauing penned a briefe note howe I meant to haue the ſame priuiledges made, I repaired dayly to the Secretary for the perfecting of the ſame, and obtained it vnder his Maieſties broade ſeale, which at my departure from thence, I deliuered vnto the cuſtody of Thomas Glouer your Agent there. The copy whereof, and alſo of the other priuiledges graunted and giuen by the king of Hircan, I haue already deliuered vnto you. Soiourning all that winter at Moſco, and in the meane time hauing bargained with the Emperours Maieſtie, I ſent away your ſeruant Edward Clarke hither ouerland with aduiſe, and alſo made preparation for ſending againe into Perſia in meete time of the yeere. And committing the charge thereof vnto your ſeruants Thomas Alcocke, George Wrenne, and Richard Cheinie, the 28. of Iune laſt, I departed in poſte from the ſaid Moſco, and comming to Colmogro and ſo downe to the Sea ſide, I found your ſhips laden and ready to depart, where I embarked my ſelfe in your good ſhip called the Swallow, the 9. of Iuly, one thouſand fiue hundred ſixtie foure, and hauing paſſed the Seas with great and extreme dangers of loſſe of ſhippe, goods and life, the 28. day of September laſt (God be praiſed) we arriued here at London in ſafetie.

New priuiledges obtained hereafter following.

28. Septemb. 1564.

Thus knowing that the couragious and valiant ſouldier, which aduentureth both fame, member and life, to ſerue faithfully his ſoueraigne, eſteemeth not the perils and dangers paſſed (the victorie once obtained) neither for his guerdon deſireth any thing more, then that his ſeruice bee well taken of him for whom he enterpriſed it: So I perceiuing your fauourable beneuolence to me extended in accepting my trauels in good part to your contentations, do thinke my ſelfe therewith in great part recompenſed: beſeeching Almightie God ſo to proſper your aduentures, from time to time hereafter to be made for reaping the fruits of my trauels (at your great charges, and to my no ſmall dangers) that ye may plentifully gather in and enioy the ſame, to the illuſtrating of the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, the honour and commoditie of this her highneſſe Realme, and to the ample benefit and abundant enriching of you and your ſucceſſion, & poſteritie for euer.

A copie of the priuiledges giuen by Obdolowcan King of Hircania, to the company of Engliſh merchants Aduenturers for Ruſſia, Perſia, and Mare Caſpium, with all the lands and countreys adioyning to the ſame, obtained by M. Anthonie Ienkinſon at his being there about the affaires of the ſaid company, April 14. Anno 1563.

WE Obdolowcan by the mightie power of God maker of heauen and of earth, appointed and now raigning king of Shiruan and Hircan, of our meere motion and great goodnes, at the earneſt ſute and requeſt of our fauoured and welbeloued Anthonie Ienkinſon Ambaſſadour, haue giuen and graunted vnto the right worſhipfull Sir William Garret, ſir William Cheſter, ſir Thomas Lodge, M. Richard Mallarie, and M. Richard Chamberlaine, with all their company of merchants Aduenturers of the Citie of London in England, free libertie, ſafe conduct, and licence to come or ſende their factors in trade of merchandize into our countreys, and to buy and ſell with our merchants and others, either for ready money or barter, and to tary and abide in our countrey, ſo long as they will, and to goe away when they liſt, without impediment, let, or hinderance, either of body or goods.

And further our commaundement and pleaſure is, that the ſaid Engliſh merchants with their company, ſhall pay no maner of cuſtome for wares, which they or their factors ſhal buy or ſel within our dominions. And if at any time our cuſtomers or other officers, or any of them, doe diſturbe, miſuſe, force or conſtraine the ſaid Engliſh merchants or any of them, or their factors, to pay any maner of cuſtome or duetie for any wares they bring in or cary out of our dominions contrary to this our commandement, and the ſame be knowen vnto vs, then we will that the ſaide cuſtomers and officers ſhall looſe & be put out of their ſaid offices, with our further diſpleaſure, and the ſaide Engliſh merchants to haue reſtored all ſuch money & wares as our cuſtomers haue taken of them for our ſaid cuſtome. And whenſoeuer the ſaide Engliſh merchants or their factors ſhall bring any maner of wares meete for our treaſurie, then our treaſurer ſhall take the ſaid wares into our treaſurie, and ſhall giue vnto the ſaid Engliſh merchants, either ready money or raw ſilkes, to the value of their ſaide wares. And whereſoeuer this our letter of priuileges ſhall bee ſeene and read within our dominion, we ſtraightly will and command that it take effect, and be obeyed in al points.

Dated at our place of Iauat, the day and yere aboue written, and ſealed with our princely ſeale, and ſigned by our Secretarie in the 12. yeere of our raigne.

The ſecond voiage into Perſia made by Tho. Alcock, who was ſlaine there, and by George Wrenne, & Ric. Cheinie ſeruants to the worſhipfull companie of Moſcouie merchants in Anno 1563. written by the ſaid Richard Cheinie.

IT may pleaſe your worſhips to vnderſtand, that in the yere 1563. I was appointed by M. Antho. Ienkinſon, and M. Thomas Glouer your Agent in Ruſſia, to goe for Perſia in your worſhips affaires, one Thomas Alcock hauing the charge of the voyage committed to him, and I one of your worſhips ſeruants being ioyned with him in your buſines, hauing with vs, as they ſaid 1500. rubbles. And if it ſhall pleaſe you I cannot tell certainly what ſumme of money we had then of the Emperors: for I receiued none, nor diſburſed any of it in wares for the voyage. Alſo, God I take to record, I could not tell what ſtocke your worſhips had there, for the bookes were kept ſo priuily that a man could neuer ſee them. The 10. of May anno 1563. we departed from a towne called Yeraſlaue vpon our voyage toward Perſia. The 24. of Iuly we arriued at Aſtracan: and the ſecond of Auguſt wee departed from Aſtracan, and the 4. of the ſame moneth we came to the Caſpian ſea, and the 11. day of the ſaid moneth we arriued at our port in Media: and the 21. of the ſaid Auguſt wee arriued at Shammaki, whereas the king Obdolocan lay in the fielde. We were wel entertained of heathen people, for the thirde day after our arriuall at Shammaki wee were called before the king: we gaue him a preſent, and he entertained vs very well.

A rubble is a marke Engliſh.

At our comming to the Court wee were commaunded to come before the king, who ſate in his tent vpon the ground with his legs a croſſe, and all his dukes round about his tent, the ground being couered with carpets: wee were commaunded to ſit downe, the King appointing euery man his place to ſit. And the king commaunded the Emperour of Ruſſelands Merchants to riſe vp, and to giue vs the vpper hande. The 20. of October Thomas Alcock departed from Shammaki towards Casbin, leauing mee at Shammaki to recouer ſuch debts as the dukes of Shammaki ought for wares which they tooke of him at his going to Casbin. In the time I lay there I could recouer but little. And at Thomas Alcocks comming from Casbin, who arriued at a towne called Leuuacta, whereas the king Obdolocan lay, a day and a halfes iourney from the towne whereas I lay, I hearing of his arriuing there, departed from Shammaki, finding him there in ſafetie with all ſuch goods as he had with him. During his abode there for ſeuen dayes he made ſuite to the king for ſuch money as the dukes ought him. But the king was diſpleaſed for that the Emperour of Ruſſelands merchant had ſlaine a Boſerman at his going to Casbin. Thomas Alcocke ſeeing the king would ſhewe vs no fauour, and alſo hearing from Shammaki, that the Ruſſes ſent their goods to the ſea ſide, for that they feared that the king of Perſia ſhould haue knowledge of the death of the Boſerman, willed mee to depart to Shammaki with all ſuch goods as he had brought with him from Casbin, I leauing him at the Court.

Casbin.

Leuuacta.

A Boſerman is a Renegado.

The thirde day after mine arriuall at Shammaki, I had newes that Thomas Alcocke was ſlaine comming on his way towards me. Then the king Obdolocan vnderſtanding of his death, demaunded whether he had euer a brother. Some ſaid I was, ſome ſaide I was not his brother. When this fell out, your worſhips had no other ſeruant there but mee among thoſe heathen people. Who hauing ſuch a ſumme of goods lying vnder my handes, and ſeeing howe the Ruſſes ſent their goods with as much haſt as they might to the ſea ſide, and hauing but foure men to ſende our wares to the ſea ſide, I vſed ſuch diligence, that within two dayes after Thomas Alcocke was ſlaine, I ſent in company with the Ruſſes goods, all your worſhips goods with a Mariner, William Auguſt, and a Swethen, for that they might the ſafer arriue at the ſeaſide, being ſafely layd in. All which goods afterwards arriued in Ruſſeland in good condition, Maſter Glouer hauing the receipt of all things which I ſent then out of thoſe parties into Ruſſeland. Concerning my ſelfe, I remained after I had ſent the goods into Ruſſeland ſixe weekes in Shammaki, for the recouery of ſuch debts as were owing, and at laſt with much trouble recouered to the ſumme of fiftene hundreth rubbles or there about, which M. Glouer receiued of me at my comming to Moſco, and all ſuch goods as I brought with me out of Keſelbaſh, as by a note of my hand that hee hath ſhall appeare. Alſo he hauing the receipt of all ſuch goods as I ſent into Ruſſeland by theſe two aboue named, he then had that voyage in venter of his owne better then an hundreth rubbles, one Richard Iohnſon twentie rubles, one Thomas Pette fiftie rubles, one Euan Chermiſin a Tartar ſeuentie rubles. All theſe had their returne: M. Glouer allowed himſelfe God knoweth howe, I then being in Perſia in your worſhips affaires.

Thomas Alcocke ſlaine in the way betweene Leuuacta and Shammaki.

Keſelbaſh, or Ieſilbaſh.

And whereas he ſaith, the Emperour had but for his part a dobble, as farre as I can ſee, knowing what the wares coſt in thoſe partes, hee had treble. If they gaue him ſo much wares, all charges turned to your worſhips, as well of the Emperours as of their owne returnes. I haue ſowen the ſeede, and other men haue gathered the harueſt: I haue trauailed both by lande and by water full many a time with a ſorrowfull heart, aſwell for the ſafegarde of their goods as yours, how to frame all things to the beſt, and they haue reaped the fruites of my trauaile. But euer my prayer was to God, to deliuer mee out of thoſe miſeries which I ſuffered for your ſeruice among thoſe heathen people. Therefore knowing my duetie which I haue done, as a true ſeruant ought to do, I beſeech your worſhips (although I haue but ſmall recompence for my ſeruice,) yet let me haue no wrong, and God will proſper you the better.

Gillan in Perſia.

Alſo, to informe your worſhips of your Perſian voyage what I iudge: it is a voyage to bee followed. The king of Gillan, whereas yet you haue had no traffique, liueth al by marchandiſe: and it is neere Casbin, and not paſt ſix weekes trauaile from Ormus, whither all the ſpices be brought: and here, (I meane at Gillan) a trade may be eſtabliſhed: But your worſhips muſt ſend ſuch men as are no riotous liuers, nor drunkards. For if ſuch men goe, it wil be to your diſhonour and great hinderance, as appeared by experience the yeere 1565, when as Richard Iohnſon went to Perſia, whoſe iourney had bene better ſtayed then ſet forward. For whereas before wee had the name among thoſe heathen people to be ſuch marchants as they thought none like in all reſpects, his vicious liuing there hath made vs to be compted worſe then the Ruſſes.

Againe, if ſuch men trauaile in your affaires in ſuch a voyage, you ſhall neuer know what gaine is to be gotten. For how can ſuch men imploy themſelues to ſeeke the trade, that are inclined to ſuch vices? or howe can God proſper them in your affaires? But when a trade is eſtabliſhed by wiſe and diſcreet men, then wil it be for your worſhips to traffique there, and not before: for a voiage or market made euil at the firſt, is the occaſion that your worſhips ſhal neuer vnderſtand what gaine is to be gotten thereby hereafter.

The thirde voyage into Perſia, begun in the yeere 1565. by Richard Iohnſon, Alexander Kitchin, and Arthur Edwards.

A letter of Arthur Edwards to M. Thomas Nicols, Secretarie to the worſhipful company trading into Ruſſia and other the North parts, concerning the preparation of their voyage into Perſia.

MAſter Nicols, my bounden duetie remembred, with deſire of God for the preſeruation of you and yours: you ſhall vnderſtand that the ſecond of March I was ſent by M. Thomas Glouer (your Agent) vnto Ieraſlaue, appointed to receiue ſuch goods as ſhould come from Vologhda, as alſo ſuch kinde of wares as ſhould be bought and ſent from Moſco by your Agent, and M. Edward Clarke, thought meete for your voyage of Perſia. And further, I was to prouide for biſcuit, beere, and beefe, and other victuals, and things otherwayes needful according to aduiſe. Thus I remained here vntil the comming of your Agent, which was the 12, of May, who taried here three dayes, to ſee vs ſet forwards on our voyage, and then he departed towards Colmogro, hauing appointed (as chiefe for your voyage of Perſia) Richard Iohnſon. For my part I am willing, as alſo haue bene & ſhalbe content to ſubmit my ſelfe vnder him, whom the Agent ſhall appoint, although he were ſuch a one as you ſhould thinke in ſome reſpects vnmeete. Thirtie two packes of carſeis are all of that kinde of cloth that we ſhall haue with vs. The other 18. packs that ſhould haue gone, were ſold in Moſco. What other goods are ſhipped for our voyage, you ſhall vnderſtand by your Agents letters. Whereas Edward Clarke (being an honeſt man) was appointed Agent for Perſia, as one for thoſe parts more fit then any I do know here, God hath taken him vnto his mercie, who departed this preſent life the 16. of March laſt paſt. I wiſhed of God for my part he had liued: for my deſire was in his company to haue trauelled into Perſia. Your barke or craer made here for the riuer of Volga and the Caſpian ſea is very litle, of the burthen of 30. tunnes at the moſt. It is handſomly made after the Engliſh faſhion: but I thinke it too litle for your goods and prouiſion of victuals. If the worſhipful company would ſend hither a Shipwright, being ſkilfull to make one of the burden of 60. tunnes or more, drawing but ſixe foote water at the moſt when it is laden, I thinke it ſhould be profitable. For if your owne goods would not lade the ſame, here be Marchants that would bee glad and faine to giue great fraight to lade their goods with vs, whereby your charges would be much leſſened: And ſo it may happen, the wages of your men hired here may be ſaued, and your ſeruants and goods in farre greater aſſurance: for their boates here are dangerous to ſaile with and to paſſe the Caſpian ſea. There be Carpenters here that will doe well ynough hauing one to inſtruct them. Your wares bought here, and orders taken for thoſe that goe for your voyage of Perſia are yet vnknowen vnto me: wherefore I cannot (as I would at this preſent) write to you thereof. Yet, (as you do know) it was the Gouernors minde I ſhould be acquainted with greater affaires then theſe. Howbeit I doubt not but I ſhall be informed of them that are appointed, and all things ſhall be bought when they ſhall ſee time and haue more laiſure. Thus in haſt (as appeareth) I commit you and yours into the hands of almightie God; who preſerue you in perfect health with increaſe of worſhip. From Ieraſlaue the 15. of May 1565.

Another letter of the ſaid M. Arthur Edwards, written the 26. of April 1566. in Shamaki in Media, to the right worſhipful Sir Thomas Lodge Knight and Alderman: and in his abſence to M. Thomas Nicols, Secretarie to the right worſhipfull companie trading into Ruſſia, Perſia, and other the North and Eaſt partes, touching the ſucceſſe of Richard Iohnſon in the third voiage into Perſia.

WOrſhipfull Sir, my bounden duetie remembred, with heartie prayer vnto God for the preſeruation of you and yours in perfect health with increaſe of worſhip. It may pleaſe you that my laſt letter I ſent you was from Aſtracan the 26 of Iuly 1565. From whence Richard Iohnſon, my ſelfe, and Alexander Kitchin, departed as the 30 of the ſame. And by meanes of contrary windes, it was the 23 of Auguſt before we came to our deſired port named Nazauoe. There, after we had gotten your goods on land, with much labour and ſtrength of men, as alſo windleſſes deuiſed and made, we haled your barke ouer a barre of beach or peble ſtones into a ſmall Riuer, ſending your ſhips apparell with other things to an houſe hired in a village thereby. And as ſoone as we might get camels, being the fift of September we departed thence, and came to this towne of Shamaki the 11. of the ſame: and the 17. day folowing, we preſented vnto Abdollocan the king of this countrey, one timber of Sables, one tunne or neſt of ſiluer cups parſill gilt, three Morſes teeth, 4. Arſhines of ſkarlet, 3. pieces of karſeis, with 40. red foxes.

They departed from Aſtracan the 30. of Iuly 1565.

September.

Preſents to the king Abdollocan.

He receiued our preſents with giuing vs thanks for our good wils, demanding if M. Ienkinſon were in good health, and whether he would returne into theſe parts againe. He willed vs alſo himſelfe to ſit downe before him the diſtance of a quoits caſt from his tent, where he ſate with diuers of his counſaile and nobilitie, ſending vs from his table ſuch meate as was before him: And after certaine talke had with vs, he ſayd, if he might perceiue or know any maner of perſon to doe vs any wrong, he would puniſh them in example of others, whereby we ſhould liue in quietneſſe, and haue no cauſe to complaine, giuing vs a litle houſe for the time, vntill a better might be prouided in ſuch place as we ſhould thinke moſt meete, neuer willing vs to riſe or depart, vntill ſuch time as we of our ſelues thought it conuenient. At the taking of our leaue, hee willed vs to put our whole minds and requeſts in writing, that he might further vnderſtand our deſires, But while we were about to doe ſo, God tooke this good king our friend out of this preſent life the 2. of October paſt. The want of him hath bene the cauſe that as yet wee cannot receiue certaine debts. Howbeit, we doubt not but we ſhall recouer all ſuch ſummes of money as are owing vs for this voyage. As for Thomas Alcocks debts they are paſt hope of recouerie, which had not bene loſt if the king had liued. We truſt in the place of him, God will ſend as friendly a king towards vs: who by report (and as we be credibly informed,) ſhall bee his ſonne named the Murſay: who ſince the death of his father, at our being with him, promiſed to ſhew vs more friendſhip then euer we found: God grant the ſame.

A houſe giuen our men in Shamaki by the king.

The death of Abdollocan the 2. of October 1565.

Murſay the new king of Media.

Great troubles haue chanced in theſe parts. Of thoſe which were of the old kings counſell or bare any rule about him in theſe quarters, ſome are in priſon, ſome are pinched by the purſe, and other ſent for vnto the Shaugh. Theſe troubles haue partly bene the let that wares were not ſold as they might, to more profite. Your Agent Richard Iohnſon bought foure horſes, minding to haue ſent to Casbin Alexander Kitchin, whom God tooke to his mercy the 23. of October laſt: and before him departed Richard Dauis one of your Mariners, whoſe ſoules I truſt the Lord hath receiued to his mercy. We are now deſtitute of others to ſupply their roumes. Foure Mariners were few enough to ſaile your barke, whereof at this preſent we haue but one, whoſe name is William Smith, an honeſt yong man, and one that doeth good ſeruice here. For want and lacke of Mariners that ſhould know their labours, we all were like to be caſt away in a ſtorme. For all the broad ſide of our barke lay in the water, and we had much adoe to recouer it, but God of his mercy deliuered vs. Mariners here may doe you good ſeruice all the winter otherwayes: and merchants here will be gladder to ſhip their goods in vs giuing good fraight. One merchant at this preſent is content to pay 20. rubbles for twentie camels lading fraight to Aſtracan. Such barkes as muſt paſſe theſe ſeas, may not draw aboue fiue foote of water, becauſe that in many places are very ſhallow waters. Wee mind hereafter to make the Ruſſian boates more ſtrong, and they ſhall ſerue our turnes very well.

And whereas ſome in times paſt tooke great paines, trauell and care, and could not haue their deſire in the getting of the Shaughs letters or priuiledge: Now, I truſt (with Gods helpe) they may be obtained: which being had, will be beneficiall to the company, and great quietnes to thoſe that ſhal remaine here, although heretofore things haue chanced ill, as the like in other countries hath bene. But I doubt not, this priuiledge once gotten and obtained, we ſhall liue in quietneſſe and reſt, and ſhall ſhortly grow into a great trade for ſilkes both raw and wrought, with all kind of ſpices and drugs, and other commodities here, as to M. Anthonie Ienkinſon is well knowen, who (I doubt not) hath long agoe throughly aduertiſed the Companie thereof.

The murthering of Thomas Alcock.

The trueth of the ſlaughter of Thomas Alcock your ſeruant, is not certainly knowen. Some thinke it was by the meanes of a noble man, with whom your ſayd ſeruant was earneſt in demanding of your debts: upon whoſe words he was ſo offended, that he procured his death. But other doe thinke verily, that in riding from the Court without companie, falſe knaues lay in waite, thinking he had much about him, and ſo ſlew him. I doubt not though this miſfortune hath chanced, that things ſhall come well to paſſe, and that we ſhall be better beloued when we ſhall be more knowen.

Cozamomet a noble man that fauoured our nation.

Honeſt merchants are glad of our being here, and ſeeke to grow in acquaintance with vs, being glad to further vs in that they may, & haue ſpoken in our fauours to the chiefeſt of this Countrey: one being a noble man, with whom your Agent and I are entred into friendſhip, who is at this time in great fauour with the Shaugh. He hath here and in other places of theſe parts ſet a good ſtay in things ſince the kings death: he is well knowen to M. Ienkinſon, his name is Cozamomet. Alſo another Duke named Ameddin-beck is our great friend: And his ſiſter is the Shaughes wife. Theſe two haue promiſed your Agent by their lawe, not onely to procure to get the Shaughes priuiledge, but alſo that I ſhall haue the debts paied me of thoſe that went from hence to Caſbin, if we would ſend one with them. In conſideration whereof, I was vpon ſhort warning (for want of a better) appointed by your Agent M. Richard Iohnſon, all excuſes laied apart, preſently to put my ſelfe in readineſſe, and to depart in company with theſe noblemen: with charge, when God ſhould ſend me to Caſbin, to vſe my diſcretion with their aduiſe, for the recouering of your debts and priuiledge. I ſhall haue with mee one interpreter and two bought ſeruants: one of which partly vnderſtandeth this tongue, and may be put in truſt whatſoeuer ſhould become of me. I haue receiued 6. tumens in ready money, 200. ſhaughs is a tumen, reckoning euery ſhaugh for ſixe pence Ruſſe. I haue further receiued two timbers of Sables, one to be ſold, the other to bee giuen to Thomas the Shaugh: and haue order further to giue as I ſhall ſee good to thoſe that ſhall further my ſuite, and as occaſion ſerueth. And forasmuch as I am commanded to go, I ſhall willingly do my beſt, putting my truſt in God that he will ſend me well to ſpeed in this iourney.

For all kind of wares bought or ſold, you ſhal throughly be aduertiſed by your Agent Richard Iohnſon, whoſe reckonings or accompts at no hands I might ſee or be priuie vnto. Your karſeis were good and well ſorted, they are and will be ſold from 150. ſhaughs, to 160. the piece. Two hundred pieces were ſold vnder, that needed not: one 100. pieces at 146. and 147. the piece but more would haue bene giuen, if circumſpection had bene vſed. They were ſold to thoſe noble men aforeſayd, when as yet it was not knowen that I ſhould haue gone with them. They may ſtand vs much in ſtead, as they haue promiſed vs their good wils in that they may doe. Here is at this time bought for England, 11. packes of rawe ſilke, 25. and 26. batmans being in euery packe: The batman being 7. pound, which may be 6. pound and a halfe of Engliſh waight, being bought here from 66. to 70. ſhaughes the batman. It is fine and good, litle courſe at this time was to be had. And where courſe ſilke might be had being at Groſin, we could not ſend thither: for that time was neglected at the firſt. When wee ſhall haue lidgers here to remaine in Sommer, we may buy it at the firſt hand of the countrey people that bring it to ſell hither, and to other places. I would to God the Companie could find the meanes to haue a vent to make ſales for the one halfe that we may buy here. The Companie may haue for 30. or 40. thouſand pounds yeerely.

What a batman is.

Varas a great mart for ſilke.

And as appeareth by your Agents wordes being at Varas, he and others ſawe there ſo great abundance, that by report of diuers, you may beſtow (if it were not for the Turkes) for a two hundred thouſand pounds: beſides ſilke of all colours died in graine, bound vp in pound waights, I thinke 15. of our ounces to their pound waight, and here ſold for 23. ſhaughs, at 6. d. the ſhaugh, may be 11. s. 6. pence.

Gilan 7. dayes ſailing from Aſtracan. Alom.

From Aſtracan in 7. or 8. dayes, wee may ſaile with our barke to a place named Gilan: the which place in time to come, (I thinke) ſhall ſerue our purpoſe beſt to goe vnto. Alom is there good cheape, being brought from thence hither to Shamaki, and ſold here for two biſts their batman, which may be 5. pence in our money: and ſo I haue bought to bee ſent home 223. batmans for example. And at Gilan there is rawe ſilke enough for the companies ſtocke. I beleeue, if any great ſtore of wares be ſent from you, that muſt be the place: & from thence a man may trauell in 4. dayes to Casbin, and there make quicke and better ſales, at which place your commodities are to be ſold. For there be the chiefe and beſt merchants, and diuers other cities round about, to wit, Teueris, Ardouil, and Caiſhan, being the heart of the countrey, where there is more ciuilitie and merchants are better vſed. Concerning this point I haue inquired of diuers merchants both Ruſſes and others that haue bene in thoſe parts, and found them all agreeing in one tale, and perceiue the ſame to be true, and that all kind of wares come from thence into theſe parts. And from Casbin to Orthus, is about 30, daies trauelling with camels. I haue written the prices of wares in my letter to the gouernour both for ſpices and ſome drugs which I do know.

Gilan 4. dayes iourney from Casbin.

From Casbin to Ormus a moneths trauel with camels.

Alſo you ſhall vnderſtand here is plentie of yew for bowſtaues. I cauſed three horſe loades to be bought vs for to know the trueth: but they were cut out of ſeaſon this moneth of April, the ſap being in them. Three moneths I neuer left ſpeaking to the Countrey men to bring ſome. Your Agent will ſend ſome home for example.

This day being the 26, of Aprill I departed towards Casbin: God giue me a good houre and well to ſpeed, with a merry heart in returning againe, as my hope is I ſhall. I haue written my mind to M. Glouer your Agent, what Ruſſian wares I thinke beſt to be bought for this Countrey, and to ſend ſome one hither that hath the Ruſſe tongue, for we haue need. And the companie ſhall do well hereafter in taking of ſeruants to be ſent hither, to ſee that they be ſuch as haue diſcretion, and be ſomething broken in the world, and ſeene in the trade of merchandiſe, and one (if they can get ſome ſuch) as can ſpeake the Portingall tongue, may do them as good ſeruice, as thoſe that ſhall be here two yeeres before him: for then we may buy a ſlaue that can ſpeake this language and the Portingal tongue alſo, which ſhall then interprete vnto vs in all your ſecret doings, not making the Ruſſes priuy: for they are ſory that we doe trade into theſe partes, for we are better beloued then they are: becauſe they are giuen to be drunkards, they are much hated of theſe people. It is to be wiſhed that none ſhould ſerue your worſhips in theſe parts that be giuen to that kind of vice. And that your chiefe Agent and Factor ſhould be able to rule and gouerne himſelfe, that no diſhoneſtie ſhould be imputed to him and vs. By his euill vſage he paied here 24. rubbles, being in this Countrey 4. tumens for a boy, that he was charged to haue conuaied away from a Teſicke one of this countrey men, who willed him to ſweare that he knew not where the boy was become, and he ſhould not pay it. If he were honeſt he might do your worſhips good ſeruice becauſe of his Ruſſian tongue.

The ſecret doings of the Moſcouie company.

Your London reds are not to be ſent hither, for they will not giue aboue 18. ſhaughes their arſhine. Here be reds of more orient colour, being Venice die. The people are giuen much to weare cloth: the common people ſpecially weare karſeis, and the merchants of more wealth weare broad cloth. You ſhall doe well to ſend fiue or ſixe broad clothes, ſome blackes, pukes, or other ſad colours, that may be affoorded at 20. ſhaughes the arſhine, and not aboue. It is here reported that King Philip hath giuen the Turkes a great ouerthrow at Malta, and taken 70. or 80. of his chiefe captains.

Orient reds of Venice die.

Thus wiſhing I had more time to write, I pray you to beare with this my ſcribled letter, and after you haue red it, that M. Nicols may haue a ſight thereof.

By your ſeruant to command,
Arthur Edwards.

A letter of M. Arthur Edwards, written the 8. of Auguſt 1566. from the towne of Shamaki in Media, to the right worſhipfull the Gouernours, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants, and generalitie of the companie of Ruſſia, &c. Shewing his acceſſe vnto the Emperour of Perſia, his conference with him, his obtaining of a priuiledge, with diuers other good obſeruations.

Conference & demands of the Shaugh.

All ſorts of cloth to be ſent, ſpecially Weſterne dozens died into ſkarlet.

Londō clothes much talked of in Perſia.

Much Venice cloth worne in Perſia.

RIght worſhipfull Sirs, my bounden dutie remembred, with moſt humble commendations and like requeſt to God for the preſeruation of your good healths, with the reſt of the companie, &c. It may pleaſe you to vnderſtand, that the laſt letter which I ſent you from hence was of the 26. of April of this preſent yeere by Richard Iohnſon at my departure towards Casbin: to which citie I came the 25. of May folowing, not ſlacking any day, houre, nor moment, to procure and make friends for the ſpeedie bringing me before the preſence of the Shaugh, being the 29. day of the ſame moneth brought before him, with whoſe maieſtie I was in talke (as I thinke) two houres. He willed me twiſe to come neerer him, demanding what were my requeſts: and hauing heard them, he promiſed me his gracious letters. Afterwards he called me twiſe againe to come neerer him, and talked with me of our Queenes maieſtie and Countrey, and what commodities we had, and what other commodities we deſired: and then of other countries adioyning to vs and their commodities, as alſo of king Philip, what ouerthrow he gaue the Turks at the ſiege of Malta. And how long we had traded into Ruſſeland and Moſcouia, and in what ſpace we might ſaile out of England into Ruſſeland, & how many weekes trauell it is from Colmogro to Aſtracan: and then came to diſcourſe of Ruſſeland, and what townes the Emperour had wonne, declaring vnto me himſelfe moſt of our commodities. In the end he willed that your worſhips ſhould ſend him of all ſorts of clothes, but of one eſpecially which maidens do make (as he ſayd:) He named it Karengi, I thinke it is Weſterne dozens, died into ſcarlets. Time will not permit mee to write at large the conference which I had with his maieſty. It was ſtrange to his people (knowing our religion) to ſee me ſo long in talke with him, willing his Secretarie before mee to write what he was deſirous of: to wit, of London clothes, three or foure of all ſorts for example, being well ſhorne and dreſt. Violets in graine and fine reds be moſt worne, but other good colours will away, when they ſhall ſee them. I wore a garment of London ruſſet, being much eſteemed. You ſhall doe well to ſend ſuch ſorts as be liuely to the ſight, and ſome blacks for womens garments, with ſome Orenge colours and tawneis. Here is much broad cloth worne. They talke much of London clothes, and they that know the wearing, are deſirous of them before the cloth of the womens making, for they find it nothing durable. For when it commeth to weare on the threed, it renteth like paper. Here is much Venice cloth worne, being crompliſted a yard and a halfe broad, and ſold here from 24. to 30. ſhaughes their arſhine, being longer by two inches then the Ruſſe arſhine is. I wiſh alſo that you ſend ſome good chamlets & veluets died in graine, with purple colours & fine reds: becauſe theſe are moſt worne. Alſo ſome blacks with other colours: ſome cloth of gold, tiſſue & botky, ſome veluets wrought with gold, with ſattins and damaſkes, moſt purple, and reds of all ſorts. You may not forget to ſend ſome Weſtern karſeis, to wit, dozens, which be thicked well, and cloſe ſhut in the weauing, being died into fine reds, and ſome ſkarlets: for I thinke there is no ſuch cloth for their caps.

The ſecond admiſſion to the Shaughs preſence, the 29. of Iune 1566. at which time he receiued the priuiledge.

Your worſhips ſhall vnderſtand, that after my firſt departure from the preſence of the Prince, I neglected no time in daily attendance on them, who had my priuiledge in writing, that I might haue it in readineſſe at ſuch time as I ſhould againe bee called before the preſence of the Shaugh, which was the 29. of Iune laſt. I was in apparell that he gaue vnto me, with other garments to mine interpreter, and one of your ſeruants, and then I receiued your letters or priuiledge, according to my deſire, ſealed and firmed with the Shaughs owne hand. Prayſed bee God who hath wrought with me, and for me, in all my doings.

The 29. of Iune is one of their chiefe feſtiuall daies, ſo that all his nobilitie was there preſent, with two Ambaſſadors in companie with his maieſtie, who ſayd vnto me that if my letters were not to my mind, in time to come they ſhould be mended. Whereupon I made my reuerence, and gaue his highneſſe moſt humble and heartie thanks, ſaying, that with as much ſpeed as might bee, our Queenes Maieſtie ſhould vnderſtand of his goodneſſe towardes her Merchants, which I thought would write their letters of requeſt vnto his Highnes, in ſuch forme & order as by them ſhould be thought meete and requiſite for their good aſſurance in the trade of merchandizes: who replied with theſe wordes; when wee ſhall ſee their reaſonable requeſts, we will ſhew them our farther good will, and ſo I departed.

The Shaughs promiſe to increaſe the priuiledge.

Since the receiuing of the Shaughs letters, I haue eaten in company of good Dukes and others, who before would not come neere me. And euery day ſome would come to my Shop, and eate and drinke with me out of mine owne diſh. Likewiſe in riding from Casbin hither, on the way when I ſate downe to dinner, they would come and eate with mee vnbidden, when I wiſhed them further off: for I ſpared them that, which gladly I would haue eaten my ſelfe. I doubt not but we ſhall liue here from henceforth in quietnes: for now in all places where I come, I am friendly vſed with the beſt.

I was asked by the Shaugh if you were able to bring him yeerly one hundred thouſand pieces of kerſies, and clothes. And I anſwered him, ſaying, your worſhips were able to furniſh his countrey with two hundred thouſand. Whereat his Highneſſe reioyced: for the Turkes Ambaſſador the laſt yere, as diuers haue told me, did put the Shaugh in deſpaire, ſaying, that the Turke would not permit any cloth to be brought into his countrey.

There is a citie in Syria named Aleppo, wherein continually are many Venetians dwelling, beſides other that come yeerely and there buy wools, gals, tallow, ſaffron, ſkins, cotton wooll, and other wares, and great ſtore of ſpices. Alſo the Armenians yeerly receiue at the Venetians hands, karſies in barter for rawe ſilks, giuing ſometimes 60. pieces of karſies for 70. batmans of ſilke of this countrey, and 40. pieces for Grofin ſilke. And karſies ſold commonly for ready money in Aleppo, at 11. and 12. duckets the piece, (the ducket being here worth 12. ſhillings) may coſt the firſt peny 132. and 144. Shaughs a karſie. By report it is one moneths trauel from this towne of Shamaky to Aleppo, and from thence to Tripolis, ſix dayes iourney: and from Tripoils to Venice by water, a moneth or fiue weekes ſailing. As I learne, from hence to Venice may eaſily be trauelled in leſſe then three moneths. Therefore I wiſh your worſhips to procure ſome truſtie and aſſured friend there, to whom from hence letters may be ſent. For I can haue them here to put in ſuerties to deliuer my letters, and to bring anſwers. If I had any other here with me, I would nothing haue doubted to haue brought you the Shaughs letters that way.

Aleppo a citie of great trade.

Armenians barter with the Venetians.

The diſtance from Shamaky to Aleppo.

The Armenians and other are deſirous to barter with vs, giuing ſilke for karſies, and alſo will ſerue vs of all kind of ſpices, we giuing them ſufficient warning to fetch it in the Indies, and will deliuer it vs in Shamaky at theſe prizes.

Armenians and other, deſirous to barter ſilke and ſpices for karſies.

Pepper this townes batman for 18. Shaughs, euery Shaugh is ſixepence.

Maces large for 40. Shaughs, and 45. the batman.

Cloues for 40. Shaughs the batman.

Nutmegs for 16. and 18. Shaughs the batman.

Sinamom for 40. Shaughs the batman. I doubt not but there will be profite and good done in ſpices, with drugs and other like in time.

From Casbin to Ormus is ſix weeks trauel, and from hence to Casbin is 16. dayes with camels laden: but if one trauell with a good Mule vnladen, it may be gone in ſeuen or eight dayes. And I thinke to Ormus and other places, may be trauelled in like order and proportion, with cattel vnladen. But here in all places as men trauel, they muſt carie their owne prouiſion on horſes, which they are to buy, and thus they trauell but a footepaſe.

The Shaugh himſelfe is deſirous to bargaine with you, who will giue money, ſilke, and other wares as we will, and take our wares as we may afford them, willing me himſelfe to bring ſuch wares as we might gaine by him. The Armenians by report, and as I perceiue, bring from Aleppo yeerely, foure, fiue, and ſix thouſand pieces of karſies and clothes, beſides thoſe which other men bring. If your Worſhips might procure and find vent or ſales for rawe ſilke, and ſilke died in graine, beſides other ſilkes wrought and made here, by which, profite may be made: then you might ſend a great ſubſtance of wares hither. But I feare you ſhall be hindered by the Venetians if they may: for I know it will grieue them that you doe trade into theſe partes: for in ſhort time it ſhall cleane alter their trade, and hinder the ſales of their clothes in Aleppo and other places adioyning. You ſhall vnderſtand that 60. batmans of ſilke is a Mules lading: and as it is reported, one village of the Armenians yeerly carieth 400. and 500. Mules lading of ſilke to Aleppo, and bringeth thence 800. or a thouſand Mules laden with karſies & Venice clothes. And 18.

The Shaugh deſirous to bargaine for our commodities.

2000. pieces of karſies to be ſent into Perſia.

pieces of karſies are a Mules lading. But I wiſh you not to ſend aboue 2000. pieces of karſies, although I haue bene willed to write for more . If I might haue had any vnderſtanding what your Worſhips had written for in your letters ſent this yeere, I ſhould in this my letter haue bene better able to haue anſwered you. They which be now in Aſtracan, might haue written ſome thing vnto me hither, if it had pleaſed them, or elſe haue ſent me ſuch letters of mine, as I hope ſome of my friends haue written to me: for here are arriued eight weekes paſt, two boates with wares and Ruſſes, by whom they might haue written, had it bene but 3. or 4. lines. They promiſed the Ruſſes to write, but promiſe was not kept. I would be ſory that any boat ſhould depart out of theſe partes, and not write vnto them, waying how all things ſtand. I heare they haue bought a boat, which coſt 40. rubbles, and ſhipped certaine wares to come hither. God ſend them in ſafetie, I do tarie their comming, or els I had thought to haue come to Aſtracan in thoſe boates which departed hence lately.

He departed from Casbin the 15. of July.

Rich. Iohnſons great negligence.

Cozomomet was Arthur Edwards friend to the Shaugh.

Victuals and all things deare at Casbin.

The fifteenth of July laſt, I departed from Casbin, and came to this towne the 29. of ẏ ſame, And the fourth of Auguſt I found meanes to arreſt the falſeſt knaue in this countrey, to wit, the Cuſtomer for 22. tumens, and 100. ſhaughs, (200. ſhaughs is a tumen.) I haue cauſed him to put in ſuerties for his foorthcomming at all times, what ende I ſhall haue with him, God knoweth, the debt will be recouered, but not yet, for he muſt pay the Shaugh 1000. rubbles. Theſe partes as yet are in no ſtay for lacke of a Gouernour or head to rule , which I thinke ſhall bee the Murſey. Within 5. or 6. dayes we ſhall know, for it is time, becauſe men are in feare to trauell for being robbed. If there were a prince placed, I ſhould ſoone get in your debts, for they dare not diſobey the Shaughs letters or priuiledge: wherein he hath not onely written that our debts ſhall be paied, but alſo that we ſhall be taken heed to, ſo as we need not to doubt (God willing) in time to come, to be here as wel vſed as we are in Ruſſeland. The bils of debts that Rich. Iohnſon left with me, had neither the parties name nor ſumme of mony in two of them, and in other bils but his own name. If I had not vſed diſcretion in cauſing to be written in our priuiledge, that ſuch debtes as are owing, ſhould be paied any of vs in the abſence of the other, ſome men would not haue paied one penie, but onely to Richard Iohnſon, who hath written but his owne name onely in the bils. I receiued in Casbin of Forackan in part of 29. tumens, 300. ſhaughs in money: the reſt he will deliuer me here in ſilke, and this is all that I haue receiued to this day. And as for Hawrambecks twelue tumens, I make accompt, that if I could ride to ſpeake with him, I ſhould be paid in money and wares. Touching Ackons money, by meanes of Duke Ameddinbeck, who firſt owed the debt, becauſe they meant not to pay a penie, he did rather ſeeke to hinder my ſute then to further mee, but I found out a preſent remedie: for God ſent me friends that were alwayes about the Shaugh, and daily put on his apparell, who opened all my ſute, and brought mee to the preſence of the Shaugh before that Cozomomet ſawe the Shaughs eyes . But Cozomomet in the end was my friend: for he was ſent for, and declared vnto the Shaugh what good merchants we were, vſing trueth in all our doings, and how we were in great fauour with the Emperour of Ruſſia, and what good commodities wee might bring into his Countrey, with other talke. And daily he was ſent for to the Shaugh about the affaires in thoſe partes, for no man was able to aduiſe the Shaugh of the ſtate and affaires of thoſe Countreys ſo much as hee was. He owed your Worſhips ſeuen tumens and 48. ſhaughs, which was not all this time to be gotten at his hands: for hee was at great charges in riding to Casbin, and giuing great gifts ſince his comming, which he twiſe declared vnto me. I feeling his griefe became Phyſicion to eaſe his paine, and forgaue him his debt aboueſayd, in recompence of ten pieces of karſies, that were promiſed him by Richard Iohnſon and me, to giue him at the comming of our goods, in conſideration that he ſhould with ſpeed doe what lay in him, to diſpatch me away: for I perceiue hee procured another that did helpe me in my ſute to delay me of, till time he had his purpoſe. I neuer was in quiet, till I had the Princes priuiledge, and had got mee out of Casbin: for victuals, and all other things are very deare there, becauſe they are brought thither from farre off. As for all other ſmal debts (which may be about 7. tumens) when our Merchants are come hither, we ſhall ſeeke to get them in as we may. I wiſh your Worſhips to ſend ſome bullion to bee coyned here, it will pleaſe the prince there, and be profitable to you. Silke is better cheape by two or three ſhaughs the batman, then it was the laſt yeere. You ſhall vnderſtand that I haue written two letters of all my proceedings, which I ſent from Casbin long ſince: to wit, the 24. and 29. of Iune laſt, by one of your ſeruants to Gilan, there to take ſhip and to goe to Aſtracan, and to deliuer the ſame vnto your Factors, which might haue bene to their quietnes and mine, long agoe. But I am right ſorie to heare ſince my comming hither, that he hath plaied the loitering merchant in Gilan, not going in thoſe boats that went firſt, but taried for the laſt boats. But I will teach him, to the example of other, how he ſhall make haſte hereafter in ſuch affaires. The karſies which you ſent laſt, being bought of M. Quarles, were good and full lengths and well ſorted. The Princes Ambaſſador of Gilan was in Casbin, at my being there. I hope in God, if I remaine here, and may goe to Gilan, to obtaine for your worſhips the like priuiledge at the kings hand there alſo. For I haue ſomthing moued the matter, being put in ſuch comfort, that I doubt not the getting thereof with ſmall charges, which I had done at this time if I had had other here with me to put in truſt: for from Casbin to Gilan is but 5. dayes riding, which Countrey may be profitable to your Worſhips. There is in that Prouince good ſtore of ſilke, better cheape, & better in goodneſſe then this countrey ſilke is. Alſo great ſtore of Alom, being there ſold this townes batman, for one biſt and a halfe. I haue made reckoning, al charges borne from hence to Colmogro, & from thence fraight into England at three pounds the tunne, al charges accounted, will not ſtand you in aboue 18. and 20. ſhillings the hundreth. You haue yeerly by report two or three hundred tunnes lading. Other commodities there for England I heare not of. As for gals here to bee bought, there is no profit to be done by them. They be brought from Aleppo, and ſold here not vnder 3. or 4. ſhaughs their batman, being ſix pounds Engliſh waight. Graine that you die ſcarlet withall is worth the batman ready mony, 200. ſhaughs, reckoning the ſhaugh for 6. pence Ruſſe, it may be 6. rubbles their batman. Your worſhips may ſend ſome portion of mony, if you may buy, as I thinke you may, for 12. and 13. s. a pound the berries, ſo you ſhall gaine both in the price and waight. If one Engliſhman more had bene here with me, to whom I might haue deliuered our bils of debts and other things, whatſoeuer ſhould haue chanced of me, I would then haue become ſeruant to mine Interpreter, and ſo haue gone to Ormus and Aleppo, which both ioyne on the borders of this countrey, being the chiefe Mart townes, whereunto from all places merchants reſort. And thus would I haue ſpent 4. or 5. months in trauelling for further knowledge of things for to haue certified your worſhips of. I hope in God to vſe things in ſuch order, that yeerly you ſhall haue returne of your goods from hence, as you haue forth of Ruſſeland, and in thoſe ſhips. For if we may, as I doubt not with diligence, prouide to make ſales in time, and with ſpeed receiue ſilke at the Shaughs hand, and other mens, that it may be ſent from hence to be in Aſtracan at the beginning of Aprill, from whence it may be ſent to Colmogro in three moneths and leſſe, and there to be ready with the reſt of your goods by the end of Iune for your ſhips to receiue, that will be time inough. This I doubt not to bring to paſſe within a yeere or two, when we are throughly ſetled in theſe parts, and better knowen. Moreouer you ſhall vnderſtand, that at my laſt being in the preſence of the Shaugh, it was ſayd to mee that M. Anthonie Ienkinſon did proffer to take all the rawe ſilke in thoſe parties, deliuering cloth and other commodities for the ſame. I aſſure you there is in thoſe parts to be had three or foure thouſand horſes lading, euery horſe load being 50. or 60. batmans, beſide ſilke of Groſin. Great abundance of ſilke at times is ſent out of theſe parts, to wit, 4. or 5. hundred horſe lodes at a time by the Turkes, who bring great ſtore of ſiluer to be coined, to wit, Dollars at ten ſhaughs the piece. The Hungarie Ducket is at 12. ſhaughs. And hauing money in readines at the time of the yeere, they buy ſilke the better cheape, when the countrey men bring it firſt to be ſold. If your worſhips may bargaine with the Venetians to take ſilke at your hands, or otherwiſe deale with them, I doe not miſtruſt but to haue at the Shaughs hand ſixe batmans of ſilke for two pieces and a halfe of karſies. Your good aduiſe herein, and in other matters, I truſt you will write with conuenient ſpeed. Maſter Anthonie Ienkinſon hath deſerued great commendation at all your worſhips hands: for the good report of his well and wiſe doings in thoſe parts, was oftentimes a comfort to me to heare thereof, and ſome good helpe to me in my proceedings. To this day I neuer heard from any of our merchants. God graunt me in health to ſee your worſhips, for I haue had a carefull trauell, with many a ſorowfull day and vnquiet ſleepes. Neither had I the company of one Engliſh perſon, to whom ſometimes I might haue eaſed my penſiue heart, as God well knoweth, who hath deliuered me from mine enemies. Thus almightie God graunt you in health and wealth long to liue.

M. Anthonie Ienkinſons offer to the Perſian.

M. Anthonie Ienkinſon commended.

Your humble ſeruant at commandement during life, Arthur Edwards.

Another letter of Arthur Edwards written in Aſtracan the 16. of Iune, 1567. at his returne in his firſt voiage out of Perſia, to the right worſhipfull Companie trading into Ruſſia, Perſia, and other the North and Northeaſt partes.

It may pleaſe your Worſhips that herein I haue written not onely certaine articles of your priuiledge, but alſo the Gouernours names, with the Conſuls, Aſſiſtants and generalitie. Alſo ſuch commodities as the Prince or Emperour of the Countrey hath written in one of his letters directed to your Worſhips to be ſent him, with other notes which I thought good to be remem-bred, as may appeare hereafter following. Your priuiledge is written, graunted, and giuen in the names of theſe ſixe perſons following: to wit, ſir William Garrard, ſir William Cheſter, gouernours, ſir Thomas Lodge, maſter Anthony Ienkinſon, maſter Thomas Nicols and Arthur Edwards.

1 Firſt, it is granted that you ſhall pay no maner of cuſtomes or tols, any kinde of wayes, now, nor in time comming, vnto his heires after him. And that all Engliſh merchants, ſuch as you ſhall appoint now and hereafter, ſhall and may paſſe and repaſſe into all places of his dominions and other countries adioining in the trade of merchandize, to buy and ſell all maner of commodities, with all maner of perſons.

2 Item, that in all places where any of our merchants ſhall haue their reſort, or abiding, his chiefe Gouernours, Rulers and Iuſtices ſhall take heed vnto vs, being our aide & defence againſt all euil perſons, puniſhing thoſe that ſhall do vs any wrong.

3 Item, that for all ſuch debts as ſhall be owing by any maner of perſon, iuſtice ſhal be done on the partie, and we paid at the day.

4 Item, that no maner of perſons of whatſoeuer eſtate or degree they be of, ſhall be ſo hardie as to take any kind of wares, or any gifts, without any leaue and good will.

5 Item, if by chance medley any of our merchants or ſeruants, as God forbid, ſhould kill any of his ſubiects, that no part of your goods ſhall be touched or medled withall, neither any partie but the offendour, and true iuſtice to bee miniſtred, and being any of vs, not to ſuffer without the Princes knowledge and aduiſe.

6 Item, that all ſuch debts as are now owing, or hereafter ſhall be, are to be paied vnto any of vs, in the abſence of the other, be the partie dead or aliue.

7 Item, that no perſon returne any kind of wares backe againe, being once bought or ſold.

8 Item, that when God ſhall ſend your goods to ſhore, preſently his people ſhall helpe vs on land with them.

Theſe articles before written, I truſt in God wil content your minds, vntill your farther letters be hitherto written vnto the Prince, who I am aſſured will graunt your farther reaſonable requeſts, which his maieſtie hath promiſed. For I moued the queſtion, declaring vnto him that I thought your Worſhips would write your letters of requeſts, to craue his farther good will, as ſhould be thought meet for your better aſſurance in the trade of merchandize: you will hardly beleeue what long and gracious talke he had with mee, which I aſſure you continued two houres, which was ſtrange vnto the people & other merchant ſtrangers. For betwixt euery queſtion that his maieſtie moued, when I had anſwered him, hee would talke with his Nobles and other his ſeruants, hauing ſome knowledge of our Weſterne parts & commodities, and then againe would demaund other queſtions. He cauſed his Secretarie to write the articles before named, in all of his foure letters giuen me (whereof two as I required, are in the Turkiſh tongue to be ſent you.) On the backe ſide of one, hee hath written what wares his Maieſtie would haue you to ſend him. He held me one houre within night before I departed from him.

Theſe bee the names of the wares or commodities which on the backe ſide of one of his letters the Shaugh hath written to you to be ſent him.

First, ſome cloth of Gold, with cloth of Tiſſue, and cloth of Bocky, as Veluets wrought with gold.

Item, good veluets, to wit, crimoſins, purples, reds, greenes and blackes. Theſe colours his maieſtie requireth, for they are moſt worne. And though there be ſome of theſe wares made in his citie of Caſſan, yet nothing like in goodnes, to thoſe that you may procure for him. Small profite I thinke will be in theſe wares: yet for diuers conſiderations, as alſo to ſatiſfie the Princes mind, I wiſh you to ſend ſome, and thoſe that be eſpeciall good.

Item, good damaſks and ſattins of all ſortes, with an hundred pieces of good chamlets, which are worth here 80. ſhaughs the piece, at ſixe pence the ſhaugh, and thoſe ſilkes to bee of thoſe colours aboue written, to wit, crimoſins, purples, reds, greenes, blackes, with ſome light watchet colours.

Item, three or foure complete harneſſes that wil abide the ſhot of a handgun with 10. or 12. targets of ſteele, being good.

Item, ten or twelue good ſhirts of male being very good or elſe none, that may abide the ſhot of an arrow, and two buffe ierkins.

Item, ten or twelue pieces of Weſterne karſies, being thicked well and cloſe ſhut in the weauing, and died into ſcarlets and fine reds. I thinke there will be no ſuch cloth for noblemens caps.

The prince named them *karangies,ſaying, that maidens did make them, & is deſirous of them.

* By the word Karangies, I thinke they meane karſies.

Item,ſix pieces of fine Holland cloth for the Prince, with ſome other for noblemen,of a lower price.

Item,twentie handguns being good,ſome of them with fire locks,and alſo ſix good bags,with locks to trauel withall.

Item 100.bruſhes for garments (none made of ſwines haire,) for gifts, and otherwiſe to be ſold.

Item,ſix ſtone bowes that ſhoot lead pellets.

Item,a mill to grind corne in the field as they goe,finely deuiſed: for Cozomomet willed me to write for one to be ſent,to giue the Prince.

Item,the Prince requireth of all ſortes and colours of London clothes.I wiſh you to ſend no leſſe then 40.or 50.for I know they will be ſold to profit, eſpecially ſuch cloth as may be affoorded for 20.ſhaughs the arſhine,which is longer by two of mine inches then Ruſſia arſhine is. Let there be fine ſkarlets,violets in graine, fine reds, blacks, browne blewes, foure or fiue of euery ſort,for the prince and other lords: the reſt of other colours liuely to the ſight,as London ruſſets, tawnies,lion colours,good liuely greenes,with other,as you ſhall thinke good: for the prince deſireth to ſee of all ſorts,which will be an occaſion that the Venetians and Turkes ſhall bee in leſſe eſtimation then they are: for they themſelues do feare,and ſecretly ſay the ſame. And truely the Princes ſubiects intend to enter into trade with vs for ſpices and other commodities that they were woont to ſell vnto the Venetians and Turkes.

Thus I commit you all to God,who ſend you health with increaſe of worſhip. Written in Aſtracan the 16.of Iune, 1567.

By your ſeruant during life to command,

Arthur Edwards.

There paſſe downe Volga euery Summer, 500. boats great & ſmal, from all the vpper parts of the riuer, whereof ſome be of 500. tunne. They go for Minerall ſalt and for Sturgeon.

The ſalt lieth in rocks (and is whitiſh red, and in fine ſand) as it were 30. miles from Aſtracan toward the Caſpian ſea. They dig it themſelues and pay nothing for it, but to the prince a peny a pood, viz. 40. pound waight.

Fiſhing for Sturgeon for 3. moneths.

The Sturgeon which they call Ocetera is taken fiftie miles on this ſide Aſtracan. Along the riuer the ſpace of 20. miles, they make their booties in plaine grounds, & fiſh for the ſpace of three moneths, viz. from the end of May till the end of Auguſt, and hauing ſalt they vſe to ſalt them.

The riuer is there 5. or 6. miles broad, but with ſome Iſlands.

The riuer below Yeraſlaue, where it is moſt narow, is a mile broad from ſide to ſide.

The riuer runneth vpon red clay, all woods of birch and oke on the riuer ſides, ſaue about the townes of the fiſhing places.

The deſcription of Roſe Iſland.

The ſnow here about the midſt of May is cleared, hauing bin two moneths in melting, then the ground is made dry within 14. dayes after, and then the graſſe is knee high within a moneth. Thē after September the froſt commeth in, the ſnow is a yard deepe vpon plaine ground. The Iſland hath Firre and Birch, and a faire freſh ſpring neere the houſe built there by the Engliſh.

The way diſcouered by water by vs Thomas Southam & Iohn Sparke, from the towne of Colmogro, by the Weſterne bottome of the Baie of S. Nicholas, vnto the citie of Nouogrod in Ruſſia, containing many particulars of the way, and diſtance of miles, as hereafter foloweth. Anno 1566.

WE departed from Colmogro about 10. of the clocke afore noone in a Lodia or Barke, which we hired to bring vs along the coaſt to a place called Soroka, & in the ſayd barke we hired 6. mariners, and a boy to conduct vs to the place beforerehearſed.

The Lodia or barke was of the burden of 25. tunnes or thereabout, wherewith we valed downe the riuer of Dwina, the winde being then calme, vnto a monaſterie called S. Michael where we were conſtrained to anker becauſe of a contrary wind which there met vs.

From Colmogro to this monaſterie are 50. verſts or miles of Ruſſia, at which place we taried till the 21. day in the morning, and then hauing the wind ſomewhat faire, we ſet ſaile and departed thence.

A verſt is but 3. quarters of an engliſh mile.

21 We departed from the monaſterie of S. Michael, hauing the wind ſomwhat faire, and arriued at Roſe Iſland, ouer and againſt the monaſterie of S. Nicholas, the 22. day at 2. of the clocke in the morning, which is 35. miles diſtant from the monaſterie of S. Michael. By reaſon of contrary wind and tide we were conſtrained to tary there all that day.

23 We departed from the monaſterie of S. Nicholas at 7. of the clocke in the euening, & came to an anker at the Beacons, & continued there vntil halfe an houre paſt 10. of the clocke, and then ſet from thence, the wind being South: our courſe was Weſt vntil 5. of the clock in the morning, when as we came to an anker againſt Newnox towne, where we continued vntil the 25. day.

At this towne Newnox Richard Chanceller in his firſt voyage, with his companie aſhipboard were relieued.

The ſayd towne of Newnox is from the monaſterie of S. Nicholas 35. miles.

25 We departed frō Newnox hauen at one of the clocke in the after noone, the wind at South and Southeaſt, and our courſe Northweſt and by Weſt.

The point of Tolſtick which is the headland before the entrance of Newnox hauen, and the headland of Seuſemski lie next Southeaſt and by South, Northweſt and by North. We came to an anker there this day at 4. of the clock in yͤ afternoone, being from Newnox hauen 15. miles, where we continued in harbour til the 27. day of the moneth, by reaſon of contrary winds.

27 We departed from Seuſemski in the morning at 5. of the clocke, the wind next at Eaſt and by North, and our courſe Northweſt and by Weſt.

The ſaid land of Seuſemski & the headland going into Owna riuer lieth Eaſt and by South, weſt and by North, and between them is 25. miles.

This day at Sunne ſet we came to an Iſland called Sogiſney paſſing betwixt it & the maine, with the wind at South and by Eaſt, our courſe was Weſt and by South, being 85. miles from Owna riuer.

Being paſt the ſaid Iſland 10. miles, the wind came contrary, whereupon we returned to the Iſland of Sogiſney, where we remained vntil the 29. day.

29 The 29. day we departed from Sogiſney aforeſayd, at 5. of the clocke in the afternoone, the wind at Eaſt northeaſt, & our courſe was Southweſt & by weſt, paſſing by an Iſland called Anger, being 30. miles from Sogiſney, and keeping on our courſe, we came by the headland of an Iſland called Abdon, being from the Iſland of Anger 15. miles, where we found many rocks: and if the great prouidence of God had not preſerued vs, wee had there periſhed, being fallen amongſt them in the night time, and our pilot none of the perfecteſt, which was contrary to his profeſſion as we found it.

But whoſoeuer will trauell that way muſt either keepe hard aboord the ſhore, for that there is a chanell which goeth along the coaſt within the rocks, or els giue the headland a birth of 6. miles at the leaſt, and ſo goe a ſeaboord all: for there are ledges of rocks that lie fiue miles from the headland.

We gaue the headland a birth of 3. miles, notwithſtanding there lay two rockes two miles to ſea boord of vs,ſo that we were incloſed with them,and ſate vpon the higheſt of them: but it pleaſed God to make it calme,and giue vs the day alſo,or els we had miſcaried.

30 We departed from the headland of the Iſland of Abdon,at 4.of the clocke in the morning, directing our courſe Weſt,and at 10.of the clocke before noone, we arriued at a monaſterie named Soloſky, which is 15. miles from Abdon.

At this monaſterie we continued vntill the 31.day of this moneth. We had here deliuered vs by the chiefe monkes of the monaſterie,their letter and houſe ſeale,and a ſeruant of theirs to conduct vs ſafely through the dangerous riuer of Owiga.

The people of all thoſe parts are wild,and ſpeake another kind of language,& are for the moſt part all tenants to the monaſterie.The effect of the letter was, that they ſhould be ready to helpe and aſſiſt vs in all dangerous places, and carie our boats and goods ouer land in places needfull, as in deed they did,as hereafter ſhall appeare.

Note,that at our being at the monaſterie,there was no Abbot for the place as then choſen: for 15.dayes before our arriual there,the Abbot was ſent for by the Emperour,and made Metropolitane of the realme,as he now is . The number of monkes belonging to the monaſterie are at the leaſt 200.

31 Wee departed from the monaſterie of Soloſky, as is aforeſayde, to a faire ſtone houſe of theirs,which is 5.miles from the monaſterie,lying from it South and by Weſt.

August.

1 We departed from the Stone houſe at 3.ofthe clocke in the morning:our courſe was Weſt for 60.verſts,and then paſſing betwixt diuers and ſundry rocks,with many ſmall Iſlands round about vs for the ſpace of 20.miles,keeping moſt commonly the ſame courſe ſtill, we then ſhaped a new courſe,and yet ſundry times ſhifting,but we alwayes kept the Southweſt, and neereſt of all South ſouthweſt,vntil we came within two miles of the entrance of the riuer Owiga,where we were to beare in,Weſt and by North.

The riuer Owiga.

From the riuer Owiga,to the Iſlands and rocks before mentioned,are 20.miles.

We arriued about 4.of the clocke in the after noone within the riuer of Owiga,at a place named Soroka,at which place we forſooke our barke or Lodia, & continued there in making prouiſion for ſmall boates to carie vs vp the riuer vntill the 3.day of the ſame.

3 We departed from Soroka at two of the clocke in the afternoone,with 3.boats and 12. men to rowe,and ſet the foreſaid boates vp the riuer of Owiga,which we hired.

We went this day 7.miles to a place called Oſtroue,where we lay all night,but in the way 4. miles from Soroka,at a place where the water falleth from the rocks, as if it came ſteepe downe from a mountain,we were conſtrained to take out our goods and wares out of the ſaid boats,and cauſed them to be caried a mile ouer land,and afterwards alſo had our boates in like ſort caried or drawen ouer land by force of men which there dwelled,being tenants to the monaſterie aforeſaid.

The fall of a riuer.

And when our boats were come to the place where our wares were laid,we lanched our boats and laded our wares againe,and went to the place before named,where we continued and remained that night.

We departed from Oſtroue in the morning before Sunne riſing, rowing and ſetting vp the riuer 5.miles, where we came to a place whereas we were againe conſtrained to take out our wares,and to carie them and our boats three miles ouer land, ſo that with rowing, drawing and ſetting,we went this day 7.miles more to a place called Sloboday,where we lay all night.

5 We departed from Sloboday in the morning at Sunne riſing,and at ſixe of the clocke in the afternoone,we came to a village called Paranda,which is from Sloboday 30.miles,where wee remained all that night.

6 We departed from Paranda at 6.of the clocke in the morning,and all that day what with ſetting and drawing our boats,we went but 11.miles,for we twiſe vnladed our wares,& drew our boats ouerland,in one place a mile & an halfe,in another place as it were the eight part of a mile, and ſo we came to a place called Voyets,where we taried all that night.

7 We departed from Voyets at 4.of the clocke in the morning,& ſo came to an Ozera or lake, called after the name of the riuer,& vnto a place called Quequenich,wee rowed all this day, and came thither by one of the clock in the afternoone,which is 25.miles from Voyets, and there we remained all night to hire men and boats to carie vs forward on our iourney.

Here departed backe from vs the ſeruant which we had at the Monaſterie, being ſent by the monkes to go thus far with vs. And after that he had hired the boats and taken the mens names that ſhould conduct vs,& giuen them charge to deliuer vs with all things in ſafetie, at a place being a litle towne called Pouenſa, then hee departed from vs without taking any reward for his paines,for ſo he was charged and commanded by the monkes.

8 We departed from Quequenich at ſunne riſing,& all that day rowed vpon the lake amongſt many Iſlands. The inhabitants doe there report that there are as many Iſlands in their lake, as there are dayes in the yeere. In the euening we came to a village named Tellekina, which is 60. miles from Quequenich.

A lake very ful of Iſlands.

9 We departed from Tellekina in the morning at 5. of the clocke, and ſo entring into a riuer, we went that day 13. miles. In one place we caried our boates and goods ouer land 3. miles. At euening we came to a place called Oreiche as maelay, where we lay all night.

10 Wee departed thence at 5. of the clocke in the morning, and ſo rowing, came to a place where the riuer ended, being 20. miles diſtant from the place where wee lay all night, at which place wee forſooke our boates and vnladed our wares, and ſent a man to the towne of Pouenſa, which was ſeuen mile off, for horſes to cary vs and our wares to the ſaid place. The horſes came, and we laden our goods, and at ſixe of the clocke in the afternoone wee arriued at the towne of Pouenſa, with all things in ſafetie.

This towne of Pouenſa ſtandeth within one mile of the famous lake or Ozera of Onega, which is 320. miles long, and in ſome places 70. miles ouer. But where it is narroweſt it is 25. miles ouer, being fed with many goodly riuers which fall into it. Hard aboord the ſhore within 6. miles, you ſhall haue 40. and 45. fathoms of depth.

The famous lake of Onega.

Here it is to bee noted that from this place of Pouenſa vnto the village of Soroka downe thoſe dangerous riuers which wee came through, at no time of the yeere can or may any man cary or tranſport any goods that come from Nouogrod, or the Narue, and ſuch other places: for in the Sommer it is impoſſible to cary downe any wares by reaſon of the great fals of water that doe deſcend from the rockes. Likewiſe in the Winter by reaſon of the great force and fall of waters which make ſo terrible raiſes, that in thoſe places it neuer freezeth, but all ſuch wares as come from Nouogrod to Pouenſa, are tranſported by land to a place called Some in the Winter, which Some ſtandeth on the ſea ſide, as doth Soroka. The ready way from Pouenſa by land to this place of Some, with the diſtance of miles I will ſhew hereafter.

12 We departed from Pouenſa at 9. of the clocke in the morning, with 2. ſmal boats which we hired to cary vs to a place called Toluo vpon the lake of Onega, being 50. miles from Pouenſa, where we arriued the 13. day in the morning, where wee bought a boate that caried vs and all our wares from thence to the Citie of Nouogrod.

14 We departed from Toluo at 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, and at the euening arriued at a certaine Iſland named Salaſalma, vpon the ſaid lake 7. miles from Toluo, and by reaſon of contrary windes we there taried vntill the 16. day of this moneth.

16 We departed from Salaſalma, at 8. of the clocke in the morning, and came to an Iſland the 17. day in the morning, named Vorronia, where wee continued by reaſon of contrary winds, vntill the 21. day of the ſaid moneth, and it is 60. miles from Salaſalma.

21 We departed from Vorronia Iſland two houres before day, and arriued at S. Clements Monaſterie at 2. of the clocke in the after noone, being from Vorronia 48. miles.

S. Clement his Monaſterie.

22 We departed from S. Clements Monaſterie at the breake of the day, hauing a faire wind all a long the lake: we ſailed without ſtriking of ſaile vntil two houres within night, and then entred into a riuer called Swire, at a Monaſterie called Voſneſſino Chriſto, fiue miles from the entrance of the riuer, where we taried al night. It is from S. Clements Monaſtery 160. miles: the ſtreame of that riuer went with vs.

23 Wee departed from Voſneſſino Chriſto before Sunne riſing, and haled downe the riuer ſometime ſailing, and ſometime rowing, ſo that this day wee went 90. miles and lay at night at a place called Vaſſian.

24 Wee departed from Vaſſian at the breake of the day, and came to a place called ‖ Selucax, where we lay all night, and is 10. miles from Vaſſian.

‖ Or, Sermaxe.

25 We departed from Selucaxe at 4. of the clocke in the morning, and entred vpon the Lake of Ladiskaie, the winde being calme al that day ſauing 3. houres, and then it was with vs, ſo that we ſailed and rowed that day 10. miles, along vpon the ſaid lake, and entred into the riuer of Volhuſki, which riuer hath his beginning 20. miles aboue Nouogrod, and runneth through the midſt of the Citie, and ſo falleth into this lake, which is farre longer then the lake of Onega, but it is not ſo broad. This lake falleth into the ſea that commeth from the Sound: where any veſſel or boat, hauing a good pilot, may goe through the Sound into England.

The riuer of Volhuski.

The lake of Ladiskai.

As ſoone as we were entred into the riuer, we came to a Monaſterie called S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

26 Wee departed from S. Nicholas Medued, at fiue of the clocke in the morning, rowing and drawing our boates all day, and came at night to another Monaſterie called Goſnopoli, which is 30. miles from S. Nicholas Medued, where we lay all that night.

The Monaſterie of Goſnopoli.

27 We departed from Goſnopoli at 6. of the clocke in the morning, and at euening came to a place called Moiſlaue, where we lay all night, being 46. miles from the Monaſterie of Goſnopoli.

28 We departed from Moiſlaue, and the ſaide day at night came to a place called Gruſſina, 35. miles from Moiſlaue where we lodged.

29 Wee departed from Gruſſina in the morning, and the ſame day at euening came to a place called Petroe Suetoe, where we lay all night, being 40. miles from Gruſſina.

The Citie of Nouogrod.

30 We departed from Petroe Suetoe in the morning, and at two of the clock in the afternoone we arriued at the Citie of Nouogrod, being twentie miles from Petroe Suetoe. Here we found William Rowlie Agent to the company, who was there ſtayed with all his company, and was not licenced to depart thence for the Moſco, by reaſon that the plague was then in the Citie of Nouogrod. Unto him we deliuered all the wares that wee brought from Colmogro, for by the way we ſold not a peny worth, the people of the countrey euery where be ſo miſerable.

The right way to bring and tranſport wares from Nouogrod to Roſe Iſland into S. Nicholas bay, where our Ships yeerely lade, with the diſtance of miles from place to place, is as followeth:

20 Miles from Nouogrod to Petroe Suetoe.
40 Miles from thence to Gruſina.
35 Miles from thence to Moiſlaue.
46 Miles from thence to the Monaſterie Goſnopoli.
15 Miles from thence to Ladega towne.
15 Miles from thence to Selunaz ouer the lake of Ladega, albeit there be many villages all along the lake.
180 Miles from Ladega towne vp the riuer of Swire, vnto the Monaſterie of Voſneſſino Chriſto, albeit there are many villages vpon the riuer: for within euery fiue or ſixe miles you ſhall haue villages or ſmall townes.
160 Miles from Voſneſſino Chriſto to S. Clements Monaſtery, albeit there be many villages all along the lake of Onega.
48 Miles from thence to Voronia.
67 Miles from thence to Toluo towne: and there are diuers villages al along the lake where the carriers may lie, and haue meate for man and horſe.
50 Miles from thence to Pouenſa, where Onega lake endeth.

The way from Pouenſa to Some towne is this:

30 Miles from Pouenſa to Maſtelina.
10 Miles from thence to Tellekina.
30 Miles from thence to Toluich.
35 Miles from thence to Carraich.
20 Miles from thence to Varnich.
10 Miles from thence to Oſtrouo.
15 Miles from thence to Lapina.
20 Miles from thence to Some it ſelfe.

Note, that from the Citie of Nouogrod vnto the towne of Some is 936. miles, and from the towne of Some vnto the Monaſterie of S. Nicholas or Roſe Iſland, ouer and againſt where our Ships do ride, is iuſt as many miles as is Soroka village from S. Nicholas, as the Ruſſes doe accompt it, as alſo we do iudge it, namely 325. miles. So that from Nouogrod to S. Nicholas road, is by our accompt 1261. miles or verſts.

Trauel by Sleds.

Furthermore it is to be noted that all ſuch wares as ſhall be bought at Nouogrod, and ſent to Some towne, muſt be ſent by ſled way in the Winter: for if any ware ſhould be ſent from Nouogrod by water in the ſpring of the yeere after the yce is gone, then muſt the ſaid wares remaine at Pouenſa towne al that Summer, by reaſon that in the Summer there is no way to goe from Pouenſa vnto Some towne.

At Pouenſa there are many warehouſes to be hired, ſo that if there were as much goods as ten ſhips could cary away, you might haue warehouſes to put it in: but if there ſhould remaine much ware all the Summer, to be caried in the Winter to Some towne, then horſes are not eaſily to be gotten at that place to cary it thither: ſo that your wares once bought at Nouogrod, you muſt haue cariers there to cary it to the towne of Some by Sleds, whereof you may there haue 2000. if you will, by the report of the Ruſſes.

2000. Sleds belonging to one towne.

For from Nouogrod yerely there go many Sleds in the Winter to fetche ſalt from Some, with carriers and emptie Sleds there to buy it, and to bring it to Nouogrod to ſell it in the market or other wiſe.

From Nouogrod vnto Some towne you may haue a pood of wares carried for eight pence or nine pence: but in any wiſe your wares muſt bee ſent from Nouogrod by the firſt of Ianuary, ſo that the wares may bee at Some by Candlemas, or ſoone after: for if your wares ſhould tary by the way vntill the 15. of February when the Sunne is of ſome power, then is it dangerous: for the heate of the Sunne in the day cauſeth the deepe lakes of Ladega, and ſpecially of Onega to cleaue: and if there ſhould come then a ſudden thaw, as oftentimes in that time of the yeere doeth, then doe theſe lakes open and breake, whereby many men are loſt, and both men and horſe drowned, although other riuers do remaine frozen a long time after.

A good caueat for ſeaſonable trauell.

In the towne of Some alſo there are many warehouſes, whereof we cannot be deſtitute for the repoſing of our wares, as alſo as many barkes as you wil to tranſport your wares from thence to S.Nicholas road, and that for three pence a poods caryage: ſo that from the Citie of Nouogrod vnto S.Nicholas road you may haue wares caried for two altines. The pood commeth vnto 23. altines the tunne.

Prouided alwayes, that you buy your wares there your ſelfe, and ſend it thence: for there is no hope that the natiues will bring their wares from Nouogrod to Some, in hope to ſell vnto vs, conſidering the great trade that they haue at the Narue, which is within 180. miles off them.

Nouogrod within 180. miles of the Narue.

Written by Thomas Southam a ſeruant to the company.

An Act for the corporation of Merchants aduenturers for the diſcouering of new trades, made in the eight yeere of Queene Elizabeth. Anno 1566.

WHereas diuers very good Subiects of this Realme of England in the latter ende of the reigne of the late right high and mightie prince our Soueraigne Lord king Edward the ſixt, at the gracious incouragement, and right good liking of the ſaid king, and by his Maieſties liberall example, did at their aduenture, and to their exceeding great charges, for the glory of God, the honor and increaſe of the reuenues of the Crowne, and the common vtilitie of the whole Realme of England, ſet forth three ſhips for the diſcouery by Sea, of Iſles, lands, territories, dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and by the Subiects of the ſayd late king not commonly by ſeas frequented: and after that Almightie God had called to his mercie the ſaid king, who died before the finiſhing and ſealing of his moſt ample and gracious letters of priuiledges promiſed to the ſaid Subiects, as wel in conſideration of the ſaid enterpriſe, as for diuers other reſpects it pleaſed our late ſoueraigne Q. Mary, at the humble ſuites of the ſame ſubiects, to graunt by her letters Patents vnder the great Seale of England, bearing date at Weſtminſter the 26. day of February, in the ſecond yeere of her raigne, for the conſiderations mentioned in the ſaid letters Patents, to the ſaide ſubiects being ſpecially named in the ſaide letters Patents, and to their ſucceſſors, that they by the name of Merchants aduenturers of England, for the diſcouerie of lands, territories, Iſles, dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, and not before their late aduenture or enterpriſe, by ſeas or Nauigations comonly frequented, ſhould be from thenceforth one body, and perpetual felowſhip and communaltie of themſelues, both in deed and in name, and that the ſame felowſhip and communaltie from thenceforth ſhould and might haue one or two gouernours, foure Conſuls, and 24. aſſiſtants, of the ſaid felowſhip and communaltie of Merchants aduenturers, and that they by the name of the Gouernour, Conſuls, aſſiſtants, felowſhip, and comminaltie of Merchants aduenturers, for the diſcouery of lands, territories, Iſles, dominions, and Seigniories vnknowen, by the ſeas and Nauigations, and not before their ſaid late aduenture or enterpriſe, by Seas frequented, ſhould or might be able in the lawe to implead and to bee impleaded, to anſwere and to be anſwered, to defend and to be defended, before whatſoeuer Iudge or Iuſtice temporall or ſpiritual, or other perſons whatſoeuer, in whatſoeuer court or courts, and in all actions, real, perſonal, and mixt, and in euery of them, and in all plaints of Nouel deſeiſon, and alſo in all plaints, ſutes, quarrels, affaires, buſineſſe, and demaunds whatſoeuer they be, touching and concerning the ſaid felowſhip and communaltie, and the affaires and buſineſſe of the ſame, only in as ample maner and forme, as any other corporation of this Realme might doe, giuing alſo, and granting vnto them by the ſaid letters Patents, diuers authorities, powers, iuriſdictions, preheminences, franchiſes, liberties and priuileges, as by the ſame letters Patents more at large will appeare. And among other things mentioned in the ſaid letters Patents, whereas one of the three ſhips, by the ſaid fellowſhip before that time ſet foorth for the voyage of diſcouery aforeſaid, named the Edward Bonauenture, had arriued within the Empire and dominion of the high and mightie Prince Lord Iohn Vaſiliwich, Emperour of all Ruſſia, Volodimersky, great duke of Muſky, &c. who receiued the Captaine and Merchants of the ſaide ſhippe very graciouſly, granting vnto them freely to traffique with his ſubiects in all kinde of merchandizes, with diuers other gracious priuiledges and liberties: therefore the ſaid late Queene by the ſame letters Patents, for her, her heires and ſucceſſors, did graunt that all the maine lands, Iſles, ports, hauens, creeks and riuers of the ſaid mighty Emperour of all Ruſſia, and great duke of Moſco, &c. and all and ſingular other lands, dominions, territories, Iſles, ports, hauens, creeks, riuers, armes of the ſeas, of al and euery other Emperour, king, prince, ruler, or gouerner whatſoeuer he or they be, before the ſaid late aduenture or enterpriſe not knowen, or by the aforeſaid merchants and ſubiects of the ſaid king and Queene, by the ſeas not commonly frequented, nor any part or parcell thereof, and lying Northwards, Northeaſtwards, or Northweſtwards, as in the ſaid letters patents is mentioned, ſhould not be viſited, frequented nor haunted by any the ſubiects of the ſaid late Queene, other then of the ſaid company and fellowſhip, and their ſucceſſors, without expreſſe licence, agreement, & conſent of the Gouerner, Conſuls, and Aſſiſtants of the ſaid felowſhip, and communaltie, or the more part of them, in maner & forme, as is expreſſed in the ſaide letters patents, vpon paine of forfeiture and loſſe aſwell of the ſhip and ſhips, with the appurtenances, as alſo of the goods, merchandizes, and things whatſoeuer they be, of thoſe the ſubiects of the ſaid late Queene not being of the ſaide felowſhip and communaltie, which ſhould attempt or preſume to ſaile to any of thoſe places, which then were, or after ſhould happen to be found and traffiqued vnto, the one halfe of the ſame forfeiture to be to the vſe of the ſaid late Queene, her heires & ſucceſſors, and the other halfe to be to the vſe of the ſaid felowſhip & communaltie, as by the ſame letters patents more plainly will appeare.

Since the making of which letters patens, the ſaid felowſhip haue, to their exceeding great coſtes, loſſes and expences, not onely by their trading into the ſaid dominions of the ſaide mightie prince of Ruſſia, &c. found out conuenient way to ſaile into the ſaide dominions: but alſo paſſing thorow the ſame, and ouer the Caſpian ſea, haue diſcouered very commodious trades into Armenia, Media, Hyrcania, Perſia, and other dominions in Aſia minor, hoping by Gods grace to diſcouer alſo the countrey of Cathaia, and other regions very cōuenient to be traded into by merchants of this realme, for the great benefite and commodities of the ſame.

This is meant by Alderman Bond the elder.

And foraſmuch as diuers ſubiects of this realme, vnderſtanding the premiſes, and perceiuing that now after the charge and trauel aforeſaid, diuers wares and merchandizes are brought by the ſaide fellowſhip into this Realme, out of the dominions already diſcouered, which bee within this realme of good eſtimation, minding for their peculiar gaine, vtterly to decay the trade of the ſayde fellowſhip, haue contrary to the tenor of the ſame letters patents, in great diſorder traded into the dominions of the ſaid mightie prince of Ruſſia, &c. to the great detriment of this common wealth: And for that the name by which the ſaide felowſhip is incorporated by the letters patents aforeſaid, is long, & conſiſteth of very many words: Therfore be it enacted by the Queenes moſt excellent Maieſtie, the Lords ſpiritual and temporal, & the commons in this preſent parliament aſſembled, and by authoritie of the ſame, that the ſaid felowſhip, company, ſociety & corporation made or created by the ſaid letters patents, ſhal at al time & times from henceforth be incorporated, named and called onely by the name of the fellowſhip of Engliſh merchants, for diſcouery of new trades, and by the ſame name for euer ſhall and may continue a perpetuall body incorporate in deede and name, and onely by the ſame name from henceforth, ſhall implead, and be impleaded, anſwere and be anſwered, defend and be defended, ſue and bee ſued, in whatſoeuer courts and places, and ſhall and may by the ſame name bee inabled to purchaſe, haue, holde, poſſeſſe, receiue, and enioy whatſoeuer manors, landes, tenements, rents, reuerſions, ſeruices, & hereditaments not exceeding a hundred marks yeerely, not being holden of the Queenes maieſtie, her heires, or ſucceſſors by knights ſeruice in Capite, and all goods, merchandizes, chattels, and other things whatſoeuer, and ſhall and may by the ſame name make and do all things as any other corporation may do, and alſo ſhall haue and enioy all and ſingular the liberties, priuileges, iuriſdictions, franchiſes, preheminences, powers, authorities, and things, and may doe and execute all other matters and things in the ſayd letters patents mentioned, or in any wiſe conteined. And that no part nor parcell of the maine lands, Iſles, ports, hauens, roades, creekes, riuers, armes of the ſeas of any Emperour, king, prince, ruler or gouernor whatſoeuer he or they be, before the ſaid firſt enterpriſe made by the merchants of the ſaide corporation, not knowen by the merchants and ſubiects of this Realme, or by them not commonly by ſeas frequented, and lying from the City of London Northwards, Northweſtwards, or Northeaſtwards, nor any part or parcel of the maine lands, dominions, iſles, ports, roades, hauens, creeks, armes of the Seas, that now be ſubiect to the ſaid high and mightie prince Lord Iohn Vaſiliwich, his heires or ſucceſſours, or to the Emperour, chiefe gouernour or ruler of the ſaid country of Ruſsia for the time being, his heires or ſucceſſors, nor the countries of Armenia maior or minor, Media, Hyrcania, Perſia, or the Caſpian ſea, nor any part of them ſhall be ſailed or traffiqued vnto, viſited, frequented, or haunted by any perſon being or that ſhall be a ſubiect or denizen

English merchants for diſcouery of new trades.

nizen of this realme, by themſelues, their factor or factors, or any other to their vſe or commoditie, by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, other then by the order, agreement, conſent, or ratification of the gouernour, Conſuls and aſſiſtants of the ſaide fellowſhip and comminaltie, or the more part of them, and their ſucceſſors for the time being: vpon paine that euery perſon and perſons offending in this behalfe, ſhall forfeit and looſe, Ipſo facto, euery ſuch ſhip and ſhips, with the appurtenances, and all ſuch goods, Merchandizes, and things whatſoeuer, as by any ſuch perſon or perſons ſhalbe by any wayes or meanes, directly or indirectly, prouided, caried, conducted, brought or exchanged, in, at, to, through or from any of the places prohibited, as is aforeſaide, contrary to the true intent of this ſtatute: the one moitie of all which forfeitures to bee to our ſaid ſoueraigne Lady the Queenes Maieſtie, her heires and ſucceſſors, and the other moitie thereof to the ſayde fellowſhip of Engliſh Merchants for diſcouery of newe trades, and their ſucceſſors, to be ſeized and taken wheresoeuer they may be found, by any perſon or perſons, to the vſe of our ſaid Soueraigne Lady, her heires and ſucceſſors, and of the ſaid fellowſhip of Engliſh merchants for diſcouery of newe trades, and of their ſucceſſors, or the ſame or the value thereof to bee demaunded or ſued for by the Queenes highneſſe, her heires and ſucceſſors, or by the ſaide fellowſhip of Engliſh Merchants for diſcouery of newe trades, or their ſucceſſors, or their atturney or atturneis, or by any perſon or perſons being of the ſame fellowſhip of Engliſh Merchants for diſcouery of newe trades, or their ſucceſſors in any court of Record, or in any other Court or courtes within this Realme, or els where, by Action of debt, action of detinue, bill, plaint, information, or otherwiſe: in which ſuite no eſſoine, protection, wager of lawe, or iniunction ſhall be allowed, for, or on the behalfe of the partie or parties defendant.

Prouided alwayes, that whereas diuers Subiects of this Realme being not of the fellowſhip aforeſaid, haue heretofore made aduentures to and from ſome of the places prohibited by the ſaid letters patents, that the ſaid ſubiects, their heires, executors, adminiſtrators and aſſignes, or any of them ſhall not be impeached, impleaded, troubled, ſued, nor moleſted for the ſame in their goods or perſons in any maner of wiſe, either by our ſaide ſoueraigne Lady, her heires or ſucceſſors, or the ſaid fellowſhip, or their ſucceſſors.

Prouided alſo, that it ſhall be lawfull for any ſubiect of this Realme, hauing preſently any ſhipping, goods, wares, or ready money, remayning at or in any place, of or within the dominion of the ſaid mighty prince of Ruſſia, or in any other of the places prohibited to be viſited or traffiqued vnto by this ſtatute, or the ſaid letters Patents, to fetch, bring, and conuey the ſame, or cauſe the ſame to be brought or conueyed from thence by ſea or otherwiſe, before the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt, which ſhalbe in the yeere of our Lord God 1568, any thing conteined in this ſtatute, or in the ſaid letters Patents to the contrary not withſtanding.

Prouided alſo, that it ſhall be lawfull for any of the ſubiects of this Realme, to ſaile to the port, towne, territorie, or caſtle of Wardhouſe, or to any of the coaſts, townes, hauens, creekes, riuers, Iſlands, and land of Norway for trade of fiſhing, or any other trade there vſed by the ſubiects of this Realme, any thing in this ſtatute to the contrary notwithſtanding.

And for the better maintenance of the Nauie and Mariners of this Realme, be it prouided and inacted, that it ſhall not be lawfull to the ſaide fellowſhip and company, nor to any of them to cary and tranſport, or cauſe to be caried and tranſported any commoditie of this Realme to their newe trade, but onely in Engliſh ſhips, and to be ſailed for the moſt part with Engliſh Mariners, nor alſo to bring into this Realme nor into Flanders from their ſaide new trade, any merchandizes, or other commodities but in Engliſh ſhips, and ſailed for the moſt part by the Engliſh Mariners, on paine to forfeit for euery ſuch offence two hundred pounds, whereof the one moitie ſhall be to the Queenes Maieſtie, her heires and ſucceſſors, the other moitie to the head officers of any port towne, hauing any hauen or harborough decayed, by what name ſoeuer they bee incorporate, to the reparation of ſuch harborough, that will ſue for the ſame in any Court of Record, by action, bill, plaint or information, wherein no eſſoine, protection, or wager of lawe for the defendant ſhall be admitted or allowed.

Prouided alſo, and be it enacted, that no maner of perſon or perſons ſhall from hence forth carrie or tranſport, or cauſe to bee carried or tranſported out of this Realme of England, any maner of clothes or karſies into any of the partes where the ſaid fellowſhip and ſocietie is priuileged to trade by this Act, before the ſame clothes and karſies ſhall be all dreſſed, and for the moſt part died within this Realme, vpon paine of forfeiture for euery ſuch cloth and karſie, otherwiſe caried and tranſported, fiue pounds: the one halfe thereof to the Queenes Maieſtie, her heires and ſucceſſors, the other halfe to the Maſter and Wardens of the Clothworkers in the Citie of London for the time being, by what name ſoeuer they be incorporate that will ſue for the ſame.

Prouided alſo that whenſoeuer the ſaid ſocietie or company ſhall willingly withdraw, and diſ-continue wholy by the ſpace of three yeeres in time of peace, the diſcharging of their merchandizes at the road of S. Nicholas bay in Ruſſia, and doe not diſcharge their ſaid merchandizes at ſome other port or roade lying on that North coaſt of Ruſſia, or other territorie nowe ſubiect to the ſaide mightie prince of Ruſſia, &c. hitherto by the ſubiects of this realme not commonly frequented, that then during the time of any ſuch diſcontinuance and withdrawing, as is aforeſaid, it ſhalbe lawful to all the ſubiects of this realme to trade to the Narue onely in Engliſh bottoms, any thing in this Act to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Prouided alſo, that euery of the Queenes Maieſties Subiects inhabiting within the Citie of Yorke, the townes of Newcaſtle vpon Tine, Hull and of Boſton, hauing continually traded the courſe of merchandize by the ſpace of ten yeeres, and which before the 25. of December that ſhalbe in Anno D. 1567. ſhal contribute, ioyne, and put in ſtocke, to, with, and amongſt the ſaid company, ſuch ſumme & ſummes of money, as any of the ſaid company, which hath throughly continued and contributed to the ſaide newe trade, from the yeere 1552. hath done, and before the ſaide 25. of December 1567. ſhall do for the furniture of one ordinary, full and intire portion, or ſhare, and do in all things behaue himſelfe as others of the ſaid ſocietie be bound to doe, and hereafter ſhall bee bound to do by the priuiledges, ordinances and ſtatutes of the ſaide company, ſhall from the ſame 25. day of December 1567. be, and be accoumpted free, and as one of the ſaid ſocietie and company, and ſubiect to the priuiledges, ordinances and ſtatutes of the ſaide company, reaſonably made and to be made, any thing in this preſent Act to the contrary notwithſtanding.

A very briefe remembrance of a voyage made by M. Anthony Ienkinſon, from London to Moſcouia, ſent from the Queenes Maieſtie to the Emperour, in the yeere 1566.

The fourth day of May in the yere aforeſaid, I imbarked my ſelfe at Graueſend in the good ſhip called the Harry of London, and hauing had a proſperous voyage arriued at the bay of S. Nicholas in Ruſsia the 10. day of Iuly following, and immediatly I ſent in poſt to the Emperor to aduertiſe of my comming, and traueiling then thorowe the countrey, I with my company came to the Moſco where the Emperour kept his court, the 23. of Auguſt, and foorthwith gaue the Secretarie to vnderſtand of my arriuall, who aduertiſed the Emperours Maieſtie of it, and the firſt day of September, being a ſolemne feaſt among the Ruſſes, I came before the Emperours Maieſtie, ſitting in his ſeate of honour, and hauing kiſſed his hand, and done the Queenes Maieſties commendations, and deliuered her Graces letters and preſent, he bad me to dinner, which I accepted, and had much honour done vnto me both then and all the time of my abode in Ruſsia.

The Priuiledges graunted by the Emperour of Ruſsia to the Engliſh merchants of that company: obteined the 22. of September, Anno 1567. by M. Anthony Ienkinſon.

ONe onely ſtrengthener of all things, and God without beginning, which was before the world, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, our onely God in Trinitie, and maker of all things, whom we worſhip in all things, and in all places, the doer and fulfiller of all things, which is the perfect knowledge giuer of the true God, our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, with the comforter the holy Spirit, and thou which art the ſtrengthener of our faith, keepe vs together, & giue vs health to preſerue our kingdome, thou giuer of all good fruites, and helper of all Chriſtian beleeuers.

We great lord by the grace of God, and great duke Iohn Vaſiliwich of all Ruſsia, Volodimer, Moſco, Nouogrod, Cazan, Aſtracan, Pleſco, Smolensko, Tweria, Yougorie, Vadika, Bulgar, Sybier and others, Emperour and great duke of Nouogrod of the lower land, of Chernygo, Rezan, Polotski, Roſtoue, Yereſlaue, Bealozera, Oudoria, Obdoria, Condenſa, and lord of many other lands, and of all the North parts, commander and lord of Liffe-land.

Whereas our ſiſter Queene Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, hath written to vs her letters, that wee would graunt her merchants, William Gerrard, William Cheſter, Rowland Heyward, Lawrence Huſsie, Iohn Marſh, Anthony Ienkinſon, William Rowly, and their company of England, to come in ſhips into this kingdome, and thoſe merchants, William Gerrard and his company haue required of vs that we would graunt and licence them to come into our countrey of Dwina, with all kind of wares at wil, to our city of Moſco, and to all our caſtles in our kingdomes, we for our ſiſters ſake Elizabeth, by the grace of God, Queene of England, France and Ireland, haue licenced her merchants, William Gerrard and his company to paſſe in ſhips to our kingdome of Colmogro, and to the land of Dwina, and to all other our inheritances in the North parts, with all kind of wares to our city of Moſco, and to all caſtles and townes in our kingdome. And ſir William Garrard & his company deſired of us, that we would grant them licence to paſſe to our inheritance of Cazan and Aſtracan, and into our inheritance of Nouogrod the great, and to our inheritance of Liſland to Narue and Dorpe, and to other our caſtles and townes of Liſland, with all kinde of wares, and the trade to be without cuſtome, which requeſt we haue granted to ſir William Garrard and his company, and haue giuen them licence to paſſe to our inheritance of Cazan and Aſtracan, and Nouogrod the great, and into our inheritance of Liſland, Narue and Dorpe, and other places of our inheritance in Liſland with all kinde of wares, to buy, barter and ſell at will, without cuſtome: and what wares ſoeuer they bring out of England, or out of any other countrey, needfull or neceſſary, that they ſhall bring all thoſe wares needfull or neceſſary to our treaſury, & thoſe wares there to be opened, and then to take out of the ſame, ſuch wares as ſhalbe needfull for our treaſury, and the reſt being deliuered againe, to ſell and barter at their pleaſure, and to ſell none of the fine wares before they be ſeene by our chancellers, except ſorting clothes, and other wares not meet for our treaſury: and when our chanceller will ſend our treaſure out of our treaſury with them, they ſhall take it with them, and ſo ſell and barter it for wares meet for our treaſury, and bring it to our treaſury, and they to take no other mens wares to barter or ſell with them, nor yet our people to buy or ſell for them their wares: and if thoſe Engliſh merchants do deſire to paſſe out of our kingdome of Aſtracan to Boghar, Shamaky, Chaday, or into any other countreys, or els to go into their owne countrey, then they to take their treaſure with them, and to barter and ſell it for wares neceſſary for our treaſury, and to bring it and deliuer it to our chanceller, and when they come backe againe to our inheritance of Cazan and Aſtracan, or to any other of our caſtles and townes, that then our captaine of Cazan and Aſtracan, and all other our people of charge ſhall not holde them, but with ſpeed let them paſſe without taking cuſtome of them or their wares, and without opening or looking vpon them in any wiſe: and when they haue not our treaſure with them, that then likewiſe no cuſtome ſhalbe taken of them nor their wares to be ſeene of any man.

And likewiſe we haue granted them to buy and ſell in all our kingdomes and caſtles, with all kinde of wares: and we haue alſo licenced them, that when thoſe Engliſh merchants do deſire to buy & ſell with our merchants wholly together, that they ſhall haue liberty ſo to do wholly together: and they that do deſire to ſell their owne wares by retaile in their owne houſe, that then they ſell it in their own houſe by retaile to our people & other ſtrangers, as they can agree: and weighes and arſhnids to be kept in their houſe with our ſeale, and they themſelues to barter and ſell their owne wares: and no Ruſſe merchant in Moſco, or any other place in our kingdome to ſell for them any wares, nor to buy or barter any wares for them, nor couler any ſtrangers goods. And whereas thoſe merchants of England, ſir William Garrard and his company do deſire to ſell their wares at Colmogro, Dwina, Vologda, Yeraſlaue, Coſtrum, and in Nouogrod the lower, Cazan, Aſtracan, great Nouogrod, Pleſko, Narue, Dorpe, and in other our townes & caſtles, they ſhall haue their will to ſell it: and of their wares of England and Ruſſeland no cuſtome ſhalbe taken, neither they nor their wares ſhalbe ſtayed in any place: and when they depart out of Moſco, to aduertiſe our chancellor thereof, and not to giue any note or inuentory of any kinde of their wares they cary away: and when the Engliſh merchants, ſir William Garrard and his company do come vpon the ſea, and by misfortune haue their ſhips caſt away vpon thoſe coaſts of the North parts, then we will their goods to be ſought out with trueth, and to be deliuered to ſir William Garrard and his company, which as then ſhall be found in our countrey: and if that ſir William Garrards company be not in the Moſco nor in our countrey, then we will and command that thoſe goods of theirs ſhall be layd vp in a place of ſafegard vntill ſuch time as the ſaid ſir William Garrard or his company come to demand the ſame: and then at their comming we will that it ſhall be deliuered. And whereas heretofore we haue giuen ſir William Garrard and his company in this our kingdome of Moſco the new caſtle by the church of S. Maxim behinde the market, they ſhal there ſtill holde their houſe as heretofore we haue giuen them, paying no cuſtome for the ſame: and we alſo do licence them to keepe one Ruſſe porter or two, or els of their owne countrey, and thoſe porters ſhall dwell with them, and not ſell for them, nor barter, nor buy for them: And alſo I haue granted them to buy a houſe at Vologda and at Colmogro, or in any other place where they can chuſe for themſelues any good harbour, and there they to ſet vp thoſe houſes in thoſe places at their owne charges: and in Vologda or the other houſes to keepe two or three porters of their owne, or els two or three Ruſſes, and their wares to be layed vp in thoſe houſes, and to ſell their owne wares at will: and the porters without them to ſell none of their wares, neither yet to buy any for them. And our officers of Colmogro and Dwina, and of other our caſtles & townes ſhall not looke ouer their wares, nor take any cuſtome thereof: neither ſhall thoſe Engliſh merchants ſir William Garrard and his company be iudged by any of them. And when the Engliſh merchants ſhall ſend from our kingdome their owne people into their owne countrey by land ouer other kingdomes whatſoeuer they be, they may without ware ſend their owne people at their pleaſure. And when any matter of law doth fall out in their trade of merchandiſe, then they ſhall be iudged by our chancellers, and law ſhalbe done with equitie betwixt our people and them: and when they cannot be iudged by law, they then ſhalbe tried by lots, and whoſe lot is firſt taken out, he ſhall haue the right. And if it happen any of thoſe merchants to haue any matter of law in any other part of our dominions for trade of merchants, then our captaines, iudges, and chiefe officers ſhall heare the matter, and adminiſter iuſtice with equity and trueth, and where law can take no place, to be tried by lots, and his lot that is firſt taken out to haue the right, and for their matters of law no cuſtome to be payed.

Triall by lots.

The riuer of Ob traffikable.

Furthermore, we for our ſiſters ſake Elizabeth haue granted, that none beſide ſir William Garrard and his company, out of what kingdome ſoeuer it be, England or other, ſhall come in trade of merchandiſe nor otherwiſe to Colmogro, nor to the riuer Ob, nor within Wardhouſe, nor to Petzora, nor Cola, nor Mezen, nor to the abbey of Petchingo, nor to the Iſland of Shallawy, nor to any mouth of the riuer of Dwina, nor to any part of the North countrey of our coaſt. And if any merchant, out of what countrey ſoeuer it be, doe come with ſhip or ſhippes, buſſes, or any other kinde of veſſell to any of our harbours, within all our North parts, we will that then the people and goods, ſhip or ſhips, ſhalbe confiſcate, and forfeited to vs the Emperour and great Duke.

Giuen in our kingdome and houſe of Moſco, the yeere from the beginning of the world 7076, in the moneth of September, and in the 34 yeere of our reigne, and in our conqueſt of Cazan 16, and in our conqueſt of Aſtracan 15.

A letter of M. Henrie Lane to M. Richard Hakluit, concerning the firſt ambaſſago to our moſt gracious Queene Elizabeth from the Ruſſian Emperour anno 1567, and other notable matters incident to thoſe places and times.

VOrſhipfull ſir, becauſe I finde you haue the ſucceſſe and proceedings of Oſep Napea the firſt ambaſſadour of the Ruſſian Emperour to the Maieſties of King Philip and Queene Marie, at what time and at his returne I was remaining in Ruſſia, & do not finde that the perfect knowledge of the firſt ambaſſage from thence to this our Soueraigne Ladie Queene Elizabeth is come to your hands, betweene whoſe Highneſſe and the ambaſſadours I was interpretour, I thinke good to expreſſe it. In Auguſt Anno 1567 arriued at London with their retinue two eſpeciall authoriſed meſſengers, named Stephen Twerdico, and Theodore Pogorella, with letters and preſents to her Maieſty, at that time being at Otelands, where diuers of the chiefe merchants of the Ruſſian company did aſſociate them, and I there doing my duetie and office of interpretour, her Maieſtie gaue them audience. Firſt they rehearſed the long ſtile and Maieſty of their Maſter, with his moſt friendly and hearty commendations to her Highneſſe, and then they teſtified the ſingular great ioy and pleaſure that he conceiued to heare of her moſt princely eſtate, dignitie and health: and laſtly, they deliuered their letters and preſents. The preſents ſent vnto her Maieſty were Sables, both in paires for tippets, and two timbars, to wit, two times fortie, with Luſerns and other rich furres. For at that time that princely ancient ornament of furres was yet in vſe. And great pitie but that it might be renewed, eſpeciall in Court, and among Magiſtrates, not onely for the reſtoring of an olde worſhipfull Art and Companie, but alſo becauſe they be for our climate wholeſome, delicate, graue and comely: expreſſing dignitie, comforting age, and of longer continuance, and better with ſmall coſt to be preſerued, then theſe new ſilks, ſhagges, and ragges, wherein a great part of the wealth of the land is haſtily conſumed.

The vſe of furres wholeſome, delicate, graue and comely.

Theſe ambaſſadours were appointed lodging and entertainement by the Moſcouie company at their houſe then in Seething Lane, and were ſundrie times after permitted to be in preſence.

And in May 1568 tooke their leaue at Greenwich, where they vnderſtood and had the Queenes Maieſties minde, letters and reward. At the latter part of her talke, her Highneſſe conſidering that our trade to Saint Nicholas ſince the beginning had bene offenſiue to diuers princes, ſtates, and merchants Eaſtward, vſed theſe ſpeeches or the like: Who is or ſhall be more touched by detractours, with flying tales and vntrue reports, then Princes and Rulers, to the breach of loue and vnitie? your Maſter and I in things that paſſe by word and writing, I doubt not will keepe and performe promiſes. If he heare the contrary of me, let him ſuſpend his iudgement, and not be light of credit, and ſo will I. Theſe words they termed her Maieſties golden ſpeech: and kneeling downe, kiſſed her hand, and departed.

The trade to S. Nicholas offenſiue to diuers princes & ſtates Eaſtward.

The letters that theſe two meſſengers brought, were deliuered to me by my Lord Treaſurour, being then Secretarie, to be tranſlated, the copies whereof I had, but now cannot finde. The copie of the Queenes Maieſties letter I ſend incloſed herewith vnto your worſhip. I alſo haue ſent you a copy of a letter written from the king of Polonia to the Queenes Maieſtie, with other letters from ſome of our nation and factours, declaring the diſpleaſure for our trafficke to the Ruſſes from anno 1558 to the yere 1566, eſpecially by the way of the Narue: in which yere of 1566, hauing generall procuration and commiſſion from the Company, I was in the Low countrey at Antwerpe and Amſterdam, and ſometimes in company with Polacks, Danſkers, and Eaſterlings: and by reaſon I had bene a liger in Ruſſia, I could the better reply and proue, that their owne nations and the Italians were moſt guiltie of the accuſations written by the king of Poland.

This king Sigiſmundus (whoſe ambaſſadours very ſumptuous I haue ſeene at Moſco) was reported to be too milde in ſuffering the Moſcouites. Before our trafficke they ouerranne his great dukedome of Lituania, and tooke Smolenſco, carrying the people captiues to Moſco. And in the yere 1563, as appeareth by Thomas Alcocks letter, they ſuffered the Ruſſe likewiſe in that Duchy to take a principall city called Polotzko, with the lord and people thereof. Likewiſe the ſaid Sigiſmundus and the king of Sweden did not looke to the protection of Liuonia, but loſt all, except Rie and Reuel, and the Ruſſe made the Narue his port to trafficke, not onely to vs, but to Lubec and others, generall. And ſtill from thoſe parts the Moſcouites were furniſhed out of Dutchland by enterlopers with all arts and artificers, and had few or none by vs. The Italians alſo furniſhed them with engines of warre, and taught them warrelike ſtratagemes, and the arte of fortification. In the dayes of Sigiſmund, the Ruſſe would taunt the Polacks, that they loued their eaſe at home with their wiues, and to drinke, and were not at commandement of their king. This Sigiſmund had to wife the daughter of Ferdinando, Charles the fifts brother, and he died without iſſue. Since which time their late elected king Stephanus Batore kept the Ruſſe in better order, and recouered Polotzko againe in the yere 1579. Thus with my heartie farewell I take my leaue of your worſhip.

Smolenſco won by the Ruſſe.

Polotzko taken.

Polotzko recouered by Stephanus Batore.

Your aſſured friend Henrie Lane.

The Ambaſſage of the right worſhipfull Maſter Thomas Randolfe, Eſquire, to the Emperour of Ruſsia, in the yeere 1568, briefly written by himſelfe.

In this voyage went Thomas Banniſter, & Geofrey Ducket, for their voyage into Perſia.

The 22 day of June, in the yere of our Lord 1568, I went aboord the Harry, lying in the road at Harwich with my company, being to the number of fortie perſons or thereabout: of which the one halfe were gentlemen, deſirous to ſee the world.

Within one dayes ſailing, we were out of the ſight of land, and following our courſe directly North, till we came to the North Cape, we ſailed for the ſpace of twelue dayes with a proſperous winde, without tempeſt or outrage of ſea: hauing compaſſed the North Cape we directed our courſe ſlat Southeaſt, hauing vpon our right hand Norway, Wardhouſe, Lapland, all out of ſight till we came to Cape Gallant: and ſo ſailing betweene two bayes, the two and thirtieth day after our departure from Harwich, we caſt ancre at Saint Nicholas road. In all the time of our voyage, more then the great number of Whales ingendering together, which we might plainly beholde, and the Sperma Cetæ, which we might ſee ſwimming vpon the ſea, there was no great thing to be woondered at. Sometimes we had calmes, wherein our Mariners fiſhed, and tooke good ſtore of diuers ſorts.

The abbey of S. Nicholas of 20 Monks.

At S. Nicholas we landed the 23 of July, where there ſtandeth an abbey of Monks (to the number of twentie) built all of wood: the apparell of the Monks is ſuperſtitious, in blacke hoods, as ours haue bene. Their Church is faire, but full of painted images, tapers, and candles. Their owne houſes are low, and ſmall roomes. They lie apart, they eat together, and are much giuen to drunkenneſſe, vnlearned, write they can, preach they doe neuer, ceremonious in their Church, and long in their prayers.

At my firſt arriuall I was preſented from their Prior with two great rie loaues, fiſh both ſalt and freſh of diuers ſorts, both ſea fiſh and freſh water, one ſheepe aliue, blacke, with a white face, to be the more gratefull vnto me, and ſo with many ſolemne words inuiting me to ſee their houſe, they tooke their leaue.

The Engliſh houſe at S. Nicholas.

Towne or habitation at S. Nicholas there is none more then about foure houſes neere the abbey, and another built by the Engliſh Company for their owne vſe.

This part of the countrey is moſt part wood, ſauing here and there paſture & arable ground, many riuers and diuers Iſlands vnhabited, as the moſt part of the countrey is, for the coldneſſe in Winter.

The riuer of Dwina.

S. Nicholas ſtandeth Northeaſt: the eleuation of the pole 64 degrees. The riuer that runneth there into the ſea is called Dwina, very large, but ſhallow. This riuer taketh his beginning about 700 miles within the countrey, & vpon this riuer ſtandeth Colmogro, and many pretty villages, well ſituated for paſture, arable land, wood, and water. The riuer pleaſant betweene hie hils of either ſide inwardly inhabited, and in a maner a wilderneſſe of hie firre trees, and other wood.

Colmogro.

At Colmogro being 100 verſts, which we accoumt for three quarters of a mile euery verſt, we taried three weeks, not being ſuffered to depart before the Emperour had word of our comming, who ſent to meet vs a gentleman of his houſe, to conuey vs, and to ſee vs furniſhed of victuals, and all things needfull, vpon his owne charge.

The allowance of meat and drinke was for euery day two rubbles, beſides the charge of boats by water, and foure ſcore poſt horſes by land, with aboue 100 carts to cary my wines, and other cariage.

Colmogro is a great towne builded all of wood, not walled, but ſcattered houſe from houſe. The people are rude in maners, and in apparell homely, ſauing vpon their feſtiuall, and marriage dayes.

The people of this town finding commodity by the Engliſh mens traffike with them are much at their commandement, giuen much to drunkenneſſe, and all other kinde of abominable vices.

An Engliſh houſe with lands at Colmogro.

In this towne the Engliſh men haue lands of their owne, giuen them by the Emperour, and faire houſes, with offices for their commodity, very many.

Of other townes vntill I come to Vologda, I write not, becauſe they are much like to this, and the inhabitants not differing from them.

I was fiue whole weeks vpon the riuer of Dwina till I came to Vologda, being drawen with men againſt the ſtreame, for other paſſage there is none.

Vologda ſtandeth vpon the riuer of Vologda, which commeth into Dwina. The towne is great and long, built all of wood, as all their townes are.

In this towne the Emperour hath built a caſtle inuironed with a wall of ſtone, and bricke, the walles faire and hie, round about. Here (as in all other their townes) are many Churches, ſome built of bricke, the reſt of wood, many Monks and Nunnes in it: a towne alſo of great traffike, and many rich merchants there dwelling.

From hence we paſſed by land towards Moſco in poſte, being 500 verſts great, which are equall with our miles. In their townes we baited or lay, being poſt townes.

The countrey is very faire, plaine & pleaſant, well inhabited, corne, paſture, medowes enough, riuers, and woods, faire and goodly.

The deſcription of the inland of Moſcouie.

At Yeraſlaue we paſſed the riuer of Volga, more then a mile ouer. This riuer taketh his beginning at Beal Ozera, & deſcendeth into Mare Caſpium, portable thorow of very great veſſels with flat bottomes, which farre paſſe any that our countrey vſeth.

To ſaile by this riuer into Mare Caſpium the Engliſh company cauſed a barke to be built of 27 tunns, which there was neuer ſeene before: This barke built, and ready rigged to the ſea with her whole furniture coſt not the company aboue one hundreth marks there.

To Moſco we came about the end of September, receiued by no man, not ſo much as our owne countreymen ſuffered to meet vs, which bred ſuſpition in me of ſome other courſe intended, then we had hitherto found.

His arriuall at Moſco.

We were brought to a houſe built of purpoſe by the Emperour for Ambaſſadours, faire and large, after the faſhion of that countrey.

A ſpecial houſe at Moſco, built for Ambaſſadours.

Two gentlemen were appointed to attend vpon me, the one to ſee vs furniſhed of victuals, and that we lacked nothing of the Emperors allowance: the other to ſee that we ſhould not goe out of the houſe, nor ſuffer any man to come vnto vs, in which they left nothing vndone that belonged to their charge. But ſpecially he that looked to our perſons ſo ſtraightely handled vs, that we had no ſmall cauſe to doubt that ſome euill had bene intended vnto vs. No ſupplication, ſute, or requeſt could take place for our liberty, nor yet to come to his preſence.

Hauing paſſed ouer 17 weeks in this ſort, the Emperour ſendeth word that we ſhould be ready againſt Tueſday the 20 of Februarie, at eight a clocke in the morning.

The houre being come that I ſhould goe to the Court, the two gentlemen Priſtaues (as they call them) came vnto me apparelled more princely then before I had euer ſeene them. They preſſe vs to depart, and mounted vpon their owne horſes, and the Ambaſſador vpon ſuch a one as he had borrowed, his men marching on foot, to their great griefe.

Two Priſtaues.

The Ambaſſadour (being my ſelfe) was conueyed into an office where one of the chancellors doeth vſe to ſit, being there accompanied with the two foreſayd gentlemen: I taried two long houres before I was ſent for to the Emperor. In the end meſſage being brought that the Emperour was ſet, I was conueyed by my gentlemen vp a paire of ſtaires thorow a large roome, where ſate by my eſtimation 300 perſons, all in rich attire, taken out of the Emperors wardrobe for that day, vpon three ranks of benches, ſet round about the place, rather to preſent a maieſtie, then that they were either of quality or honor.

At the firſt entry into the chamber I with my cap gaue them the reuerence, ſuch as I iudged their ſtately ſitting, graue countenances, and ſumptuous apparell required, and ſeeing that it was not anſwered againe of any of them I couered my head, and ſo paſſing to a chamber where the Emperor was, there receiued me at the doore from my two gentlemen or gouernors, two of the Emperors counſellors, and ſhewed me to the Emperor, and brought me to the middle of the chamber, where I was willed to ſtand ſtill, and to ſay that which I had to ſay. I by my Interpretor opened my meſſage as I receiued it from the Queene my Miſtreſſe, from whom I came, at whoſe name the Emperor ſtood vp, and demanded diuers queſtions of her health and ſtate: whereunto anſwere being made, he gaue me his hand in token of my welcome, and cauſed me to ſit downe, and further aſked me diuers queſtions.

His admiſſion to the Emperors preſence.

This done, I deliuered her Maieſties preſent, which was a notable great Cup of ſiluer curiouſly wrought, with verſes grauen in it, expreſſing the hiſtories workmanly ſet out in the ſame.

The Queenes preſent.

All being ſayd and done (as appeared) to his contentment, he licenced me and my whole company to depart, who were all in his preſence, and were ſaluted by him with a nod of his head, and ſayd vnto me: I dine not this day openly for great affaires I haue, but I will ſend thee my dinner, and giue leaue to thee and thine to go at liberty, and augment our allowance to thee, in token of our loue and fauor to our ſiſter the Queene of England.

The Emperors ſpeech to the Ambaſſadour.

I with reuerence tooke my leaue, being conueyed by two other of greater calling then thoſe that brought me to the Emperors ſight, who deliuered me to the two firſt gentlemen, who conducted me to the office where I firſt was, where came vnto me one called the Long duke, with whom I conferred a while, and ſo returned to my lodging.

Within one houre after in comes to my lodging a duke richly apparelled, accompanied with fiftie perſons, ech of them carying a ſiluer diſh with meat, and couered with ſiluer. The duke firſt deliuered twenty loaues of bread of the Emperors owne eating, hauing taſted the ſame, and deliuered euery diſh into my hands, and taſted of euery kinde of drinke that he brought.

This being done, the duke and his company ſate downe with me, and tooke part of the Emperors meat, and filled themſelues well of all ſorts, and went not away from me vnrewarded.

Within few nights after the Emperor had will to ſpeake ſecretly with me, and ſent for me in the night by the Long duke: The place was farre off, and the night colde, and I hauing changed my apparell into ſuch as the Ruſſes do weare, found great incommoditie thereby.

A ſecond conference with the Emperor.

Hauing talked with him aboue three houres, towards the morning I was diſmiſſed, and ſo came home to my lodging, where I remained aboue ſix weeks after, before I heard againe from the Emperour, who went the next day to Slouoda, the houſe of his ſolace. After the end of which ſixe weeks, which was about the beginning of April, the Emperour returned from Slouoda aforeſayd, and ſent for me againe to make repaire vnto him. And being come, I dealt effectually with him in the behalfe of our Engliſh merchants, and found him ſo graciouſly inclined towards them, that I obtained at his hands my whole demands for large priuileges in generall, together with all the reſt my particular requeſts. And then he commended to my conduct into England, a noble man of his, called Andrew Sauin, as his Ambaſſadour, for the better confirmation of his priuileges granted, and other negotiations with her Maieſty. And thus being diſpatched with full contentment, the ſayd Ambaſſadour and my ſelfe departed, and imbarked at S. Nicholas about the end of Iuly, and arriued ſafely at London in the moneth of September following.

Andrew Sauin Ambaſſadour to the Queene.

A copie of the priuiledges granted by the right high and mightie Prince, the Emperour of Ruſsia, &c. vnto the right worſhipfull fellowſhip of Engliſh merchants, for the diſcouerie of new trades: and hither ſent by Thomas Randolfe eſquire, her Maieſties Ambaſſadour to the ſayd Emperour, and by Andrew Sauin his Ambaſſadour in the yere of our Lord God 1569.

One God euerlaſting, and without and before the beginning, the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, the bleſſed Trinitie, our onely God, maker, and preſeruer of all things, and repleniſher of all things euery where, who by thy goodneſſe doeſt cauſe all men to loue the giuer of wiſedome our onely Mediatour, and leader of vs all vnto bleſſed knowledge by the onely Sonne his word, our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, holy and euerlaſting Spirit, and now in theſe our dayes teacheſt vs to keepe Chriſtianitie, and ſuffereſt vs to enioy our kingdome to the happy commodity of our land, and wealth of our people, in deſpight of our enemies, and to our fame with our friends.

We Iohn Vaſiliwich by the grace of God, great lord, Emperour, and great duke of all Ruſſia, Volodemer, Moſcouia, Nouogrod, Emperour of Cazan, Tuersky, Vgorsky, Permisky, Vadsky, Bulgaria, and many others, lord and great duke of the Low countreys of Nouogrod, Chernigosky, Reſansky, Polotsky, Raſtow, Yeraſlaue, Bealoſera, Owdorsky, Condinsky, and all Siberland, great commander of all the North parts, lord of Leifland, and many other Northward, Southward and Weſtward.

Whereas our ſiſter Elizabeth by the grace of God Queene of England, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, hath written vnto vs her letters for her merchants, who hath made ſute that we ſhould grant our goodneſſe to the merchants which are of one Company, and giue them free leaue to come to traffike in our kingdome to Colmogro, and to the countrey of Dwina, and to our great citie of Moſcouia, and to all the cities in our dominions, and thorow our countrey to Boghar, to Perſia, Casbin, and Charday, and to all other countreys.

1 We Iohn Vaſiliwich Emperour and great duke of all Ruſſia (for our ſiſter Elizabeths ſake, Queene of England) haue giuen and granted to the Engliſh merchants, the Gouernours, Conſuls, Aſſiſtants & fellowſhip, ſir Wil. Garrard Knight, Rowland Haiward Alderman, Ioh. Thamworth Eſquire, Iohn Riuers Alderman, Henry Beecher Alderman, Conſuls: Sir Wil. Cheſter Knight, Edward Iackman Alderman, Lionel Ducket Alderman, Edward Gilbert, Laurence Huſe, Francis Walſingham, Clement Throgmorton, Iohn Quarles, Nicholas Wheeler, Thomas Baniſter, Iohn Harriſon, Francis Burnham, Anthony Gamage, Iohn Somers, Richard Wilkinſon, Ioh. Sparke, Richard Barne, Robert Woolman, Thomas Browne, Thomas Smith, Thomas Allen, Thomas More, William Bully, Richard Yong, Thomas Atkinſon, Aſſiſtants: Iohn Merſh Eſquire, Geofrey Ducket, Francis Robinſon, Matthew Field, & all the reſt of their company and fellowſhip, and to their ſucceſſours and deputies, to come with ſhips and other veſſels into our Countrey, at Colmogorod, & Dwina, and to all the North parts now being ours, or that hereafter ſhall at any time be in our poſſeſſion, by ſea, riuer or land, euen to our great Citie of Moſco, in all the townes of our Countrey, to Cazan and Aſtracan, to Nouogorod the great, to Pleſko & Leifland, Vriagorod, to Narue, and all other townes of Leifland. 2 And to paſſe through our land to Boghar, Perſia, Casbin, Charday, and other Countreyes: And whereſoeuer they come there to be and abide freely, and to barter and bargaine freely all wares of ſale, without cuſtome of all people, and Marchants ſtrangers whatſoeuer.

And if ſo be they bring any fine wares out of Englande, or any other Countrey from Boghar, Perſia, Casbin, or from any other place, & thoſe their wares that come by the way of Narue, or any other part into our Dominion, to bring the ſame wares into our treaſure, and our Treaſurers to view the ſame wares, and to take into our Treaſurie of the ſame ſuch as ſhalbe needfull for vs. And all ſuch wares as we ſhal not need, our Chancellour to redeliuer ye ſame: And after the view of our Chancellours, to barter it freely to whom they will, not ſelling any of their wares needful for vs, before our Chancellour haue ſeene the ſame. And all other groſſe and heauy wares that ſhall be needfull to our vſe, not being brought to Moſco, to declare & tell our Chancellour of the ſame wares: And to giue a note thereof by name, and how much they leaue there, not brought to Moſco: and then if we neede not the ſaid wares, the Engliſh Marchants, their ſeruants & Factors, to conuey their wares the neereſt way to Vſtiug the great, and ſo to Colmogorod, or elſewhere at their pleaſure, there to barter and ſell the ſame. But thoſe wares that ſhalbe needfull for our Treaſurie, they ſhall not hide from vs in any caſe.

And when our Chauncellours ſhall ſend our aduenture, with the ſaid Marchants or their Factors, they to take our aduentures with them, and to ſell, & to barter for ſuch wares as ſhalbe meete for our Treaſurie, and to returne it into our Treaſurie.

And when we ſhall ſende any aduenture into England then our Chauncellour to giue them a yeeres warning, that their ſhips may be prouided thereafter, that by taking in of our wares, they leaue not their owne behind them.

And to take our aduenture yeerely when they goe into Perſia,

Neither ſhall the Engliſh marchants receiue or colour any of our peoples goods, nor barter nor ſell it in any wiſe: likewiſe our people not to barter for the ſayd Engliſh marchants or occupy for them.

3 And when they ſhall come into our Empire of Caſan and Aſtracan, and other places of our Dominions, then our Captaines of Caſan and Aſtracan, and our authoriſed people, quietly to let them paſſe, not taking any toll or cuſtome of their wares, nor once to make ſearch thereof.

And when we ſhal ſend no aduenture with them, yet to ſuffer them freely to paſſe, not viewing their wares, nor taking any kinde of cuſtome. And whatſoeuer Engliſh marchant will bargaine with our Marchants or Factors ware for ware to barter the ſame at their pleaſure.

And whatſoeuer their Marchant or Factors will ſell their wares at their houſe at Moſco, which houſe I granted them at S. Maxims at the Moſco, they to ſel the ware to our people, either ſtrangers as they may beſt vtter it, keeping within their houſe, arſhines, meaſures, and waights vnder ſeales.

4 We haue granted them the ſaide houſe at S. Maxims in the halfe free, and without ſtanding rent, as heretofore we did graunt it the ſaid Engliſh Marchants, ſir Wil. Garrard, and the Company, maintayning in the ſaid houſe one houſekeeper a Ruſſe, and two Ruſſe ſeruants, or ſome of their owne countrey men, and none other Ruſſes beſides the aforeſayde. And the ſaid houſekeepers that ſhal liue at their houſe with the Engliſh marchants, neither to buy nor ſel any wares for them, but that the ſaid marchants themſelues or their factors, ſhall buy, ſell, and barter their owne wares: And our Moſcouie marchants not to take the ſaid Engliſhmens wares to ſell them in our townes, nor to buy any wares for them, neither the Engliſh marchant to colour any Ruſſes wares at any towne.

5 And whatſoeuer Engliſh marchant will ſell his wares at Colmogorod, Dwyna, Vologda, Yeraſlaue, Caſtran, Nouogorod the lower, Caſan, Aſtracan, Nouogrod the great, Vopsko, the Narue, Vriagorod, or at any other townes, they to ſel their wares there at their pleaſure: And of all wares aſwell of other countreis as of Ruſſia, no officer or other to take any cuſtome, neither in any place to ſtay them in any wiſe, neither take any kinde of toll of them for their wares whatſoeuer.

6 And whatſoeuer marchant ſhall bargaine or buy any wares of Engliſh marchants: The ſaid Ruſſe not to returne thoſe wares vpon the marchants hands againe, but to giue ready money for the ſaid wares, otherwiſe they to craue the Iuſtice to giue right, and to execute the lawe vpon the ſame with all expedition. And when the Engliſh marchants or factors ſhal trauaile from Moſcouie after the diſpatch of their wares and buſineſſe, then to ſhew themſelues vnto our Chancellours, whatſoeuer wares of theirs ſhall goe from Moſco, they not to ſhew the ſame wares to any our officers, nor pay no cuſtome nor toll in any place.

7 If it ſo happen the Engliſh marchants haue any wracke, and the ſhippes be brought to any port of our Dominions, we to command the ſaid goods to be enquired and ſought out, and to be giuen to the Engliſh merchants, being here abiding at that time in our Countrey, the factors, ſeruants, or deputies, of the Company aforeſayd, to whom we haue granted this our gratious letter.

And if there happen none of the Engliſh merchants, factors, ſeruants, or deputies to be in our Countreis at ſuch time, then we wil all the ſaid goods to be ſought out and beſtowed in ſome conuenient place, and when any of the Company aforewritten, bringing theſe our letters, ſhall come for their goods, we to command their goods to be reſtored vnto them.

8 Likewiſe wee haue graunted leaue to the Engliſh merchants, their Gouernours, Conſuls, and aſſiſtants, namely, ſir William Garrard knight, Rowland Hayward, and to the Companie, to builde houſes at Vologda, Colmogro, and the ſeaſide, at Iuangorod, at Cherell, and in all other places of our Dominions, as ſhall be needefull for their trade. And they to keepe at the ſaid houſe one houſekeeper, a Ruſſe, and two or three men to keepe their wares at the ſaid houſes, making ſale thereof to whom they will, they, their Factors or deputies: the ſaid houſekeeper not to buy or ſell for them.

9 Alſo we haue giuen and graunted to the Engliſh Merchants, their houſe which they haue by our goodneſſe at S. Maximes in the Zenopski, and other their houſes in the towne of Zenopski, made for the better aſſurance of their goods, and all ſuch as they ſhall ſet vp hereafter ſhal be of the ‖Opreſſini, and will make them knowen to all them of Opreſſini.

‖Or, choſen ſide.

10 And whereas by our goodnes we haue graunted them a Ropehouſe at Vologda, being farre from the Engliſh Merchants houſe, now we haue giuen them to build a houſe for that vſe by the ſaid Engliſh houſe, and haue giuen and graunted them (of our goodneſſe) ground, one hundreth and foureſcore fadome long, and fiftie fadomes in breadth, according to their owne requeſt.

11 Alſo, we haue of our goodneſſe giuen and graunted to the Engliſh Merchants, leaue to buy them a houſe at Wichida, and there to ſearch out mines of yron. And where they ſhal happily find it, there to ſet vp houſes for the making of the ſame yron: and to make the ſame, of our goodneſſe haue graunted them woods, fiue or ſixe miles compaſſe about the ſayd houſes, to the making of the ſayd yron, and not to exceede theſe bounds and limits: And where they ſhall cut the ſayde wood, not to ſet vp any village or farme there, bringing the artificers for making of their yron, out of their owne Countrey, and to learne our people that arte, and ſo freely occupying the ſaid yron in theſe our Dominions, tranſporting alſo of the ſame home into Englande, allowing for euery pound one dingo, or halfe penie.

12 And if any of the ſaid yron ſhalbe needfull for our workes, then we to take of the ſaid yron to our worke, vpon agreement of price, paying money out of our Treaſurie for the ſame: And when the ſaid Engliſh Merchants or Factors ſhal ſend their owne people out of our Realme into their Countrey, ouer land through any Countrey whatſoeuer, freely to ſend the ſame with our words.

13 Alſo, we of our goodneſſe haue graunted, that if any man miſuſe the ſaid Engliſh, the Factors or ſeruants, or the ſaide Engliſh Merchants, their Factors or ſeruants abuſe any other at Moſcouie, or any other out townes whatſoeuer within our Dominions in trade of Marchandiſe or otherwiſe, then they to haue vpright iuſtice in all ſuch matters of our counſaile the Opreſſini without all let or delay: But if our Iuſtice may not agree the parties, then lots to be made, and to whoſe lotte it ſhall fall, to him the right to be giuen, and that only our counſaile at Moſcouie, and none of our Captaines, or authoriſed people, or officers in any other our townes, giue iudgement vpon the ſaid Engliſh Merchants for any thing.

14 Alſo, if any ſtranger ſhall haue matter of controuerſie with any Engliſh Merchant, Factor or ſeruant, abiding within theſe our Realmes, or contrariwiſe any Engliſh Merchant, Factor or ſeruant, againſt any other ſtranger, in all thoſe cauſes our Counſaile of the Opreſſini, to giue them Iuſtice, and to make an agreement & end betweene the parties, without all delay: And none to deale therein, ſaue our Counſaile of the Opreſſini. 15 And if any man haue action againſt any Engliſh Merchant being abſent, that then in his abſence it ſhalbe lawful for any other Engliſhman at his aſſignation to anſwere his cauſe.

16 If any Engliſhman happen to be wounded or beaten to death, or any Ruſſe or ſtranger ſlaine or beaten. 17 Or any ſtollen goods to be found in the ſaid Engliſh houſes, then our Counſellers to cauſe the guiltie perſons to be ſought out, and to doe right and Iuſtice in the cauſe, and the partie that is guiltie, if he deſerue puniſhment, to be corrected accordingly after his offence: That the ſaid Engliſh Merchants, factors and ſeruant, ſuſtaine thereby no hinderance or damage.

18 And whatſoeuer Engliſh Marchant, Factor, ſeruant, or deputie, ſhalbe guiltie of any fault, deſeruing our diſpleaſure, then our Counſellers to cauſe the guiltie partie to goe vnder ſureties, and their goods to be ſealed and kept, vntill our pleaſure be further knowen, and our Counſaile to examine their offence, and ſo to report it vnto vs, that we may command what ſhall be done therein, and none other to be arreſted or haue their goods ſealed, which are not guiltie of that offence, nor to ſtay or apprehend them in any of our Dominions for the ſame.

19 If any Engliſh Marchant, Factor or ſeruant ſhall offend, it ſhalbe lawfull for their Agent to doe iuſtice vpon the ſaid partie, or to ſend him home into England at his pleaſure.

20 If any Engliſh Marchant, Factor or ſeruant, haue lent or hereafter ſhall lende money to any of our people, or credite them with wares, and ſo depart into any forreigne Countrey, or die before the debt be due to be payde, then our people and Marchants to paye the ſayde debt, to whom ſoeuer ſhall be appointed to the ſayd roome or charge, and the ſaide Engliſh Marchant, factor, or ſeruant, to bring his bill of debt to our Counſell, to ſhewe them what is due, and what money is owing them for any wares: and thus to doe truly, not adding any whit to the debt, and our Counſel to command the debt to be diſcharged vnto the Engliſh Marchant, factor, or ſeruant, without delay.

21 And whatſoeuer Engliſh Marchant ſhall be arreſted for debt, then our Counſell to command the partie vnder arreſt to be deliuered to the Agent: and if he haue no ſuertie, to binde the Agent with him, for the better force of the bond.

20 And if any Engliſhman be endebted, we will the Creditor not to caſt him in priſon, or to deliuer him to the Sergeant, leſt the officer loſe him, but to take ware in pawne of the debt.

22 Alſo of our goodnes, we haue granted the Engliſh Marchants to ſend our Commiſſion to all our Townes, Captaines, and authoriſed men, to defende and garde the ſaid Marchants from all theeues, robbers, and euill diſpoſed perſons.

23 If in comming or going to and fro our dominions, the Marchants, the factors, or ſeruants be ſpoyled on the ſea, our Counſell ſhall ſend our letters, and will them to be ſought out, and where they ſhall finde the goods, cauſe it to be reſtored againe, and the offender to be puniſhed, according to our commandement.

24 Alſo of our goodnes, we haue granted the ſaide Merchants to take vp Brokers, Packers, Wayers, and ſuch like labourers, as ſhall be needefull for them, paying for their hier as the labourers and they ſhall agree.

25 We likewiſe of our goodnes, haue licenſed the Engliſh Marchants in our Townes of Moſco, Nouogorod the great, and Plesko, that the Coiners of the ſaid Townes ſhall melt Dollers, and coine money for them, without cuſtome, allowing for coales, and other neceſſaries, with the workemanſhip.

26 Alſo of our goodnes, we haue granted to the ſayd Engliſh Merchants, to take poſte horſe at needfull times, leauing with our officers a note how many they take, and not elſe, in no caſe hindering or diminiſhing our treaſurie.

27 Alſo for our ſiſter Queene Elizabeths ſake, we of our goodnes haue granted to the merchants within written, this our letter, and to their ſucceſſors, that no Engliſhman, nor any other ſtranger, come without the Queenes leaue to Colmogorode, the riuer of Vob, Vaſiagy, Pechora, Cola, Mezena, Pechingo, Zeleuetskyes Iſland, the riuer of Shame, nor to no other hauen of Dwina, nor to any part of the northſide of Dwina, by hetherward of Wardhouſe, to any hauen, with ſhippe, Buſſe, or any other veſſell, nor to occupie in any kind of waies, but only the ſaid Engliſh companie, and their ſucceſſors, to whom we of our goodnes haue granted this priuiledge.

28 Alſo that no Engliſh Merchant, without the Queenes leaue, ſhall come with any wares, to the Narue, or Vriogorod.

29 And whatſoeuer Engliſh Merchant, ſtranger, or other, of whatſoeuer Countrey he be, ſhall come with any ſhippe, Buſſe, or any other veſſel, to any of the ſaid hauens, of the north ſide, to any part of Dwina, by North the Narue, or Vriogorod, without the Queenes leaue or knowledge, not being of the company aboue written, we to apprehende and take the ſame veſſell from thoſe ſtrangers and Merchants, the one halfe to vs the Emperour, and great Duke, and the other halfe to the company of Engliſh Merchants.

30 Alſo of our goodnes we haue granted the ſaid company of Engliſh merchants, that no Engliſh merchants or ſtrangers ſhall paſſe through our dominions, to Boghar, Perſia, Casbin, Charday, or other Countreys, ſaue onely the company of Engliſh merchants, and our owne meſſengers.

31 Alſo whatſoeuer Engliſhman, comming out of England or any other Countrey, into our dominions, without the Queenes leaue, and knowledge, not being of the ſayd company, written within thoſe our letters, mind, and purpoſe, to abide in our realme, contrary to the Queenes will and pleaſure, or any way abuſe himſelfe, the Agent ſhall freely ſend him home, to the Queene his Soueraigne: which if the Agent of himſelfe be vnable to do, let him pray for ayd of the captaines and officers of our townes there being, and ſo ſend him to priſon, and will the ſayd captaines not to hinder the ſayd Agent from ſending home ſuch euill perſons into England.

32 And if any man within our countrey runne away to any other towne or place, the Engliſh merchants and factours, to haue free libertie to apprehend him, and take their goods from him againe.

33 And as for our priuilege giuen to Thomas Glouer, Ralfe Rutter, Chriſtopher Bennet, Iohn Chappell, and their adherents, we haue commanded the ſame priuileges to be taken from them.

34 Alſo we of our goodneſſe haue granted the ſayd company of Engliſh merchants, their ſucceſſours, ſeruants and deputies, that doe or ſhall remaine at Moſco, or elſewhere within our dominions freely to keepe their owne law: and in any wiſe none of ours to force them to our law or faith againſt their will.

Moreouer, beſides and with the company of Engliſh merchants, we permit all ſtrangers, to trade to our towne of Narue, Iuanogorod, & other our townes of Liefland, as they haue done beforetime. Giuen from the beginning of the world 7077, in the moneth of Iune 20, Indiction 12, the yere of our lordſhip and reign 35, and of our Empire of Ruſland 23, Cazan 17, Aſtracan 15.

Other ſpeciall grants by his Maieſties priuate letters at the ſute of M. Randolfe Ambaſſadour.

Releaſement out of priſon of Fitzherbert, that was accuſed for writing of letters againſt the Emperour.

Liberty giuen to Thomas Greene that was accuſed and troubled vpon ſuſpition of his dealing with the Ambaſſadour, and licence giuen to him to trafficke as he was accuſtomed.

Andrew Atherton and his ſureties releaſed at the Narue and his ſeruant at the Moſco, that were in trouble for ſending the merchants letters into England.

A letter granted to Thomas Southam to the Councell, for iuſtice againſt them that ſtole the pearles.

His Maieſties fauor promiſed to the Artificers, and liuings to be appointed them as they can beſt deſerue.

A letter to the merchants that went into Perſia, to paſſe freely without impeachment in his dominions, as alſo letters of fauour to the great Shaugh of Perſia.

A grant vnto the company that at what time ſoeuer they ſend to the diſcouery of Cataya, they ſhalbe licenced to repaire vnto this countrey, and haue ſuch conducts and guides, mariners, veſſels, men and victuals as they ſhall ſtand in need of.

It is alſo promiſed by Knez Alfanas, and Peter Gregoriwich in the Emperours name, that if Benet Butler or any Engliſh man complaine, deface, hinder in way of traffike or otherwiſe go about to diſcredit the worſhipfull company, and their doings, that therein they ſhall not be heard, and the doers to be puniſhed, as in ſuch caſes they ſhalbe iudged to haue deſerued.

Certaine perſons granted to be ſent home into England that ſerued the company, and were practiſers againſt them in that countrey.

A Commiſſion giuen by vs Thomas Randolfe Ambaſſadour for the Queenes Maieſtie in Ruſſia, and Thomas Banniſter, &c. vnto Iames Baſſendine, Iames Woodcocke and Richard Browne, the which Baſſendine, Woodcocke, and Browne we appoint ioyntly together, and aiders, the one of them to the other, in a voyage of diſcouery to be made (by the grace of God) by them, for ſearching of the ſea, and border of the coaſt, from the riuer Pechora, to the Eaſtwards, as hereafter followeth Anno 1588. The firſt of Auguſt.

INprimis, when your barke with all furniture is ready, you ſhall at the beginning of the yere (aſſoone as you poſſibly may) make your repaire to the Eaſterne part of the riuer Pechora, where is an Iland called Dolgoieue, and from thence you ſhall paſſe to the Eaſtwards alongſt by the Sea coaſt of Hugorie, or the maine land of Pechora, and ſailing alongſt by the ſame coaſt, you ſhall paſſe within ſeuen leagues of the Iland Vaigats, which is in the ſtraight, almoſt halfe way from the coaſt of Hugorie, vnto the coaſt of Noua Zembla, which Iſland Vaigats and Noua Zembla you ſhall finde noted in your plat; therefore you ſhall not need to diſcouer it: but proceed on alongſt the coaſt of Hugory, towards the riuer Obba.

There is a Bay betweene the ſayd Vaigats, and the riuer Obba, that doth bite to the Southwards, into the land of Hugory, in which Bay are two ſmall riuers, the one called Cara Reca, the other Naramſy, as in the paper of notes which are giuen to you herewith may appeare: in the which Bay you ſhall not need to ſpend any time for ſearching of it, but to direct your courſe to the riuer Ob (if otherwiſe you be not conſtrained to keepe alongſt the ſhore) and when you come to the riuer Ob you ſhall not enter into it, but paſſe ouer vnto the Eaſterne part of the mouth of the ſayd riuer.

Cara Reca.

Naramſi Reca.

And when you are at the Eaſterne part of the mouth of Obba Reca, you ſhall from thence paſſe to the Eaſtwards, alongſt by the border of the ſayd coaſt, deſcribing the ſame in ſuch perfect order as you can beſt do it. You ſhall not leaue the ſayd coaſt or border of the land, but paſſe alongſt by it, at leaſt in ſight of the ſame, vntill you haue ſailed by it ſo farre to the Eaſtwards, and the time of the yeere ſo farre ſpent, that you doe thinke it time for you to returne with your barke to Winter, which trauell may well be 300 or 400 leagues to the Eaſtwards of the Ob, if the Sea doe reach ſo farre as our hope is it doth: but and if you finde not the ſaid coaſt and ſea to trend ſo farre to the Eaſtwards, yet you ſhall not leaue the coaſt at any time, but proceed alongſt by it, as it doth lie, leauing no part of it vnſearched, or ſeene, vnleſſe it be ſome bay, or riuer, that you doe certeinly know by the report of the people, that you ſhall finde in thoſe borders, or els ſome certeine tokens whereby you of your ſelues may iudge it to be ſo. For our hope is that the ſaid border of land and ſea doth in ſhort ſpace after you paſſe the Ob, incline Eaſt, and ſo to the Southwards. And therefore we would haue no part of the land of your ſtarreboord ſide, as you proceed in your diſcouery, to be left vndiſcouered.

But and if the ſaid border of land do not incline ſo to the Eaſtwards as we preſuppoſe it, but that it doe proue to incline and trend to the Northwards, and ſo ioyne with Noua Zembla, making the ſea from Vaigats to the Eaſtwards but a bay: yet we will that you do keepe alongſt by the ſaid coaſt, and ſo bring vs certaine report of that forme and maner of the ſame bay.

And if it doe ſo proue to be a bay, and that you haue paſſed round about the ſame, and ſo by the trending of the land come backe vnto that part of Noua Zembla that is againſt Vaigats, whereas you may from that ſee the ſaid Iſland Vaigats, if the time of the yeere will permit you, you ſhall from thence paſſe alongſt by the ſaid border and coaſt of Noua Zembla to the Weſtwards, and ſo to ſearch whether that part of Noua Zembla doe ioyne with the land that ſir Hugh Willoughbie diſcouered in anno 53, and is in 72 degrees, and from that part of Noua Zembla 120 leagues to the Weſtwards, as your plat doeth ſhew it vnto you: and if you doe finde that land to ioyne with Noua Zembla, when you come to it, you ſhall proceed further along the ſame coaſt, if the time of the yere will permit it, and that you doe thinke there will be ſufficient time for you to returne backe with your barke to Winter either at Pechora or in Ruſſia, at your diſcretion: for we refer the ſame to your good iudgements, truſting that you will loſe no time, that may further your knowledge in this voyage.

Note you, it was the 20 of Auguſt, 56 yer the Serchthrift began to returne backe from her diſcouerie, to Winter in Ruſſia, and then ſhe came from the Iſland Vaigats, being forcibly driuen from thence with an Eaſterly winde and yce, and ſo ſhe came into the riuer Dwina, and arriued at Colmogro the 11 of September, 56. If the yce had not bene ſo much that yere as it was in the Streights, on both ſides of the Iſland Vaigats, they in the ſaid pinneſſe would that yeere haue diſcouered the parts that you are now ſent to ſeeke: which thing (if it had pleaſed God) might haue bene done then: but God hath reſerued it for ſome other. Which diſcouerie, if it may be made by you, it ſhall not only proue profitable vnto you, but it will alſo purchaſe perpetuall fame and renowme both to you and our country. And thus not doubting of your willing deſires, and forwardneſſe towards the ſame, we pray God to bleſſe you with a lucky beginning, fortunate ſucceſſe, and happily to end the ſame. Amen.

Neceſſarie notes to be obſerued, and followed in your diſcouerie, as hereafter followeth.

When your barke with all furniture and neceſſaries ſhall be in readineſſe for you to depart to the ſea (if it be that you take your barke at S. Nicholas, or any part of Dwina Reca) you ſhall from thence, euen as timely in the ſpring as the yce will permit you, ſaile, & make all expedition that may be, vnto the mouth of the riuer Pechora (as your commiſſion doth leaue you) and as you paſſe by the coaſt all alongſt (notwithſtanding the plat that ſheweth you the deſcription of the ſaid coaſt, from Dwina vnto Vaigats) yet you ſhall ſeeke by all the meanes that you can, to amend the ſame plat, vſing as many obſeruations, as you poſſibly can do: and theſe notes following are to be obſerued by you principally.

1 Firſt, that you do obſerue the latitude as often, and in as many places as you may poſſibly do it, noting diligently the place where you do ſo obſerue the ſame.

2 Alſo that you doe diligently ſet with your compaſſe, how the land doth lie from point to point, all alongſt as you goe, and to vſe your iudgements how farre there may be betweene ech of them.

3 Item, that you do alwayes vſe to draw the proportion, and biting of the land, aſwell the lying out of the points, and headlands, vnto the which you ſhall giue ſome apt names (at your diſcretion) as alſo the forme of the Bayes, and to make ſome marke in drawing the forme, and border of the ſame, where the high cliffes are, and where low land is, whether ſandy hilles, or whatſoeuer: omit not to note any thing that may be ſenſible and apparant to you, which may ſerue to any purpoſe.

4 In paſſing along by any coaſt, that you keepe your lead going often times, and ſound at the leaſt once euery glaſſe, and oftener if you thinke good as occaſion doth ſerue, and note diligently the depth with the maner of the ground, and at euery time, how farre the ſame ſounding may be from the next ſhore to it: and how the next point or headland doth beare from you. And in the ſea after you ſet off from your port, you ſhall orderly at the end of euery foure glaſſes ſound, and if you finde ground, note the depth and what ground, but if you can finde no ground, you ſhall alſo note in what depth you could find no ground.

5 Alſo that you do diligently obſerue the flowing, & ebbing in euery place, and how the tides do ſet, which way the flood doth come, and how much water it doth high in euery place, and what force the ſame tide hath to driue a ſhip in an houre, as neere as you can iudge it.

6 Alſo that you doe ſeeke to obſerue with the inſtrument which I deliuer you herewith, according as I taught you at Roſe Iſland, the true platformes, and diſtances, in as many places as conueniently you may, for it ſerueth very aptly your purpoſe.

7 Alſo that you take with you paper and ynke, and keepe a continuall iournall or remembrance day by day, of all ſuch things as ſhall fall out worth the knowledge, not forgetting or omitting to write it, and note it, that it may be ſhewed and read at your returne.

8 Theſe orders if you ſhall diligently obſerue, it will be eaſie for you to make a plat and perfect deſcription of your diſcouery, and ſo ſhall your notes be ſufficient to anſwere that which is looked for at your hands. But withall you may not forget to note as many things as you can learne and vnderſtand by the report of any people whatſoeuer they be, ſo that it appertaine any way to our deſires. And thus the Lord God proſper your voyage. Amen.

Certaine letters in verſe, written by Maſter George Turberuile out of Moſcouia, which went as Secretarie thither with Maſter Tho. Randolph, her Maieſties Ambaſſadour to the Emperour 1568, to certeine friends of his in London, deſcribing the maners of the Countrey and people.

To his eſpeciall friend Maſter Edward Dancie.

My Dancie deare, when I recount within my breſt,
My London friends, and wonted mates, and thee aboue the reſt:
I feele a thouſand fits of deepe and deadly woe,
To thinke that I from land to ſea, from bliſſe to bale did go.
I left my natiue ſoile, full like a retchleſſe man,
And vnacquainted of the coaſt, among the Ruſſes ran:
A people paſſing rude, to vices vile inclinde,
Folke fit to be of Bacchus traine, ſo quaffing is their kinde.
Drinke is their whole deſire, the pot is all their pride,
The ſobreſt head doth once a day ſtand needfull of a guide.
If he to banket bid his friends, he will not ſhrinke
On them at dinner to beſtow a dozen kindes of drinke:
Such licour as they haue, and as the countrey giues,
But chiefly two, one called Kuas, whereby the Mouſike liues,
Small ware and waterlike, but ſomewhat tart in taſte,

The reſt is Mead of honie made, wherewith their lips they baſte.
And if he goe vnto his neighbour as a gueſt,
He cares for litle meate, if ſo his drinke be of the beſt.
No wonder though they vſe ſuch vile and beaſtly trade,
Sith with the hatchet and the hand, their chiefeſt gods be made.
Their Idoles haue their hearts, on God they neuer call,
Vnleſſe it be (Nichola Bough) that hangs againſt the wall.
The houſe that hath no god, or painted Saint within,
Is not to be reſorted to, that roofe is full of ſinne.
Beſides their priuate gods, in open places ſtand
Their croſſes vnto which they crooche, and bleſſe themſelues with hand.
Deuoutly downe they ducke, with forhead to the ground,
Was neuer more deceit in ragges, and greaſie garments found.
Almoſt the meaneſt man in all the countrey rides,
The woman eke, againſt our vſe, her trotting horſe beſtrides.
In ſundry colours they both men and women goe,
In buſkins all, that money haue on buſkins to beſtoe.
Ech woman hanging hath a ring within her eare,
Which all of ancient vſe, and ſome of very pride doe weare.
Their gate is very braue, their countenance wiſe and ſadde,
And yet they follow fleſhly luſtes, their trade of liuing badde.
It is no ſhame at all accompted to defile
Anothers bedde, they make no care their follies to conceile.
Is not the meaneſt man in all the land but hee,
To buy her painted colours doeth allow his wife a fee.
Wherewith ſhe deckes her ſelfe, and dies her tawnie ſkinne,
She prankes and paints her ſmoakie face, both brow, lip, cheeke, & chinne.
Yea thoſe that honeſt are, if any ſuch there bee
Within the land, doe vſe the like: a man may plainely ſee
Vpon ſome womens cheekes the painting how it lies,
In plaiſter ſort, for that too thicke her face the harlot dies.
But ſuch as ſkilfull are, and cunning Dames indeede,
By dayly practiſe doe it well, yea ſure they doe exceede.
They lay their colours ſo, as he that is full wiſe,
May eaſily be deceiu'd therein, if he doe truſt his eyes.
I not a little muſe, what madneſſe makes them paint
Their faces, waying how they keepe the ſtooue by meere conſtraint.
For ſeldome when, vnleſſe on Church or marriage day
A man ſhall ſee the Dames abroade, that are of beſt aray.
The Ruſſie meanes to reape the profit of her pride,
And ſo he mewes her to be ſure, ſhe lye by no mans ſide.
Thus much, friend Dancie, I did meane to write to thee,
To let thee weete in Ruſſia land, what men and women bee.
Hereafter I perhaps of other things will write
To thee, and other of my friends, which I ſhall ſee with ſight:
And other ſtuffe beſides, which true report ſhall tell,
Meane while I ende my louing lines, and bid thee now farewell.

To Spencer.

If I ſhould now forget, or not remember thee,
Thou Spencer might'ſt a foule rebuke, and ſhame impute to mee.
For I to open ſhew did loue thee paſſing well,
And thou wert he at parture, whome I loathde to bid farewell.
And as I went thy friend, ſo I continue ſtill,
No better proofe thou canſt then this deſire of true good will.
I doe remember well when needes I ſhould away,
And that the Poſte would licence vs, no longer time to ſtay:
Thou wrongſt me by the fiſt, and holding faſt my hand,
Didſt craue of me to ſend thee newes, and how I liked the land.

It is a ſandie ſoile,no very fruitfull vaine,
More waſte and woodie grounds there are,then cloſes fit for graine.
Yet graine there growing is, which they vntimely take,
And cut or eare the corne be ripe,they mowe it on a ſtacke.
And laying ſheafe by ſheafe,their harueſt ſo they dry,
They make the greater haſte, for feare the froſt the corne deſtroy.
For in the winter time, ſo glarie is the ground,
As neither graſſe,nor other graine,in paſtures may be found.
In coms the cattell then, the ſheepe,the colt,the cowe,
Faſt by his bed the Mowſike then a lodging doth allowe,
Whom he with fodder feeds,and holds as deere as life:
And thus they weare the winter with the Mowſike and his wife.
Seuen months the Winter dures,the glare it is ſo great,
As it is May before he turne, his ground to ſowe his wheate.
The bodies eke that die vnburied lie they then,
Laid vp in coffins made of firre,as well the pooreſt men,
As thoſe of greater ſtate : the cauſe is lightly found,
For that in Winter time,they cannot come to breake the ground,
And wood ſo plenteous is,quite throughout all the land,
As rich,and poore,at time of death aſſurd of coffins ſtand.
Perhaps thou muſeſt much,how this may ſtand with reaſon,
That bodies dead can vncorrupt abide ſo long a ſeaſon.
Take this for certaine trothe, as ſoone as heate is gone,
The force of colde the body binds as hard as any ſtone,
Without offence at all to any liuing thing:
And ſo they lye in perfect ſtate,till next returne of Spring.
Their beaſts be like to ours, as farre as I can ſee
For ſhape,and ſhewe,but ſomewhat leſſe of bulke,and bone they be.
Of watriſh taſte, the fleſh not firme, like Engliſh beefe,
And yet it ſeru's them very well, and is a good releefe:
Their ſheepe are very ſmall, ſharpe ſingled,handfull long,
Great ſtore of fowle on ſea and land, the moriſh reedes among.
The greatnes of the ſtore doeth make the prices leſſe,
Beſides in all the land they know not how good meate to dreſſe.
They vſe neither broach nor ſpit, but when the ſtoue they heate,
They put their victuals in a pan, and ſo they bake their meate.
No pewter to be had, no diſhes but of wood,
No vſe of trenchers, cups cut out of birche are very good.
They vſe but wooden ſpoones, which hanging in a caſe
Eache Mowſike at his girdle ties,and thinkes it no diſgrace.
With whitles two or three,the better man the moe,
The chiefeſt Ruſſies in the land , with ſpoone and kniues doe goe.
Their houſes are not huge of building, but they ſay,
They plant them in the loftieſt ground, to ſhift the ſnow away,
Which in the Winter time,eache where full thicke doth lie:
Which makes them haue the more deſire,to ſet their houſes hie.
No ſtone worke is in vſe, their roofes of rafters bee,
One linked in another faſt,their wals are all of tree.
Of maſts both long, and large, with moſſe put in betweene,
To keepe the force of weather out,I neuer earſt haue ſeene
A groſſe deuiſe ſo good, and on the roofe they lay
The burthen barke,to rid the raine,and ſudden ſhowres away.
In euery roome a ſtoue,to ſerue the Winter turne,
Of wood they haue ſufficient ſtore, as much as they can burne.
They haue no Engliſh glaſſe,of ſlices of a rocke
Hight Sluda they their windowes make,that Engliſh glaſſe doth mocke.
They cut it very thinne, and ſow it with a thred
In pretie order like to panes, to ſerue their preſent need.
No other glaſſe, good faith doth giue a better light:

And ſure the rocke is nothing rich,the coſt is very ſlight.
The chiefeſt place is that, where hangs the god by it,
The owner of the houſe himſelfe doth neuer ſit,
Vnleſſe his better come,to whom he yealds the ſeat:
The ſtranger bending to the god,the ground with brow muſt beat,
And in that very place which they moſt ſacred deeme,
The ſtranger lies: a token that his gueſt he doth eſteeme,
Where he is wont to haue a beares ſkinne for his bed,
And muſt,in ſtead of pillow,clap his ſaddle to his head.
In Ruſſia other ſhift there is not to be had,
For where the bedding is not good,the boalſters are but bad.
I muſed very much, what made them ſo to lie,
Sith in their countrey Downe is rife,and feathers out of crie:
Vnleſſe it be becauſe the countrey is ſo hard,
They feare by niceneſſe of a bed their bodies would be mard,
I wiſht thee oft with vs, ſaue that I ſtood in feare
Thou wouldſt haue loathed to haue layd thy limmes vpon a beare,
As I and Stafford did,that was my mate in bed:
And yet (we thanke the God of heauen) we both right well haue ſped.
Loe thus I make an ende: none other newes to thee,
But that the countrey is too colde, the people beaſtly bee.
I write not all I know,I touch but here and there,
For if I ſhould,my penne would pinch,and eke offend I feare.
Who ſo ſhall read this verſe, coniecture of the reſt,
And thinke by reaſon of our trade, that I do thinke the beſt.
But if no traffique were,then could I boldly pen
The hardneſſe of the ſoile,and eke the maners of the men.
They ſay the Lions paw giues iudgement of the beaſt:
And ſo may you deeme of the great, by reading of the leaſt.

To Parker.

My Parker, paper,pen, and inke were made to write,
And idle heads, that little do, haue leiſure to indite:
Wherefore,reſpecting theſe,and thine aſſured loue,
If I would write no newes to thee,thou might'ſt my pen reproue,
And ſithence fortune thus hath ſhou'd my ſhippe on ſhore:
And made me ſeeke another Realme vnſeene of me before:
The maners of the men I purpoſe to declare,
And other priuate points beſides,which ſtrange and geaſon are.
The Ruſſie men are round of bodies,fully fac'd,
The greateſt part with bellies bigge that ouerhang the waſte,
Flat headed for the moſt, with faces nothing faire,
But browne,by reaſon of the ſtoue,and cloſeneſſe of the aire:
It is their common vſe to ſhaue or els to ſheare
Their heads,for none in all the land long lolling locks doth weare,
Vnleſſe perhaps he haue his ſoueraigne prince diſpleas'd,
For then he neuer cuts his haire,vntill he be appeas'd,
A certaine ſigne to know who in diſpleaſure be,
For euery man that viewes his head,will ſay, Loe this is he.
And during all the time he lets his locks to grow,
Dares no man for his life to him a face of friendſhip ſhow.
Their garments be not gay,nor handſome to the eye,
A cap aloft their heads they haue,that ſtandeth very hie,
Which Colpack they do terme. They weare no ruffes at all:
The beſt haue collers ſet with pearle, which they Rubaſca call.
Their ſhirts in Ruſsie long,they worke them downe before,
And on the ſleeues with coloured Silks,two inches good and more,
Aloft their ſhirts they weare a garment iacket wiſe
Hight Onoriadka, and about his burlie waſte he tyes

His portkies, which in ſtead of better breeches be:
Of linnen cloth that garment is, no codpiece is to ſee.
A paire of yarnen ſtocks to keepe the colde away,
Within his boots the Ruſſie weares, the heeles they vnderlay
With clouting clamps of ſteele, ſharpe pointed at the toes,
And ouer all a Shuba furd, and thus the Ruſſie goes.
Well butned is the Shube, according to his ſtate,
Some Silke, of Siluer other ſome: but thoſe of pooreſt rate
Do weare no Shubs at all, but groſſer gownes to ſight,
That reacheth downe beneath the calfe, and that Armacha hight:
Theſe are the Ruſſies robes. The richeſt vſe to ride
From place to place, his ſeruant runnes, and followes by his ſide.
The Caſſacke beares his felt, to force away the raine:
Their bridles are not very braue, their ſaddles are but plaine.
No bits but ſnaffles all, of birch their ſaddles be,
Much faſhioned like the Scottiſh ſeates, broad flakes to keepe the knee
From ſweating of the horſe, the pannels larger farre
And broader be then ours, they vſe ſhort ſtirrups for the warre:
For when the Ruſſie is purſued by cruel foe,
He rides away, and ſuddenly betakes him to his boe,
And bends me but about in ſaddle as he ſits,
And therewithall amids his race his following foe he hits.
Their bowes are very ſhort, like Turkie bowes outright,
Of ſinowes made with birchen barke, in cunning maner dight.
Small arrowes, cruel heads, that fell and forked bee,
Which being ſhot from out thoſe bowes, a cruel way will flee.
They ſeldome vſe to ſhoo their horſe, vnleſſe they ride
In poſt vpon the frozen floods, then cauſe they ſhall not ſlide,
He ſets a ſlender calke, and ſo he rides his way.
The horſes of the countrey go good foureſcore verſts a day,
And all without the ſpurre, once pricke them and they ſkippe,
But goe not forward on their way, the Ruſſie hath his whippe
To rappe him on the ribbes, for though all booted bee,
Yet ſhall you not a paire of ſpurres in all the countrey ſee.
The common game is cheſſe, almoſt the ſimpleſt will Both giue a checke and eke a mate, by practiſe comes their ſkill.
Againe they dice as faſt, the pooreſt rogues of all
Will ſit them downe in open field, and there to gaming fall.
Their dice are very ſmall, in faſhion like to thoſe
Which we doe vſe, he takes them vp, and ouer thumbe he throwes
Not ſhaking them a whit, they caſt ſuſpiciouſly,
And yet I deeme them voyd of art that dicing moſt apply.
At play when Siluer lacks, goes ſaddle, horſe and all,
And eche thing els worth Siluer walkes, although the price be ſmall.
Becauſe thou loueſt to play friend Parker other while,
I wiſh thee there the weary day with dicing to beguile.
But thou weart better farre at home, I wiſt it well,
And wouldeſt be loath among ſuch lowts ſo long a time to dwell.
Then iudge of vs thy friends, what kinde of life we had,
That neere the frozen pole to waſte our weary dayes were glad,
In ſuch a ſauage ſoile, where lawes do beare no ſway,
But all is at the king his will, to ſaue or els to ſlay.
And that ſans cauſe, God wot, if ſo his minde be ſuch.
But what meane I with Kings to deale? we ought no Saints to touch.
Conceiue the reſt your ſelfe, and deeme what liues they lead,
Where luſt is Lawe, and Subiects liue continually in dread.
And where the beſt eſtates haue none aſſurance good
Of lands, of liues, nor nothing falles vnto the next of blood,
But all of cuſtome doeth vnto the prince redowne,

And all the whole reuenue comes vnto the King his crowne,
Good faith I ſee thee muſe at what I tell thee now,
But true it is, no choice, but all at princes pleaſure bow.
So Tarquine ruled Rome as thou remembreſt well,
And what his fortune was at laſt, I know thy ſelfe canſt tell.
Where will in Common weale doth beare the onely ſway,
And luſt is Lawe, the prince and Realme muſt needs in time decay.
The ſtrangeneſſe of the place is ſuch for ſundry things I ſee,
As if I woulde I cannot write ech priuate point to thee.
The colde is rare, the people rude, the prince ſo full of pride,
The Realme ſo ſtored with Monks and nunnes, and prieſts on euery ſide:
The maners are ſo Turkie like, the men ſo full of guile,
The women wanton, Temples ſtuft with idols that defile
The Seats that ſacred ought to be, the cuſtomes are ſo quaint,
As if I would deſcribe the whole, I feare my pen would faint.
In ſumme, I ſay I neuer ſaw a prince that ſo did raigne,
Nor people ſo beſet with Saints, yet all but vile and vaine.
Wilde Iriſh are as ciuill as the Ruſſies in their kinde,
Hard choice which is the beſt of both, ech bloody, rude and blinde.
If thou bee wiſe, as wiſe thou art, and wilt be rulde by me,
Liue ſtill at home, and couet not thoſe barbarous coaſts to ſee.
No good befalles a man that ſeeks, and findes no better place,
No ciuill cuſtomes to be learnd, where God beſtowes no grace.
And truely ill they do deſerue to be belou'd of God,
That neither loue nor ſtand in awe of his aſſured rod:
Which though be long, yet plagues at laſt the vile and beaſtly ſort
Of ſinfull wights, that all in vice do place their chiefeſt ſport.
A dieu friend Parker, if thou liſt, to know the Ruſſes well,
To Sigiſmundus booke repaire, who all the trueth can tell:
For he long earſt in meſſage went vnto that ſauage King,
Sent by the Pole, and true report in ech reſpect did bring.
To him I recommend my ſelfe, to eaſe my penne of paine,
And now at laſt do wiſh thee well, and bid farewell againe.

The fourth voyage into Perſia, made by M. Arthur Edwards Agent, Iohn Sparke, Laurence Chapman, Chriſtopher Faucet, and Richard Pingle, in the yeere 1568. declared in this letter written from Casbin in Perſia by the foreſaide Laurence Chapman to a worſhipfull merchant of the companie of Ruſſia in London. Anno Domini 1569. Aprill 28.

Worſhipfull ſir, my duetie alwayes remembred, and your proſperous health, and good ſucceſſe in all your affaires wiſhed, to the glory of God, and your owne hearts deſire, &c. May it pleaſe you to vnderſtand that your Agent M. Arthur Edwards and we departed from Yeraſlaue in Iuly 1568. and the 14. of Auguſt arriued at our port called Bilbil, with your ſhip the Grace of God, and the goods in her in good ſafetie, God bee thanked for it, finding there neither the people ſo ready to ayd vs for the bringing of her in, & vnlading of the goods, nor yet ſo obedient to the Shaughs priuilege, as the worſhipfull company haue bene informed. Our goods brought vpon land, we were compelled to open & ſel as they would ſet the price, or otherwiſe it would haue bene worſe for vs. Being ſo ſatiſfied to their contentment, we were ſpeedily aided with camels by the prince Erasbec Sultan his appointment, to carry our goods to Shamaki, to which place we attained the firſt of September, finding it ſo throughly furniſhed with all maner of commodities by occaſion of our late comming, and by ſuch as came before vs, that no man would aſke to buy any one piece of karſie of vs, and lying then the ſpace of one whole moneth before your Agent Arthur Edwards would diſperſe vs abroade with the goods, ſuch as came out of Ruſsia afterwardes, had brought their goods to that and other places, and ſpoyled thoſe ſales wee might haue made, being ſent abroad in time conuenient, being no little hinderance to the worſhipfull, as alſo great griefe vnto vs to ſee. To conclude, through our dayly calling vpon him, he bent himſelfe for Casbin, taking with him the greateſt ſumme of the goods, and two of the worſhipfuls ſeruants, to witte, Iohn Sparke and my ſelfe, to helpe and procure the better ſale for the ſame: and leauing at Shamaki

Their arriual at Bilbil the 14. of Auguſt 1568.

Prince Eraſbec.

Chriſtopher Faucet and Richard Pingle.

maki Chriſtopher Faucet and Richard Pingle with three hundred and fiftie pieces of karſies in their handes, ſuppoſed to be ſolde there or in Arraſh before hee ſhould be able to make his returne from Casbin, which, ſo farre foorth as I can vnderſtand, lie for the greateſt part vnſolde. And being vpon our way, at a certaine towne called Ardouil, we chanced to barter nine pieces of karſies with thoſe merchants for foureſcore and foure batemans of cynamom, ſelling the karſies at one hundred and fiftie ſhawghs the piece.

And being at that preſent not farre from Teueris, called the principal place in this countrey for vttering of cloth or karſies, by much intreatie I perſwaded your Agent to ſend thither to prooue what might be done, and receiuing from him foure and fiftie pieces of karſies, as alſo his commiſſion for the ſale of the ſame, I proceeded on that voyage my ſelfe, and one Tolmach in company with me, finding in that place great ſtore of broad cloth and karſies brought thither, ſome part by the Turkes who be reſident there, ſome by the Armenians, who fetch them at Aleppo, and ſome by the towneſmen, who trauell vnto Venice and there buy them, ſo that no man offered me one penie more then a hundred and fourtie ſhawghs for a karſie: and hauing ſpeciall commiſſion and charge from your Agent not to ſtay there aboue the ſpace of ſeuen dayes after my arriuall there, but to repaire to Casbin with all ſpeed, and furthermore, hauing regard to keepe vp the price of the worſhipfuls commodities, according to their deſire, I found meanes to barter them away for ſpices, ſuch as were there to be had, neither in goodneſſe nor yet in price to my content: neuertheleſſe, conſidering the colde ſales which were there, as well for your karſies, as alſo the hot newes, that Ormuz way was ſhut vp by occaſion that the Indians do warre againſt them, which is true in deed: and againe the deſire that the worſhipfull hath to haue ſuch commodities bought, I thought it neceſſary to buy them, the prices and weight whereof appeareth at large by my accompt ſent to the worſhipfull, and is, as I thinke, the whole ſumme of ſpices bought at this time.

Warre againſt the Portingals at Ormuz.

The gouernour of Grozin his merchant.

It chanced me in that place to meet with the gouernours merchant of Grozin, who was not a litle deſirous to bargen with me for a hundred pieces of karſies for his maſter called Leuontie, and offering me ſo good bands for the paiment of the money or ſilke to the merchants cõtentment vpon the deliuery of them, as in any place within all this countrey is to be had: and offering me beſides his owne letter in the behalfe of his maſter, that no cuſtome ſhould be demanded for the ſame, and the obtaining alſo at his maſters hand as large a priuilege for the worſhipful to trauel into all parts of his dominion, as the Shaugh had giuen them, and hearing good report made of him by the Armenians alſo, and that he was a Chriſtian, I was much more the willing to bargen with him, and ſold him a hundred pieces for a hundred and threeſcore ſhawghs a piece, to be paid to the merchant in Grozin either in money or ſilke to his contentment, within three dayes after the deliuerie of the karſies there, hauing a band of him made by the Metropolitanes owne hand, for the performance of the ſame, which is as ſure as any here is to be deuiſed: and vpon the ſame I ſent my Tolmach from me backe to Shamaki, with ſuch goods as I bought at Teueris, and to the end hee might cauſe the worſhipfuls ſeruants there to ſee this bargen accompliſhed. At whoſe arriuall there, as I do perceiue, the Captaine would not accompliſh his bargen to take them, but ſaith, hee hath no need of them: ſuch is the conſtancie of all men in this countrey, with whomſoeuer you ſhal bargen. If the ware be bought, and they doe miſlike it afterwards, they will bring it againe, and compel you to deliuer the money for it againe, regarding the Shawghs letters, which manifeſteth the contrary, as a ſtraw in the winde: by meanes whereof, the worſhipfull may know whether all be true that hath bene written of this countrey people or not.

The generall inconſtancie in the merchants and dealers of thoſe parts.

I am informed by all the brokers in Teueris, that the way once open to Ormuz, from whence commeth no ſuch ſtore of ſpices as the worſhipfull doeth looke for, that here will bee put a way in Teueris, ſome for money, and other ſome for barter, to the number of three hundred or foure hundrey pieces of karſies, being in coulers and goodneſſe to the examples here ſent you, the reſt of the karſies to make them vp a thouſand, and broad clothes to the ſumme of a hundred, bee as many as will be put away yeerely in this countrey, ſo farre as yet I can perceiue.

The trade betweene the Venetians and the Armenians not eaſily to be broken.

To breake the trade betwixt the Venetians and the whole company of the Armenians it is not poſſible, vnleſſe the worſhipful will finde ſome meanes to receiue of them yeerly to the number of 100. catters or mules lading, and deliuer them for the ſame one third part money, the reſt cloth and karſies fitted in coulers meete for this countrey: the examples, as aboueſaid, are ſent vnto you.

At Amadia ſixe dayes iourney from Teueris, grow abundance of galles, which are brought vp yeerely by the Venetians, and be ſolde there for two biſtes the Teueris bateman, which as your Agent here ſaith, maketh ſixe pound Engliſh weight, but I doubt it wil not ſo be prooued. Neuertheleſſe it is ſuppoſed much good will bee done by buying of them: which might at this preſent haue partly bene prooued, if ſo be that ſome could do but halfe that which hath bene written.

Touching drugges, I finde many as well at Teueris, as alſo in Casbin, but the goodneſſe nothing like to ſuch as be brought into England out of other places: & the price is ſo high that ſmal gaine will be had in buying of them: albeit, if I had bene furniſhed with money, as I might haue bene, if ſome would, I would haue bought ſome, to the ende the goodneſſe of them might haue bene ſeene in England. At my comming to Casbin I found no maner of ſales of any commoditie made, but all lying there whole, and newes giuen out (as your Agent ſaith) that yͤ Shaugh would buy all ſuch commodities as he had, and giue him ſilke and ſpices for the ſame: but by report the Shaugh neuer tooke cloth into his treaſurie all the dayes of his life, and will not now begin: his whole trade is in raw ſilke, which he ſelleth alwayes for money to the Armenians and Turkes, and ſuch other as vſe to buy it: thus hoping of that which is not like to be had, hee hath driuen off the time, not ſending to any other places: by means whereof the worſhipfuls goods lie vnſold to this day to their great hinderance, which I for my part am not a litle ſorry to ſee.

Babylon is from hence fifteene dayes iourney, whereas by true report be great ſtore of Dates, and ſold for a biſſe the batman, the commoditie fit for England, and the place ſo neere vnto vs might eaſily haue bene knowen, if hee, whoſe deeds and ſayings differ much, had bene willing to the ſame. Caſſan alſo is but ſeuen dayes iourney from hence, & a place by report where moſt ſtore of ſpices be at all times to be had, ouer and aboue any place in this countrey: it could not be granted by him to be ſeen and prooued at this time; if this be loſſe to the worſhipfull, referre it to the want of one which can do that which he ſpeaketh in words.

Babylon 15. dayes iourney from Casbin.

To trauell in this countrey is not onely miſerable and vncomfortable for lacke of townes and villages to harbour in when night commeth, and to refreſh men with wholeſome victuals in time of need, but alſo ſuch ſcarſitie of water, that ſometime in three dayes iourney together, is not to be found any drop fit for man or beaſt to drinke, beſides the great danger we ſtand in for robbing by theſe infidels, who doe account it remiſſion of ſinnes to waſh their hands in the blood of one of vs. Better it is therefore in mine opinion to continue a beggar in England during life, then to remaine a rich Merchant ſeuen yeeres in this Countrey, as ſome ſhall well find at their comming hither.

By commandement of the Agent alſo I went to Gilan, as well to ſee what harbor was there for your ſhip, as alſo to vnderſtand what commoditie is there beſt ſold, and for what quantitie. I found the way from hence ſo dangerous and troubleſome, that with my pen I am not able to note it vnto you: no man trauelleth from hence thither, but ſuch poore people as need conſtraineth to buy Rice for their reliefe to liue vpon, and they lay not aboue twentie batmans vpon a catter, and it lieth no lower then the ſkirts of the ſaddle, and he eſcapeth very hardly that commeth there with the ſame.

His voyage to Gilan.

The towne of Laighon, which was the chiefeſt place in all that land, haue I ſeen, and Langro and Roſar alſo, which be now ouerrun by the Shaugh and his power, and be ſo ſpoiled, & the people ſo robbed, that not one of them is able to buy one karſie. The beſt commoditie there to bee bought, is raw ſilke, and is ſold in the Summer time for 38. ſhaughs the Laighon batman, which is litle aboue 40. li. waight, and for ready money: alſo there is to bee had what ſtore of Alom you will, and ſold there for one biſſe the Teueris batman.

In theſe partes be many Turkie merchants reſident, which giue an outward ſhew, as though they were glad of our comming hither, but ſecretly they be our mortall enemies, ſearching by all meanes to hinder our ſales, becauſe we ſhould the ſooner giue ouer our trade thither, which in proceſſe of time I hope will growe to better perfection. They wiſh vs to go to Hallape with the reſt of our commodities vnſold, where they ſay we ſhall haue good intertainment in ſpight of the great number of Venetians which be there reſident, and the cuſtome but two in the hundred, and our karſies to be ſold preſently, had we neuer ſo many, for twelue duckets, which maketh of this money 165. ſhaughs: but by ſuch as know the place, market and cuſtome, it is reported to vs credibly to the contrary, and that ſuch karſies as ours be, are not ſold for aboue 8. duckets there: the cuſtome thirtie in the hundred and more, that no place in the world is ſo well furniſhed with good cloth and karſies, and of ſo braue colour as that place is, ſuppoſing it to bee craftily purpoſed of them, to bring vs into trouble, which God defend vs from.

The malice of the Turkiſh merchants.

The price of ſpices be theſe, at this preſent enhanſed by reaſon yͤ way is ſhut to Ormus, which when God ſhal ſend open, I purpoſe (God willing) to ſee, and at my returne to aduertiſe the worſhipful what benefit is there to be had in all points, ſo neere as I can learne: Pepper 25. ſhaughs the Teueris batman: Cloues 50. ſhaughs, Long pepper 25. ſhaughs, Maces large 50. ſhaughs Ginger 24. ſhaughs, ready money all, or els looke not vpon them. And the beſt ſort of rawe ſilke is ſold for 60. ſhaughs the Teueris batman. Thus for want of further matter to inlarge, I ende for this time, beſeeching God to preſerue you in continuall health.

The price of ſpices.

By your obedient ſeruant, Laurence Chapman.

Notes concerning this fourth voyage into Perſia, begun in the moneth of Iuly 1568. gathered by M. Richard Willes from the mouth of Maſter Arthur Edwards, which was Agent in the ſame.

When he came firſt to the Sophies preſence, at his court in Casbin, bringing his interpreter with him, and ſtanding farre off, the Sophie (ſitting in a ſeat roiall with a great number of his noble men about him) bad him come neere, and that thriſe, vntill he came ſo neere him that he might haue touched him with his hād. Then the firſt demand that he aſked him was, from what countrey he came: he anſwered, that he came from England. Then aſked hee of his noble men, who knew any ſuch countrey? But when Edwards ſaw that none of them had any intelligence of that name, he named it Inghilterra, as the Italians call England. Then one of the noble mē ſaid Londro, meaning thereby Londō, which name is better knowen in far countries out of Chriſtendom, then is the name of England. When Edwards heard him name Londro he ſaid that that was the name of the chiefe citie of England, as was Teueris of the chiefe city of Perſia. He aſked him many things more, as of the realme of England, maruelling that it ſhould be an Iſland of ſo great riches and power, as Edwards declared vnto him: of the riches & abundance of our merchandize he further vnderſtood by our traffike in Moſcouia and other countreis. He demanded alſo many things of the Queenes maieſtie, and of the cuſtomes and lawes of the realme: ſaying oftentimes in his owne language, Bara colla, (that is to ſay) Well ſayd. He aſked alſo many things of king Philip, & of his wars againſt the Turke at Malta. Then he demanded of him what was the chiefe cauſe of his reſort into his realme. And being certified that it was for the trade of merchandize, he aſked what kind of merchandize he could bring thither. Such (ſayd hee) as the Venetian merchants do, which dwelling in our country in the city of Londro ſend to Venice, & from thence into Turkie by Halepo & Tripoli in Syria, from whence, as by the ſecond and third hands, with great charges of many cuſtoms and other things thereunto pertaining, they are at the length brought into your countrey and cities of Perſia. What merchandize are thoſe? ſayd the Sophie. Edwards anſwered, that they were great abundance of fine karſies, of broad clothes of all ſorts & colours, as ſkarlets, violets, and other of the fineſt cloth of all the world. Alſo that the Venetians brought out of England not onely ſuch clothes ready made, but furthermore great plenty of fine wooll to mingle with their wools, of which they could not otherwiſe make fine cloth: affirming that there went out of England yeerly that waies, aboue two hundred thouſand karſies, and as many broad clothes, beſide fine wooll & other merchandize, beſide alſo the great abundance of like clothes, the which were caried into Spaine, Barbarie, & diuers other countries. The Sophie then aſked him by what means ſuch merchandize might be brought into Perſia. Right wel ſir (ſaid he) by the way of Moſcouia, with more ſafety and in much ſhorter time then the Venetians can bring them: firſt from England to Venice, and from thence into Perſia by the way of Turkie. And therefore if it ſhal pleaſe your maieſtie to grant vs free paſſage into all your dominions, with ſuch priuileges as may appertaine to the ſafegard of our liues, goods and merchandize, we will furniſh your countries with all ſuch merchandize and other commodities, in ſhorter time, and better cheape then you may haue the ſame at the Turks hands. This talke and much more was between the Sophie and Edwards for the ſpace of two houres: all which things liked him ſo well, that ſhortly after he granted to the ſayd Arthur Edwards other priuileges for the trade of merchandize into Perſia, all written in Azure and gold letters, and deliuered vnto the lord keeper of the Sophie his great ſeale. The lord keeper was named Coche Califay, who ſayd that when the Shaugh (that is the king or prince) did ſit to ſeale any letters, that laſt priuiledge ſhould be ſealed & deliuered to Laurence Chapman. In this priuiledge is one principall article for ſeruants or merchants: That if the Agent do perceiue that vpon their naughtie doings, they would become Buſormen, that then the Agent whereſoeuer he ſhall find any ſuch ſeruant or ſeruants, to take them and put them in priſon, and no perſon to keepe them or maintaine them. This article was granted in reſpect of a cuſtome among the Perſians, being Mahumetans, whoſe maner is friendly to receiue and wel entertaine, both with gifts and liuing, all ſuch Chriſtians, as forſaking their religion, wil become of the religion of the Perſians. Inſomuch that before this priuiledge was granted, there was great occaſion of naughty ſeruants to deceiue and rob their maſters, that vnder the colour of profeſſing that religion, they might liue among them in ſuch ſafetie, that you might haue no lawe agaynſt them, either to puniſh them or to recouer your goods at their hands, or elſewhere. For before the Sophie (whom they ſay to be a maruelous wiſe and gracious prince) ſeemed to fauour our nation, and to grant them ſuch priuiledges, the people abuſed them very much, and ſo hated them, that they would not touch them, but reuiled them, calling them Cafars and Gawars, which is, infidels or miſbeleeuers. But after they ſaw how greatly the prince fauoured them, they had them afterward in great reuerence, and would kiſſe their hands and vſe them very friendly. For before they tooke it for no wrong to rob them, defraud them, beare falſe witneſſe againſt them, and ſuch merchandizes as they had bought or ſold, make them take it againe, and change it as often as them liſted. And if any ſtranger by chance had killed one of them, they would haue the life of two for one ſlaine, and for the debts of any ſtrāger would take the goods of any other of the ſame nation, with many other ſuch like abuſes, in maner vnknowen to the prince, before the complaints of our men made vnto him for reformation of ſuch abuſes: which were the cauſe that no merchant ſtrangers of contrary religiō durſt come into his dominions with their commodities, which might be greatly to the profite of him and his ſubiects.

The Venetians traffike in England.

The Articles of the ſecond priuiledge deliuered to Laurence Chapman, which are to be annexed vnto the former priuiledge.

10 Item, that the merchants haue free libertie, as in their firſt priuiledge, to goe vnto Gilan, and all other places of his dominions, now or hereafter when occaſion ſhall be giuen.

11 Item, if by miſfortune any of their ſhips ſhould breake, or fall vpon any part of his dominions on the ſea coaſt, his ſubiects to helpe with all ſpeed to ſaue the goods and to be deliuered to any of the ſayd merchants that liueth: or otherwiſe to be kept in ſafetie vntil any of them come to demaund them.

12 Item, if any of the ſaid merchants depart this life in any citie or towne, or on the high way, his gouernours there to ſee their goods ſafely kept, and to be deliuered to any other of them that ſhall demand them.

13 Item, the ſaid merchants to take ſuch camel-men as they themſelues wil, being countrey people, and that no Kiſſell Baſh do let or hinder them. And the ſaid owners of the camels to bee bound to anſwere them ſuch goods as they ſhal receiue at their hands, and the camel-men to ſtand to the loſſes of their camels or horſes.

14 Item more, that the ſayd Cariers do demaund no more of them, then their agreement was to pay them.

15 Item more, if they be at a price with any Cariers, & haue giuen earneſt, the camel-men to ſee they keepe their promiſe.

16 Item, if any of the ſaid merchants be in feare to trauel, to giue thē one or more to go with them and ſee them in ſafetie with their goods, to the place they will goe vnto.

17 Item, in all places, to ſay, in all cities, townes or villages on the high way, his ſubiects to giue them honeſt roume, and victuals for their money.

18 Item, the ſayd merchants may in any place, where they ſhall thinke beſt, build or buy any houſe or houſes to their owne vſes. And no perſon to moleſt or trouble them, and to ſtand in any Carauan where they will, or ſhal thinke good.

The commodities which the merchants may haue by this trade into Perſia are thought to bee great, and may in time perhaps be greater then the Portugals trade into yͤ Eaſt Indies, forasmuch as by the way of Perſia into England, the returne may be made euery yeere once: whereas the Portugals make the returne from Calecut but once in two yeeres, by a long and dangerous voiage all by ſea: for where as the citie and Iſland of Ormus, lying in the gulfe of Perſia, is the moſt famous Mart towne of all Eaſt India, whither al yͤ merchandiſes of India are brought, the ſame may in ſhorter time and more ſafely be brought by land and riuers through Perſia, euen vnto the Caſpian ſea, and from thence by the countreis of Ruſſie or Moſcouia by riuers, euen vnto the citie of Yeraſlaue, and from thence by land 180. miles to Vologda, and from thence againe all by water euen vnto England.

The merchandiſes which be had out of Perſia for the returne of wares are ſilke of all ſortes of colours, both raw and wrought. Alſo all maner of ſpices and drugs, pearles & precious ſtones, likewiſe carpets of diuers ſortes, with diuers other rich merchandiſes. It was told me of them that came laſt from Perſia, that there is more ſilke brought into ſome one city of Perſia, then is of cloth brought into the city of London. Alſo that one village of Armenia named Gilgat doeth carie yeerely fiue hundred, and ſometime a thouſand mules laden with ſilke to Halepo in Soria of Turkie, being 4. dayes iourney from Tripoli, where the Venetians haue their continuall abiding, and ſend from thence ſilks which they returne for Engliſh karſies and other clothes into all partes of Chriſtendome.

The

The maner how the Chriſtians become Buſormen, and forſake their religion.

I Haue noted here before that if any Chriſtian wil become a Buſorman, that is, one that hath forſaken his faith, and be a Mahumetan of their religion, they giue him many gifts, and ſometime alſo a liuing. The maner is, that when the deuill is entred into his heart to forſake his faith, he reſorteth to the Soltan or gouernor of the towne, to whom hee maketh proteſtation of his diueliſh purpoſe. The gouernour appointeth him a horſe, and one to ride before him on another horſe, bearing a ſword in his hand, and the Buſorman bearing an arrow in his hand, and rideth in the citie, curſing his father and mother: and if euer after he returne to his owne religion, he is guiltie of death, as is ſignified by the ſword borne before him. A yong man, a ſeruant of one of our merchāts, becauſe he would not abide the correction of his maſter for his faults, was minded to forſake his faith. But (as God would) he fell ſuddenly ſicke and died, before he gaue himſelfe to the deuill. If he had become a Buſorman, he had greatly troubled the merchants: for if he would then haue ſaid that halfe their goods had bene his, they would haue giuen credite vnto him. For the auoiding of which inconuenience, it was granted in the priuileges, that no Buſorman, &c. as there appeareth.

In Perſia in diuers places oxen and kine beare the tents and houſhold ſtuffe of the poore men of the countrey, which haue neither camels nor horſes.

Of the tree which beareth Bombaſin cotton, or Goſſampine.

IN Perſia is great abundance of Bombaſin cotton, & very fine: this groweth on a certaine litle tree or brier, not paſt the height of a mans waſte or litle more: the tree hath a ſlender ſtalke like vnto a brier, or to a carnation gilliflowre, with very many branches, bearing on euery branch a fruit or rather a cod, growing in round forme, containing in it the cotton: and when this bud or cod commeth to the bignes of a walnut, it openeth and ſheweth foorth the cotton, which groweth ſtill in bignes vntill it be like a fleece of wooll as big as a mans fiſt, and beginneth to be looſe, and then they gather it as it were the ripe fruite. The ſeeds of theſe trees are as big as peaſon, and are blacke, and ſomewhat flat, and not round: they ſowe them in plowed ground, where they grow in the fields in great abundance in many countries in Perſia, and diuers other regions.

The writing of the Perſians.

ARthur Edwards ſhewed me a letter of the Sophie, written in their letters backward, ſubſigned with the hands both of the Sophy & his Secretarie. The Sophies ſubſcription was onely one word (his name I ſuppoſe was Shaugh) written in golden letters vpon red paper. The whole letter was alſo written on the ſame piece of red paper, being long & narow, about ẏ length of a foote, and not paſt three inches broad. The priuate ſignet of the Sophie was a round printed marke about the bignes of a roial, onely printed vpon the ſame paper without any waxe or other ſeale, the letter ſeem ſo miſhapen and diſordered, that a man would thinke it were ſomwhat ſcribled in maner at aduentures. Yet they ſay that almoſt euery letter with his pricke or circumflexe ſignifieth a whole word. Inſomuch that in a piece of paper as big as a mans hand their writing doeth containe as much as doeth ours almoſt in a ſheet of paper.

The fift voiage into Perſia made by M. Thomas Baniſter, and maſter Geofrey Ducket, Agents for the Moſcouie companie, begun from England in the yeere 1568. and continuing to the yeere 1574. following. Written by P. I. from the mouth of M. Lionel Plumtree.

The Engliſh Barke aſſaulted neere Aſtracan by the Nagaian Tartars.

VPon the 3. day of Iuly 1568. they embarked themſelues at Yeraſlaue, being accompanied with Lionel Plumtree, and ſome 12. Engliſh men more, in a Barke called the Thomas Bonauenture of the burden of 70. tunnes, taking alſo along with them of Ruſſes to the number of 40. for their vſe and imploiments. It fell out in the way, before they came to Aſtracan by 40. miles, that the Nagaian Tartars, being a kind of theeuiſh and cruel people, made an aſſault vpon them with 18. boates of theirs, each of them being armed, ſome with ſwords, ſome with ſpeares, and ſome others with bowes and arrowes, and the whole number of them they diſcouered to be about 300. men. They for their parts, although they could haue wiſhed a quiet voyage and iourney without blowes and violence, yet not willing to be ſpoiled with ſuch Barbarians as they were, began to defend themſelues againſt their aſſault, by meanes whereof a very terrible & fierce fight folowed and continued hot & ſharpe for two houres, wherein our men ſo wel plaied their parts with their caliuers, that they forced the Tartars to flee with the loſſe of 120. of them, as they were afterwards enformed by a Ruſſe priſoner, which eſcaped from the Nagaians, and came to them to Aſtracan, at which towne they arriued the 20. of Auguſt.

In this towne of Aſtracan they were ſomwhat hindered of their iourney, and ſtaied the ſpace of ſixe weekes by reaſon of a great army of 70000. Turkes and Tartars which came thither vpon the inſtigation of the great Turke, hoping either to haue ſurpriſed it ſuddenly or by continuance of ſiege to win the ſame. But in the end by reaſon that the winter approched, as alſo, becauſe they had receiued newes of a great expedition, which the Emperour of Ruſſia was in prouiding for the defence of the ſaid place, they were conſtrained to raiſe their ſiege, & to leaue the town as they found it.

Aſtracan beſieged by 70000. Turks and Tartars.

Upon their departure our men had opportunitie to proceed on their voyage, and vſing the occaſion, they left Aſtracan, and came to Bilbil towards the end of October: from whence they went to Shauaran, where (as they lodged in their tentes) they were greatly moleſted with ſtrange troopes of ſholcaues or foxes, which were ſo buſie with them that they tooke their meate and victuals out of their lodgings, and deuoured to the bare bones in one night a mighty wilde Bore that was ſent vnto them for a preſent from the gouernour of the countrey.

Hauing ſtaied here ſome three or foure daies in prouiding of cariages and other neceſſaries for their iourney, they departed thence and came to Shamaky, which is foure dayes iourney from the aforeſayd Shauaran. In this towne of Shamaky their whole company ſpent out the Winter, and from thence in April folowing they tooke their iourney towards Ardouil a place of great account and much eſteemed, by reaſon of the ſepulchres of the Emperours of Perſia, which for the moſt part lie there buried, and ſo is growen to bee a place of their ſuperſtitious deuotion. In this towne of Ardouil they ſoiourned the ſpace of 5. or 6. moneths, finding ſome traffique and ſales, but to no purpoſe, the towne being more inhabited and frequented with gentlemen and noblemen then merchants.

The difference of religion bred great broiles in this towne whiles they remained there: for the brother ſought the deſtruction of the brother, and the neereſt kinſmen roſe vp one againſt another, inſomuch that one of their company Lionel Plumtree hath ſeene in one day ſometimes 14. ſlaine in a garboile. And he being further deſirous to ſee their maner of fight, or rather ſomewhat more curious to behold, then miſtruſtful of their blowes, was like to haue borne a ſhare in their bloodie tragedie, being twiſe wounded with their ſhot and arrowes, although not to the death.

At this towne the Shaw Thamas ſent a meſſenger for our men to come to his preſence at Casbin, to whom Thomas Baniſter failed not to goe, although maſter Ducket lay very ſicke at Ardouil, and in ſuch caſe that they almoſt deſpaired of his recouerie. Hee being come to the Shaugh was receiued and entertained of him with great fauour and ſpeciall countenance, and had the moſt part of all his requeſts granted him, this onely excepted, that whereas he entreated a priuilege or ſufferance to tranſport and cary through his dominions certaine horſes into India, the Shaugh ſeemed loth to yeeld thereunto, and yet did not altogether denie it, but referred it to ſome further time. As for the point of traffique, he could not make that motiō or requeſt that was not ſo ſoone granted as it was preferred: and the Shaugh himſelfe bought there of him many kerſies, and made him as good paiment as any man could wiſh, and oftentimes would ſend his mony for the wares before the wares were deliuered, that he might be the ſurer of this honourable intended dealing.

One thing ſomewhat ſtrange I thought good in this place to remember, that whereas hee purpoſed to ſend a great ſumme of money to Mecca in Arabia, for an offering to Mahomet their prophet, hee would not ſend any money or coyne of his owne, but ſent to the Engliſh merchants to exchange his coyne for theirs, according to the value of it, yeelding this reaſon for the ſame, that the money of the merchants was gotten by good meanes, and with good conſciences, and was therefore worthie to be made for an oblation to their holy prophet, but his owne money was rather gotten by fraud, oppreſſion and vnhoneſt meanes, and therefore was not fit to ſerue for ſo holie a vſe.

After ſixe moneths ſpent in Casbin the ſayde Thomas Baniſter departed towards the great citie of Tauris, where being arriued, he found M. Ducket well recouered of his ſickneſſe, whom he had left ill at Ardouil.

At this Citie the foreſayd Maſter Ducket made ſales of the Engliſh commodities, remaining there to that purpoſe the ſpace of two yeeres and a halfe. And beſides other kindes of merchandiſes of that countrey, he bought great ſtore of gals which grow in great abundance at a place within one dayes iourney of the aforeſayd Tauris.
